Laſt of all, that hee need not take ſo long a iourney to come vnto vs at the latter day, as to come from heauen; if he then be here vpon the Altar, where Luke expreſly noteth, that as he left the earth to aſcend into the heauens, ſo he muſt leaue the heauens to come down from them vnto the earth. Neither doe Chryſoſtoms words diminiſh the credit hereof: for as his fleſh is naturally in heauen, ſo is it ſacramentally, and in a moſt liuely repreſentation, in the hands of the receiuers. And this hyperbolicall and exceſſiue ſpeech, which is ſo familiar with Chryſoſtom, is the more to be borne with, as Paul vſeth the like, when he affirmeth that Chriſt in the preaching of the Goſpell, is crucified before our eyes. And that Chryſoſtom vſed this figure here, it is manifeſt, in that as he ſaith, that Chriſt is vpon earth in the celebration of the ſacrament: ſo hee ſaith, that the communicants are tranſlated into heauen. As therefore his meaning is, that the communicants are naturally vpon the earth, onely figuratiuely in heauen: ſo is the fleſh of Chriſt naturally in heauen onely, and figuratiuely or ſacramentally vpon the table. Secondly, this exceſſiue ſpeech is confirmed in that he ſaith, that the multitude aſſembled is dipped in, and made red with his precious bloud, which your ſelues dare not ſay to be true without the figure which we ſpeake of. What alſo, that he affirmeth that wee ſee and behold him with our eyes in the ſacrament? doth it not manifeſtly argue that his meaning is, that there is ſo liuely and ſo full a repreſentation of his death in the ſupper, as if we ſhould haue ſeene him crucified without the Citty of Ieruſalem. The ſame anſwer is to the other place. And thus Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh without figure in another place, That the Sacrifice is a token and a ſigne of Chriſt crucified: And that the very body of Chriſt, is not in the holy veſſels, but the myſtery or ſacrament thereof. And againe he affirmeth, that the bread in the Sacrament is worthy to haue the name of the body of Chriſt, although the nature of bread remain in it.

Our B. Lady

RHEM. 7. [14 Marie the mother of Ieſus.] This is the laſt mention that is made in holy Scriptures of our Lady, for though ſhe were full of all diuine wiſedome, and opened (no doubt) vnto the Euangeliſts and other writers of holy Scriptures, diuers of Chriſts actions, ſpeaches, and myſteries, whereof ſhe had both experimentall and reueaſed knowledge: Yet for that ſhe was a woman, and the humbleſt creature liuing, and the paterne of all order and obedience, it pleaſed not God that there ſhould be any further note of her life, or death in the Scriptures. She liued the reſt of her time with the Chriſtians (as here is peculiarly named and noted among them) and ſpecially with S. Iohn the Apoſtle to whom our Lord recommended her, who prouided for her all neceſſaries, her ſpouſe Ioſeph (as it may be thought being deceaſed before. The common opinion is that ſhe liued 63. yeeres in all. At the time of her death, (as S. Denys firſt, and after him S. Damaſcene de Dormit. Deipara, writeth) as the Apoſtles then diſperſed into diuers nations to preach the Goſpell, were miraculouſly brought together (ſauing S. Thomas who came the third day after) to Hieruſalem, to honour her diuine departure and funerall, as the ſayd S. Denys witneſſeth, who ſaith that himſelfe, S. Timothee, and S. Hierotheus were preſent: teſtifying alſo of his owne hearing, both before her death and after for three dayes, not onely the Apoſtles and other holy men preſent, but the Angels alſo and Powers of heauen did ſing moſt melodious Hymnes. They buried her ſacred body in Gethſemany, but for S. Thomas ſake, who deſired to ſee and reuerence it, they opened the ſepulchre the third day, and finding it voyd of the holy body, but exceedingly fragrant, they returned, aſſuredly deeming that her body was aſſumpted into heauen, as the Church of God holdeth, being moſt agreeable to the ſingular priuiledge of the mother of God, and therefore celebrateth moſt ſolemnly the day of her Aſſumption. And that is conſonant not onely to the ſayd S. Denys and S Damaſcene, but to holy Athanaſius alſo, who auoucheth the ſame, Ser. in Euang. de Deipara. of which Aſſumption of her body, S. Bernard alſo wrote 5. notable ſermons extant in his workes.

Her aſſumption.

The Proteſtants haue no feaſt of her at all, as they haue of other Saints.

But neither theſe holy fathers, nor the Churches tradition and teſtimony, do beare any ſway now a dayes with the Proteſtants, that haue aboliſhed this her greateſt feaſt of her Aſſumption, who of reaſon ſhould at the leaſt celebrate it as the day of her death, as they do of other Sainets. For though they beleeue not that her body is aſſumpted, yet they will not (we trow) deny that ſhe is dead, and her ſoule in glory: neither can they aske Scriptures for that, no more then they require for the deaths of Peter Paul and Iohn, and other, which be not mentioned in Scriptures, and yet are ſtill celebrated by the Proteſtants. But concerning the B. Virgin Marie, they haue blotted out alſo both her natiuitie, and her Conception: ſo as it may be thought the Diuell beareth a ſpeciall malice to this woman whoſe ſeede brake his head. For as for the other two dayes of her Purification and Anunciation, they be not proper to our Lady, but the one to Chriſts conception, the other to his Preſentation, ſo that ſhee by this meanes ſhall haue no feſtiuitie at all.

of this excellent vessell of grace, may make vs detest these mens impietie, that cannot abide the praises of her *whom all generations should call blessed, and that esteeme her honours a derogation to her Son. Some of their speaches we will set down that all men may see, that we neither praise her, nor pray to her, more amply then they did. S. Athanasius in the place alleaged, after he had declared how all the Angelicall spirits and euery order of them honored and praised her with the Aue, wherewith S. Gabriel saluted her: we also, saith he, of all degrees vpon the earth extoll thee with loud voyces, saying, Aue gratia plena, &c. Haile full of grace, our Lord is with thee, pray for vs O Mistres, & Lady, & Queen & mother of God. Most holy and ancient Ephrem, also in a speciall oration made in praise of our Lady, saith thus in diuers places thereof. Intemerata Deipara, &c. Mother of God vndefiled, Queene of all, the hope of them that despaire, my lady most glorious, higher then the heauenly spirits, more honourable then the Cherubins, holier then the Seraphins, & without comparison more glorious then the supernal hosts, the hope of the Fathers, the glory of the Prophets, the praise of the Apostles. And a little after, Virgo ante partum, in partu, & post partum, by thee wee are reconciled to Christ my God, thy Sonne: thou art the hope of sinners, thou the hauen for them that are tossed with stormes, the solace of the world, the deliuerer of the imprisoned, the helper of orphans, the redemption of captiues. And afterward, Vouchsafe me thy seruant to praise thee. Haile lady Mary full of grace, haile Virgin most blessed among women. And much more in that sense which were too long to repeate.

Primitive Church and ancient fathers honored our B. Lady.

S. Cyrill hath the like wonderfull speaches of her honour. hom. 6. contra Nestorium. Praise and glory be to thee O holy Trinitie: to thee also be praise, holy mother of God, for thou art the precious pearle of the world, thou the candell of vnquenchable light, the crown of virginitie, the scepter of the Catholike faith. By thee the Trinitie is glorified and adored in all the world: by thee heauen reioyceth, Angels and Archangels are glad, diuels are put to flight and man is called againe to heauen, and euery creature that was held with the errour of Idols, is turned to the knowledge of the truth: by thee Churches are founded thro ghout the world: thee being their helper, the Gentiles come to penance & much more which we omit. Likewise the Greek Liturgies or Masses of S. Iames. S. Basil, & S. Chrysostome, make most honourable mention of our B. Lady, praying vnto her, saluting her with the Angelicall hymne, Aue Maria, and vsing these speaches; Most holy, vndefiled, blessed aboue all, our Quene, our Lady the mother of God, Marie. a virgin for euer, the sacred arke of Christs incarnation, broader then the heauens that didst bear thy creator, holy mother, of vnspeakeable light, we magnifie thee with Angelicall hymnes. all things passe vnderstanding, all things are glorious in thee O mother of God. by thee the mystirie before vnknowen to the Angels, is made manifest and reuealed to them on the earth. thou art more honourable then the Cherubins, and more glorious then the Seraphins, to thee, O full o grace, all creatures, both men and Angels doe gratulate and reioyce: glory be to thee, which art a sanctified temple: a spirituall paradise, the glorie of virgins, of whom God tooke flesh and made thy wombe to be his throne, &c.

Sentiant omnes tuum iuamen quicunque celebrant tuam commemorationem. Pray thou continually for the people of God, which didst deserue to beare the redeemer of the world, who liueth and reigneth for euer.* S. In all which places alleaged and many other like to these, if it p ease the reader to see and read, and make his own eyes witnesses, he shall perceiue that there is much more said of her, and to her, then we haue here recited, and that the very same or the like speaches and termes were vsed then, that the Church vseth now, in the honour and inuocation of the B. Virgin: to the confusion of all those that wilfully will not vnderstand in what sense all such speaches are applied vnto her, to wit, either because of her prayer and intercession for vs, wereby she is our hope, our refuge, our aduocate &c. or because she brought forth the author of our redemption and saluation, whereby she is the mother of mercy and grace, and life, and whatsoeuer goodnes we rece ue by Christ

CAR TVV. 7. [14. Mary the mother of Iesus.] If the holy Ghost in Luke thought good to cut of her story here: who shall be so bold (by drawing it further out) to put an old patch to his new cloth. If he that knew it thought good to set his signet upon it, thereby to seale it up from mens knowledge: shall men whose best knowledge hereof is by ghesse and heare say, unseale it. And (without doubt) the counsell of God, in speaking so sparingly of her life, and of her death nothing at all: is not vnlike that counsell that he followed in burying of Moses so priuily, that none of the Israelites could attaine to the knowledge of his graue: namely, that by silence of their graues he might make a graue for much idolatry, that he foreseeing to be in mens hearts, thought good as an untimely fruit, thus to bury or euer it came to light But by their confession that she died unawares, they confesse that she was a sinner, contrary to that they otherwhere affirme, seeing that death cannot enter but where a gate of sinne is opened before: neither could Christ haue died if he had not been our suretie, and charged our sins upon his backe. And as if it were but a small matter to speake so precisely of the time, and of the place wherein she was buried, hereby to make (as it were) a supply of Lukes storie of her: these men also dare be hold to tell us of the assumption of her body into heauen: yet notwithstanding both Ierom and Augustine desiring to set forth the virgin to the uttermost, and nereer unto the times wherein this assumption is supposed, dare affirme nothing of it: the latter of which saith, that none can define hereof, unlesse it be he that knoweth the minde of the Lord, and is of counsell with him. assumption, and miraculous assembly of the Apostles to the buriall of the Virgin: Not to enquire here whether he be the Deus you imagine, let the Reader obserue that they haue falsified him, who hath not a word, either of the Virgins assumption, or of the miraculous assembly of the Apostles at her buriall. Athanasius Sermon in Euang. de deipara, is of your own disavowed as a Bastard; And albeit being by Bastardy forbidden to enter into the Congregation, hee can beare no witnesse: yet admitting him to speak, his boldnesse of speech is not such as will iustifie your fable of the miraculous assembly of the Apostles, &c. Touching Damascene and Barnard, as they are partiall and for their partiality chalengable: yet doth neither of them, nor both together, make it good which you haue most shamelesly and impudently written: so that this brasse in the Iesuites face, doth evidently argue a hote iron in their hearts and consciences. And beside that, their feast of purification, is manifestly taken from the heathen, who at that time that they hold this feast, did at noone daies carry lights about the graues of men departed, and prayed for their soules rest: Let the dotage of the Papists be obserued, which make greater account, and hold more solemnly the feast of the Assumption then any of the other Feasts consecrated unto her: where if there were cause either of feast, or degree of feast, it had beene meet, that the upper hand should haue beene giuen to the Conception and Anunciation, which haue certaine testimonies in the Scriptures of their truth, and serue more for the commendation of Christ and of the Lords work in him, more then for the commendation of the Virgin, rather then to the assumption, which hath no warrant in the Scriptures or other approued Writers.

In the estimation of the holy Virgin, wee meane to use Elihues liberty: not to accept the person of any, nor to giue titles without the consent of truth: For the feare of God is upon us, that if wee should never so little use them, he would destroy us. Wherefore whatsoever title is cut forth, by the measure of the Scripture, that (as a comely garment) will be fit for her; Whereupon wee frankely confesse, and willingly afford her to be a Virgin, the mother of Christ, to bee blessed amongst women, amongst all ages. But if wee should call her the Queene of heauen, as you are accustomed to doe, we would feare the suspition of the heresie of the Collyridians, whom Epiphanius scourgeth, for that they called the Virgin Mary the Queene of heauen. But if we should adore or worship her, as you and they do, that pray unto her: then wee would not feare onely, but certainely look for, not the suspicion, but the manifest guilt of the heresie of the Collyridians, whom Epiphanius so condemned, for that they adored or worshipped the Virgin Mary. And if they were condemned which sacrificed unto her a handfull of flowre, made up in a writhen and wrested cake, from whence they tooke their name: How much are you more detestable Heretickes, that sacrifice unto her, the fine and costly flowre of prayer and thankesgiving, whereof the flowre in times past was but a shadow? which take that which is ordained onely for the Lords Table, to set it as upon a Table before the Virgin? which build an Altar to the Virgin, when the Scripture acknowledgeth no Altar but the Lords? Not content also to match the Virgin with our Saviour Christ, in this and divers other titles, which they ascribe unto her, they haue made her the head of our Saviour Christ, and him as it were a member underneath her. For in avowing the title of the onely ease of griefes, ascribed unto her, they make her not (as they are wont to cavill) an under Intercessor, but they with a dash of their unruly and blasphemous penne, strike out our Saviour Christ, as one that standeth for a cyphar, yea as one which in the daies of his flesh, and of his bitter passion, stood in need of her comfort and deliverance, without whom there had beene no medicine for his griefes. Your Starre therefore, that you put to this title, giveth no light, but is as dark as pitch. As for divers of the titles ascribed unto her, by undoubted Antiquity, it is apparant, that they are given vnto her, not that she bringeth forth any effects of those titles her selfe, but that she brought forth our Sauiour Christ, which effected that whereof she beareth title. For it is well known, that she turneth not all creatures from idolatry to the knowledge of the truth, that shee founded not all the Churches in the world, nor brought the Gentiles to penance; but our Saviour Christ, and that not through her ministery, but through the ministery of the Apostles. And this the Iesuites themselues in part confesse. As for the Treatise fathered upon Athanasius, it is like to bee counterfeite, as divers other things which the Papists alledge out of him, are already proued certainely to be. For in his workes translated into Latin, and Printed anno 1548. we find no such Sermon. The sentence also out of Augustine being by their own confession doubtfull, whether it be of him or of Fulgentius, moveth suspicion that it is of neither of them; for Augustines verily it can hardly bee iudged, who teacheth that the Saints departed, are to be honoured for imitation, and not to bee adored for Religion, or religiously, and that they will not bee so honoured of us: Who also affirmeth, that of all those that euer tasted or took flesh, Christ alone maketh intercession for us. Howbeit if there be any such sentences of the Fathers themselues, which in the desire they had to commend the benefite of Christ, haue thus excessiuely spoken of the virgine Mary, as of stubble, which they haue laid with their gold and siluer, they must be content to suffer the damage of it: and seeing there was then crept in, some excessiue opinion of abstaining from meates and marriage, as it is not unlike, but at the same time wherein the Apostle saith that those should come: there entred also the errour of worshipping of the dead, as the same Apostle (by Epiphanius report) doth affirme. And where you say, that you giue no other titles then these Fathers giue, it seemeth that you are ignorant of him that hath turned the Psalmes spoken of God, unto the Virgine Mary, by exchange of one word Lady for Lord. Of Bembus also the Cardinals saying, who calleth the Virgin our Lady and Goddesse: But yet you could not be ignorant of your Popish Seruice, which willeth the Virgin to command her Son, and to use a mothers authority over him: In which blasphemy of yours, you do as it were iustifie the old heretikes the Collyridians, which in respect of your doings against Christ for his mother, may bee called Catholikes. But what shall wee stand to accuse you, the Virgin Mary her selfe, in whom you trust, she will accuse you and condemne you in the latter day, which confessed, that she had no saluation nor deliverance but in our Saviour Christ: For us we had rather instruct you, if happily the Lord haue left any place of repentance unto you: And therefore we wish you would understand, that although it is a noble blessing that the Lord bestowed of the holy Virgin, virgin, when as he made her the mother of Christ, yet you should consider that the greater part of her blessednesse standeth not in that she was the mother of Christ, but in that as Luke reporteth, she heard the word of God and did it. And this doth Augustine notably set forth, saying, That Mary was happier in receiuing the faith of Christ, then in conceiuing the flesh of Christ, and that her motherly kindred had nothing profited her, vnlesse she had borne Christ more happily in her heart, then in her flesh. You therefore that draw the principality of her happinesse from that shee was Christs mother, and not from that shee was by faith Gods daughter, common vnto her with all the faithfull, deceiue both your selues and others, for in the chiefest of her happinesse she hath all the godly her companions. And if you looke well, you shall finde her a fellow member in the spirituall body of Christ: and further, that as one of the Churches daughters, she waiteth with the rest upon her mother, and therefore is not onely inferiour unto Christ, but inferiour vnto the Church whose daughter she is. And you must remember, that although shee be the mother of our Sauiour Christ, yet the Church which is his wife, is deerer unto him, and therefore better then she. And if it were possible for our Sauiour Christ to forsake either the Church or her, the law of his spirituall marriage would hold in his wife before his mother. Now when the whole Church cannot truely chalenge the glory of these titles which are giuen unto her one onely of the members, you may easily see that you haue taken a wrong measure, in making the virgins garment. And if we should further say, that being a noble member in the body of the Church, she was yet not the chiefe, but inferiour unto the Apostles, which are as the eye in the body, we might well bee more afraid of your Theons tooth, and slanderous tongue, then of any sword of reason that would proceed from your mouth to cut vs with. Furthermore we wish you to haue in remembrance the Lords iealousie ouer his glory, which he will not giue to another, nor unto Christ himselfe as hee is man. And therefore you in diuers of the titles which you ascribe unto the virgin, haue not (as they say) robbed Peter to pay Paul, but haue spoiled the Creator to spill (as much as in you lieth) the creature. Last of all, as we flatter not the holy virgin with titles too high for her: so it is farre from us to speake so basely and vilely of her as some of your companions haue done; who to set out the glory of the Popes pardon, so farre forgat the honour and reuerent respect that he should haue borne to her, that he affirmed, that if a man had lien with our Lady the mother of Christ, and had gotten her with childe, yet that the Popes pardon (whereof he was then the Pedler) was able to set him free.

Peter beginneth to practise his primacy. Bez. ain nouo Test. Graec. an. 1565.

CARTVV. 8. [15 Peter rising up.] So (with you) you may make the Prebendary aboue the Bishop, who preacheth oftner at your Orders giving, then doth the Bishop: wherefore it is fond to conclude, that for so much as he taught the congregation touching a new election, therefore hee was Prince of all. But his Primacie is rather ouerthrowen by this, that in a case which hee knew by the Scripture necessary to be done, he though it unmeet for him to doe any thing without the Churches consent. And so the Greek Scholiast after Chrysostom, willeth to be obserued that Peter did all by the consent of the Disciples, nothing by his own authority, nothing by commandement. The order also of the election of the Deacons which Luke indifferently ascribeth to all the Apostles, as hauing equall right in it, argueth this, That Peter tooke no such authority upon him. From your aduersaries heere you can get no meat to feed your cause with, but as it were out of the fire, where you must burne your hand: for they giue no other authority to Peter here, then that which necessarily serueth to auoyd confusion, that is, that where diuers are met, one should haue power to gather the voyces of the rest, and accordingly to pronounce the sentence: which authority he taketh not to himselfe, but receiueth by consent of the company, and that not for euer, but during the present action: so that Peters supremacie in this place, was no greater then is the speaker in the lower house, or proclaimer in the Convocation.

Act. 6.

Verse 26 And they gaue them lots, and the lot fell upon Mathias, and he was numbred with the eleuen Apostles.

RHEM. 9. [26 Lottes.] When the euent or fall of the lot is not expected of Diuels nor of the starres, nor of any force of fortune, but looked and prayed for to be directed by God and his holy Saincts, then may lottes be vsed lawfully. And sometimes to discerne betwixt two things mere indifferent, they be necessary, as S. Augustine teacheth ep. 180. ad Honoratum.

Casting of lots.

CARTVV. 9. [26. Lottes.] This may be passed ouer, if their blasphemy in ioyning the Saints with God in this proper worke of God had been left out.

RHEM. 1. [14 Peter ſtanding.] Peter the head of the reſt and now newly repleniſhed with all knowledge and fortitude, maketh the firſt Sermon.

CARTVV. 1. [14. Peter ſtanding] In going about to ſet a head upon Peter more then he ſhould haue, your ſelues haue fewer braines then men of any tollerable iudgement ought to haue: for how followeth it, that he made the firſt Sermon, therefore he is the Head of the Apoſtles: it might happily argue a greater grace and boldneſſe in ſpeech, in which reſpect the reſidue diuers times gaue him place, but greatneſſe and authority it cannot argue. Vnleſſe you will grant, that Eliphas was head of all the foure friends of Iob, becauſe he ſpake before them all. And if this argument ſet up Peters primacie, yet it pulleth downe the Popes ſupremacie, who becauſe oftentimes he neither preacheth firſt nor laſt, (much leſſe oftneſt) as Peter did, leeſeth the right that for this reſpect is claimed in Peters behalfe. And if you read the Greek Scholiaſt, he will teach you that Peter was choſen to this by voyce of the reſt.

Verſe 27 Becauſe thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in ‡ hell, nor giue thy Holy One to ſee ‡ corruption.

RHEM. 2. [27 In hell, nor giue.] Who but an infidell (ſaith S. Auguſtine) will deny Chriſt to haue deſcended to hel; Ep. 99.

RHEM. 3. [27 Corruption.] As his ſoule ſuffered no paine in Hel, ſo neither did his body take any corruption in the graue.

Verſe 38 But Peter ſaid to them, ‡ Doe penance, and be euery one of you baptiſed in the name of Ieſus Chriſt for remiſsion of ſinnes: and you ſhall receiue the gift of the holy Ghoſt.

RHEM. 4. [38 Doe penance.] Not onely amendment of life, but penance alſo required before Baptiſme, in ſuch as be of age: though not in that ſort as afterward in the Sacrament of penance, Aug. de ſid. & oper. c. 11. & ep. 108.

Verſe 42 And they were perſeuering in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, and in the communication of ‡ the breaking of bread, and prayers.

RHEM. 5. [42. The breaking.] This was the B. Sacrament, which the Apoſtles daily miniſtred to the Chriſtians at leaſt in one kinde. See chap. 20. 7.

CARTVV. 5. [42. The breaking.] Suppoſe the bread of the Lords Table were here meant, yet the Trope whereby the part is put for the whole, is manifeſt: otherwiſe you may as well ſay, that they had no thankeſgiuing, becauſe Luke maketh onely mention of prayers, as to ſay they had not the cup, becauſe mention is made onely of the bread. And that is yet more manifeſt, for that ſpeaking of the common Table (from the ſimilitude whereof the Lords Table is taken, hee uſeth the ſame phraſe of breaking of bread, without making mention of any drinke, without the which it muſt needs be a feaſt. And marke how abſurd the Ieſuits are in this place, which by this note imagine that the Apoſtles themſelues communicated but vnder one kinde, directly contrary to their own doctrine of communicating neceſſarily vnder both kinds by the Prieſts. Adde hereunto, that the Greeke Fathers expound this place of the common table, whereof there is an euident confirmation, in that this bread here ſpoken of, is called a taking of food, or nouriſhment: for he ſaith not, they brake bread, and took food; but breaking bread, they took food: which can hardly be ſaid of the Lords Supper. It is true that ſome other of the Fathers expound this of the ſupper of the Lord: howbeit the ſame is nothing for the aduantage of the Ieſuits, ſeeing that there is neuer a one of them which thereupon gathereth as you doe.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 1 And when the dayes of Pentecoſt were accompliſhed, they were all together in one place.

RHEM. 6. [1 The dayes of Pentecoſt.] As Chriſt our Paſche, for correſpondence to the figure was offered at the Iewes great feaſt of Paſche, ſo fifty dayes after (in Greeke, Pentecoſt) for accompliſhing the like figure of the Law-giuing in Mount Sinai, he ſent down the Holy Ghoſt iuſt on the day of their Pentecoſt, which was alwayes on Sunday, as appeareth Leuit. 23. 15. Both which dayes the Church keepeth yeerely for memory of Chriſts death and Reſurrection, and the ſending down of the Holy: as they did the like for record of their deliuerie out of Egypt, and their Law giuing aforeſayd, the ſayd feaſts with vs conteining, beſide the remembrance of benefits paſt, great Sacraments alſo of the life to come. Aug. ep. 119. C. 16.

The feaſts of Paſche and Pentecoſt.

CARTVV. 6. [1. The dayes of Pentecoſt.] The cauſe of the ſending downe of the holy Ghoſt viſibly on that day, is for that it was the next famous feaſt after our Sauiours aſcenſion, wherin the people of God aſſembled themſelues from all places where they were ſcattered, to the end that the thing otherwiſe incredible, hauing ſo many witneſſes, might haue (after a ſort) ſo many Preachers and trumpets, by the which both the miracle and the doctrine that was then taught, might be conueyed to many Nations.

Verſe 4 And they were all repleniſhed with the Holy Ghoſt, and they began to ſpeak with diuers tongues, according as the Holy Ghoſt gaue them to ſpeake.

RHEM. 7. [4 All repleniſhed.] Though the Apoſtles and the reſt were baptized before, and had thereby receiued the grace of the Holy Ghoſt to ſanctification & remiſſion of ſins, as for diuers other purpoſes alſo: Yet as Chriſt *promiſed them they ſhould be further indued with ſtrength & vertue from aboue, ſo here he fulfilleth his promiſe viſibly powring down the Holy Ghoſt vpon all the company and vpon euery one of them, thereby repleniſhing the Apoſtles ſpecially with all truth, wiſdom, and knowledge neceſſary for the gouernment of the Church, and giuing both to them, & to all other preſent, the grace and effect of the Sacrament of Confirmation, accompliſhing, corroborating, and ſtrengthning strengthening them in their faith and the confession of the same. And lastly for a visible token of Gods Spirit, he endued them all with the gift of diuers strange tongues: all (I say) there present as wel our Lady, as other holy women and brethren, besides the Apostles, though the Hereticks fondly argue, for the desire they haue to dishonour Christs mother, that neither she nor they were there present, nor had the gift of tongues, contrary to the plaine text that saith, They were altogether, to wit, all the 120. mentioned before c. 1. 15. Our B. Lady Bez. Annot. in hoc cap. v. 1.

CARTVV. 7. [4 All replenished.] They argue that the gift of the holy Ghost came upon the Apostles onely: first, because it was promised to them alone, Act. 1. 7. secondly, because the Adiectiue (all) is in good grammer often referred to the Substantiue next before, Act. 2. 26. rather then to that which is further of, Act. 1. 15. Thirdly, for that Peter, for the use of the tongues defendeth himselfe, and the eleuen alone, Act. 2. Fourthly, for that in two ancient copies, the word (all) is restrained unto the eleuen Apostles, whereunto may bee added that they all spake there the mighty or magnificall things of God: which by your own confession cannot agree with the dutifull modesty of the Virgin, to whom it belonged not in that Assembly to speak of those mysteries. Againe, the seuenth verse, they were all of Galilee which spake with divers tongues, which in no likelyhood can agree to the whole number of 120 whereof the Church did stand. And shall these three-halfe peny Iesuites upon their bare affirmation, that it is fondly argued, carry away the matter without shewing any reason. They are therefore worthy to be deceiued that will be led by such Maisters, which if they had put all their strength to haue answered the fondnesse of these arguments, their doting follies would haue beene as many in number as their answeres: which they fore-seeing as the dog in Nylus, taketh a lap of the riuer, and runneth away for feare, so they, taking a snatch at M. Bezaes heele runne amaine from his reasons, of which they knew they should be bitten.

Verse. 23. This same, by the determinate counsell and prescience of God being deliuered, you by the hands of wicked men, haue crucified and slaine.

RHEM. 8. [23 By the determinate counsell of God deliuered.] God deliuered him and he deliuered himselfe, for loue and intention of our saluation, and so the acte was holy and Gods own determination. But the Iewes and others which betrayed and crucified him, did it of malice and wicked purpose, and their facte was damnable, and not of Gods counsell or causing, though he tolerated it, for that he could and did turne their abominable fact to the good of our saluation. Therefore abhorre those new Manichees of our time, both Lutherans and Caluinists, that make God the author and cause of Iudas betraying of Christ, no lesse then of Pauls conuersion, beside the false translation of Beza, saying for Gods prescience or foreknowledge (in the Greeke, προγνωσει) Gods prouidence. Gods determination that Christ should die, excuseth not the Iewes. Beza.

CARTVV. 8. [23 By the determinate counsell of God.] Look the answer hereof before upon Math. 6. 13. And touching M. Bezaes translation of προγνωσις, what should a man esteeme of that condemnation that is given without so much as one witnesse of reason. And if the word προγνωσις, which properly signifieth a fore-understanding, bee without suspicion of falshood, translated prouidence, why should the same translation of a word of the same signification be charged with falsehood? Vnlesse therefore you can mince some difference between Gods fore-knowledge and his foreunderstanding. If you were not trifling cauillers, you would easily beare the same translation in words of the same signification. And for so much as the Apostle in these words maintaineth the glory of Christ, whom his enemies supposed to haue fallen into their hands through unability of defending himselfe from their violence, the word of prouidence, whereby the Lords gouernment and rule in that betraying is insinuated, is fitter to beat down that errour then the word of fore-knowledge, which doth not take away strength from the Iewes to haue made themselues Maisters of our Sauiour Christ in the taking of him. And therefore Peter otherwhere speaking of the same matter in steed of this word which is turned prouidence, setteth the hand of God, noting expresly against the idle permission of the Papists, that the hand and operation of the Lord is as it were ioyned and tyed to his counsels, to effect them in their time. To let passe D. Tremellius, that so turneth the Syrian Paraphrast. Act. 4. 28.

Verse. 24. Whom God hath raised up, loosing the sorrowes of hell, according as it was impossible that he should be holden of it.

RHEM. 9. [24 Loosing the sorrowes.] Christ was not in paines himselfe, but loosed other men of those dolours of hell, wherewith it was impossible himselfe should be touched. See S. Augustine, * Lib. 12. c. 13. de gen. ad lit.

CARTVV. 9. [24 Loosing the sorrowes.] Luke argueth the resurrection of our Sauiour Christ by a reason of the cause to the effect; for seeing upon his Crosse he had satisfied the wrath of God, and paid the debt for which he was suerty to the uttermost farthing, hee had thereby loosed the deadly sorrowes. Howbeit forsomuch as it did not appeare so well that hee had loosed those sorrowes, untill such time as hee was risen from death, therefore the victory over those sorrowes, being as it were sealed by his rising againe, Luke not without cause ascribeth it unto his resurrection. And thus also from the effect to the cause, there riseth singular comfort of Christs resurrection unto all the faithfull: namely, that he hath made full satisfaction for all their sinnes, otherwise it had beene impossible for him to haue gotten out of the graue the third day, if there had beene so much, as but one and the least sinne unsatisfied. And therefore the place of Augustine, not in the 13, but in the 33 chapter, as it is put doubtfully for that he could see no other sense (as hee confesseth) so hath it no ground in the Word. And this interpretation, as it is contrary to the truth, so overthroweth the Iesuites opinion of their Limbus: for, whereas they affirme it to be a place of rest, and where no punishment is, the punishments being in places lower then it, here following the exposition of Augustine, that our Sauiour went to hell to loose the sorrowes of such there, as hee thought good to deliver, they pull down with their own hands that which they had before builded. Vpon Luke 16. 22.

all iuſt men there holden in bondage till his death, and the Apoſtle here citing the Prophets wordes moſt euidently expreſſeth the ſame, diſtinguiſhing his ſoule in hell, from his body in the graue: Yet the Caluiniſts to defend againſt Gods expreſſe words the blaſphemie of their Maſter, that Chriſt ſuffered the paines of Hell, and that no where but vpon the Croſſe, and that otherwiſe he deſcended not into hell, moſt falſely and flatly here corrupt the text, by turning and wreſting, both the Hebrew and Greeke words from their moſt proper and vſuall ſignifications of, Soul and hell, into body and graue ſaying for, my ſoule in hell, thus, my body, life*, perſon, yea as Beza in his new Teſtament ann. 1556.) my carcas in the graue, and this latter they corrupt almoſt throughout the Bible for that purpoſe. But for refelling of both corruptions, it ſhall be ſufficient in this place: firſt, that all Hebrues and Greekes, and all that vnderſtand the tongues, know that the foreſayd Hebrew and Greeke words are as proper, peculiar and vſuall to ſignifie, ſoule and Hell, as anima and infernus in Latin, yea as ſoule and hell in Engliſh do properly ſignifie the ſoule of man, and hel that is oppoſite to to heauen, : and that they are as vnproperly vſed to ſignifie body & graue, as to ſay in Engliſh, ſoule for body, or Hell for graue. Secondly it doth ſo miſlike the Heretickes themſelues that Caſtaleo one of their fine Tranſlatours refelleth it and to make it the more ſure, for in inferno, tranſlateth, in Orco, that is, in hell. Thirdly, Beza himſelfe partly recanteth in his latter edition, and confeſſeth that, Carcas, was no fit word for the body of Chriſt, and therefore, I haue (ſaith he) changed it, but I reteine and keepe the ſame ſenſe ſtill, meaning, that he hath now tranſlated it, ſoule, but that he meaneth thereby as before, Chriſts dead body, fourthly, he ſaith plainely, that tranſlating thus Thou ſhalt not leaue my carkas in the graue. he did it of purpoſe againſt Limbus Patrum, Purgatorie, and Chriſts deſcending into hell, which he calleth foule errours, and marueleth, that moſt of the ancient Fathers were in that errour: namely of Chriſts deſcending into hell, and deliuering the old fathers. What need we more? He oppoſeth himſelfe both againſt plaine Scriptures and all ancient fathers, peruerting the one, and contemning the other, to ouerthrow that trueth which is an Article of our Creede. whereby it is euidently falſe which ſome of them ſay for their defence, that none of them did euer of purpoſe tranſlate falſly. CARTVV. 10 [27. My ſoule in hell] That the faithful in all ages were immediatly after their departure taken into heauen looke before. And touching the deſcent of Chriſt into hell, it is but their brazen forehead that they ſay we deny it, contrary to the manifeſt ſcripture, for this ſcripture from whence they would draw their principall yarne to make this ſpiders web of, is directly againſt them: for all men ſe that the Apoſtles purpoſe is to ſhew that Chriſt (a thing vncredible vnto the Iewes) was riſen againe. And as the whole ſcope of diuers verſes tend to proue the reſurrection, ſo both the verſe going before theſe wordes, and the later part of the verſe, wherein theſe wordes are, do argue manifeſtly that they are vnderſtood of the rayling of Chriſt from the graue, for hauing ſpoken of his fleſh that it ſhould reſt in the graue, as in a certaine rent that is to ſay ſet vp for a day two or three, with hope that it ſhould be raiſed vp againe, he bringeth theſe wordes for a proofe thereof: as the cauſall word doth inuincibly declare, which notwithſtanding proue it not at all, if this be meant of his ſoule as you will haue it. And if the ſoule of our Sauiour Chriſt being in hell were notwithſtanding (as you confeſſe) in glorie ſtill, and without paine, what grace and fauour of God had it need of to be deliuered from thence, or what cauſe of hope of deliuerance was there in reſpect thereof) whereas Chriſt in regard of his bodie that was in the graue, had cauſe to hope for the deliuerance of it from putrefaction by the raiſing of it vp again, it is alſo known that it is familiar to the old Teſtament, to repeate one thing in a verſe in diuers wordes: when as therefore the words of the larter end of the verſe (added indeed for a clearer declaration of thoſe in the beginning thereof cannot be vnderſtood but of the body, at the leaſt it ought not ſeeme ſo ſtrange vnto them that theſe ſhould be vnderſtood of the reſurrection of Chriſtes bodie. And where they ſay that the hebrew word which Luke doth here tranſlate, doth neuer ſignifie the corps of a perſon deceaſed: they bewraie their groſſe ignorance that haue not, or rather their wilfull ignorance, that will not learne it at Beza, who pointeth the out diuers places where the word ſo ſignifieth: other wiſe let them ſhew how a man vnder the law might make himſelfe vncleane by touching of a ſoule that is departed, Beſide that in his laſt edition he hath turned it the perſon of Chriſt in which ſignification the hebrew word is very oft taken and the greeke alſo. The like ignorance is in the hebrew word which we ſay properly and ordinarily ſignifieth the graue and they hell. Not onely contrarie to the manifeſt ſenſe of the ſcriptures, to the iudgement of the Rabbins which are for the ſignification of the wordes faithfull interpreters: but contrarie alſo vnto their own dictionarie, which in interpreting this word putteth the ſignification of the graue in the firſt place, as that which is commmonly moſt proper and vſuall, and the ſignification of hell in the ſecond place as that which is vnproper, and rare. Iacob ſaith of his ſonnes that they ſhould bring his hoare head to what I beſeech you: to hell you wil ſay for there he vſeth this word whereof the controuerſie is. But I pray you are the hoare heades brought to hell either to your lower or higher after they depart this world, whoſe body (by your own doctrine) neuer commeth to any of them. And if that were granted, how yet can the ſonnes of Iacob bring their father to either of your hels? They knew the way to carry him to the graue, but to carry him to hell they needed ſome guide that had been there before. The ſame ſpeech is uſed alſo of other perſons. Again, when ſpeaking of the congregation of Chore, &c. it is ſaid, that both they and their houſes, and all their ſubſtance, went to the place whereof the controuerſie is at this time: what, will you ſay that their houſes and houſhold ſtuffe went down to hell, either your higher hell, which you call Limbus, or lower where you aſſigne the place of the damned? Whatſoeuer you anſwer beſide the yeelding of your cauſe, you make your ſelues a laughing ſtocke euen to children. It were an infinite labour to ſhew all the places where the word here in controuerſie is taken for the graue, beſide a number of places where (by trope) it is taken for trouble & anguiſh in this life. Whereby the impudency of the Ieſuits is manifeſt again, which affirm that this word is in the Hebrew tongue as commonly underſtood of hell as we in the Engliſh tongue underſtand hell to be the place which is oppoſed and ſet againſt heauen. The ſame uſe is of the Greeke word, RHEM. 4. [6 That which I haue.] This power of working miracles was in Peter, and Peter properly did giue this man his health, though he receiued that force and vertue of God, and in, and by him executed the same. Therefore he saith, That which I haue, I giue to thee, and the Heretickes are ridiculous that note here, a miracle done by Christ by the hands of the Apostles, to make the simple beleeue that they had no more to doe then a dead instrument in the workemans hand. Saints do miracles and the like, but by the power of God.

CARTVV. 4. [6 That which I haue.] They that note that the miracle is done by Christ through the hands of the Apostles, haue their warrant from the Apostles themselues, who affirme the same. And in that the Apostles wrought their miracles by prayer made unto God, it argueth that the power of working miracles was not within them, but came from heauen at the instance of their prayer. And it is as much as if the Iesuits should say, that the husbandman that planteth and watereth, hath power giuen of the Lord to put life in his tree and to make it grow. As for their reason that Peter had it to giue, it is fond, as if a man were not said to haue his lands and possessions that are without him, as well as his affections which are within him. Their cauill also, that wee make the Apostles dead instruments in thus speaking, is shamelesse: For let them tell us how we should better set them forth for liuely instruments then in calling them hands, which of all the parts of the body is nimblest and aptest to worke. Act. 4. 29. *1. Verse 12. But Peter seeing them, made answer to the people, Yee men of Israel, why maruaile you at this, or why look you upon us, as though I by our power or holinesse we haue made this man to walk?

RHEM. 5 [12. By our power] When the Apostles remit sins, or do any other miracles, they do it not by any humane, proper, or naturall power in themselues: but of supernaturall force giuen them from aboue, to proue that the faith of Christ is true, and that he is God whom the Iewes crucified, in whose name and faith they work, and not in their owne.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 37 Whereas he had a peece of land, sold it, and brought the price and laid it before the feet of the Apostles.

RHEM. 3. [37 Before the feete.] He as the rest, did not onely giue his goods as in vulgar almes, but in all humble and reuerent manner as things dedicated to God, he layd them down at the Apostles holy feete, as Luke alwayes expresseth, and gaue them not into their hands. The Shunamite fell down and embraced Eliseus feete, Many that asked benefits of Christ (as the woman sicke of the bloodie fluxe) fell down at his feete, and Mary kissed his feete. Such are signes of due reuerence done both to Christ and to other sacred persons, either Prophets, Apostles, Popes, or other representing his person in earth. See in S. Hierome of Epiphanius Bishop in Cypres, how the people of Hierusalem of all sorts flocked together vnto him, offring their children (to take his blessing) *kissing his feete, plucking the hemmes of his garment, so that he could not passe for the throng, Ep. 16. c. 4. cont. error. CARTVV. 5. [37. Before the feet.] Luke noteth thereby that he subiected the disposition of his mony to the discretion of his Apostles. And therefore they may with better warrant say, that Paul which was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, fell downe before his feet alwayes when he learned any thing at him, then to conclude any such reuerence out of this place. And where some haue fallen down at the feet of the Ministers, Wee read them reproued therefore, but never read that they were commended in that poynt. And it is not to be passed ouer that the Iesuits confound here Christ with the Prophets and Apostles, the Master with the Seruants, as if they comming in our Sauiour Christs name, were to bee reuerenced with the same honour that our Sauiour Christ was here upon earth. I speake not of their matching of the Pope with the Prophets and Apostles, that is to say the bramble with the vine and Oliue tree, as if they hauing ushered him with these seruants of God, he should not be taken from the table, and asked how he pearked up so high. Act. 22. 3.

Verse. 39. But if it be of | God, you are not able to dissolue them, least perhaps you be found to resist God also, and they consented to him.

RHEM. 2. [39 Of God, you.] Time and the euident successe of Christs Church and Religion proue it to be of God: no violence of the Iewes, no persecution of the Heathen Princes, no endeuour of domesticall aduersaries, heretickes, Schismatikes, or ill liuers, preuailing against it, as on the other side, many attempts haue been made by Arius, Macedonius, Nestorius, Luther, and the like, who thought themselues some bodie: but after they had played their parts a while, their memorie is buried, or liueth onely in malediction and infamie, and their schollers come to nought. Therefore let no Cath. man be scandalized that this heresie holdeth vp for a time. For the Arrians and some other florished much longer then these, and were better supported by Princes and learning, and yet had an end.

ANNOTATIONS.

Vers. 2. And I defrauded of the price of the land, his wife being priuy thereto: and bringing a certaine portion, laid it at the feet of the Apostles.

RHEM. 3. [2 Defrauded.] In that (saith S. Augustine) hee withdrew any part of that which he promised, he was guilty at once, both of sacriledge, and of fraud: of sacriledge, because he robbed God

Aug. Ser. 9. in append. de diuersis tom. 10. of that which was his by promise: of fraud, in that he withheld of the whole gift a peece. Let now the Heretickes come, and say it was for lying or hypocrisie onely that his fact was condemned: because they be loth to haue sacriledge counted any such sinne, who haue taught men not onely to Sacrilege. take away from God some peece, of that or all that themselues gaue, but plainly to spoile and apply to themselues all that other men gaue.

CARTVV. 3. [2 Defrauded.] These men are so contentious that for want of an aduersary they fight with their own shadowes, there being none (to our knowledge) that deny sacriledge in this act. Wee haue taken nothing from God but from the Popish Gods, and Goddesses, which we could haue wished to haue beene better bestowed upon the Schooles and poore, if the times wherein the nestes of these uncleane birds were taken down, had beene so lightsome, as not onely to haue seen the abuse of them, but also the profitable uses whereunto they might haue beene applyed. And if you take a good suruey of them, you shall finde both now, and in Queen Maies daies, the greater part of that spoile in their hands which are fauourers and patrones of your superstition.

Verse. 3. And | Peter said, Ananias, why hath Sathan tempted thy heart, that thou shouldest lie to the Holy Ghost, and defraude of the price of the land?

RHEM. 4. [3 Peter said.] S. Peter (as you see here) without mans relation knew this fraud and Excommunication ioyned with corporal paines. 1. Cor. 5. the cogitations of Ananias, and as head of the College and of the whole Church against which this robbery was committed, executed this heauie sentence of Excommunication both against him, and his wife consenting to the Sacrilege, for it was excommunication by S. Augustines iudgement, (lib. 5. cont. ep. Parm. c. 1. to 7.) and had this corporall miraculous death ioyned withall, as the Excommunication that S. Paul gaue out against the incestuous and others, had the corporall vexation of Satan incident vnto it.

1. Cor. 5. 5. 1. Tim. 1. 20. CARTVV. 4. [3 Peter said.] The end of excommunication, which is, that the sowle may bee saued in the day of the Lord, and that thereby one should learne not to commit the like fault againe, doth manifestly argue that this was no excommunication, which in a moment tooke away life, whereby the passage to repentance is utterly cut off. Neither doth Augustine call it excommunication, but rather otherwise, seeing hee putteth a difference betweene this action of Peter and the giuing of a man to Sathan, which is all one in the Apostles language with excommunication, as after in a more conuenient place shall appeare.

That of Peters head-ship of the Apostles and the Church, it is but barely and nakedly said: whereas Peter confessing that the lie was made as well to the other Apostles as to him (saying, thou hast not lied to men but to God) it must needs follow that the iudgement which the Lord executed by the Vers. 4. word of Peter, was as well done in respect of the lie done to them as to him. And we suppose you haue better skill in the lawes of the land then vpon the chiefe Iustices pronouncing the sentence in the name of the rest, to esteeme that he hath rule over the rest.

Verse. 4. Remaining, did it not remaine to thee: and being sold, was it not in thy power?

word, according as the derivation of the word, noting a place where a man can see nothing, doth declare, as also appeareth 1 Cor. 15. themselues translating it death and not hell; for darknesse is properly in the graue where the sunne cannot shine, and by Metaphor onely, and borrowed speech, is translated unto hell. Beside that, the Hebrew words hauing the signification of body or person, and of the graue, as hath been declared, the Euangelist and Apostles which doth nothing else but turne the words, must needs keepe the same signification which the Hebrew words haue: howsoeuer they should happen to expresse it with words not so proper for it, which be done oftentimes of them to the end that they would not depart (but upon urgent cause) from the 70. Interpreters, whose translation was then commonly receiued, none of any meane vnderstanding that way can be ignorant of. Now if the Iesuites will not yeeld unto our interpretation, which hath so manifest confirmation out of the word, let them giue credit vnto Peter, who vers. 31. doth precisely affirme, that these words in controuersie are vnderstood of the resurrection. Vnlesse therefore they haue their part in the heresie of Soule-sleepers, they shall be constrained by the word ψυχὴ to understand either the body simply, or the body by a Trope, wherein the whole is put for a part, that is to say, the whole person of Christ for his body. And whether wayes soeuer they will take it, it must necessarily follow, that the word ἅιδης cannot otherwise be taken in this place then for the graue. By all which appeareth, that M. Beza hath said nothing here contrary to the Scriptures, but for them and with them: for which cause he needeth lesse to care, if he haue not herein the consent of antiquitie, which hath no consent in this matter with it selfe, some affirming that Christ went to the place where the beleeuing Fathers were, some into the lowest hell and place of the damned: some affirming that he went to deliuer them from their paines: some otherwise. Some saying that he went then to deliver the Fathers which were there: othersome affirming that they shall not be delivered vntill the day of the resurrection, with divers doubtings and staggerings that they are at with themselues. Which argueth that in this case they had no ground to stand vpon. And seeing in hell there is no goale delivery nor redemption; and the scripture must needs be fulfilled, that there is so great a gulfe of distance betweene heauen and hell, that those that are in either place, cannot come each to other, your boldnesse is very great to place his soule there from whence there is no returne, you do also greatly disadvantage your selues in limiting the abode of his soule in hell by the space that his body remained in graue: not alone for that you doe it without all warrant of the word that mentioneth no such limitation; but also for that by this meanes you set your selues directly against the words of our Sauiour Christ, who testifieth that he and the thiefe should be that day in Paradise: which howsoeuer it is of some referred unto his diuinitie, yet it being a grant of the thiefes petition, that he would remember him when he came to his kingdom, it must needs be understood of the soule, his body being that day in the graue, and his divinity being even then in the kingdom when he hanged upon the crosse. And if you had not been so rash as to haue banished his soule from heauen the first three dayes that ensued his death, you had left your selues some answer, that he was the first day in Paradise, and the other two in hell: finally, albeit the Article of Christs discent into hell, may be with a commodious interpretation well and duely beleeued: yet it appeareth that a great part of Antiquitie in their Councels, where they professed the Articles of their faith, retaining the other, leaue out that Article.

Verse. 44 All they also that beleeued, were together, and had | all things common.

RHEM. 11. [44 All things common.] This liuing in common is not a rule or a precept to all Christian men, as the Anabaptists falsely pretend; but a life of perfection and counsell, followed of our religious in the Catholike Church. See S. Aug. in Ps. 132. in principio & ep. 109. Living in common.

CARTVV. 11. [44 All things common.] Here you be manifest supporters of the Anabaptistes, which confesse such a communitie of goods in the primitiue church (which Luke, setteth forth for a paterne of all other Churches) as the Anabaptistes labour for, where in deed here is no communitie spoken of which ought not to be in the Churches as long as the world standeth: for the communitie was as touching the vse & so far forth as the poore brethren had need of it, and not that euerie one was a begger and had nothing of his own, as amongst the Anabaptists and your Anabaptisticall monkery is practised. Neither is there any more done here, then the Apostle prescribeth to the Corinthians & in them to all other Churches for a generall rule, for exhorting them to liberality towards the poore Church of Ierusalem not (saith he) that other should be relieued and you oppressed, but vpon euen conditiõ, that as at this time your abundant supplieth their lack: so their abundance should supply your lack, that there might be equality, as it is written he that gathered much had nothing ouer, and he that gathered little had not the lesse. And do you not see your own dotage which restraine that to a sect and and sort of your popelinges, which Luke maketh common to the whole Church euen of those which were but newly entered into the profession of Christianitie, & that you ascribe that to a work of supererogation which in some sort the commandement of louing the neighbour, much more our brother, as our selues, will draw from vs. And notwithstanding this communitie they retayned euerie one his house whereinto it may seeme that by course they inuited and ghested one another and assembled not into any common cloister. August. maketh nothing for you vnlesse you wil conclude that because he exhorteth the solitary & single persons to communicate their substance with their fellowes liuing in the same monasterie, therefore it belonged to none other but to vse the same communication of their substance, where if you read Augustines epistle well you shall perceiue that he giueth diuers aduises vnto these solitarie women which agree to other secular persons (as you call them) as well as vnto them. *2. RHEM.2.[16 Faith of his name.] This faith was not the faith of the lame man (for he looked onely for almes) nor a ſpeciall faith of the Apoſtles owne ſaluation: but beleefe of Chriſtian Religion.

CARTVV.2.[16 Faith of hũ name.] Hee looked not to receiue an almes, after that he heard that poore Peter was ſo far from his triple crown that he had neither gould nor ſiluer, and therefore, that not withſtanding, it might well be the faith and full perſwaſion of Gods fauour towards him in Chriſt, that gaue him health: whereof he declared forthwith two notable effects, one of cleauing to the Apoſtles, and the other of praiſing of God for his deliuerance.

RHEM.3.[21 Heauen truely.] Some Heretickes fouly corrupt this place, thus, Who muſt be contained in heauen, of purpoſe (as they profeſt) to hold Chriſt in heauen, from the B. ſacrament. Beza. As though his preſence there, drew him out of heauen. Neither can they pretend the Greek, which is word for word as in the vulgar Latine, and as we tranſlate.

CARTV.3.[21 Heauen truely.] A foule corruption forſoothe, if you ſay a veſſell receiueth ten gallons and M^r. Beza ſaith it conteineth ten gallons, hath not he maruailouſly cotrupted your ſaying? And yet this is your quarrell againſt him and this is the foule corruption, for where you ſay that he tranſlateth it muſt be conteyned, paſſiuely the word being actiue, you ought to vnderſtand that for ſuch wayward men as you are, he hath changed that tranſlation, and for the paſſiue verbe hath put the actiue, whereas notwithſtanding Greg. Nazianzen who knew his mother tongue better then you do, did ſo expound it paſſiuely, ſo that thinking to ſtrick M^r. Beza, the ſtroke of your poiſoned tongue is light vpon Nazianzene. Although to the matter in controuerſie it is all one as both you and he tranſlate it: for whereas Peter exhorting them to turn vnto Chriſt it might come into their minds where Chriſt is to whom they ſhould turne, he anſwereth that ſecret demaund and ſaith that the heauens (as his houſe) muſt conteyne or receiue him vntill the later day, wheras otherwiſe if he had been in the ſacrament, it would haue agreed better with earthly men to haue ſought him neerer then furher of, and in bread and wine, which they know ſo well then in heauen, which they haue ſo little vnderſtanding of. Beſide that, in ſaying that the heauens muſt conteyne him vntill that time, he declareth that as touching his humanitie he can not be on earth vnleſſe you will confound heauen and earth and make them all one, as you confound his diuinitie and humanitie giuing to the humanitie the proprietie of the Godhead which is to be in diuers places at once?

What iudgement Augustine is of touching those that marry againe after the vow of continency, and how hee condemneth them that account the marriage of such persons adultery, it hath beene declared before vpon Math. 8 14. The same also may bee said of Cyprian and Epiphanius. As touching your Popes iudgement, wee need not to make any great account of it, seeing you (as wee suppose) will make small account of your Angelicall Doctor, who affirmeth that the Church may dispence with the solemne vow of continency, which is taken by receiuing of orders.

RHEM. 7. [15 His shadow.] Specially they sought to Peter the chiefe of all, who not onely by touching, as the other, but by his very shadow cured all diseases, wherevpon S. Augustine saith, If then the shadow of his body could helpe, how much more now the fulnesse of power? And if then a certain little winde of him passing by did profite them that humbly asked, how much more the grace of him now being permanent and remaining? Ser. 29. de Sanctis speaking of the miracles done by the Saincts now reigning in heauen.

CARTVV. 7. [15. His shadow.] If your meaning be to make Peters authority higher then any other the Apostles, because he did greater miracles then they: by the same reason you may heaue him and all the rest of the Apostles aboue our Sauiour Christ, who foretold that his Apostles should doe greater miracles then himselfe, whereof this is one. Although if this crooked rule were followed, yet should Peter be rather inferior then superior vnto Paul, from whose body napkins and partlets being taken and carried farre off, did not onely heale diseases, but freed men from the diuels, whereof they were possessed. And Augustine ballancing them doth, both confesse that he knoweth not whom to call the greater, but esteemeth them equall throughout. As for the power and vertue which (29. Serm.) he affirmeth Peter to be of, to helpe vs now he is in heaven, as it is a needlesse speculation, so is it nothing to any matter in controuersie betweene vs. For if they be now of power to helpe vs, it followeth not therefore that we may, much lesse must pray vnto him, which Augustine doth not affirme.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1. AND in those dayes the number of Disciples increasing, there arose a murmuring among the Greekes against the Hebrewes, for that their widowes were despised in the daily ministery.

RHEM. 1 [1 Murmuring] It commeth of humane infirmitie, that in euery Societie of men (be it neuer so holy) there is some cause giuen or taken by the weak, of murmure and difference, which must euer be prouided for and stayed in the beginning, lest it grow to further schisme or sedition. And to all such defects the more the Church increaseth in number and diuersitie of men and Prouinces, the more it is subiect. In all which things the spirituall Magistrates, by the Apostles example and authoritie, must take order, as time and occassion shall require.

Murmuring & emulation

For what are Deacons but imitators or followers of Christ, ministring to the Bishop, as Christ to his Father , and working vnto him a cleane and immaculate worke , euen as S. Lib. Eccles. Hier. cap. 3. part. 2.

CARTVV. 2. [3. Seuen men.] To the holy all things are holy, but to the prophane men all are prophane. And therefore no maruell although the Iesuits call the tables of the godly poore prophane tables. The money giuen to maintaine these tables is holy money, so farre as the embezeling thereof by their own iudgement) is called sacriledge. And if the money be holy, the end whereunto it is applied being better then it, it ought not to bee termed prophane, as here it is. And if the money giuen to the repairing of the Temple which was made of stones and timber, was iudged (in respect of the use) holy, how much more is this money so to be accounted of, which is giuen to maintaine the Temples where the Spirit of God dwelleth, and which were redemed with the pretious bloud of the Son of God. But thus it pleaseth the prophane Iesuits to call them, to the end thereby to abase the proper worke of this sacred function, as if the faithfull and discreet handling of that money wherewith such pretious Iewels of the Church are preserued, were not worthy to be dealt in by the hands of such as are wise and holy; as if it needed not the prayers of the Church, which their Synagogue casteth away, not onely vpon the soules departed, whom they cannot helpe, but also upon dead candles, hearbs, oyles, and other such beggery as need no helpe. And as if they needed not the putting on of hands to be admonished that the Lord hath marked ad seuered them out from amongst the rest, to haue a more speciall care over the poore then the rest of the Church haue: from whom the poore by the ordinance of God, are to looke for their necessary prouision. And seemeth it so small a matter vnto you, which the Church of God esteemed so weightie: as that it iudged the Apostles for their godly wisedom to haue been the meetest Stewards in that behalfe. Or can you hold it for so slight a thing which the Apostles, men of passing and incomparable gifts, were not together with the ministery of the word able to weild, if there were no further wisedom required in them then to discerne the truely poore from your feigned and cloked pouerty: you abusing so many with your pretended pouerty, may well know that there is some wisedom required to auoid the maintenance of such stout beggars as you are.

Now when amongst the poore indeed there is required a discretion, who be poorer then other, who be weaker and lesse able to earne their liuing, who haue greater charge hanging on them, and amongst all these degrees, who are more godly then others, do you not thinke that it will take up a great wisedome to doe all this well? And if their wisedom cannot be well imployed in this, it can much lesse be wel imployed in helping the Priest to say Masse, in reading the Epistle & Gospel, covering the Altar, setting the wafer cakes upon it, looking to the Chalice, all which are scarce worthy the industry of a childe of seven yeeres old, which is oftentimes able to doe things of greater mastery then these. Beside that, forasmuch as by this degree in the Church, they were set in a higher place to bee looked upon of many, not onely of the Churches friends, but also of her enemies: it was behoofefull (that in this respect also) choyce should be made of the most sufficient men which were not otherwise imployed in the Churches affaires. Last of all, in this poynt of wisedom or gifts required either for the execution of their office, or for the defence of the truth, which they were like to bee so much sooner drawne unto, then other of the body of the Church, as they might sooner come to be detected by the enemy then they: it is to be obserued, that both such gifts here required, were then more plentifully powred forth then now; and fewer Churches there were upon whom such a largesse was bestowed: for when there was yet no more gathered unto the Church, but such a number as might be assembled into the body of one Church or congregation, it ought not to seeme strange although in so great great a number of men of singular gifts, and so small a company of beleevers, there were chosen to inferiour offices, such as in a further increase of the Church were fit to exercise the ministery of the word. And hereof it came, that when the poore by the blast of persecution, were with the rest of the Church, blown out of Ierusalem into the Countries thereabout, the office of Deaconship either ceasing, or at the least a fewer number sufficing, Philip as an Evangelist, preached and baptized. For to defend the truth, as occasion serueth, and to giue a reason and confession of our faith as oft as we shall be lawfully required thereunto, as Stephen did, is that which is required of all the faithfull. As for the fulnesse of his grace and fortitude, it cannot be carried to any other thing then to the power of doing miracles, as Luke himselfe doth interpret it. The place of the Ap. unto Timothy doth manifestly proue, that they are not to deale with the preaching of the word, and consequently not with the Sacraments annexed thereunto, considering that he requireth no gift or ability of teaching, as he had done before in the Pastor and Minister of the word, but onely such vertues as are common unto the whole Church, saving that by such particular recitall and requiring of those properties in them, he giveth to understand, that the vertues which appeare in other, ought to shine in them, and they which do but bud in other, ought to flower in them. But the place of the Apostle to the Romanes is most cleare for the bounding of this office in the proper territorie thereof. For the Apostle drawing all the ordinary offices of the Church into their proper circle, which they might not passe: appointeth the deacons office in ministring, that is, in distributing. Likewise where the Apostle maketh a perfect division of the Ministers of the word, yet he maketh no mention of the Deacons: it proueth that the Deacons preaching commeth not in at the doore, but climeth in some other way. Last of all, in clogging them with the preaching of the word and prayer, they make them embrace more then the Apostles themselues were able to fadom, who to acquit themselues well in the preaching and praying, gaue over the charge of the poore, where the Deacons of lesse gifts are by these Taskmasters put to all. Now if the Iesuites were tolerable in adding somewhat to the office of the Deacons not contained in the Scripture, which is the onely Register of their function: yet this is too great and too untollerable impudency to make that duty which the Scripture expresseth to be the least, the basest, and unpropereſt of their duties, and those whereof the Scripture maketh no manner of mention, the greatest, highest, and most proper functions of all. But Ignatius can best witnesse of their office, What better then Luke, better then Paul, that is to say better then God himselfe. What will these mouthes be ashamed to speak, which are not ashamed, in effect, to affirme, That Ignatius knew the meaning of the Apostles, better then Luke? Here to let passe their graue iudgements, which acknowledge not the bookes ascribed to the Authours set in the forefrunt to be theirs, under whose names they are couered; let the Reader iudge how likely it is, that this Ignatius was Iohns scholler, whom his master could never haue taught to write, that he partaketh unto the murther of Christ and his Apostles, which keepeth the feast of passe-over when the Iewes doe: unlesse peraduenture you will say that he taught him to condemne Iohn himselfe who by the testimony of Eusebius supported the weakenesse of the Iewes so far as to keep the same day that they did. How likely Deus was Paul, unlesse he were better learned then his Master, for he taketh the boldnesse to define of the heauenly orders, whereof Paul his Master rapt into the third heauen never durst utter word. As for your Clement all the world knoweth that he is a pillorie Doctor: and manyfoldly detected. But mark we beseech you, how this Ignatius, not content to adde unto their office doth deny that they serued Tables, directly contrary to that which Luke affirmeth of them, which is, to haue beene ordained for that purpose; contrary also to that the Iesuites themselues are, by the light of the text constrained to confesse: who affirming that they were not chosen onely for prophane Tables, acknowledge that the holy charge of the poore (which they prophanely call prophane tables) was some part of their function. Cyprians, Ieromes, Ambroſe, Prudentius, and Augustines testimonies, we doe willingly admit: for we acknowledge, and haue shewed this ministery ordained for the necessary reliefe of the Church poore, to be holy. And they are not unlike the Levites neither in office, considering that diuers had the keeping of the Church treasure, nor in degree, as those which are to giue place unto the Elders of the Church.

Now their antiquity being either suspected, condemned, or else little or nothing for their purpose, let them heare what undoubted antiquity doth iudge of this cause. And first of all Chrisostom saith, That the Deacons haue need of great wisedome although the preaching of the word bee not committed unto them. And further sheweth, that it is absurd that they should do both the office of preaching and caring for the poore, considering that they bee not able to doe both thoroughly. Whereupon Oecumenius, that followed long after Chrysostome, when this office was degenerate from the first institution, affirmeth, That the Deacons of his time were not according to the order of the Deacons mentioned of Luke. Ierome also reproouing the Deacons for preferring themselues before the Elders, calleth them to their first Institution of ministring to Tables: where he alloweth to Elders both Preaching and prayer. Ambrose also confesseth, that Deacons did not preach in his time. An ancient Councell calleth them, Ministers of Tables, and not of holy things, meaning the preaching of the Word and administration of the Sacraments. Another Councell decreed, that in the Ministers sickenesse, the Deacons should read the Homilies of the Fathers. Whereby it appeareth, that howsoever the corruption of times did cast other things upon the Deacons, then the Apostolicall Institution did ordaine them unto, yet that the Lord left not himselfe without witnesse, which in these declinings from the originall called men backe to the first institution.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 16. And they were ‡ translated into Sichem, and were laid in the Sepulchre that Abraham bought for a price of siluer of the sons of Hemor the sonne of Sichem.

RHEM.1. [16 Translated.] Translation of Saincts bodies agreeable to nature and Scripture. And the desire to be buried in one place more then another (which the holy Patriarchs also had, *Genes.*49.29.50.24. Hebrew. 11.22.) hath sometime great causes. *August. de Civ.pro. mort.cap.*1. & vltimo.

CARTVV.1. [16 Translated.] It is agreeable to nature that the body be buried where it falleth, and that the dead bodies with all conuenient speed should bee remoued from the liuing. The Translation of them was agreeable to the Scripture, as long as it serued either for the profession of their own, or for confirmation of the faith of others in the promises that were not performed: whereof because there is now no vse, the transport of dead bodies from one Country to another, and from one town to another, is nothing else but a nurcerie, either of superstition in the ignorant, or of some other weakenesse in those which haue knowledge. And wee never read that the Apostles dying did ever desire that their bodies might bee translated to the land of Canaan.

Verse 35. This Moyses whom they denyed, saying; Who hath appointed thee Prince and Captaine? him God sent Prince and ‡redeemer, with the hand of the Angell that appeared to him in the bush.

RHEM.2. [35 Redeemer.] Christ is our Redeemer, and yet Moyses is heere called redemer, so Christ is our Mediator and Aduocate, and yet we may haue Saincts our inferiour mediatours and aduocates also. *See Annot.*1.*Io.*2.1.

CARTVV.2. [35 Redeemer.] It is childish Sophistry to conclude from the liuing unto the dead, and from a temporall and corporall Redemption to an eternall and spirituall redemption. For who seeth not the blockishnesse of this reason? that because Moses being aliue and called of God thereunto (next under the Lord) redeemed his people from a bodily thraldome unto Pharaoh, therefore being dead he may without calling be an under Redeemer or Mediator of them from their spirituall slaverie unto the deuill? Their ignorance also is worthy of the whip, which understand not that Moses hath this title in as much as he was a figure, and bare the person of Christ, in which respect our Saviour Christ is called like unto him: whereupon it commeth that his face was alwaies accepted, and his prayer heard whensoeuer, or whatsoeuer he prayed for the people as the Story doth witnesse. So that the name of Redeemer and Mediator given to Moses, is so farre from prouing many Redeemers or Mediators, that it argueth evidently that there is but one onely Redeemer and Mediator Iesus Christ the righteous, of whom Moses was the figure. In the meane season the Popish distinction, that there is but one onely Mediator of Redemption, but yet divers Mediators of invocation: is here vtterly overthrowne by the Iesuites own hands, that make Moses a Mediator of redemption under our Saviour Christ.

*Verse.*33. And our Lord said to him, Loose off the shoe of thy feete: for the place wherein thou standest, is ‡ holy ground.

Holy land.

RHEM.4. [33 Holy ground,] If that apparition of God himselfe or an Angell, could make the place and ground holy, and to be vsed of Moyses with all signes of reuerence and feare: how much more the corporall birth, abode, and wonders of the Son of God in Iewrie, and his personall presence in the B. Sacrament, may make that country and all Christian Churches and altars holy? And it is the greatest blindnesse that can be, to thinke it superstition to reuerence any things or places in respect of Gods presence or wonderous operation in the same. *See S.Hierom. ep.*17.18.27. of the holy land.

Holy places.

CARTVV.4. Look the answer before, upon Math. 17.9.

*Verse.*48. But the Higheſt dwelleth ‡ not in houses made by hand, as the Prophet saith:

God is not contained in place, yet he will bee worshipped in one place more then in another.

RHEM.5. [48 Not in houses.] The vulgar Heretickes alleage this place against the corporall being of Christ in the B. Sacrament and in Churches: by which reason they might haue driuen him out of all houses, Churches and corporall places, when he was visible in earth, But it is meant of the Diuinitie onely, and spoken to correct the carnall Iewes who thought God either so to be conteined, compassed, and limited to their Temple, that he could be no where els or at the least that he would not heare or receiue mens praiers and sacrifices in the Churches of the Gentiles, or els where out of the said Temple. And so as it maketh nothing for the Sacramentaries, no more doth it serue for such as esteeme Churches and places of publike prayer no more conuenient, nor more holy then any other profane houses or chambers. For though his person or vertue be not limited to any place, yet it pleaseth him condescending to our necessitie and profite, to worke his wonders and to be worshipped of vs in holy places rather then prophane,

CARTVV.5 [48. Not in houses] If any were so advised as to alledge this against the corporall presence of Christ in the Sacrament, yon haue well acquitted their folly with your dotage of ascribing holinesse holinesse more to one place then another, and tying the Lords presence more to the places where are the Church Assemblies then to others; whereas the holinesse is not in the Church-walles, or Church yards, as you dote: but in the company of Saints, in the word, sacraments, and prayer, which are used in the place: All places being alike holy, neither getting nor giving any holinesse, by the holy exercises that are practised in them. Iob. 4. 21. 1 Tim. 2. 8.

Vers. 58. And casting him forth without the cittie, they ‖ stoned him: and the witnesses laid of their garments beside the feete of a yong man that was called Saul.

RHEM. 6. [58 They stoned him.] Read a maruellous narration in S. Augustine of one stone, that hitting the Martyr on the elbow, rebounded back to a faithfull man that stood neere, who keeping and carrying it with him, was by reuelation warned to leaue it at Ancona in Italie: whereupon a Church or Memorie of S. Steuen was there erected, and many miracles done after the said Martyrs body was found out, and not before. August. to. 10 ser. 38. de diuersis in edit. Paris.

CARTVV. 6. [58 They stoned him.] The Augustine which you alledge is counterfeit, and whilst you labor to maintaine the credite of any such fables and forgeries, you impaire your own in the eyes of indifferent men.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 14. AND when the Apostles who were in Ierusalem, had heard that Samaria had receiued the word of God: they ‖ sent unto them Peter and Iohn.

RHEM. 1. [14.] Sape sibi socium Petrus fecit esse Ioannem: Ecclesia quia virgo placet, Orator apud Bedam in Act.

CARTVV. 1. [14.] It appeareth that the Church was as well pleased with a married man as with a virgin, seeing Peter was his fellow, and better too, if we should credit you, that make the married man head of the virgin.

Verse 27. And rising he went. And behold, a man of AEthiopia, an Eunuch of great authority under Candace the Queene of the Ethiopians, who was ouer all her treasures, was come to Ierusalem ‡ to adore.

RHEM. 1. [27 To adore.] Note that this Aethiopian came to Hierusalem to adore, that is on Pilgrimage. Whereby we learne that it is an acceptable acte of religion to go from home to places of greater deuotion and sanctification.

CARTVV. 1. [27. To adore.] This was then (in the Ethiopians iudgement) the onely place in all the world of publicke profession of Gods seruice by sacrifice, whereunto all nations were bound to resort. It is therefore their ignorance, that they understand not that it was not without some fault of the Eunuch, that he Iewishly continued his opinion of necessary worship in that place so long after our Sauiour Christs ascension. But it is plain dotage of travell to a place so commanded for the worship aboue mentioned, that all other places were in that respect forbidden, to conclude a voluntary trotting to every high hill and green place that mens fancies lead them unto without any commandement of the Lord.

Verse 31. Who said, And ‡ how can I, vnlesse some man shew me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

RHEM. 2. [31 How can I.] The Scriptures are so written that they cannot be vnderstood without an interpreter, as easie as our Protestants make them. See S. Hierome Ep. ad Paulinum de omnibus diuinæ historiæ libris, set in the beginning of latin Bibles.

CARTVV. 2. [31. How can I.] The law of the Lord giueth wisdom unto little ones. The Proverbes which are hard both for their shortnesse incident unto their nature, and for that commonly every one hath the light of understanding in it selfe, without the helpe of circumstance either goeing before, or comming after, yet are so tempered of the holy Ghost, that fooles learne to be wise, and yong children get knowledge by them. And to euery one which not onely heareth expounded, but barely readeth (with humility and invocation of God) the booke of the Apocalypse, the obscurest and hardest booke to understand of all other, blessednesse is promised: which when it cannot befall to any that understandeth nothing, it is manifest that the promise of blessednesse includeth a warrant of understanding of it, so much as is necessary to saluation. And therefore if you will needs haue this sentence of a man yet unbaptised, and ignorant of Christ and his Gospell, to bee an oracle of God, and will haue his mouth (as Philips) the mouth of God, yet shall you be compelled (to accord the Scriptures with themselues) to understand his sentence by comparison, namely, that a man faithfull, and already gained to the truth, as this Eunuch was, cannot vnderstand the Scripture by bare reading of them, so well and throughly as when he hath one to expound them. And do you not understand that that Lord which helped the indevor of this Eunuch searching the Scriptures by sending of Philip, wil neuer suffer those which seek him in careful reading of his word, to go away ashamed without finding that which they seek for, in directing vnto him some lawfull & sufficient ministery to instruct him by. You forget also, that the mystery of the Gospell then (indeed) fulfilled, remained notwithstanding unpublished to the world by the Apostles: which is now by their preachings and writings laid open and made more manifest. And against this, Ierom hath not a word in that Epistle, but for it manifestly; that the Scripture needeth, together Psal. 19. Prou. 1. 4. Apocal. 1. 3. Epist. ad Demetria. Virgin.

Verſe 2 And | deuout men tooke order for Stephens funeral, and made great mourning vpon him.

S. Stephens reliques.

RHEM. 3. [2 Deuout men.] As here great deuotion was vſed in burying his body, ſo afterward at the inuention and tranſlation thereof. And the miracles wrought by the ſame, and at euery little memory of the ſame, were infinite: as S. Auguſtine witneſſeth, lib. 22. de Ciuit. Dei c. 8. & Serm. de S. Steph. to. 10.

CARTVV. 3. [2. Deuout men] It was great deuotion at that time, with ſome hazard of their liues, to bury the holy Martyr, which deuotion their mourning did further teſtifie. And this is all the Deuotion vſed in his buriall, where there is no word of Soule prieſts, of Dirges, and Trentall Maſſes, no ſinging, no ringing, no torch-bearing at noone dayes, nor any ſuch trumpery, as you (for greater commoditie of picking mens purſes) amaze the people with. If any had been Luke would haue mentioned them, being of ſuch weight as you imagine, which omitteth not to tell of the lamentation made for him. For anſwer to the reſt looke before, vpon Math. 9. 21. & 14. 12. and vpon the preface of Luke. Although this alſo may be added, that ſeeing it wrought no miracle for their ſakes that with danger of their liues buried it, it is not likely that it wrought any for theirs, that through ſtore of idle time came of pleaſure to ſee his ſepulcher.

That Peter was ſent, is no reaſon againſt his primacie.

RHEM. 4. [14 Sent Peter,] Some Proteſtants vſe this place, to proue, S. Peter not to be head of of the Apoſtles, becauſe he and S. Iohn were ſent by the Twelue, by which reaſon they might as well conclude that hee was not equall to the reſt, for commonly the Maſter ſendeth the man, and the Superiour the inferiour, when the word of Sending is exactly vſed. But it is not alwayes ſo taken in the Scriptures: for then could not the Son be ſent by the Father, nor the holy Ghoſt from the Father & the Son, nor otherwiſe in common vſe of the world, ſeeing the inferior or equall may intreat his friend or ſuperiour to do his buſines for him and ſpecially a body Politike or a Corporation may by election or otherwiſe choſe their Head and ſend him ſo may the Citizens ſend their Maior to the Prince or Parliament, though he be the head of the citie, becauſe he may be more fit to do their buſines, alſo the Superiour or equall may be ſent by his own conſent or deſire. Laſtly, the College of the Apoſtles comprifing Peter with the reſt (as euery ſuch body implieth both the head and members) was greater then Peter their head alone, as the Prince and Parliament is greater then the Prince alone. And ſo Peter might be ſent as by authoritie of the whole College, notwithſtanding he were the head of the ſame.

CARTVV. 4. [14. Sent Peter] Foraſmuch as the ordinary and proper ſignification of Sent, noteth an inferiour eſtate to the Senders: the Proteſtants argument is good againſt Peters ſupremacie vntill you be able by proofe of his ſuperioritie ouer the reſt, to ſhew that the word (Sent) in this place ſteppeth aſide from the ordinary and vſuall ſignification, as it doth in the caſe of the Holy Ghoſts ſending. For as for Peters ſending himſelfe it is abſurd. And the ſending of the Mayor by the Aldermen, or of the Prince by the Parliament, if it be by authority, and not by intreaty, proueth their inferiority to the ioynt company that ſendeth them. But the Ieſuits underſtand not that a great force of the Proteſtants Argument lieth in that Peter in this Embaſſage is mated and aſſociated with Iohn, who goeth not as Iohn Marke did with Paul and Barnabas to ſerue Peter in the way: but goeth to pray and lay on hands as well as he: vnleſſe therefore they will admit theſe fond exceptions and ſignifications of ſending in Iohn, that he was ſent as the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Sonne, or of himſelfe, or as the Mayor of the Aldermen, or Prince of the Parliament, there is no cauſe why theſe things ſhould be imagined of Peter, the ſame words being vſed of both.

Verſe 17 Then did | they impoſe their hands vpon them, and they | receiued the holy Ghoſt.

The ſacrament of confirmation miniſtred by the Biſhops onely

RHEM. 5. [17 Did they impoſe.] If this Philip had been an Apoſtle (ſaith S. Bede) he might haue impoſed his hands, that they might haue receiued the holy Ghoſt, but this none can doe ſauing Biſhops, For though prieſts may baptize, and anoint the baptized alſo with Chriſme conſecrated by a Biſhop; yet he cannot ſigne his forehead with the ſame holy oile, becauſe that belongeth onely to Biſhops, when they giue the holy Ghoſt to the baptized. So ſaith he touching the Sacrament of Confirmation in 8. Act. This impoſition therefore of hands together with the prayers here ſpecified (which no doubt were the very ſame that the Church yet vſeth to that purpoſe) was the miniſtration of the Sacrament of Confirmation. Whereof S. Cyprian ſaith thus, They that in Samaria were baptized of Philip, becauſe they had lawfull and Eccleſiaſticall Baptiſme, ought not to be baptized any more: but onely that which wanted was done by Peter and Iohn to wit, that by prayer made for them and impoſition of hands, the holy Ghoſt might be powred vpon them. Which now alſo is done with vs, that they which in the Church are baptized, be by the Rulers of the Church offred, and by our prayer and impoſition of hand receiue the holy Ghoſt, and be ſigned with our Lords ſeale. So S. Cyprian. But the heretickes obiect that yet here is no mention of oile. To whom we ſay, that many things were done and ſaid in the adminiſtration of this and other Sacraments, and all inſtituted by Chriſt himſelfe and deliuered to the Church by the Apoſtles, which are not particularly written by the Euangeliſt or any other in the Scripture, among which this is euident by all antiquity and moſt generall practiſe of the Church, to be one.

CAP. VV. 5. [17. Did they impose] That this imposition of hands pertaineth not to the perpetuall and constant government of the Church, nor can be used with any effect of that it pretendeth by any ordinary ministery of the Church, it is manifest diuersly. And first of the effect, for so much as thereby were given extraordinary gifts of tongues, prophesie, and such like: whereof it commeth, that Luke reporteth, that as soone as they were bestowed upon the beleeuers, they were seene of the standers by, which could not be in the gifts of sanctification and Christian valour or courage to resist the diuell. Wherefore also to the Hebrues it is reckoned among the visible gifts which were bestowed upon the Church for sealing of the truth of the Gospell: upon which end of bestowing them it may be further concluded, that the Gospell being sufficiently confirmed and sealed by the wonders and extraordinary workes of Christ and his Apostles, the use of that distribution of the Spirit is ceased. The effects therefore ceasing of this imposition of hands, it is but a graceless ceremonie to continue it. The truth whereof we referre to be considered in the practise of the Popish Churches, whose confirmed persons are alwayes such babes, and so infirme, that they can neuer learne to call God Abba Father: but are alwayes like a shaken reed, and like the waues of the sea which are moued of the winds. Againe, it is manifest, that this distribution of gifts by laying on of hands, is one of those staiers whereby the office of Apostleship was mounted aboue all other offices and ministeries of the Church. Seeing therefore there be now no Apostles, there are also none that either may attempt, or in attempting can attaine to set his foot upon the staire of this imposition of hands. And seeing that Philip, that at this time was an Euangelist, had not power of the laying on of hands, much lesse can the Bishops, inferior Ministers unto the Euangelists, haue power to lay on so much as a finger in this behalfe. And although it be an iniury to make their confirmation equall with baptisme: yet as Ismael the bastard would haue ouer-crowed Isaac the right begotten sonne, so this bastard sacrament of confirmation (by the Popes setting on) lifteth it selfe aboue the lawfull sacrament of baptisme: for howsoeuer the Iesuites doe smothely dissemble it: yet in the Epistle that is ascribed to Eusebius and Melciades Bishops of Rome, it is plainly affirmed that the Sacrament of confirmation is more to be reuerenced then the Sacrament of baptisme. Here, albeit it be somewhat from the matter in hand, yet it is not unprofitable to note the dissolute carelesnesse of the Popish Bishops in their charges: for notwithstanding that (of their Popes mouth) they hold, that confirmation cannot well be seuered from baptisme, and that baptisme is not perfect without it: yet neither causing the parents to bring their children, nor themselues going scarce once in three yeares, unto them, whereby numbers dye (by their saying) without perfect baptisme, all men may see how vile their people is in their eyes, and how in their deeds they make light account of that which in their words they greatly magnifie.

Now this confirmation of theirs being not holy, which hath notwithstanding some colour of a deuoute imitation of the Apostles, the oyle and Chrisme must needs be prophane, which hath no shadow of the Apostolicall imitation: for where they affirme, that oyle was used, although not mentioned, it is but their old and accustomed impudency, oftentimes confuted, whereby they giue a double charge against Luke: The former is, for that undertaking to write the story of the Actes of the Apostles, so far as the same might pertaine unto the edifying of the Church, he hath by your iudgement) left out a thing which greatly importeth the Church. And as this toucheth his fidelity, so the other chargeth him with want of iudgement, which making diligent mention of the water in Baptisme, made no manner of mention of oile in confirmation, the oyle being (by your iudgements) more holy, and more to be reuerenced then the water.

And if neither the text, nor the reasons drawne from it, be sufficient to convince the malapert rashnesse of these Iesuites: yet let them at the least credite their own Doctor, who affirmeth that the Apostles gaue the Holy Ghost by laying on of hands onely, but that the Prelates now adaies being not so happy, it was ordained that they should giue this Sacrament with Chrysme. And albeit this corruption be one of the ancientest stones that was brought into the Church towards the building of the spirituall Babylon, yet it appeareth by the Popes own words, that there were ancient Masons in the Church that cast it away, as Iewish and unprofitable for the building of the Lords Temple under the Gospell. Against which reason of those skilfull builders, the Iesuits answer (that would barre them of it, for that the laying on of hands was taken from the use of the Church vnder the Law) is vaine: for when the lawfulnesse of such things under the Gospell, riseth thereupon, that our Sauiour Christ and his Apostles translated them from the old Church unto the new, as those that were fit for them both, it must needs follow, that those which had no such transport, haue no such authoritie nor allowance. Otherwise, by the same rule that they may bring in oyle, not contained in the Scripture and description of the new Ierusalem, they may as well bring in all other ceremonies used under the Law, which haue as much warrant out of the Scripture as oyle and chrisme hath. And although these sometimes bee called of ancient writers Sacraments, yet it shall appeare in a fitter place, that Ancienty in speaking properly made but onely two Sacraments, Baptisme and the Supper.

RHEM. 7. [17 And they receiued the holy Ghost.] The Protestants charge the Catholikes * that by approuing and commending so much the Sacrament of Confirmation, and by attributing to it specially the gift of the holy Ghost, they diminish the force of Baptisme, chalenging also boldly the ancient Fathers for the same. As though any Catholike or Doctor euer said more then the expresse words of Scripture here and els where plainely giue them warrant for. If they diminish the vertue of Baptisme, then did Christ so, appointing his Apostles and all the Faithfull euen after their Baptisme to expect the Holy Ghost and vertue from aboue: then did the Apostles iniury to Baptisme, in that they imposed hands on the baptized, and gaue them the Holy Ghost. And this is the hereticks blindnesse in this case, that they cannot, or will not see that the Holy Ghost is given in Baptisme to remission of sinnes, life and sanctification; and in Confirmation, for force, strength, and corroboration to fight against all our spirituall enemies, and to stand constantly in confession of our faith, euen to death, in times of persecution either of the heathen or of hereticks, with great increase of grace. And let the good reader note here our Aduersaries great peruersitie and corruption of the plaine sense of the Scriptures in this point: some of them affirming the holy Ghost here to be no other but the gift of wisdome in the Apostles and a few moe to the gouernement of the Church, when it is plaine that not onely the gouernours but all that were baptized receiued this grace, both men and women. Some, that it was no internall grace, but onely the gift of diuers languages: Which is very false, the gift of tongues being but a sequele & an accident to the grace and an externall token of the inward gift of the holy Ghost, and our Sauiour calleth it vertue from aboue. Some say that whatsoeuer it was, it was but a miraculous thing, and dured no longer then the gift of the tongues ioyned thereunto: by which euasion they deny also the Sacrament of Extreme Vnction, and the force of Excommunication, because the corporall punishments which were annexed oftentimes in the Primitiue Church vnto it, ceaseth, and so may they take away (as they meane to do) all Christs faith or religion, because it hath not the like operation of miracles as in the beginning. But S. Augustine toucheth this point fully. Is there any man (saith he) of so peruerse an heart, to deny these Children on whom we now imposed hands, to haue receiued the holy Ghost, because they speak not with tongues? &c. Lastly, some of them make no more of Confirmation or the Apostles fact, but as of a doctrine, instruction, or exhortation to continue in the faith receiued. Whereupon they haue turned this holy Sacrament * into a Catechisme. There are also that put the baptized comming to yeeres of discretion, to their own choyce whether they will continue Christians or no. To such deuilish and diuers inventions they fall, that will not obey Gods Church, nor the expresse Scriptures, which tell vs of prayer, of imposition of hands, of the holy Ghost, of grace and vertue from aboue, and not of instruction, which might and may be done as well before Baptisme and by others, as by Apostles and bishops, to whom onely this Holy function pertaineth in so much that in our country it is called Bishopping.

CARTVV. 7. [17 And they receiued the Holy Ghost.] They charge you worthily, for it is very true, that this confirmation as it is imagined, incrocheth upon the possession of the holy Sacrament of Baptisme which sealing up unto us, not onely the forgiuenesse of sinnes. but also both the burial and mortification of the old man, and the resurrection and quickning againe of the new man, and in a word the whole putting on of Christ: it is manifest that this Sacrament of Confirmation which vaunteth it selfe of strength and courage given thereby to the vanquishing of the deuill, maketh forcible entry upon the due and right of the holy Sacrament of Baptisme. Vnlesse they will say that the Lord in his care which bee had to bring the Sacraments under the Gospell unto as small a number as might be, did notwithstanding seale one promise with two seales; whereas his endevour to call the Sacraments under the Gospell to the smallest summe, wou'd rather beare that he should seale many promises with one seale, then one promise with many seales. And it is your false tongue, that you say no more then the expresse words of the Scripture, as hath beene evidently proued: it is also your brutish ignorance that you haue not learned that the gifts of the Holy Ghost given after Baptisme, be a continuall accomplishment of the promise of Gods assistance, which Baptisme doth seale up unto us. In which respect our Saviour Christ calleth the bestowing of the graces of the Spirit, baptising with the Spirit. Hereupon also the Prophets call the gifts of the Holy Ghost, water, calling (as is usuall in Sacraments) the grace signified, by the name of the signe that signifieth and figureth the grace. The Apostles receiving vertue from aboue, neither received it by imposition of hands, neither yet as private men; and giving of the Holy Ghost, they so did for an overflowing largesse of the gifts of the Spirit, more necessary to a generall confirmation of the truth of the Gospell then to the inabling of those persons (by such imposition) to walke in their severall calling. But the Apostles for accomplishment of the office whereunto they were called had need of gifts, of both sorts, visible and unvisible: of these to give their testimony of Christ boldly; of those to giue their testimony to all Nations; So that the place in the first of the Actes is not so fitly compared with this here in question. Beside that, the word which they call vertue here is used of the Scripture to note out an extraordinary and miraculous gift, and therefore serveth nothing to prove the gift of strength, common to all Christians in all ages. Againe, it must be understood that the Apostles having (although in scanter measure) measure) the spirit of courage and fortitude before this visible comming down of the Holy Ghost, not receiving it by vertue of this confirmation which was not then, must necessarily be iudged to haue received it as part of paiment of that promised grace whereof Baptisme is the seale. If therefore you bee constreyned to confesse that part of the spirit of fortitude and courage is sealed by the Sacrament of Baptisme: You will make your selues ridiculous to all men in affirming, that the other part of the same gift is conferred by the Sacrament of confirmation: which thing being true in the Apostles gift of fortitude, and Christian valour, hath the same truth in all other the beleevers that received the spirit by laying on of the Apostles hands. Here also note (good Reader) that whilst the Iesuites will bee wiser then their Maister, in using other words to distinguish Baptisme from Confirmation, then hee, they haue deserved to bee hissed out even of their own schoole-fellowes, for here they oppose life and Sanctification giuen in baptisme, vnto Christian fortitude and strength given by confirmation: which is all one as if a man should oppose and set against a creature unto a man, a tree to an apple tree, which are so far off to be opposed & set one against another, as that one of them is verified of another; for sanctification is the whole, and Christian strength is a part of that sanctification, as both the word it self doth note, which signifieth all maner of vertues which make us holy, and the use thereof in the scripture doth manifestly declare: for the Apostle opposeth it to all manner of breaches of the Law; And Peter doth expresly note, the gift of strength and valour as a braneh & member of sanctification. The same also may be said of the word Life, vnderstanding it (as needs they must) of the new life, whereof strength to resist the divell is a part, vnlesse they will denie that to giue place to the enemy, and to be vanquished of him, is a part of the old life. And withall the reader may see how poore divines the Iesuites are, who in stead of holding up this cause, doe cast it downe with their owne hands. Although they must bee told withall, that whilst they are some evill Schollers of Lombard their master, they are also found trewands & renegates from the schoole of their Lord God the Pope, who teacheth them, that by confirmation is bestowed not onely the gift of strength and fortitude, but the sevenfold, that is to say, the manifold graces of the spirit.

As for your forging head, & your infamous Councel of Trents forgeries & vntruths of our iudgments touching this matter, seeing neither you nor they note the persons upon whom you would father al these opinions, it is sufficient that the reader know thē by this answer, whereunto we are wel assured that they haue not onely no true, but not so much as any likely reply. As for the corporall punishments that might follow the Churches excommunication sometimes, it shall appeare in a more proper place, that it is not, nor never was any part of excommunication, as they ignorantly surmise. We deny not, but grace was given unto those children of whom Augustine speaketh; for we doubt nothing but the prayers of the Church offered unto God in the childrens behalfe, obtained grace for them, And these prayers somewhere Augustine calleth the imposition of hands, saying, what other thing is it then prayer upon a man: But that it came by laying hands upon them, or that it hath any ground of this place of the Actes we deny, the latter whereof, which here ought to haue beene proued, Augustine himselfe doth not affirme. Moreouer, when he saith, that the loue of God is inspired thereby, hee overthroweth your distinction, which confessing Charity to be given by Baptisme, affirme that strength is giuen by imposition of hands.

It is our boasting in the Lord that our teaching Catechisme hath displaced your dumbe confirmation: and it is no maruell although you kick against it, as that which delivereth many soules from the chaines of ignorance, wherein you held them, and discovereth your idle and Idolike Bishopping: Which painfull catechising (as white confronted and compared with blacke) doth make more manifest. What should we speake of the giddinesse of these Iesuites, that make the gift of wisdom for the gouernment of the Church, and the gift of tongues, which they make an outward token of the gift of strength, that all the baptized received gifts common to all the whole Church, and to every member thereof: as if all the whole body of the Church were an eye or a foote, directly contrary to the Apostle, which affirmeth, that to one was distributed the gift of wisedome, to another the gift of diuers tongues, to another this extraordinary gift, and to another that. But it is the Lords iust iudgement, that they should be thus giddy and turne-sicke, that tread the maze of their owne braines, without any threed of holy Scripture whereby to finde any issue thereout.

1. Cor. 12. 8. 10.

Verse 18 And when Simon had seene that by the imposition of the hand of the Apostles, the Holy Ghost was giuen, he offered them money.

RHEM. 8. [18. Offred money] This wicked sorcerer Simon is noted by Irenæus l. 1. c. 20. and others, to haue been the first hereticke, and Father of all Hereticks to come in the Church of God. He taught onely faith in him, without good life and works, to be enough to saluation he gaue the on-set to purchase with his money a spirituall function that is to be made a Bishop, for, to haue power to giue the holy Ghost by imposition of hands is to be a bishop: as to buy the power to remit sinnes or to consecrate Christs body, is to buy to be a Priest, or to buy a Priesthood, and to buy the authoritie to minister Sacraments, to preach or to haue cure of soules, is to buy a benefice, and likewise in all other spirituall things, whereof either to make sale or purchase for money or money worth, is a great horrible sinne called Simonie: and in such as thinke it lawfull (as here Simon iudged it) it is named Simoniacall Haresie, of this detestable man who first attempted to buy a spirituall function or office. *D. CARTVV. 8. [18. Offered money.] The Iesuits if they durst speake that out which they lispe, would conclude, that because a man cannot be iustified by faith alone in Simon the Sorcerer, therefore he cannot be iustified by faith alone in Christ the Sonne of God: which what horrible blasphemy it savoureth of, let all of indifferent iudgement speak. Therefore as we by the grace of God, are unlike him not alone in this poynt, but also in that he taught that good works needed not to be done, which we call for more earnestly and vrgently then you; so if you read the Story of Simon diligently, you shall perceiue, that your selues haue more of Simon your fathers features in the face of your religion, then then we haue: who haue taken your purgatory or cleanſing of the ſoules after departure out of their bodies from him, and his founders the heatheniſh and vnbeleeuing people. And beſide that, your Pope is more like Simon Magus then Simon Peter, which according to his requeſt, ſetteth benefices, Biſhoprickes, and ſpirituall promotions of the Church to ſale, the Clergy are all Simoniacall. Howſoeuer your flattering Canoniſts would make the world beleeue, that becauſe (as they ſay) gold and ſiluer is the Popes, therefore he may ſell all at his pleaſure, in as much as by ſale of them, he getteth nothing but that which was his before. Peter, if he had received the money that was offered for his ſpirituall promotion, had been guiltie of Simony; but the Pope forſooth cannot be guilty, nor they acceſſary to the gilt that buy at his hands.

RHEM. 9. Yea when he added, that very good men do dayly penance for veniall ſinnes by faſting, prayer, and almes, he warranteth this phraſe and tranſlation throughout the new Teſtament, ſpecially himſelfe alſo reading ſo as it is in the vulgar Latine, and as we tranſlate.

Penance.

CART VV. 9. [Doe penance.] It hath beene ſhewed, that the word ſignifieth properly a change of the minde from the former wickednes, if it ſignifie at any time the Eccleſiaſticall repentance, it is vnproperly, and by Trope, whereby the part is put for the whole. And Auguſtine is flat againſt you, which calleth the daily demand of forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes, in the Lords prayer, by the ſame word which you turne do penance, where notwithſtanding there is no confeſſion but vnto the Lord alone, no Faſt nor Almes but at ſome times, and then not conſtrained, or enioyned: and the one to helpe to ſtirre vp the minde in prayer, the other rather to perſwade our conſcience, that we which by nature are mercileſſe, finding in our hearts compaſſion towards our brethren, ſhall much more finde compaſſion of the Lord, whoſe nature is to be mercifull; but neither in any ſort was done for ſatisfaction. Look hereof before vpon Mat. 13. 2. & 11. 21.

RHEM. 10. [22 If perhaps.] You may ſee, great penance is here required for remiſſion of ſinne, and that men muſt ſtand in feare and dread leſt they be not worthy to be heard or to obtaine mercy. Whereby all men that bye or ſel any ſpirituall function, dignities, offices, or liuings, may ſpecially be warned that the ſinne is exceeding great.

CART VV. 10. [22 If perhaps.] To ſtand in doubtfull feare, whether we ſhall in repenting haue our ſinnes forgiven or no, is to doubt whether God be true of his promiſe, who hath ſaid, that at what time ſoeuer a ſinner doth repent him of his ſinne, hee will put away all his iniquities out of his remembrance. The Scripture therefore by this word, ſetteth down the difficulty and not the vncertainty, thereby to ſtir vp the ſinner, eſpecially him that is (as Simon Magus) ſenſeleſſe of ſinne to a greater endeuour of repentance. And thus Caleb maketh a perhaps of the victory of the Canaanites that inhabited the place allotted to his inheritance: when notwithſtanding both the Lord by Moſes had made him an vndoubted promiſe thereof confirmed with oath, and himſelfe nouriſhed in his heart a certaine hope of ouercomming them. But let the Reader obſerue, that the Ieſuites are heere euidently taken both in the tents of the Nouatian heretickes, by this their opinion of doubting, and in their armour by this their proofe of it, according as Ambroſe doth euidently teach.

RHEM.

RHEM. 12. [38 He baptized him.] When the hereticks of this time find mention made in Scripture of any Sacrament ministred by the Apostles or other in the Primitiue Church, they imagine no more was done then there is expresly told, nor scarcely beleeue so much. As if imposition of hands in the sacrament of Confirmation be onely expressed, they think there was no chrisme nor other work or word vsed. So they thinke no more ceremonie was vsed in the baptizing of this noble man, then here is mentioned. Whereupon S. Augustine hath these memorable words: In that, that he saith, Philip baptized him, he would haue it vnderstood that all things were done; for though in the Scriptures for brenitie sake they are not mentioned, yet by order of tradition we know were to be done. The ceremonies of Sacraments done, though not mentioned. De fid. & op. c. 9.

CARTVV. 12. [38 He baptized him.] The answer to Augustine may well bee drawn from himselfe, for as he declareth that the Eunuch professing that he beleeued Christ to be the Sonne of God, professed before Phillip many other things necessary before Baptisme, and yet none without the compasse of the Scripture: even so in saying that he baptised him, he comprehendeth all required in a lawfull Baptism, which although it were not set down in the Scriptures expresly, yet is within the circuit of the Scripture, as prayer and thankes giving, which the Tradition of the Church grounded of the Scripture doth obserue. And this is most agreeable vnto Augustines iudgement, appearing in diuers places, who admitteth no skoales, but the Scriptures, to examine the weight or the lightnesse, the lawfulnesse or vnlawfulnesse of any thing. *Aug. lib. 2. de baptism. cont. MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 4 AND falling on the ground, he heard a voice saying to him, ‡ Saul, Saul why persecutest thou mee?

RHEM. 1. [4 Saul, Saul why persecutest.] The heretickes that conclude Christ so in heauen that he can be no where els till the day of Iudgement, shall hardly resolue a man that would know where Christ was when he appeared here in the way, and spake these words to Saul. Act. 7. 55. 56.

CARTVV. 1. [4 Saul, Saul, why persecutest.] Luke can easily resolue a modest man, for if Christ sitting on the right hand was seen of Steven, the heavens being for that purpose opened, why might not he from thence bee seene of Paul, and if seene, why not also heard of him from the same place?

Verse. 31. The ‡ Church truely through all Iewry and Galilee and Samaria had peace, and was edifyed, walking in the feare of our Lord, and was repleniſhed with the consolation of the Holy Ghost.

RHEM. 2. [31 The Church.] The Church visibly proceedeth still with much comfort, and manifold encrease even by persecution.

CARTVV. 2. [31 The Church.] That it increased is beside the Text, but that it was now in persecution, it is directly against the Text: which saith, that it enioyed peace, and noteth the peace as an effect of Pauls giving of place to the fury of the Iewes, who were like, through bitternesse towards him to haue vexed the whole Church.

Verse. 36. And in Ioppe there was a certaine disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas. This woman was full of ‡ good-workes and almes-deedes which she did.

RHEM. 3. [36 Good Workes.] Behold good works and almes-deeds, and the force thereof reaching euen vnto the next life.

CARTVV. 3. [36 Good workes.] They are forceleſſe in themselues and their own worthinesse to merit: but we grant they haue force in this and the next life, by the promise of grace, and not by the promise of the Law, although their force is slenderly gathered out of this place. Merite.

Verse. 39. And Peter rising up came with him. And when he was come they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widowes stood about him weeping, ‡ and shewing him the coates and garments which Dorcas made them.

RHEM. 4. [39 And shewing him.] The prayers of our Almes-folke and Beadsmen may do vs great good euen after our departure. For if they procured her temporall life, much more may they helpe vs to Gods mercy and to release of punishment in Purgatorie.

CARTVV. 4. 39 And shewing him.] So your distinction falleth to the ground, whereby the linsey wolsey men, neither very good nor very bad, are onely appointed to take up their lodging in Purgatory, the very good and very bad going straight to heaven or hell: for this Dorcas was a very good woman, full of good workes and almes-deeds, and therefore by your own doctrine went streight to heaven without bayting in Purgatory, from which hill of rest, she being called down by the prayers of her beades-men to this vale of misery, was rather profitable to others then for herselfe: and albeit that we do acknowledge, that she her selfe, by further increase of faith working by charity, might be thus raised to a higher step of glory in the kingdome of heaven: yet by your doctrine, which teach that any man or woman being in the favour of God may finally fall into his disgrace, her state was thus greatly impaired, as one which continuing in heaven had beene sure of everlasting life, which now by her returne vnto her body vpon earth hath left that assurance. And thus her good workes and almes-deeds (by your doctrine) were not of force to this woman to purchase, but greatly to hazard the next life.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 15 And ‡ a voyce came to him againe the second time, That which God hath purified, do not thou call common.

RHEM. 1, [15 A voice came to.] Here God first vttered to Peter that the time was come to preach also to the Gentiles, and to conuerse with them for their saluation, no lesse then with the Iewes, with full freedome to eate all meats without respect of the prohibition of certaine, made in the old Law.

Verse 30 And Cornelius said, Foure dayes since, untill this houre, I was praying the ninth houre in my house, and behold a man stood before me in white apparrell.

RHEM 2. [30 A man stood.] Note these apparitions and visions to S. Peter Cornelius, and others in the Scripture very often, against the incredulitie of our Heretickes, that will beleeue neither vision nor miracle, not expressed in the Scripture: these being beleeued of Christian men euen before they were written.

CARTVV. 2. [30. A man stood. If either God which by nature cannot lie, should confirme the truth of the vision, as he did to Peter when he bid him go with the messengers, that (to perswade him to come to Cornelius) made report thereof: or if Peter, which by office could not lye in matters pertaining to his ministery, should tell us of his vision: we were worthy to be condemned, if we giue not credit vnto them both. But if we should beleeue your leaden Legend, we were vnworthy to be of any account of the Lords gold. If Visions be at any time commended by grauer and more substanciall Authors, we may giue credit vnto them if we will, as to worthy men: but yet we are not bound. And do you not perceiue, that the Holy Ghost for assurance of our faith in these visions, thought good that they should be set down by his own pen, that the faith of the posterity which should know them by this writing, might haue as sure hold thereby, as they that first heard it at the Lords and Peters owne mouth: you see therefore, that being not able to wrest this place to your liking, the one end thereof flieth in your owne face.

1. Pet. 1.

Verse 35 But in every Nation he that feareth him, and worketh iustice, is acceptable to him.

RHEM. 3, [35 Worketh Iustice.] Not such as beleeue onely, but such as feare God, and worke iustice, are acceptable to him.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 2. Religious, and fearing God with all his house, ! doing many almes-deedes to the people. And alwayes praying to God.

Beda in hunc locum. Good workes before faith, are preparatiues to the same, not properly meritorious. Act. 8.

RHEM. [3. 2 Doing many almes deeds.] Hee knew God creator of all, but that his omnipotent Sonne was incarnate, he knew not: and in that faith he made prayers and gaue almes which pleased God, and by well doing he deserued to know God perfectly, to beleeue the mysterie of the Incarnation, and to come to the Sacrament of baptisme. So saith Venerable Bede out of S. Gregory. And S. Augustin thus. li. 1. de Bapt. c. 8. Because whatsoeuer goodnes he had in prayers and almes, the same could not profite him vnlesse he were by the band of Christian Society and peace incorporated to the Church, he is bidden to send vnto Peter, that by him he may learn Christ, by him he may be baptized, &c. Whereby it appeareth that such works as are done before iustification, though they suffise not to saluation, yet be acceptable preparatiues to the grace of Iustification, and such as moue God to mercy, as it might appeare also by Gods like prouident mercifulnesse to the Eunuch, though all such works preparatiue come of grace also: otherwise they could neuer deserue at Gods hand of congruitie, or any otherwise toward iustification.

Ang. contra Iulian. l. 4. c. 3. Beda in hunc locum. Vers. 2. 15. 22. 35.

CARTVV. 3. Doing many almes deeds.*] A strange thing that an evill tree should bring forth good fruits, and that from a man that is not iust, should proceed iust workes. Our Sauiour Christ teacheth otherwise, that first the tree must be good, and then the fruits good: whereby appeareth, that all workes going before iustification, are sinne. And this is Augustines iudgement expresly, directly contrary to that the Iesuits affirme. Beda also out of Gregorie, doth utterly ouerthrow them, which affirmeth, that we come not vnto faith by vertues and good workes, but by faith we come vnto vertues and good works. Wherfore it is evident, that Cornelius doing good works, was (before instruction and Baptisme giuen by Peter) iustified, which may yet more evidently appeare, in that he is called religious, fearing God, a iust man, and acceptable to God. So that the holy Ghost speaking by men, could hardly speake plainlier to the overthrow of this brutish error of the Iesuites. Now seeing onely faith in Christ worketh by charity, and no man can be cleansed from his sins, nor acceptable vnto God, but he that beleeveth in Christ. And seeing there is no prayer acceptable vnto God, but that which is made in Christs name, Cornelius prayer being heard, it is euident that Cornelius beleved in Christ. And therefore where Bede saith, that he knew not the sonne incarnate, his meaning is onely to shew, that beleeving in Christ to come, he yet was ignorant whether Iesus was that Christ, as numbers also of the faithfull Iewes were before they were instructed thereof. And although he were not circumcised, for that he might easily vnderstand, that there was then controversie whether circumcision were abrogated or no: yet that he knew the Law and the Prophets, and served God otherwise according to the rite of the Law, as may partly appeare in that he praied at the ninth houre, but especially it may appeare in that he had testimony of being a iust man, and fearing God, of all the nation of the Iewes. Whilest therefore by the manifold contradiction against Iesus, he stood in some mammering whether he were the promised Christ or no, he sollicited vers. 9. Vers. 30.

licited the Lord by prayer: and obtaining his request, had Peter directed unto him for his better and more assured knowledge of that matter. Now it is one thing not to know Christ at all, and another not to know that Christ was not yet incarnate, or that Iesus was not Christ in that time when hee was not so throughly manifested: and another not to beleeue in him, when by the preaching of the Gospell, he is plainly revealed unto them. The same answer for the most part, serveth for the Eunuch with Augustine, albeit we agree not in that he esteemeth that it is impossible for a man to bee saved without the Sacrament of baptisme: yet his iudgement here may well be defended, that a man cannot be saved, unlesse he gather himselfe by baptisme to the communion of Saints, where the same is offered. And it is as true, that being both instructed and baptised, if he had refused further instruction of the ministry, and communication unto the Supper of the Lord, his prayers and almes deedes could not haue profited him. Verſ. 4. 5.

Verſ. 9 And the next day, whiles they were going on their iourney, and drawing nigh to the Cittie, Peter went up into the higher parts, | to pray about the sixth houre.

RHEM. 4. [9 To pray about the sixth houre.] The houre is specified, for that there were certain appointed times of prayer vsed in the Law, which deuout persons, according to the publike seruice in the Temple, obserued also priuatly: and which the Apostles and holy Church afterward both kept and increased. Whereof thus writeth S. Cyprian very notably. In celebrating their prayers, we finde that the three children with Daniell obserued the third, sixt, & ninth houre, as in Sacrament (or mystery) of the holy Trinity, &c. And a little while after, which spaces of houres the worshippers of God spiritually (or mystically) determining long since, obserued set times to pray: and afterward the thing became manifest, that it was for Sacrament (or mystery) that the iust so prayed. For at the third houre the holy Ghost descended vpon the Apostles, fulfilling the grace of our Lords promise, and at the sixth houre Peter going vpon the higher roome of the house, was both by voice and signe from God instructed, that all nations should be admitted to the grace of saluation, whereas of cleansing the Gentiles, he doubted before, and our Lord being crucified at the sixth houre, at the ninth washed away our sins with his blond. But to vs (deerely beloued) beside the seasons obserued of old, both the times and sacraments of praying be increased, for we must pray in the morning early, that the Resurrection of our Lord may be celebrated by Morning prayer, as of old the H. Ghost designed in the Psal. saying, In the morning earely I will stand vp to thee, early in the morning wilt thou heare my voice. Toward the euening also when the Sun departeth, and the day endeth, we must of necessity pray againe. 6

S. Hierome also writing of Daniels praying three times in a day, saith, There are three times, wherein we must bow our knees to God. The third, the sixth, and the ninth houre the ecclesiasticall tradition doth well vnderstand. Moreouer, at the third houre the holy Ghost descended vpon the Apostles, at the sixth, Peter went vp into a higher chāber to pray, at the ninth Peter and Iohn went to the Temple. Again, writing to Eustochium a virgin & Nun ep. 22. c. 16. Though the Apostles bid vs pray alwayes, & to holy persons their very sleep is prayer: yet we must haue distinct houres of prayer, that if perhaps we be otherwise occupied, the very time may admonish vs of our office or duetie. The third, sixth, ninth houre, morning early, and the euening no man can be ignorant of. And to Demetrius ep. 8. c. 8. that in the Psalmes and prayer she must keep alwayes the third, sixth, ninth houre, euening, midnight, and morning. He hath the like ep. 7. c. 5: & ep. 27. c. 10. he telleth how Paula the holy Abesse with her religious Nuns sang the Psalter in order, in the morning, at the third, sixth, ninth houre, euening, & midnight, by midnight meaning the time of Mattins (therfore called nocturnes) agreeable to S. Cprian de Orat. Do. nu. 15. and by the morning, the first houre called Prime: all correspondent to the times, and houres of Christs Passion, as in S. Matthew is noted c. 26. 7. By all which we see, how agreeable the use of the Churches seruice is euen at this time to the Scriptures and Primitiue Church: and how wicked the Puritan Caluinists be, that count all such order and set seasons of prayer, superstition: and lastly, how insufficient and vnlike the new pretended Church-seruice of England is to the primitiue vse, which hath no such houres of night or day, sauing a litle imitation of the old Mattins and Euensong and that In schisme and heresie and therefore not onely vnprofitable, but also damnable. CARTVV. 4. [9. To pray about the sixth houre.] We allow appointed houres both in publicke and in private prayers, according as either the comelinesse and commodity, either of the Church, or of every speciall person, doth require. But a religious obseruation of one houre more then another, we account with the Apostle, to be a beggarly ceremonie or element: and those which are so perswaded, are either fallen from the faith, or at the least weaklings in faith. And if the simplicity and sincerity of the Gospell require that we should forget the religious obseruation of the places, it cannot suffer us to place any religion in the times. I speake not of the great difference of Countries, where by oddes of the elevation of the pole, and of the rising and setting of the Sunne, the time that in Iury is fit for prayer, is not in all other Countries so commodious. And this religious choyce of houres, is manifestly overthrowne by Luke, who sheweth that the Churches prayers were at other houres then these, or else if he do not note some other time then the Iewes obserued, he leaueth him altogether without any note or marke of speciall time, one or other: which hee would never haue done, if the difference of time had imported so much as you pretend. Neither doth he make any mention of prayer at the houre accustomed of the Iewes, but where there is some particular and speciall cause thereof. As in Acts 3. to declare both the wisedom and courage of the Apostles, which neither feared to propound the doctrine in a great assembly, and which waited the opportunity of such meetings, thereby to inclose a great number of soules as it were, into the nets of the Gospell, which they went to publish. And as for this place of the sixth houre, it is none of the Canonicall houres appointed in the Law, but is here made mention of, the rather (as Acts 26. 13.) to note the clearenesse of the vision, and to deliuer it from all suspition of illusion, being shewed unto him at mid-day. For that it should bee in regard that our Saviour Christ hung then vpon the crosse, hath no more ground, then that it was in regard of the sixth age wherein our Sauiour suffered. Neither will there be any end of such speculations, if men may haue leaue to roue after this sort without certaine direction of the word of God. And it is directly against the iudgement of the Euangelist, who affirming, that the Law was giuen by Moses, but grace Gal. 4. 9. 10 Gal. 4. 11. Rom. 14. 2. 5. Iob 4. 1. Tim. 2. and truth by Iesus Christ, that there should be moe sacraments of prayer under the Gospell then under the Law. Although the meaning of Cyprian and Ierom we willingly receiue, that wee haue moe causes of ofter and longer prayers, then they vnder the Law. And therefore Cyprian speaketh more fitly of this poynt of prayer, where hee saith, Either pray or read continually, sometimes speake with God and let God speake with thee.

Cypr. lib. 2. Epist. 2.

Verse 25 And it came to passe, When Peter was come in, Cornelius came to meet him: and falling at his feet, † adored.

RHEM. 5 [25. Adored] S. Chrysost. ho. 21. in Act. thinketh Peter refused this adoration of humility only, because euery falling down to the ground for worship sake, is not diuine worship or due onely to God, * the word of adoration and prostration being commonly vsed in the Scriptures towards men. But S. Hierome ad. Vigil. c. 2. to. 2. rather thinketh that Cornelius by errour of Gentility, & of Peters person did go about to adore him with diuine honour, and therefore was lifted vp by the Apostle, adding that he was but a man.

* προσκυνειν Adoration of creatures.

CARTVV. 5. [25. Adored.] Cornelius considering that Peter was in the office of teaching, preferred vnto the Angell, who (by commandement of God sent him from himselfe to Peter for his further instruction, and such like reasons, tooke thereby occasion to honour Peter more then was meet. And seeing Iohn himselfe stumbled twice at such a stone as this, it is no marvell although Cornelius, otherwise a godly Christian, slipped once. But when Peter saw that hee gaue further reuerence to him then was fit to be given vnto the minister of the word, he thereby perceiving that he had over-reached in his estimation of him, reproved him therefore: which the Pope also, if hee were not an Idol, would undoubtedly doe, when the silly soules cast themselues at his feet, much more when they wipe away the dust of his pantofle with their mouthes. But that hee so erred in his person that he tooke him to be a God, thereby to giue vnto him the honour that he esteemed only due vnto God, is contrary to the knowledge and feare of God testified to be in him, and contrary to that the Angell taught him, which was to send for a man, and not for a God.

Verse 40 Him God raised vp the third day, and † gaue him to be made manifest.

RHEM. 6. [40 Gaue him.] Christ did not vtter his Resurrection and other mysteries to all at once, and immediately to the vulgar: but to a few chosen men that should be gouernours of the rest, instructing vs thereby to take our faith, and all necessary things of saluation at the hands of our Superiours.

CARTVV 6. [40. Gaue him.] So you might conclude, that neither Prophet, Euangelist, Pastor or Doctor might read the Scriptures for to furnish themselues with: seeing they also for the most part, as well as the people, were shut out from this prerogatiue of seeing and conuersing with our Sauiour Christ after his resurrection.

Verse 47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be † baptized which haue receiued the Holy Ghost as well as we.

They that are iustified before, must not omit the sacraments.

RHEM. 7. [47 Baptized, which haue receiued.] Such may be the grace of God sometimes toward men, and their charity and contrition so great, that they may haue remission, iustification, and sanctification before the external sacrament of Baptisme, Confirmation, or Penance be receiued, as we see in this example, where at Peters preaching they all receiue the holy Ghost before any Sacrament, but in the same we learne one necessary lesson, that such notwithstanding must needs receiue the Sacraments appointed by Christ, which whosoeuer contemneth, can neuer be iustified. Aug. super Leuit. q. 84. to 4.

CARTVV. 7. [47. Baptized, which haue receiued.] Baptisme is never to bee administred to those which are of vnderstanding, except they first beleeue, and not onely sometime, as you here affirme. As for Confirmation and Penance, we acknowledge not to be Sacraments.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 18. HAuing heard these things they ‡ held their peace: and glorified God, saying, God then to the Gentiles also hath given repentance vnto life.

RHEM. 1. [18 Held their peace.] Good Christians heare and obey gladly such truths as be opened vnto them from God by their chiefe pastours, by vision, reuelation, or other wayes.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 24. Because he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and faith. And a great † multitude was added to our Lord.

The Church visible.

RHEM. 2. [24 Multitude added.] As before (c. 10.) a few, so now great numbers of Gentiles are adioyned also to the visible Church, consisting before onely of the Iewes. Which Church hath been euer since Christs Ascension, notoriously seene and known: their preaching open, their Sacraments visible, their discipline visible, their heads and Gouernours visible, the prouision for their maintenance visible, their persecution visible, their dispersion visible: the heretickes that went out from them, visible; the ioyning either of men or nations vnto them, visible: their peace and rest after persecutions, visible: their gouernours in prison, visible: the Church prayeth for them visibly: their Councels visible, their gifts and graces visible, their name (Christians) knowen to all the world. Of the Protestants inuisible Church we heare not one word.

CARTVV

CAR TVV. 2. [24 Multitude added.] Neither is our Church, our Sacraments, or other appurtenances of the Church invisible, but is seene of it selfe, the gouernours of the people, one member of the Church of another. But such beetle-blind as you are, as they never can discerne of the true Church, so it is sometimes meet that they should not see the persons thereof, no more then did the aduersaries of the Church at this time: least as cruell beasts they should devoure the damme with her yong, and the mother with her children.

Verse 26. Whom when he had found, hee brought him to Antioch. And they conuersed there in the Church a whole yeare: and they taught a great multitude, so that the Disciples were at Antioche first named Christians.

RHEM. 4. [26 Christians.] This name Christian, ought to be common to all the faithfull, and other new names of Schismatickes and Sectaries must be abhorred. If thou heare (saith S. Hierome) any where, such as be said to be of Christ, not to haue their names of our Lord Iesus Christ, but to be called after some other certeine name, as Marcionites, Valentinians, as now also the Lutherans: Caluinists, Protestans) know thou that they belong not to the Church of Christ, but to the Synagogue of Antichrist. Lactantius also (lib. 7. Diuin. inslit. c. 30) saith thus, When Phrygians, or Nouatians, or Valentinians, or Marcionites, or Anthropomorphits, or Arians, or any other be named, they cease to be Christians, who hauing lost the name of Christ, haue done on the names of men. Neither can our new Sectaries discharge themselues, for that they take not to themselues these names, but are forced to beare them as giuen by their aduersaries. For so were the names of Arians and the rest of old, imposed by others, and not chosen commonly of themselues: Which notwithstanding were callings that proued them to be Hereticks. And as for the name of Protestants, our men hold them well content therwith, But concerning the Heretikes turning of the argument against the peculiar callings of our Religious, as Dominicans, Franciscans, Iesuites, Thomists, or such like, it is nothing, except they could proue that the orders and persons so named, were of diuers faiths and sects, or differed in any necessary point of religion, or were not all of one Christian name and Communion: and it is as ridiculous as if it were obiected, that some be Ciceronians, some Plinians, some good Augustine men, some Hieronymians, some Oxford men, some Cambridge men, and (which is most like,) some Rechabites, some Nazarites.

Hieron. cont. Lucif. c. 7. in fine. Names of sectaries and heretickes. Protestants. Diuers religious orders are not diuers sects. Ierem. 35. Numb. 6.

Neither doth their obiection, that we be called Papists, helpe or excuse them in their new names, for besides that it is by them scornfully inuented (as the name Homousians was of the Arrians) this name is not of any one man Bishop of Rome or elsewhere, knowen to be the author of any schisme or sect, as their callings be: but it is of a whole state and order of gouernors and that of the chiefe Gouernours to whom we are bound to cleaue in religion, and to obey in all things. So to be a Papist, is to be a Christian man, a childe of the Church, And subiect to Christs Vicar. And therefore against such impudent Sectaries as compare the faithfull for following the Pope, to the diuersity of Hereticks bearing the names of new Maisters, let vs euer haue in readinesse this saying of S. Hierome to Pope Damasus, Vitalis I know not, Meletius I refuse, I know not Paulinus, Whosoeuer gathereth not with thee, scattereth: that is to say, Whosoeuer is not Christs, is Antichrists. And againe, If any man ioyne with Peters chaire, he is mine.

Papistes Catholikes, and true Christians, all one. Not to bee with the Pope is to be with Antichrist.

We must here further obserue that this name, Christian, giuen to all beleeuers and to the whole Church, was specially taken to distinguish them from the Iewes & Heathens which beleeued not at all in Christ, & the same now seuereth and maketh knowen all Christian men from Turks and others that hold not of Christ at all. But when hereticks began to rise from among the Christians, who professed Christs name and sundry articles of faith as true beleeuers do, the name Christian was too common to seuer the heretickes from true faithfull men: and thereupon the Apostles by the holy Ghost imposed this name Catholike vpon the beleeuers which in all points were obedient to the Churches doctrine. When heresies were risen (saith S. Pacianus ep. ad Symphorianum) and endeuoured by diuers names to teare the doue of God and Queene, and to rent her in pieces, the Apostolicall people required their surname whereby the incorrupt people might be distinguished, &c. and so those that before were called Christians, are now surnamed also Catholikes. Christian is my name, saith he, Catholike my surname, And this word, Catholike, is the proper note whereby the holy Apostles in their Creed taught vs to discerne the true Church from the false hereticall congregation of what sort soeuer. And not onely the meaning of the word, which signifieth vniuersality of times, places, and persons, but the very name and word it selfe, by Gods prouidence alwayes and onely appropriated to the true beleeuers, and (though sometimes at the beginning of sects challenged) yet neuer obtained by hereticks, giueth so plaine a marke and euidence, that S. Augustine sayd, In the lap of the Church the very name of Catholike keepeth me, cont. ep. fund. c. 4. And againe tract. 32. in Io. We receiue the holy Ghost, if we loue the Church, if we be ioyned together by charity, if we reioyce in the Catholike name and faith. And againe de ver. rel. c. 7. to. 1. We must hold the communion of that Church which is named Catholike, not onely of her own, but also of all her enemies, for, will they nill they, the Heretickes also and Schismatickes themselues, when they speake not with their owne fellowes but with strangers, call the Catholike Church nothing els but the Catholike Church: for they could not be vnderstood vnles they discern it by this name wherewith she is called of all the world The Heretickes when they see themselues prevented of this name Catholike, then they plainly reiect it and deride the name, as the Donatists did, calling it an humane forgery or fiction, which S. Augustine calleth words of blasphemy; lib. 1. c. 33. Cont. Gaudent. and some Heretickes of this time call them scornfully cartholiks, and cacoliks. Another calleth it, the most vaine terme Catholike. Beza in præf. no. Test. an. 1565. Another calleth the Catholike religion, Catholike apostasie or defection, Humfry. in vit. Iuel. pag. 213. Yea and some haue taken the word out of the Creed *putting Christian for it. But against these good fellowes let vs follow that which S. Augustine de vtil. cred. c. 8. to. 6. giueth as a rule to direct a man the right and sure way from the diuersity and doubtfulnesse of all errour, saying, If after the troubles of minde thou seeme to thy selfe sufficiently tossed and vexed, and wilt haue an end of these molestations, follow the way of Catholike discipline, which from Christ himselfe

CARTVV. 3. [28 Chriſtians.] If the Crow may reproach the Swan with blackneſſe, you may alſo charge us with ſectarie and ſchiſmatie all names: Neither is it hard for you to proue them, if (as you affirme) the names of Lutherans, Caluiniſts, thruſt vpon us by you the aduerſaries againſt our willes, are ſufficient prooſes that wee are in Schiſme: Then which, what ever could be more brutiſhly and more blockiſhly written? Wee remember Sychonius the Donatiſts halfe verſe to haue beene made with the ſame ſpirit which this was written with, for as hee ſaid it is holy that wee will haue ſo, ſo the Ieſuites in effect do profeſſe that it is prophane that they will haue prophane. As if your tongues were Propheticall, which almoſt do nothing elſe but ſow lies, or that your black colour that you would paint us with, ſet on without any oyle of truth or reaſon, could not be waſhed off by the ſtreame of our arguments, and life both: or that there were ever any man (our Saviour Chriſt excepted which uſed not this power) able to lead the tongues of the wicked in ſuch a ſtring, as that they could utter no termes of the Church but ſuch as are worthy the knowledge and godlineſſe therof: it is an eaſie matter for you to gaine your cauſe, when prooſes failing, it ſhall bee ſufficient for you to accuſe. And if there had beene no better grounds to proue men Arrians in times paſt, then that they were called the Eaſtern Apoſtataes, that ſprong of Arius would haue ſo ſwarmed, that you the Weſterne, which are the brood of Pelagius, ſhould haue had no place. The name of Chriſtian is our glory, as the godly under the Law gloried in the name of a Iew or Iſraelite. Of men, how godly and learned ſoeuer, wee take no name. No man (not Paul himſelfe) is ſimply and without exception to bee followed, but ſo farre as hee is a follower of Chriſt. For the title of Proteſtants beginning at a Diet of Spires in Germany, upon our proteſt, that we could not with ſafe conſcience ſubſcribe to certaine Decrees of that Aſſembly, wee need not be aſhamed of it: conſidering that it beareth witneſſe to all poſterity of our conſtant and open profeſſion of true and vnfeyned Chriſtianity. Neither make wee any further account of it, then that in this impudency of the Romiſh harlot boaſting of her baſtard child, as if it were the generation of Chriſt, it might by this title be better underſtood what of either of us is holden or ſpoken. Now as touching your ſelues, how miſerably you are rent and cut into ſects and ſchiſmes, your own pen hath heere witneſſed againſt you, ſaving that where you ſet down but foure patches of the cloake of your Religion, there hath beene partly already, and further might be ſet down a ragman roule, of numbers of rogues of your ſeuerall profeſſions. And leaſt there might bee any amongſt you, from the bough to the twig, that in borrowing the name of ſome to bee called by, ſhould not indeed renounce the name of Chriſtian, you haue not ſeven, but ſeven thouſand, even the whole rout of you, laid hold of the Popes garment, and offered not onely to find your ſelues, but him alſo, upon condition, that in being called by his name you may play the harlots and commit ſpirituall whoredome with him: Your excuſes whereof are too childiſh: for firſt, if we would avow the name of Lutherans and Caluiniſts, as you do of Dominicans, Ieſuits, &c. you giue us better defence then you leaue your ſelues, conſidering that the iudgements of Luther and Calvin doe neither make divers faiths, nor yet are ſundred either in ſo many, or materiall points, as you are at oddes for amongſt your ſelues. Secondly, if you all ſing one note, as your diſcords are like unto a black Santus, yea if all your fathers agreed in the truth, as (in diverſity of iudgement amongſt themſelues) they all conſpire againſt it, yet were this denomination of them full of ſacriledge. For the Apoſtle teacheth that if the Corinthians had profeſſed that they held of him, of Peter, or of Apollo, as they depended upon falſe Apoſtles that were amongſt them, that the ſame had beene a ſwarving from Chriſt, yet is it well known that there was a ſweet harmony of all points of Religion amongſt them. The other anſwer declareth, that you had more ſtore of inck in your pen, then wit in your head: For firſt it is abſurd to leaue that liberty of names in matter of religion which may be uſed in prophane ſtudies. And where you thinke to correct this matter with the profeſſion of the Nazarites and Rechabites, it is amendement as ſoure Ale in Sommer, not onely becauſe the compariſon is unequall, conſidering the profeſſion of the Nazarites comming from God, the corporall exerciſes of the other were but the commandement of a man; but alſo for that the word of Rechabites was no name of Religious profeſſion, but noted onely the race and poſterity of Rechab their father. As of the other ſide the Nazarites tooke not their name, after any man that was ſo called, but were ordained for figures of our S. Chriſt. Your matches therefore are very uneven. Beſide that who ſeeth not that you go about to beguile your Reader with a manifeſt equivocation: As though it were all one to be well skilled in Cicero or Pliny, &c. as to addict himſelfe to them, and to haue the ſame iudgement with them, and to follow the ſame Religion, life, and manners that they did: which when you cannot deny in your ſects of Domicans, Franciſcans, &c. yet dare you not affirme it in Cicero, Pliny, and ſuch like. And although you profeſſe to doe it in Auguſtine and Ierome, yet do you it both wickedly, as hath beene ſhewed out of the Apoſtle, and falſly alſo for the moſt part, as this preſent, and all other our writings againſt you do declare.

But where you ſay, that the name of Papiſt is not taken from any one Biſhop of Rome known to be author of a ſchiſme or ſect, you ſpeake truer then you are aware of. For firſt, your Popery (as hath beene ſhewed) is a patchment and galy-maufry of numbers of Biſhops, whereof euery one brought his ſhare. Secondly, for that they are not in deed authours of Schiſme, but of Apoſtacy and utter falling away from Chriſt. And if the Pope that they are called by (inſteed that hee is the firſt begotten Sonne of the devill, which comming after many abuſers, hath gotten the prerogatiue of birth-right from them all) were an Angell of light; yet were it not lawfull to be called by him, or to depend, as you doe of him: Vnleſſe (peradventure) you will ſay, that the Pope was crucified for you, or that you were baptized into the name of the Pope. As for that of Ierome, touching the ioyning of Peters chaire, Look anſwer before upon Mat. 16. 18.

But as commonly there are none ſo ambitious, and ſo iealous of the names of Matrones, Maidens, and honeſt women, as thoſe that leaſt deſerue them, none more deſirous to cary the title of legitimate children children, then those which be Bastards, thereby through honesty of the name to cover the filthinesse of their fornication, and shame of their birth: euen so, when the spirit of fornication fell upon the Church of Rome, having denyed the vertue and power of Christianity, shee laboured the more to put on another name or note of Christian Religion, if peradventure in multiplying her Maidens weed, shee might (notwithstanding she laid her selfe open to every one that passed by) go still in the account of maydens. And what doth shee heere but follow the practise of the Donatists, which call the information they presented to the Emperour against Cicilian the Bishop of Carthage, The Information of the Catholike Church? Or what more then the Rogatian heretickes, that would haue made the world beleeue, that they were the only Catholickes; whereby also by the way appeareth, how ignorant you are of the condition of the Donatists, that charge them with deriding the name of Catholike Church: And therefore as your quotation, which alledgeth, 1. lib. cap. 33. for the 2. lib. cap. 25. partly declareth, so the words of Augustine do much more declare that you never read the place which you alledge: For it is manifest that Augustine chargeth them with blasphemy, not for that they said that the name or title of Catholick Church was humane forgery, but for that they affirmed that the interpretation of the Catholikes, which expounded it of a spread of the Church throughout all Nations, was mans forgery, for in the name it selfe, as hath appeared, they did, as you do, falsly glory: which may yet better otherwhere appeare by the fond definition of Catholick which they alledge, thereby both to take that title away from the true Catholickes, and to fit it for their schismaticall Assembly. Now how much you haue gotten by the challenge of this title more then the Donatists obtained; which is, that one Papist calleth another Catholicke, as if one Mule should claw another: All the world understandeth. I wis the Turke which is the bastard Agaren, or off-spring of Agar, hath gotten better allowance of his usurped title and name of Saracens or posterity of Sara, then ever your Bastard Synagogue could get in this title of Catholicke. And if you had attained to as generall allowance, as they, yet should you haue no more right then they. But as they are still the sonnes of Agar, so you should be still the sonnes of the bond-woman, ingendring to bondage not from the hill Synai, where the law of God was given: but from the seuen hilles of Rome from whence the Popes decree is come. And hereby also is confuted the reason, why the Surname of Catholike was taken thereby to discerne the true worshippers of God from heretickes, which couered themselues under the name of Christians. For if the name of Christian giuen by the holy Ghost, be not able to discerne them, how shall the name of Catholicke doe it. And if a Wolfe may take that name as a sheepes skin to muffle and disguise himselfe with, what priuiledge hath this name that it cannot be also abused? or haue you so small understanding as to thinke, that he which can falsely say, Christian is my name, cannot with like falshood say, Catholick is my surname? Wherefore it is a horrible iniury to make the Apostles authours of this childish counsell. Neither doth your authour affirme that, but saith that the Apostolicall or godly people sought this name. And howsoeuer some haue esteemed the Articles of our faith of the Apostles owne making, yet we follow their iudgement which esteeme them Apostolicall, for that they are faithfully gathered out of the writings of the Apostles. And of this iudgement Augustine appeareth manifestly to haue been of, when as he affirmeth, that they were made by the hands of the Apostles and Prophets, which cannot be true unlesse it be referred unto their writings, from whence they were drawne. Neither is there any of our side, that to our best remembrance ever derided or made light of the name of Catholick, further then it is either alwayes falsly applied to the Papists, in whom it is as comely as the golden ring is in the swines snout, or foolishly and absurdly applied to the particular Church of Rome. And for so much as they affirming Lutheran catechismes to haue changed the word Catholick for Christian, name and note neuer a one: it is to be thought, untill they make it otherwise appeare, that herein they keepe their old custome of slandering the professors of the Gospell.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 4 Whom when he had apprehended, he cast into prison, delivering him to ‡ foure quaternions of Souldiers to be kept, meaning after the Pasche to bring him forth to the people.

RHEM. 1. [4 Foure quaternions.] As Peters person was more notorious then others, and therefore better garded then other for feare he should escape: so Gods prouidence in preseruing and deliuering him for the longer gouernment of his Church, is very maruellous.

CARTVV. 1. In which regard, whosoeuer of the Apostles had been put in prison, should haue had his guard as manifoldly multiplied, as had Peter.

Verse 12 And considering he came to the ‡ house of Mary the mother of Iohn, who was surnamed Marke, where many were gathered and praying.

RHEM. 2. [12 House of Mary.] It is much for the praise of these good Christians that the assembly to Gods seruice and prayer was kept in their houses in the time of persecution, and that the Apostle came thither streight out of prison, as his first refuge, as now Christian people do much to their commendation, in places where heresie doth reigne.

Verſe 5 And Peter indeed was kept in priſon. But | prayer was made of the Church without intermiſsion unto God for him.

RHEM. 5. [5 Prayer was made.] The Church prayed inceſſantly for her chiefe Paſtour, and was heard of God: and all Chriſtian people are warned thereby to pray for their Biſhops and Paſtors in priſon.

S. Peters chaines.

RHEM. 6. [6 Two chaines.] Theſe chaines are famous for miracles and were brought famous from Hieruſalem to Rome by Eudoxia the Empreſſe, wife to Theodoſius the yonger, where they were matched and placed with another chaine that the ſame Apoſtle was tied with by Nero, and a Church founded thereupon, named Petri ad vincula, where they are religiouſly kept and reuerenced vntil this day, and there is a feaſt in the whole Church for the ſame, the firſt of Auguſt, which wee call Lammas day.

CARTVV. 6. [6. Two chaines.] As the Philoſopher ſaid of the ſtones, of the Idols Altar, that they were happier then their fellowes, it is ſo of theſe chaines, that they had better hap then a thouſand manacles, which had as much good mettall and workemanſhip as they, that came not yet to haue the reuerence that they had. But as for the religious reuerencers of them, conſidering that themſelues are thus bound with the chaines of ſuperſtitions: they are ſure (without repentance) to lie bound in the priſon of hell for euermore. And if it be ſacriledge to build Temples to the Saints, that haue been martyred, it is much more to doe ſo to the Irons wherewith they were bound. Not to ſpeake of the fee that the Papiſts are at, with the perſecutors, to get the Saints reliques of all ſorts, nor of the priuy marke, whereby (after ſo long time) they are able to diſcerne his chaines from all other, which Simonides himſelfe could neuer haue done: nor of their pickle, or preſeruatiue they haue, ſo many hundred yeeres to keep Iron, which either the ruſt eateth out, or the continuall ſcouring conſumeth to nothing.

But leaving the queſtion of proper Angels, the ſpeech of celeſtiall ſpirits in this place is out of all ſeaſon, conſidering that either by an Angell, ſignifying properly a meſſenger here as otherwhere, muſt be underſtood a mortall man: or elſe the Church muſt be ſuppoſed to haue been ſo ignorant, as to eſteeme, that celeſtiall ſpirits could not come in, without having the doores opened; which is abſurd. Beſide that the onely conceit of a heavenly Angell at the doore, would haue made them all, both aſtonied and afraid: neither whereof, there is any manner of appearance. The very like place unto this is found in Lukes ſtory of our Saviour Chriſt, as this in the ſtory of the Apoſtles: for as here they haue tranſlated Peters Angell; ſo there (with the ſame warrant) they might haue tranſlated Iohns Angell, the ſame Greek word being found in both.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 46 THen Paul and Barnabas conſtantly ſaid, To you it behoued us firſt to ſpeake the word of God: but becauſe you ‡ repell it, and iudge your ſelues vnworthy of eternall life: behold we turne to the Gentiles.

RHEM. 1. [46 You repell it.] The Iewes of their own freewill repelling the truth, are vnworthy of Chriſt and worthily forſaken, and the Gentiles though they beleeued ſpecially by Gods grace and and preordination, yet they beleeue also by their own freewill, which standeth well with God prouidence.

CARTVV. 1. [46 You repell it.] Being the seruants of sinne, although they repel'ed the word of God willingly, and with great desire; yet did they it necessarily. But the yoking of Gods grace with our free-will together, although it might stand with Gods Prouidence, yet can it not stand with that sentence, That I will haue mercy upon whom I will haue mercy: Whereby the Apostle concludeth, that it is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that hath mercy: nor standeth with this, God worketh in vs both the will and the work, and that of his good pleasure: nor finally with this, that faith is not of vs but is the gift of God. Neither may the Iesuites thinke, that by this enterlarding of our free will with the grace of God, they can escape the reproach of Pelagianisme; considering that the Pelagians ioyne the help of God with our free-will.

Verse. 2. And as they were ministring to our Lord, and fasting, the holy Ghost said: Separate me Saul and Barnabas unto the worke whereto I haue taken them.

RHEM. 2. [2 As they were ministring.] If we should, as our aduersaries do, boldly turne what text we list and flee from one language to another for the aduantage of our cause, we might haue translated for ministring, sacrificing, for so the Greeke doth signifie, and so Erasmus translated: yea we might haue translated, Saying Masse, for so they did: and the Greeke Fathers hereof had their name Liturgie, which Erasmus translateth Masse saying, Missa Chrysostomi, But we keepe our text, as the translatours of the Scriptures should do most religiously.

The Apostles Liturgy or Masse. λειτουργούντων αυτῶν.

CARTVV. 2. [2 As they were ministring.] You would certainely haue done it if you had not perceiued, that so you should haue brought Angels, Kings, and Princes, to the Altar, to sacrifice and say Masse, also those of Macedonia, and Achaia, to sacrifice and say Masse, to the poore of Ierusalem, it signifying nothing else but ministring, and executing a publike worke, seruice or office: which what it is in a minister of the Gospel, the Apostle declareth, when hee saith that hee was appointed, λειτουργὸν or ministring to the Gentiles: which hee further openeth by ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ θεοῦ: And this being a phrase more proper to the Ministery then the other, doth not yet signifie sacrificing; as it appeareth by the Apostle, which useth the Noune derived of λειτουργία, as of the same valew in this place, with the other phrase ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, that without all contradiction signifieth not sacrificing the Gospell. You could hardly also be ignorant, that you should haue had the Syrian and Greeke Paraphrast, Oecumenius, Theophilact and Chrysostome against you: whereof some interpreteth this ministring praying, other preaching, third ioyneth both: to whom that you giue lesse credite heere, then to Erasmus; it commeth rather of partiality to your cause, then of any good estimation, that you haue of his cunning or faithfulnesse in translation: who notwithstanding hee fauour you somewhat in his word of sacrificing, yet in truth hee vtterly ouerthroweth you, by affirming that by sacrificing is meant the vsing of their gifts to Gods glory and the saluation of the Church, in prophecing and teaching the doctrine of the Gospell. Last of all, if you had translated it sacrificing as in other places, so here also, your vnblushing face, should haue beene euidently seene, whilst you durst do that, which the translators of your own sect (in their greatest goodwill to the Masse) durst not doe, who haue translated it ministring and not sacrificing. And as for the Liturgie, or manner of seruice of God, ascribed to Christome, if you, or any other, will needs, against the streame of the continuall vse of this word, translate it Masse, yet doth the Masse gaine no credite thereby: For it prayeth for Pope Nicholas, and the Emperour Alexius, whereof the one was aboue foure hundreth, the other about seuen hundreth yeares, after Chrysostome was dead. Now you know that a Masse of requiem, for men that were not yet borne, was somewhat too rathe, and too earely. Not to speak here of the extreme difference, betweene your Masse, and that which sometimes (although earely) was called Masse, otherwhere mentioned.

RHEM. 4. of one of the Prophets there present amongst them, declared that God had heard their prayer, for the Churches preseruation, and therefore had ordained this meanes of sendiug forth of Paul and Barnabas, by whom the Churches Tents should be greatly enlarged. Whereupon it appeareth, that this fast undertaken upon such a speciall circumstance of wasting the Church, without any purpose of ordaining any Ministers, and indeed without ordaining any at all, but such as had long before exercised the Ministerie, and that by expresse commandement from God, is fondly and undiscreetly alledged, to proue set, ordinary, and standing fasts of the yeare. For a more religious care in choice of the Ministers look further answer before upon Math.9.38. As for their shameless untruth of our exposition of fast, of fasting from sin, or sober and temperate use of meates, it is manifestly confuted, both by our writings, and daily practise of our Churches, of this and that side of the Seas. But their own exposition of fast, which is abstinence from certen kindes of meates: beside that it commeth nere vnto the ridiculous exposition, which they falsly ascribe vnto vs; it hath not onely no ground of the word, but is directly against it: which placeth the abstinence in fast from all manner of meates.

And if it hurt our cause, that one which in other points was an heretick affirmeth that there ought to be no set fastes: yours also must needs be the worse, for that Montanus the Heretike, was the first that gaue lawes of fasting. Although herein also wee differ greatly from the Aerians, who refused set fasts: for that they held, that a man was onely to fast, when he listed: which is far from vs, that teach that in publicke fastes commanded by the Church, there is a necessitie of obedience. As for the other authorities, either counterfeit, or far remoued from the purer times of the Church: they are not worth the answer; although in these chapters of the Councell of Mens, there is no mention of fasting. Imposition of hands. Holy orders.

RHEM. 6. [3 Imposing hands,] Because all blessings and consecrations were done in the Apostles time by the externall ceremony of imposition of hands, diuers Sacraments were named of the same, specially Confirmation, as is noted before, and holy ordering or consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons, and Subdeacons; as we see here and elsewhere, In which though there were many holy words and ceremonies, and a very solemne action: yet whatsoeuer is done in those Sacraments, is altogether called Imposition of hands: as whatsoeuer was done in the whole diuine mystery of the B. Sacrament, is named Fraction of bread. for the Apostles as S. Denys Eccl. hier. c. 1. in fine writeth) purposely kept close in their open speeches and writings which might come to the hands or eares of Infidels, the sacred words and actions of the Sacraments. And S. Ambrose saith, in 1, Tim. c. 4. The imposition of the hand is mysticall words wherewith the elected is conformed and made apt to his function, receiuing authority (his conscience bearing witnesse) that he may be bolde in our Lords stead to offer sacrifice to God. And S. Hierome, The imposition of hand is the Ordering of Clarks, which is done by prayer of the voice and imposition of the hand. And this is in some inferiour orders also, but Paul and Barnabas were ordered to a higher function then inferiour Priests, euen to be Bishops thorowout all Nations.

Hiron. in cap 58. Esa.

CARTVV. 5. [3 Imposing hands.] If the Lord vnder the law committed all his sacred and holy ceremonies to writing, when he would haue hidden them from the Gentiles: how much more did he cause them to be set down in writing vnderneath the Gospell, when he would haue all the world to know them. Then it was his vnsearchable iudgement, that they should be hidden from the prophane, least they should be made holy by them: but now it is his vnspeakeable mercy, that they should be made known to prophane men, to the end they should become holie. Therefore the papistes which vnder Denys words, would excuse their intollerable arrogancy, of multiplying the ceremonies in the holy misteries, aboue the number conteined in the scriptures; are ridiculous; so that this iudgement of theirs is meeter for Venus religion, and for the Mysteries of the stewes, then for the religion of God, and for the mysteries of the kingdome of heauen. And although the Scripture in one place (for shortnesse sake) note out the whole action of the holy Supper by breaking of bread: yet it is otherwhere set out at large, in every needfull point thereof, and therefore it maketh nothing for your foleries, and histrionicall gestures, in ordaining the Popes creatures: or yet in the number of your Ministers, whereby to the better contentment, and lesse loathsomenesse of the lookers on, your stagemen are increased: considering that they are neither expressed, nor insinuated, in any place of the Scriptures where notwithstanding all the Sacraments are commended unto us. As for Ambrose and Ierome often alledged to paint your Margent, they are here flat against you, which speaking of the ordination of Ministers, neither call it Sacraments, nor mention any such thing, but that the Scripture speaketh of, that is, of prayer, and imposition of hands.

ters of the Latine tongue, from whence commonly they are derived: it is apparant, that they are rather derived of the words before named, which are naturall Latine words, then of Presbyter, which is Greek borne, howsoever it is (by use) devised in the Latine tongue: And if it were yeelded you that Presbyter should be turned Priest, yet the same will not helpe you, considering that it should not thereby imply any sacrificing Priest, which alwayes both in the old and new Testament, both in typicall and the true Priest, noted out by the word ἱερεύς, carefully severed and distinguished from πρεσβύτερος.

CHAP. XV.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 4 AND when they were come to Ierusalem, they were received of the Church, and of the Apostles and ‡ Auncients, declaring whatsoeuer God had done with them.

RHEM. 1. [4.] Auncients here, and often in this chapter, are the same that Priests, vers. 2. as S. Ierom taketh it also, 1. Pet. 5. and the Greeke approveth, being alwayes one, πρεσβύτεροι, Priests, Hiero. in 1. ad Tit. & 4. ad Galat.

CART VV. 1. [4.] The word signifying two manner of Church-elders, one that governed and taught, the other which gouerned onely, either hee understandeth both, or else those which gouerned onely: considering that Bishops, which were the preaching Elders, were supplied by the Apostles, who then made their abode at Ierusalem. Ierom hath nothing for you, if you remember, that you were lately taught, that Presbyter, the word which he useth there, signifieth not a Priest. He is also against you, in that he expoundeth Bishop and Elder for all one; which you call an Arian heresie. And further that he opposeth Antistes, a minister under the Gospell; unto Sacerdos, a Priest under the Law: and therefore you haue made euill choyce of your place. 1. Tim. 5. 17.

Verse 36 And after certaine dayes, Paul said to Barnabas, Let us return and ‡ visit our brethren in all Citties where we haue preached the word of our Lord, how they doe.

RHEM. 2. [36 Visite our brethren,] Hereof our Catholike Bishops tooke vp the necessary vse of often visiting their flockes and cures committed to their charge for confirmation in faith, vertue, and reformations of manners both of Clergie and Laitie.

Vers. 41 And hee walked through Syria and Cilicia, ‡ confirming the Churches, commanding them to keepe the precepts of the Apostles and Auncients.

RHEM. 3. [41 Commaunding them.] Not onely the things commaunded by Christ expresse word, or written in the Scriptures (as our Heretickes hold) but whatsoeuer the Apostles and Rulers of the Church command, is to be kept and obeyed, See those words repeated againe cap. 16. 4. and that in the Greeke, lest any man cauill, because here the Greeke hath them not.

CART VV. 3. [41.] What yee are with wine wee know not: but you are assuredly drunken with the cup of error and dotage; who see not, that these decrees were first of all in the words of the Councels Letter, from whence S. Luke transcribed them into this present booke, which is no warrant that your Councels wanting the Holy Ghost, should be allowed.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 2 No little sedition therefore beeing risen to Paul and Barnabas against them, they appointed that Paul and Barnabas should goe up, and certaine others of the rest, to the Apostles and Priests at Ierusalem, upon this question.

RHEM. 4. [1 Appointed.] We learne by this example, what is to be done when any controuersie ariseth in religion between the teachers or other Christian people. We see it is not ynough to contend by allegations of Scriptures or other proofes seeming to make for either part: for so of contentious part taking there should bee no end but the more writing, wrestling, striuing there were, euery one for his own fancie, cloking it with the title of Gods word and Scripture, the more Schismes, Sectes, and diuisions would fall, as wee see specially in the restlesse Heresies of our time. Whose fautours admitting no iudges, stand to no triall of mortall men, to no tribunall of Pope, Councels, Bishops, Synodes, but each man to his own phantasticall spirit, his own sense of Scriptures, and his own willfull obdurate rebellion against Gods Church and his Superiors in the same. But here we see S. Paul and Barnabas, men that were Apostles, and full of the Spirit of God, and the other parties, though neuer so much partiall to the ceremonies of their Law by their former long vse and education therin, yet not to stand, stifly to their own opinion on either side, but to cõdescend to referre the whole controuersie and the determination thereof to the Apostles, Priests, or Ancients of Hierusalem, that is to say, to commit the matter to be tried by the heads and Bishops and their determination in Councell. This is Gods holy and wise prouidence among other iudgement in his Church, to keepe the Christian people in truth and unitie, and to condemne Sectes and false teachers and troublers of the Church. By which iudgements and order, whosoeuer will not or dare not be tried in all their doctrine and doings, they shew themselues to mistrust their own cause, and to flee from the light, and ordinance of God. Without which order of appeasing all differences in faith and constructions of the Scriptures, the Church had been more defectuall and insufficient, then any Common wealth or Societie of men in the world: none of which euer wanteth good meanes, to decide all disorders and dissension arising among the subiects and citizens of the same. The way to end dissention in religion, is to commit it to a Councel.

CARTVV. 4. [2 Appointed.] There comming certaine Church troublers from Iury, that taught the iuſtification which is by the Law, as you do: it appeareth that the ſame, the eaſlier to lead away the ſimple, pretended (much like as you do) the authority of the Church, and eſpecially of the Apoſtles there, whereupon the Church aduiſing to prevent the danger, leaſt ſome might bee brought into ſome doubt of the truth, conceiving thereby ſome ſuſpition of contrariety in iudgement betweene Paul and Barnabas which were at Antioche, and the other Apoſtles, that were at Ieruſalem, ſent to giue information of their doctrine to the Apoſtles: Whereby it appeareth that the Ieſuites are deceived, in that they thinke that it was agreed on the adverſaries ſide, to put the matter to the Apoſtles, who knew well that they had belied the Apoſtles, of whom they were not (as they pretended) ſent. Which appeareth in that in the Embaſſage to the Apoſtles at Ieruſalem, there were none but Paul and Barnabas with other of the Church. Secondly, theſe two Apoſtles went not up to ſubmit their iudgements, unto the iudgements of the Apoſtles at Ieruſalem; for that had diminiſhed the authority of their doctrine, then which there was no greater in the world: For howſoever the perſon of Paul apart, was inferiour to all the Apoſtles iointly taken, yet his doctrine was of as great authority, as all their doctrines together. And therefore he went up to confer with them; and that not doubting any thing of their conſent with his: but leaſt in regard of the Churches, which hee had taught, hee ſhould haue runne in vaine: whilſt ſuſpition remaining in their hearts of his difference from the reſt of the Apoſtles, there had beene certaine danger of their wauering in that doctrine, wherein it ſtood vpon their ſalvation to be ſetled. And if it had beene poſſible, that the Apoſtles ſhould haue interpreted the Scriptures otherwiſe then theſe two Apoſtles had done, doe the Ieſuites think that they would haue reſted in their iudgement? when as Paul doubteth not to pronounce a curſe vpon the Angell himſelfe that ſhould preach any other doctrine then he had done. Beſide, wee ſee manifeſtly, that in this Councell, there was nothing alledged but the Scriptures. Wherefore this place is fooliſhly alledged, wherein conference of iudgements is confounded with ſubmiſſion of them. The Apoſtles authority whereof not one of them could erre, is euill compared with the Biſhops, whereof every one (as you confeſſe) and (as ſhall appeare) all may erre together.

RHEM. 5. [6 Apoſtles and Ancients,] The Hereſies of our Proteſtants which would haue all men to giue the voyce, or to be preſent in Councels, and of others that would haue none but the holy or elect to be admitted, are refuted by this example, where we ſee none but the Apoſtles, and Prieſts or Ancients aſſembled to diſpute of the matter, though many deuoute people were in the cittie the ſame time. Neither did euer any other in the Ancient councels of the Church aſſemble to to debate and define the matter, but ſuch, though many other for other cauſes be euer preſent. Secular men or women, be their gifts neuer ſo great cannot be iudges in cauſes of faith and religion. If any thing, ſaith God, be hard and doubtfull, thou ſhalt come to the Prieſts of the Leuiticall ſtocke, and thou ſhalt follow their ſentence. Againe, The lippes of the Prieſt ſhall keepe knowledge, and the Law thou ſhalt require of his mouth. Againe, Aske the Law of the Prieſt. Much more muſt we referre all to our Biſhops and Paſtours, whom God hath placed in the regiment of the Church with much larger priuiledge, then euer he did the old Prieſts ouer the Synagogue, to whom it is ſayd, He that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me. And it is to be noted that the Biſhops ſo gathered in Councell, repreſent the whole Church, haue the authoritie of the whole Church, and the Spirit of God to protect them from errour, as the whole Church: S. S. Paul and Barnabas come hither for the definiton of the whole Church. The ſentence of a plenarie or generall Councell (ſaith S. Aug.) is the conſent of the whole Church. And ſo it muſt needs be in the Church, becauſe the Magiſtrates, Senate, Councell or deputies of all common-wealths, repreſent the whole body: and to haue it otherwiſe (as the Churches Rebels wiſh) were to bring all to hell and horrour, and themſelues to be perpetually, by the ſeditious and popular perſons, vpholden againſt Law, reaſon and religion in their wickedneſſe.

CARTVV. 5. [6 Apoſtles and Ancients.] That which ſtandeth ſtandeth all men vpon, ought to haue the approbation of all. And ſeeing Councels are (as this was) for the moſt part aſſembled, to ſatisfie the doubts of the people, it ſeemeth againſt reaſon, that they ſhould not bee ſuffered to bee partakers of the Councell. Alſo ſeeing the Scripture (as hath and ſhall further bee ſhewed) giveth priuate men in the Church intereſt, both in the excommunication and election: there is no reaſon that they ſhould bee cleane ſhut forth of the Councell, but that they may both be preſent to heare the cauſes debated and to obiect their doubts and ſcruples, that trouble their peace of conſcience. Wee reade in Ezechias time that the people were admitted to the making of two Eccleſiaſticall Decrees, The one of the month wherein the Paſſe-ouer ſhould be celebrated, the other of proroging the ordinary Feaſt vnto ſeuen extraordinarie daies. And if the Gouernours vnder the Goſpell haue priuiledges aboue the Gouernours vnder the Law: yet the priuiledges that the people vnder the Goſpell haue, are aboue the priuiledges of the people vnder the Law. And although we ſhould confeſſe the Gouernours prerogatiue now, aboue thoſe that were then: yet is it vnlearnedly aſſigned by the Ieſuites which place it in this, That whoſoeuer reiecteth the Miniſters of the Goſpell, reiecteth Chriſt. As if the ſame words, were not ſaid in effect of Moſes and Aaron, miniſters vnder the Law: Your murmurings are not againſt us but againſt God. Againe Peter in an Aſſembly of the Church, making his defence in a point of doctrine, whereof divers of the Church accuſed him, doth ſecretly confeſſe the Churches right in demanding of an account of the Miniſters doctrine: otherwiſe hee would haue ſaid (as you do) that they muſt meddle with their plough taile, leaving to him and his fellow-miniſters the diſcretion of Preaching, to this or that man, as to him and them ſhould be thought moſt expedient. And in this very example in hand, conſidering that there was very great diſputation in Councell: it is apparant, that there were other beſide the Apoſtles and Elders that were admitted to ſpeak in the Councell: For as the Apoſtles could not ſet themſelues againſt the truth: ſo there is no likelyhood, that the Elders (whom you call Prieſts) which were for their knowledge in the myſtery of the Goſpell and godlineſſe, as had prayed with fastings, they commended them to the Lord in whom they beleeved.

RHEM. 1, [22 They had ordeined.] Wee see by this, first that S. Paul and Barnabas were Bishops, hauing here authority to giue holy Orders; secondly, that there was euen then a difference betwixt Bishops and Priests, though the name in the primitiue Church was often vsed indifferently: lastly, that alwayes fasting and praying were preparatiues to the giuing of holy Orders.

CARTVV. 1. [22. They had ordained.] Apostles and Bishops (which are Pastors and Elders) are diuers opposed members of one diuision: and therfore they cannot be said one of another: whereby your difference of Bishop and Priest falleth to the ground. ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 12 The Priest also of Iupiter that was before the Cittie, bringing Oxen and Garlands before the gates, would with the people | sacrifice.

RHEM. 2. [12 They would sacrifice.] This loe is the diuine worship, consisting in externall sacrifice, and in acknowledging the parties worshipped to be gods; which *may be done to no man nor creature, and therefore the Apostles refuse it with all possible diligence, and all the Angels and Saints in heauen refuse that adoration by sacrifice. The Catholike Church suffereth no Priest nor other so to worship any Saint in heauen or earth. She hath but one externall Sacrifice, which is in the holy Masse, of Christs body and bloud: that she offereth to God alone, and neither to Peter nor to Paul (saith S. Augu.) though she Priest that sacrificeth, standeth ouer their bodies, and offereth in their memories. But other kindes of honours and dueties, inferiour without all comparison (how great soeuer they be) to this, we do, as the Scripture, and Nature teach vs, to all superiours in heauen and earth, according to the degrees of grace, honour, and blessednes that God hath called them vnto, from our B. Ladie Christs own mother, to the least seruant he hath in the world, for which the Hereticks would neuer accuse Christian people of Idolatrie, if they had either grace learning, faith, or naturall affection. Latria. Aug. lib. 10. de Ciu. Dei, cap. 1. Dulia. Aug. lib. 8. de Ciu. cap. 27.

CARTVV. 2. [12. They would sacrifice.] As if prayer were not Sacrifice, and all that pray rightly in that regard called sacrificers: yea as if prayer were not a more honorable and higher service and worship, then are Bullockes or Calues. For by how much the figure is inferior to the thing figured, and the shadow vnto the body: by so much is the offering up of bullockes and calues inferiour to the oblation of prayers. And could they so quickly forget, that the onely bowing of the body vnto Peter, aboue the measure of reuerence vsually given vnto the ministers of God, is refused of Peter, as hauing a spice of Idolatry; notwithstanding that there were no manner of Sacrifice offered. RHEM. 3. [22 Had ordained.] The Heretickes, to make the world beleeue that all Priests ought to be chosen by the voyces of the people, and that they neede no other Ordering or Consecration by Bishops, pressing the prophane vse of the * Greeke word more then the very naturall signification requireth and Ecclesiasticall vse beareth, translate thus, Ordained by election. Whereas indeed this word in Scripture signifieth, Ordering by imposition of hands, as is plaine by other words equiualent. Acts 6. 13. 1. Tim. 4, 5. 2. Tim. 1. Where the Ordering of Deacons, Priests, and other is called * Imposition of hands: not of the people, but of the Apostles. And this to be the Ecclesiasticall vse of the word, appeareth by S. Hierome saying (as is before alleaged) that χειροτονία is the Ordering of Clerks or Clergie men by prayer of voice and imposition of hands. χειροτονησασιος. Heretical Translation against holy order. ἐπιθησεις τῶν χειρῶν.

CARTVV. 3. [22. Had ordained.] It is absurd to imagine, that the Holy Ghost by Luke, speaking with the tongues of men, that is to say, to their vnderstanding, should vse a word in that signification, in which it was neuer vsed before his time, by any writer, holy or prophane. For how could hee then be vnderstood; if vsing the note and name they vsed, hee should haue fled from the signification whereunto they vsed it, vnlesse therefore his purpose was to write that which none should read: it must needes be, that as he wrote, so he meant the election by voyces. And if Demosthenes for knowledge in the tongue, would haue been ashamed to haue noted the laying downe of hands, by a word that signifieth the lifting of them up: they doe the holy Ghost (which taught Demosthenes to speake) great iniury in imposing this vnproprietie and strangenesse of speech vnto himselfe; which is yet more absurd, considering that there were both proper words, to vtter the laying on of hands by, and the same also vsed in the translation of the 70: which Luke for the Gentiles sake, did as it may seeme (where he conueniently could) most follow. And it is yet most of all absurd, that Luke which straineth himselfe to keep the words of the 70. Interpreters, when as he could haue otherwise vttered things in better termes then they did, should here forsake the phrase, wherewith they noted the laying on of hands, being most proper and naturall to signifie the same. The Greeke Scoliast also, and the Greeke Ignatius, do plainly referre this word to the choyce of the Church by voyces. And if the signification of all those words should be prophane, which are the same in the Scripture, that they are in prophane writers: answere (we beseech you) how many significations of words would you finde holy in all the Greeke Testament. The allegation out of Acts 6, of another word that plainly signifieth ordination after an election there made, and mentioned, to proue that this word here (where is no former mention of any election) signifieth laying on of hands, is sottish. For thus they proue one contrary by another, laying on of hands by lifting vp; and lifting up by laying on. As for Ieroms referring this word to the imposition of hands, first it is manifest that it is not his iudgement, but others which lived in his time, he onely describing what is ordination, sheweth their grosse error, that tooke the lifting up of the hand (especially in that place of the Prophet) for the laying on of hands. And if hee should say so, yet is it by a Metonymie, wherein hee noteth the laying on of hands of the Bishops, by the holding up of the Churches hands, whereunto it is annexed. Whereupon it may withall bee vnderstood, how untruely you speake, which accuse us, as if we so commended the Churches electi- *Hieron. in 58. Hereticall tranſlation Prieſthood

RHEM. 4. [22 Prieſts.] Euen ſo here alſo, as before, fleeing from the proper, apt, knowen word, and which is more preciſely correſpondent to the very Greeke in our tongue and all nations, they tranſlate for Prieſt, Elder, that is, for a calling of office, word of age: for a terme of art and by conſent of all the Church and Apoſtolike authoritie and Fathers appropriated to holy Orders, a vulgar, common, and prophane terme: With a little grace, as if they ſhould tranſlate Pontificem, a bridge-maker, the Maior of London, the Bigger of London. And thus you ſee within three words compaſſe they flee guilefully from the Latin to the Greeke, and againe guilefully from the Greeke to the vulgar Engliſh. Such corruption of Scriptures their hatred of Prieſthood driueth them vnto. If they had tranſlated it ſo when the Scriptures were firſt writen, (at which time the word was but newly receiued into the ſpeciall and Eccleſiaſticall ſignification, and when it was yet taken ſometimes in common ſprofane ort, as 1. Tim. 5. or there onely where our ancient Latin verſion turneth Presbyter into Senior, becauſe the word was not yet wholy and onely appropriated to holy Orders, as afterward by vſe of many hnndred yeeres it was and is) their dealing might haue had ſome colour of honeſtie and plaineſſe which now can not be but of plaine falſhood and corruption, and that of further purpoſe then the ſimple can ſee. Which is to take away the office of Sacrificing and other functions of Prieſts, proper in the new teſtament to ſuch as the Apoſtles often, & the poſteritie in manner altogether call Prieſts, Presbyteros. Which word doth ſo certainely imply the authority of ſacrificing, that it is by vſe made alſo the onely Engliſh of Sacerdos, the Aduerſaries themſelues as well as we, ſo tranſlating it in all the old and new Teſtament: though they cannot be ignorant that Prieſt commeth of Presbyter, and not of Sacerdos: and that antiquitie for no other cauſe applied the ſignification of Presbyter to Sacerdos, but to ſhew that Presbyter is in the new Law, that which Sacerdos was in the olde: the Apoſtles abſtaining from this and other like old names at the firſt, and rather vſing the words, Biſhops, Paſtors, and Prieſts, becauſe they might be diſtinguiſhed from the Gouernours & ſacrificers of Aarons order, who as yet in the Apoſtles time did their old functions ſtill in the Temple. And this to be true, and that to be a Prieſt, is to be a man appointed to ſacrifice, the Heretickes themſelues calling Sacerdos alwayes a Prieſt, muſt needs be driuen to confeſſe, Although their follie is therein notorious, to apply willingly the word Prieſt to Sacerdos, and to take it from Presbyter whereof it is properly deriued, not onely to Engliſh, but in other languages both French and Italian. Which is to take away the name that the Apoſtles and Fathers gaue to the Prieſts of the Church, and to giue it wholy and not onely to the order of Aaron which neuer had it before our Prieſthood began. Neuer did there Heretiks ſtand ſo much vpon doubtfull derivatioes and deſcant of words as theſe deſcant of wordes, as theſe Proteſtants do, and yet neuer men behaued them ſelues more fondly in the ſame: as whoſoeuer marketh the diſtinction of their Elders, Miniſters, Deacons, and ſuch like, ſhall perceiue.

If ſacerdos be Prieſt, much more Presbyter.

Presbyter. Prieſt. Prebſtre. Preti.

CARTVV. 4. [22. Prieſts.] Let (hardly) the interpretation of the former word, be the meaſure of our tranſlation of this. And let all the world iudge, whether it bee fitter to tranſlate this word of compariſon by Elder, that admitteth compariſon: then by Prieſt, which receiveth none. And if the Ieſuits were not ſo impudent, as to deny that the ſnow is white, they would be aſhamed to deny that this word ſignifieth Elder; ſeeing that both the poſitiue and ſuperlatiue degree of the ſame word, do ſignifie (without all contradiction) old and eldeſt. And it is too ſottiſh, that they eſteeme, that it cannot be a name of office, becauſe it is a name of age: conſidering that it is knowne, that therefore the officers are called Elders, for that they were for the moſt part choſen from the elder ſort of men. In which reſpect the gouernours and principall men of the Church and Common wealth of Iſraell, are called, the aged and Elders of Iſrael, and the aged or elders of the congregation. So it appeareth how intollerable they are, which call the word of Elder prophane. Now where they ſay, that the tranſlating of the Greeke word into Elder, when the ſcriptures were firſt written, had ſome colour of honeſty and plainneſſe. Why colour, and not rather truely honeſt and plane? unleſſe you will ſay thus both of Ierom (as you ſuppoſe) and others that tranſlated before him. For they turned oftentimes the ſame word (which you turne Prieſts) by the Latine word, which you muſt confeſſe to ſignifie an Elder in our language. We preſume this at the leaſt, of the tranſlation before Ierom. For that it were ſtronger againſt you, if they tranſlating it otherwiſe, were thus corrected of Ierom. And if this tranſlation was honeſt and plaine, almoſt foure hundred yeares after Chriſt, which were farre purer times then the thouſand which followed next after: we need not feare that the authoritie of the latter yeares ſhould diſcountenance the authoritie of the former, conſidering that in thoſe thouſand yeares there were many impropriations, or wreſting of things from their proper uſe: but of appropriating any thing to the right and naturall uſe of that which the former times had either put them from, or not helped them unto: there be either few or no examples at all. Albeit your own Gratian, not long time ſithence, doth ſay, that Presbyter in Greeke, is Senior in Latine, which in Engliſh is Elder. Where you further would proue, that becauſe Sacerdos (by conſent) turned Prieſt, is uſed indifferently of elder times for the word Presbyter, and therefore may be as well turned Prieſt as Sacerdos: it is ſufficient anſwer, that the new Teſtament (elder then your eldeſt times, doth carefully take heed of ſuch confuſion, which of purpoſe ſhunneth the giving of that name Sacerdos, unto the Miniſters of the Goſpell. And this, whileſt the truth (having you upon the racke) conſtraineth you to confeſſe, thereby to put a difference betweene the miniſters of the old and new Teſtament: it muſt needs follow, that the uſe of words, that overthroweth that diſtinction, cannot be without fault. And if it were a fault in antiquitie, ſo to confound things; it is alſo your fault, which take advantage of their abuſe. We know (indeed) that Prieſt commeth not of Sacerdos; but that it commeth of Presbyter, is the queſtion, whereunto your harping upon the ſimilitude of the words, is not onely blind, but altogether vnlikely: for in Greek πρεσβυτερος approcheth farre neerer unto Prieſt, then πρεσβυτερος. In Latine the word Præſes (that may be ſo called of prieſt) is much neerer Prieſt then Presbyter. And as for the French and Italian, conſidering that they are daughters the flowre or creame of the whole Church choſen from among them, ſhould either through ignorance or ambition ſet themſelues againſt ſo weighty and ſo ſubſtantiall a point of doctrine. This is yet more manifeſt, in that the Church both at Antioche, and Ieruſalem, had a hand in the choiſe of the Embaſſadours, to and from the Councel. Further the reſolution of the Councell, being called the decree not onely of the Apoſtles and Elders, but of the Church alſo: it cannot bee, but at the leaſt the conſent thereof was required in the Councell. Finally, the letters of the Councell being deliuered, not to the Prophets, Doctors, and Elders onely of Antioch, but unto the whole congregation: argueth that in ſuch controuerſies of doctrine, wherein the people are caſt into doubt, the Councell dore ought not to be ſhut againſt them. Verſ. 2. 22, 25. Verſ. 23.

And this iudgement is partly ſtrengthened by the practiſe of the elder Churches, which followed the traces of this Councell. For in the Councell of Carthage, it appeareth that there were many of the people preſent. And Cyprian affirmeth, that euen in a Councell aſſembled from all parts of the world, the people that were conſtant in the faith, ſhould haue this honour to be preſent there. Ambroſe alſo in his refuſall of diſputation with Auxentius the Arrian, at the Emperour Valentinians Court: oppoſeth the authoritie of his Church, which therefore would not ſuffer him to goe to the Court to diſpute the matter of our Saviour Chriſts divinity, for that the cauſe ought to be diſcuſſed in the Church before the people. And your own Pope Nicholas, endeuouring to ſhut forth the Emperour from the Councell: granteth notwithſtanding, that both he and all men, haue right to be preſent at thoſe Councels, wherein cauſes of faith are debated. Laſtly, Ruffine maketh mention of heathen Philoſophers and Logicians, aſſembled at the Councell of Nice: Amongſt whom when one of them through the great skill in the Art of Logicke, wound himſelfe (Adder-like) out of the arguments of the Biſhops, that they were not able to put him to ſilence: there roſe vp in the Councell a ſimple man, that knew nothing but Chriſt and him crucified, who ſo amazed the Philoſopher with his ſpeech, that not onely as a dumbe man, he had not a word to reply, but yeelded himſelfe to the truth, that the plaine man had uttered. Therefore not onely the cuſtome of the Church admitting ſimple men to the Councell, but the fruit alſo that came of it, ought to procure the Church that deſireth reſolution, ſome ſtanding in the Councell. For although the preſence of the people at the Councell, doe not alwayes beare ſuch fruit as it did at that Councell; which was to convince the adverſarie: yet is it (by Gods grace) like to bring forth a precious fruit, which is their owne eſtabliſhment in the truth wherein they ſtoted. And ſeeing the Councell doores were ſet wide open to heathen Philoſophers: it were unreaſonable to leaue not ſo much as a wicket open to the people of God. We omit to ſpeake of the Common weales of Athens, of Rome, and of our owne: wherein the civill affaires that concerne the body of the common wealth, paſſe not without conſent and allowance of the people. So that your appeale from the Church Orders, to the cuſtome of Common-weales, maketh flat againſt. For all this, wee marvell not though the Ieſuits ſhut the Church out of the Councels: ſeeing Harding maketh even of the Prieſts and Deacons to ſtand for cyphers there, whileſt permitting unto them ſentences of advice, he reſtraineth the definitiue voyces to the Biſhops alone. Yet write we not this, as though the peoples preſence, either in all Councels where the doctrine is not in controverſie, were not needfull: or that in thoſe Councels where they were preſent, they haue like right with thoſe Biſhops and Elders. For they (wee meane Biſhops and Elders) may firſt by a ſeuerall and foreſet deliberation, take counſell whether it bee expedient to propound any ſuch matter, as is in controverſie in that Councell where the people ſhall be preſent. Whereby if they perceiue any generall and obſtinate oppoſition of them againſt the truth, they may hold that poynt of doctrine backe. This we ſee to haue been don by Ioſias, who or ever he aſſembled the people, firſt of all aſſembled the Elders of Iuda and Ieruſalem. Alſo by Iames, who at Pauls arrivall to Ieruſalem, firſt aſſembled the Elders to debate of the matter, or ever he was preſented before the Church. Secondly, if the people ſhould bewray a wilfull ſtubbornneſſe againſt the truth, not ſuſpected by them: yet the governours being ſound (without whom there can nothing be concluded) there ſhould not follow any preiudice of the Councels authoritie againſt the truth: albeit the number of the people aſſembled were greater then of thoſe Biſhops and Elders. Hereupon it commeth, that the Decrees of the Councell are after called the Decrees of the Apoſtles and Elders: leaving out the brethren, which Luke had firſt ſet powne. And upon the ſame ground, in the deciſion of doubtfull matters, Moſes, Deut. 17. commandeth that they ſhould haue recourſe vnto the Prieſts of the Leviticall ſtocke, for that they bare the principall ſway in thoſe deliberations. Laſtly, the caſe of Councels being, as it hath been declared, it is no marvell although Auguſtine call a generall Councell in ſome reſpect, the conſent of the whole Church, conſidering that not onely thoſe Biſhops and Elders, but ſome of the people were (in all likelihood) there aſſembled. Tom. Conc. 1. in præf. Con. Carthag. ſub. Cypri. præſid. Cyp. præf. int. et Diaco. epi. 14. et clarius repetit. ep. 32 Amb. lib. 5. Epiſt. 32. Epiſt. Nichol. P. ad Imper. Michael. Ruffin. 1. lib. 6. 3. Demoſt. orat. πρὸς λεπτ. Matteoſim. In the defence of the Apolog. cap. 6. diuiſ. 1. 2. Reg. 23. 1 Act. 21. 18. 19.

RHEM. 6 [6 Aſſembled] A Councell was called to diſcuſſe the matter, which Councell was the more eaſily gathered, becauſe the Chriſtian Biſhops and countries were not yet ſo many, but that the principall Gouernours of the Church being not farre diſperſed, and as many learned men as were neceſſary, might be in Hieruſalem, or eaſily called thither. And it was not a Prouinciall Councell or Synode onely, but a generall Councell, conſiſting of the cheefe Apoſtles and Biſhops that then were though the number was nothing ſo great as afterward uſed to aſſemble, when the Church was ſpred into all nations. The firſt Councell at Ieruſalem. Act. 16. 4.

CARTVV. 6. [6. Aſſembled.] We will not ſtriue whether the Councell were Generall or Prouinciall: but yet it may be counted a generall Councell in reſpect of the preſence of the Apoſtles, which were governours of all the Churches of the world. Of Biſhops in your ſignification, that put difference betweene Biſhop and Elder, there is no manner of mention. And if it were a Prouinciall Councell, having the direction of the Apoſtles, it hath as great authoritie, as if it were generall. And therefore this note, to the purpoſe that you ſet it downe, of exempting all Generall Councels from errour, is nothing worth.

Verſe 7 And when there was made a great diſputation, I Peter riſing up, ſaid to them them, Men brethren, you know that of old dayes God among vs chose, that by my mouth the Gentiles should heare the word of the Gospell, and beleeue.

Peter head of the Councell, and his successours after him.

RHEM. 7. [7 Peter rising vp.] S. Peter as the head of the Church speaketh first, as his Successors haue euer had, not onely in their personall presence, but in their absence by their Legates and substitutes, the cheefe voyce in all Councels generall, none euer receiued into authoritie and Credite in the Church without their Confirmation. And therefore the Councels of the Arrians and of other Heretickes were they neuer so great, wanting the Popes assent, assistance, or Confirmation, did shamefully erre, as Ariminense, for the Arians, and Ephesinum secundum for the Nestorians, and such like condemned Assemblies.

CARTVV. 7. [7. Peter rising vp] Amongst the Apostles Paul and Barnabas spake before him; amongst the rest diuers others disputed of the matter before him. Beside these speeches and disputations, the propounding of the cause vnto the Councell, must necessarily be vnderstood before Peter and they could reason to it, who although hee bee not heere named, yet following the order obserued in Councels, it may be reasonably esteemed, that Iames who shut up the Councell with his sentence, had the charge of propounding the matter to the company: wherefore he is called of Eusebius, the chosen Bishop ouer the Church of Ierusalem. This is confirmed by the Councell of Basil, which affirmeth that Iames gaue the definitiue sentence, and not Peter. Chrysostom also vpon the words (I Iudge) asking what should be the meaning of them: answereth, I speake with authoritie: which sheweth that as Moderator and mouth of the rest, he had authority to set downe the definitiue sentence. One of your coat also, as foule in Popery as who is fouleſt, confesseth the same. And as for the former of your reasons, and that Ierom by Prince of the decree, meant onely to note, that he was the first that propounded that which after was decreed, it may appeare by his owne words expounding himselfe, saying, that he was the first author of the sentence: the decision and definitiue sentence thereof belonging indeed to the whole Councell, as the story doth euidently witnesse. For that Iames followed Peters sentence, it is too childish, considering that in all Councels a good Moderator must needs doe so: if any of the Councell which speaketh before, haue uttered the truth of the matter which is debated, else let them answer whether Chushai, Dauids friend, is therefore to haue had supreme authoritie over Absolom, and the whole assembly of Israel which was gathered vnto him, because they all agreed vnto his sentence rather then to Achitophels. And thus not the Councell alone, but any Senator, whose sentence is followed, may be called Prince of the Decree. The other, that Peter concluded the question, is like the former: seeing every one in the Councell ought to conclude the cause. But what place soeuer Peter had in that Councell, it is out of all controuersie, that the Pope of Rome had not of a long time, the chiefe voyce in Councels, neither in his own person, nor in his Legates. For in the most famous Councell of Nice, Eustathius the Bishop of Antioch, was president: and therefore had the chiefe voyce, and not Pope Iulius Legates, who subscribed in the Councell, after Hosius the B. of Corduba in Spaine, of whom also it is witnessed with admiration, that he was president of many Councels. In the African Councell the Popes Legat subscribed the last. And the Bishop of Rome being present at Constantinople, was not president of the Councell holden there.

Peters prehe-minence both toward Iews and Gentils. Rom. 15. 18 Gal. 2. 7.

RHEM 8. [7 Chose that by my mouth.] Though Paul were called and appointed specially to be the Apostle of the Gentiles, yet that was S. Peters speciall priuilege by Gods own choice, that the first Gentiles should be called by his mouth, and that he first should vtter to the Church that truth of the admission of the Gentiles himselfe for that he was Christs Vicar, being notwithstanding (as his Master was) Minister Circumcisionis, that is, Apostle of the Iewes, Christ deferring all preeminence vnto him in that point also.

CARTVV. 8. [7. Chose that by my mouth.] Looke the answer before in the answer to the preface of this booke.

Verse. 13 And after they held their peace, I Iames answered, saying, Men brethren, heare me.

Iames & the rest follow S. Peters sentence. Hiero. to. 2. ep. 89. ad August. c. 2.

RHEM. 9. [13 Iames.] S. Iames because he was an Apostle and also Bishop of Hierusalem, gaue his sentence next, for the speach interposed of S. S. Paul and Barnabas, was but for their better information in the decision of the matter, and for confirmation of S. Peters sentence, though they being Ap. and Bishops, had voices in the Councell also: as many moe had, though their sentences be not here reported. And were S. Iames in his speach saith, I iudge, it is not ment that he gaue the principall definitiue sentence: for he (as all the rest) followed and allowed the sentence of S. Peter, as it is plaine in the text, the whole assemby for reuerence of his person & approbation of his sentence holding their peace. All the multitude (saith S. Hierom) held their peace, and into his sentence Iames the Apostle and all the Priests did passe together. For though S. Iames did particularise certaine points incident to the question debated, as of eating strangled meates. &c. yet the proper controuersie for which the Conncell assembled, was, Whether the Gentiles conuerted were bound to obserue the Law of Moses, and it was concluded. that they were not bound, nor ought not to be charged with Moses Law or the Sacraments and ceremonies of the same. This is the substance and principall purpose of this Councels decree, which doth bind for euer: and Peter (saith S. Hierome in the same place) was Prince or author of this decree, the matter of fornication and Idolothytes being but incident to the question or resolution, and the forbidding of eating strangled and bloud, but a temporall prohibition, which by the consent of the Church or otherwise afterward was abrogated, the Church of God hauing the true sense of difference of times places, and persons, when and how far such things are to be obserued, and when not. And in such things as these, and in other like which according to circumstances require alteration, it is, that S. Aug. saith. lib. 2. de baptis. cap. 3. tom. 7. The former generall or plenarie Councels may be amended by the later.

Incident questions.

How latter Councels alter the former.

CARTVV. 9. [13. Iames.] It hath been shewed, that Iames was chiefe in this Councell. Against which that of Ierom, proueth that Peter knew the truth of this question, before Paul reproued him; him: maketh not much against us, considering that by the words Prince of the decree, is meant nothing else but that Peter having laid open the ground of that decree, the rest agreed thereunto. And if he meane otherwise, the reader may well know how small credit he deserveth in this case: which to excuse Peter, accuseth Paul of a lie. That Augustines words of amending a former generall Councell by a latter, are to be vnderstood of things alterable by circumstance, is most false. First, for that the occasion of this speech was concerning rebaptization, which is a matter of doctrine: for maintenance whereof the Donatists alledging the Councell, are thus answered by Augustine: That the former Councels are amended by the latter: Augustin. de Baptis. contra Don. l. 2. c. 3

Secondly, the falshood of this glosse appeareth by his opposition of authoritie of the Scripture, unto the authoritie of the Fathers and Councels: the former being authenticall and absolute, the other admitting correction and amendment by those that follow. Whereupon (by the Iesuites) should follow, that the correction of generall Councels, reaching no further then to things variable by circumstance: the authority also of the Scriptures should not be absolutely received, but in matters variable by circumstance: then the which what can be more absurdly spoken.

Verse 20 But to write unto them that they refraine themselues from the contaminations of Idols, and | fornication, and strangled things, and bloud.

RHEM. 10. [20 Fornication.] Fornication and contamination with Idols, are of themselues mortall sinnes, and therefore can neuer be lawfull: yet because the Gentiles by custome were prone to both, & of fornication made very smal account, it pleased the holy Ghost to forbid both specially. Concerning the other points of absteining from blood and stiffled meates, they were things of their own nature indifferent, in which for a time the Iewes were to be borne withall and the Gentils to be a litle exercised to obedience. By which we may see the great authoritie of Gods Church and Councels, which may commaund for euer, or for a time, such things as be fitte for the state of times and nations, without any expresse Scriptures at all, and so by commandement make things necessary that were before indifferent. The Churches authority in making decrees.

CARTVV. 10. [20. Fornication.] By which wee may see, that you see nothing at all, that see not that the written Law of charitie, requireth, that in things indifferent, the stronger ought to beare with the weaker. And the ceremoniall Law being an appurtenance of the morall, the same was (even in the full strength that it was of under the Law) no further to bee obserued, then it was agreeable to the law of Loue. For which cause as after the date thereof, it was sometime obserued: so whilest it was in force, it was sometime broken. But that the Church can make things before indifferent necessary, hath not onely no manner of ground from this place: but is as much to say, that the Church may controll the scriptures, considering that the indifferencie of things, haue the ground of their middle and indifferent nature from the Scripture. And if the Church may make things indifferent necessary, she may by the same authoritie make things necessary indifferent. And so shee might haue decreed fornication to be an indifferent thing: then the which what can bee more absurd. And although it be sufficient for us, that any matter be concluded of the Scripture, by way of consequence, albeit there be no expresse words thereof: yet for this case, a man would thinke, that there were expresse words enough to forbid spirituall murder: which is committed by all such as eate with offence to the weak. Of the contrarie part, it appeareth by this place, that there may bee no abridgement of libertie simply decreed, but in regard of circumstance, according to the rule of edification. Rom. 14. 14 Rom. 15. 1. 2. 3. 1. Cor. 8. 8. &c. Math. 12. 1 1. Sam. 21. 6. Rom. 14. 15

Verse 24 Because we haue heard that certaine | going forth from us, haue troubled you with words, subverting your soules, to whom wee gaue no commandement.

RHEM. 11. [28 Going forth from vs.] A proper description or note of Heretickes, Schismatickes, and seditious teachers, to go out from their spirituall Pastours and Gouernours, and to teach without their commission and approbation, to disquiet the Catholike people with multitude of words and sweete speaches, and finally to ouerthrow their soules. Going out a marke of heretickes.

CARTVV. 11. [28. Going forth from us.] S.

Verse 28 For it hath seemed good | to the holy Ghost and to us, to lay no further burden upon you then these necessary things. God & our Lady, and the like speeches.

RHEM. 12. [28 To the holy Ghost and to vs.] By this first we note, that it is not such a fault as the Heretickes would make it in the sight of the simple, or any incongruitie at all, to ioyne God and his creatures, as the principall cause and the secondarie, in one speach, and to attribute that to both, which though diuersly, yet proceedeth of both. God and you, say good people commonly: God and our Lady, Christ and S. Iohn: We confesse to God, and to Peter and Paul: as God and his Angell, to our Lord and Gedeon, the sword of our Lord and of Gedeon, our Lord and Moses, Christ and his Angels. Our Lord and all his Saints ep. ad Philem. S. Paul and our Lord. 1. Thes. 1. 6. All these speaches being partly Scriptures, partly like vnto the Scriptures speaches, are warranted: also by this Councell, which saith boldly, and hath giuen the forme thereof to all other Councels lawfully called and confirmed to say the like, It hath pleased the holy Ghost and vs, S. Cyprian ep. 54. num. 2. reporting the like of a Synode holden in Afrike, sayth, It hath pleased vs by the suggestion of the holy Ghost. * Gen. 58. 15. 16. Iudg. 7. 18 20. Exo. 14 31. 1. Tim. 5. 21. Visum est Sp. sancto & nobis.

Secondly we note, that the holy councels lawfully kept, for determination or cleering of doubts or condemning of errours and Heresies, or appeasing of Schismes and troubles, or reformation of life, and such like important matters, haue euer the assistance of Gods spirit, and therefore cannot erre in their sentences and determinations concerning the same, because the holy Ghost cannot erre, from whom (as you see here) iointly with the Councell resolution proceedeth. The Holy Ghost assistant in all lawfull Councels to the worlds end.

Thirdly we learne, that in the holy Councels specially (though otherwise and in other Tribunals of the Church it be also verified (Christs promise is fulfilled, *that the holy Ghost should suggest them and teach them all truth, and that not in the Apostles time onely, but to the worlds end, for so long and that by Christs promise. Io. 16. 13.

S. Gregories reuerence of general Councels.

shall Councels, the Church, and her Pastours haue this priuilege of Gods assistance, as there be either doubts to resolue, or heretickes to condemne, or trueths to be opened, or euill men to be reformed, or Schismes to be appeased for which cause S. Gregory li. 1. ep. 24. sub. fin. reuerenceth the foure generall Councels (Nicen. Constantinop. Ephes. Chalced.) as the foure bookes of the holy Gospell, alluding to the Number and of the fifth also he saith that he doth reuerence it alike: and so would he haue done moe, if they had been before his time, who saith of them thus, Whiles they are concluded and made by vniuersall consent, himselfe doth he destroy, and not them, whosoeuer presumeth either to loose whom they bind, or to bind whom they loose.

The Protestants fond distinction betweene the foure first, & the later Councels.

S. Gregory therefore reuerencing all fiue alike, it may be marueled whence the heretickes haue their fonde difference betwixt those foure first and other latter: attributing much to them, and nothing to the rest. Whereas indeed the latter can erre no more then the first foure, being holden and approued as they were, and hauing the holy Ghost as they had, but in those first also when a man findeth any thing against their heresies (as there be diuers things, then they say plainly that they also may err, & that the holy Ghost is not tyed to mens voyces, nor to the number of sentences: Which is directly to reproue this first Councell also of the Apostles, and Christs promise of the holy Ghosts assistance to teach all trueth. Yea that you may know and abhorre these heretickes throughly, heare you what a principall Sect master with his blasphemous mouth or pen vttereth, saying that In the very best times such was partly the ambition of Bishops, partly the foolishnesse and ignorance, that the very blind may easily perceiue, Satan vsed to haue been president of their assemblies. Good Lord deliuer the people and the world from such blasphemous tongues and books, and giue men grace to attend to the holy Scriptures and Doctors, that they may see how much, not onely S. Augustine and other fathers attribute to all generall Councels specially (to which they refer themselues in all doubts among themselues & in all their controuersies with heretikes:) but to which euen S. Paul himselfe (so specially taught by God) and others also yeelded themselues. Notorius is the saying of S. Augustine concerning S. Cyprian, who being a blessed Catholike Bishop and Martyr, yet erred about the rebaptizing of such as where Christened by heretickes. If he had lined (saith S Augustine lib. 2. de bapt cap. 4.) to haue seen the determination of a plenarie Councell, which he saw not in his life time, he would for his great humility and charity straightway haue yeelded, and preferred the generall Councell before his own iudgement and his fellow Bishops in a Prouinciall Conncell onely. Whereby also we learne, that Prouinciall Councels may erre, though many times they do not, and being conformable to the generall Councels, or confirmed and allowed by them, or the See Apostolike, their resolutions be infallible as the others are.

Bezas blasphemy against the first generall Councels. Beza in praefat. Test No. An. 1565.

What the fathers attribute to Councels, and namely S. Augustine.

Prouinciall Councels.

Notwithstanding the holy Ghosts assistance, yet humane meanes must be vsed to search the truth. Luke 1. 3.

If any here aske what need so much disputing, study, and trauail in Councels to find out and determine the truth, if the holy Ghost infallibly guide them? We answere that such is the ordinary prouidence of God in this case, to assist them when they do their indeuour, and vse all humane meanes of industry, and not els. And so (though somewhat otherwise God assisted the Euangelists and other writers of the holy Scriptures that they could not erre in penning the same, but yet they did and ought to vse all possible humane diligence to know and learne out the histories and truth of matters, as is plaine in the beginning of S. Lukes Gospell: els the holy Ghost would not haue assisted them. Euen so in this Councel of the Apostles, though they had the holy Ghost assistant, Yet the text saith, cum magna conquisitio fieret, When there was great disputation, search and examination of the case, then Peter spake &c. If againe it be demaunded, what neede is there to expect the Councels determination, if the Popes or the Sees Apostolikes iudgement be infallible and haue the assistance of God also, as the Catholickes affirm, we answer, that for the Catholicke and peaceable obedient children of the Church it is a comfort to haue such various meanes of determination, triall, and declaration of the trueth, and that it is necessary for the recouery of heretickes and for the contentation of the weake, who not alwaies giuing ouer to one mans determination, yet will either yeelde to the iudgement of all the learned men and Bishops of all Nations, or els remaine desperate and condemned before God and man for euer. And as I sayd before, this assistance of the holy Ghost promised to Peters See presupposeth human meanes of searching out the trueth, which the Pope alwayes hath vsed, and will, and must vse matters of great importance, by calling Conncels, euen as here you see S. S. Peters and Pauls themselues and all the Apostles, though indued with the holy Ghost, yet thought it notwithstanding necessary for further triall and clearing of truth and maintenance of unity to keepe a Councell.

Though the See Apostolike it selfe haue the same assistance, yet Councels bee also necessary for many causes.

Lastly it is to be noted, that as Christ and the holy Ghost be present by his promise, all such assemblies as gather in the obedience and unity of the Church, with full minde to obey whatsoeuer shall be determined, whereby the assembled though of diuers iudgements before, do most peaceably yeeld to truth and agree in one vniform determination of the same: so all such as gather out of the Church, without humilitie or intention to yeeld one to another, or to any Superiour, man or Councell, or what els so euer, but chalenge to themselues learning, spirit, and we cannot tell what: such, how many meetings so euer they make, being destitute of the holy Ghost the author of truth and concord, are further of and further out, then euer before: as God hath shewed by the successe of all Hereticall Colloquies, Synodes, and Assemblies in Germanie, France, Poole, and other places in our dayes. Reade a notable place in S. Cyprian, that the promise of Christ, that he would be in the mids of two or three gathered in his name, pertaineth not to them that assemble out of the Church.

Hereticall or schismaticall assemblies.

De vnit. Eccles.

CAPT VV. 12. [28 To the Holy Ghost and vs.] In your first note, you are triflers: For first you speake, as though we should deny that these words, God and Peter, Paul and our Lord, might not bee coupled together in any sort. Secondly, you beare the Reader in hand, as if wee should deny that a creature might not bee said instrumentally to do the same thing which God doth: both which are open untruthes. But if because God and his creature may be ioyned, either in speaking, or in some sort of action together, you conclude (as you do) that therefore they may be ioyned together in any thing, and namely in the high worship of prayer: your friends may see, that your endeuour to ioyne these together hath made a separation betweene you and all good forme of reasoning. And you might as logically, of the coniunctions mentioned in these Scriptures, haue concluded both men and Angels cooperation with God in the making of the world, as that which you haue inferred, or rather inforced of them. Cyprians declyning from the words of Luke, seemeth apparantly to set forth the speciall reverence he carried to the Apostles Councell, aboue that hee did to the Councell wherein hee was present. For he saith not, It hath pleased the Holy Ghost and us; but it pleaseth us, by the instruction of the Holy Ghost. Howbeit it appeareth, that you understand not what is meant by these words in the Councell, it pleaseth the Holy Ghost: The meaning is, not as you fondly imagine, that they were immediately inspired of God: for that could not agree, either to the Elders or people: no not to the Apostles at that instant of the Councell: but the meaning is, to shew that the Decrees had the approbation of the Scripture, whereof the Holy Ghost was the Inditor: for as the Scriptures are said to fore see in respect of the author of them, so it may bee said in respect of the Scriptures, that it pleaseth the Holy Ghost. For it is apparant by the Councell, that these Decrees pleased them because they concluded them out of the Scriptures: not one of them alledging that hee iudged so without reason, shewed from the Scripture. And this is evidently set down by the Greek Scholiast, which saith, that therefore the Holy Ghost is there set down: For that Christ had not taught this, but the Councell uttered them, grounded of the Law. Secondly, when Cyprian addeth that they in that assembly had spoken according to their conscience or knowledge: hee insinuateth plainely, that hee held not their decree as absolutely inspired of the Holy Ghost, but as that which he submitted to riper knowledge and iudgement of such as were able out of the Word to better it. And if Cyprian (which might haue come to passe) had set this Preface before the erronious decree of rebaptization: doe the Iesuites thinke that these words would haue changed the errour into truth? Lastly, if it were of authority, which they would haue: yet it helpeth not the authority of the Popish Councels, unlesse they bee able (as Cyprian was) to alledge true testimonies of the Scriptures to induce to that iudgement which their decree doth set downe.

Gal. 3. 1.

Oecumenius in hunc locũ.

Your second and third note which are all one with themselues, and all one in effect with the first wherein Cyprian is pretended, declare your beggery, which to make shew of wealth tell one peece of your coine thrice: Howbeit your proofe, of leveling the wavering and doubtfull truth of other Councels, with the most assured and doubtlesse truth of the Apostles Councell, bewrayeth that your stuffe being very small, is also stark naught, and that your coyne is copper. For yeelding unto you, that the promise of the presence of the holy Ghost unto the Apostles, stayeth not in their persons, but reacheth in some respect unto the whole ministery of all ages insuing: yet it followeth not, that therefore it is equally communicated with the one and the other. But of the contrary part, for so much as the Holy Ghost is given unto every member in the body of Christ, not equally but proportionably, as the place which it occupyeth in the body doth require: it must follow, that the Apostles having a greater and higher place in the body of the Church then haue the Pastours, must needs haue also greater assistance, and in many things more certaine direction of the Holy Ghost then they. And if this promise of Christ bee a warrant for the truth of all decrees of Bishops in Councels; it giveth the same warrant to all their Sermons, Lectures, writings, and disputations, in such sort, that no untruth can lay hold of any of them, or any part of them: For seeing the presence of the Holy Ghost was in these words promised, and performed unto the Apostles in that measure, that it exempted all their Apostolicall ministery from all suspition of the least untruth: it followeth, that if the Bishops bee their heires, to the whole and full assistance of the Holy Ghost in Councels, they are by the same reason intituled to the same fulnesse of assistance in their Sermons and writings. The latter whereof being absurd, and contraried by the daily experience of the most sufficient Ministers, the other also cannot be otherwise. For that they say the Bishops succession to this assistance of the Holy Ghost, is specially in Councels, notwithstanding that the weight of their whole cause leaneth upon this point, yet they say it onely, without reason, without authority holy or Ecclesiasticall: and contrary to the example of the Apostles upon which they would ground it. And seeing it is true, as well in Councels, as in other exercises of the Ministery, that every true Bishop how godly or learned soever, may erre: it followeth, that all of them together, much more the greater part, upon the Councell Bench, as well as in the Pulpit, may erre: For although when they are altogether, through the benefite of conference, they cannot so easily erre as they may apart, yet for the remnants of blindnesse in that they know not, and imperfection of knowledge in that they understand, and other infirmities, from which their presence in Councell doth not free them, they may possibly fall. As of the other part, the Councell of the Apostles could not therefore erre, because no one of them could once step aside from the truth of that matter that they gaue sentence of. The rest also in the Councell, for the most part knowing and acknowledging this priuiledge of the Apostles, were easilier, and more assuredly by them led and directed into the truth of that they sought for, then the Elders, Deacons, or other, in our time, meeting in Councell, can be by any Bishops. So that whether in Councell, we compare the Apostles with Bishops, yea with right Bishops, or the rest of the body of our Councels, with the rest of theirs: we shall easily finde great differences in both sorts, wherewith a manifest degree of the truth in them both is evidently established, and as it were with a high wall of square stone separated. This freedome also from errour in the Apostles, proceeding thereof that they were taught of the Holy Ghost, through the immediate Mastership or Doctorship of Christ: argueth that even the best Bishops hauing beene schooled by men, beare this scarre of their Master with them, that they may erre, it being well with the scholler, if he be no better then his Master. Wherefore Augustine saith, that the former generall Councell may bee amended by the latter. Againe, putting the case, that the Bishops assembled at Rome were no good Iudges, he addeth, that there remaineth yet another triall of a generall Councell: where (saith hee) the cause may bee debated with the iudges themselues, that if they bee convinced to haue iudged evill, their sentences may bee reversed. Gregories sentences of Counsels of all sorts, are famous, that he would flye them, for that he saw no good end of any Councel. This the prayer of the Councels doth manifestly convince, whereby they in the beginning desire pardon of their excesses, of their ignorance, of their error, and of their offences, that they might commit in that Councell. The very like prayer haue they after the Councell ended, and ſubſcription made: which were a very mockerie of the Lord, if the Councell in thoſe dayes had had ſuch a preſervatiue with them in the Councell houſe, that no infection of error could touch them. More then this, your owne Abbot affirmeth, that more credit is to be given to one priuate faithfull man, then to a whole Councell, and to the Pope: if hee haue either better authoritie or reason. Whereby he plainly confeſſeth, that there is both greater authoritie then either the Popes or Councels, and that there may be better reaſon alledged by a godly priuate man, then is brought by either of them, Pope, or Councell. As for Gregory the Popes reuerencing the foure firſt generall Councels, as the foure Euangeliſts, taking him as his words ſound, and not rather as an exceſſiue and hyperbolicall ſpeech, in reſpect of the pure doctrine which they delivered, concerning the poynt of the two natures and one perſon of Chriſt, it is a ſpeech that may well become the fore-runner of Antichriſt, which maketh no difference of excellency between the mouth of God & men, between the Sun and the Moon. Whereof the firſt lighteth, and the other is lightned: betweene the rule, and that which is ruled. Auguſtine was fayne of another iudgement, that Eccleſiaſticall Iudges (as men) may be often deceiued: and that the authority of the great Nicene Councell, ought not in ſuch degree to preiudice any that is of contrary iudgement vnto it. Now we would gladly know, whether the Ieſuits dare ſay, that the authoritie of one of the Euangeliſts ought not to preiudice him that ſhall hold any poynt againſt that which any of them haue ſet downe. What needs ſo long proofe of that, the evidence whereof is ſuch, that one of their own doctors feareth not to charge the Chalcedon Councell (one of the foure that the Pope mateth with the foure Evangeliſts) with error. But if theſe foure generall Councels be of equall authoritie with the foure Evangeliſts: the Popes authoritie (as you Papiſts beare the world in hand) being aboue the authoritie of the Councels, it followeth that his authority is greater then the Evangeliſts; then which what can be more blaſphemouſly ſpoken? You are like unto yong children, to whom every thing, even their ſhadow, is a maruaile: in maruailing why we eſteeme not the latter Councels, as well as the Ancient. The reaſon whereof is apparant: for being further removed from the pureſt times, and the revelation of Chriſt the ſonne of God, they approched neerer unto the fouleſt time, and revelation of Antichriſt, the ſon of perdition. And for that the holy Ghoſt being preſent and preſident amongſt them in ſome acceptable meaſure, by degrees withdrew his preſence and preſidence from the other: vntill ſuch time, as in ſtead of the Douely ſpirit of God, they had the Owle preſent at their Councell; the Lord by a night-bird which flieth the light, ſetting forth the darkneſſe and ignorance which was then upon the face of the whole earth. We may rather maruaile at you, who accuſing us of irreverence to Antiquitie, are here compelled to giue us the teſtimonie of a conuenient eſtimation that wee haue it in: yea your ſelues may rather maruaile at your ſelues, which pretending great reſpect unto Antiquitie, affirme notwithſtanding that the latter Councels are better then divers of the Ancient. And where you charge vs with refuſall of the foure firſt, when ſomewhat in them is found againſt us: it hath and alwayes (by Gods grace) ſhall appeare, that we refuſe them in no point, wherein they are not firſt refuſed of the holy Scripture. But here wee are able more deeply to charge you, then you are us: for all you in Pope Leo, which carrieth your iudgements under his girdle; and he firſt by his Legats, and after by himſelfe, refuſe a Canon of the Chalcedon Councell, which you match with one of theſoure Evangeliſts: albeit it were iudged & ſubſcribed by all the Councel, becauſe it gaue the primacie to Anatolius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Which Canon, notwithſtanding the contradiction of the ſeat of Rome, vnder the protection of the Emperour, remained in force. Wherefore if M. Beza had ſaid, that in reſpect onely of ſuch Legats of the Pope as theſe were, which being Preſidents of the Councell, were paſſingly ambitious, the Diuell had in ſome points ruled the Councels: he ſhould ſay nothing, but that their ambition proued to bee true. But the truth is, they haue notably ſlandered that worthy ſeruant of God, and impudently wreſted and falſified both his words and meaning. For where he doth in expreſſe words make compariſon with the Councels of theſe our latter yeares, which are altogether corrupt, and thoſe Councels which were ſomwhat before our remembrance, they hauing left out that ſentence of compariſon, would make the reader beleeue that this iudgement of his, reached even to theſe foure generall Councels. For that he meant to compare the baſe and baſtard Councels of this age with thoſe that were ſomewhat before: it appeareth in that he calleth thoſe times neither good nor beſt (as you haue falſly tranſlated him) but better times, in reſpect of the preſent eſtate of Popery, which is from top to toe, nothing but a mattery ſoare. And this treacherous dealing of yours is yet more manifeſt by his owne words in the ſame preface: Surely as for me (as I ſaid before) I neither refuſe the teſtimony of the Church, nor of the Fathers, nor of the Synods, but am of advice, that there ought to be good regard had of them. Whereby comparing his iudgement of Councels with Auguſtines, as it hath been of us alledged, it appeareth that he riſeth before their gray heads, with as much reverence as Auguſtine did. Hereunto this place here alledged, doth amiably accord: for he placeth the pliable mind of Cyprian, of yeelding unto a generall Councell, not in authoritie of the Councell, but in that the truth of that cauſe, which was hidden to Cyprian, and his fellow Biſhops, was layd open by the Councell, and made cleare: nor he placeth not his yeelding minde to the Councell, in that the Councell ſhould ſay ſo: but in that it ſhould proue, and that manifeſtly and demonſtratiuely, that it ſaid the truth: which matter, becauſe it confoundeth you, you thought good, (as before in the teſtimony of M. Beza) to keep backe from the knowledge of your reader. Hither alſo pertaineth the teſtimonie of Ierom, who affirmeth that after the Princes, which he calleth the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts, whatſoeuer ſhall be ſpoken, ought to be cut off, and hath no authoritie, meaning further then it hath warrant from them, or the Scripture before them. In the ſecond Demand, you (or rather Eraſmus, whoſe reaſon this is) are ſtronger in obiecting then in anſwering, and haue made a faſter knot then your blunt anſwer will be able to looſe. For if your Church doe beleeue as you doe teach them, that the Popes authoritie is aboue the Councels, it were a fooliſh thing to withdraw the Biſhops and Elders from their Churches to meet in Councell; for the procuring ſuch a decree, as hath leſſe authoritie, and therefore leſſe certaintie then the Popes decrees, which may bee made without ſuch hinderance of the Church, by abſence of their over-ſeers. Nay, it is abſurd for the Church to ſeeke from Peters authoritie (which you beleeue the Pope hath) to the iudgement of all the Biſhops in the world. Neither is there any in the Church of any meane instruction, which after he hath understood what Peters iudgement is in any matter of any doubt, will seek for further confirmation at the hands of any man, or at the hands of all the men in the earth together. And that which is more, he will not seek it at the hands of all the Angels in heaven if he could possibly assemble them into one Councel-house. It is true, that to go from the authority of Peter to seek to the iudgement of all the Apostles, was (although not in greater truth, yet in greater appearance of truth) a degree and step of ascending. But to haue gone from Peters iudgement, unto the iudgement of all the world besides the Apostles, had beene to haue gone from the hall into the kitchin: Wherefore it is absurd that men should seek from the Pope whom you affirme to haue the same authoritie that had Peter who could not erre, in his Apostolicall Ministery, to an assembly of those, whereof every one of them apart (in your iudgement) may erre, and consequently altogether. And therefore also your own lippes do convince you of further absurdity in this point: for affirming that the authority of a generall Councell lawfully assembled is the authority of the Holy Ghost: and further holding that the authority of the Pope is aboue the authoritie of the Councell; it must needs follow, that either the Popes authority is aboue the authority of the Holy Ghost, or else, that one authority of the Holy Ghost, is aboue another authority of one and the same Holy Ghost.

Now there growing no strength unto the confirmation of the Church in her doubts, by a Councell, if the authority of the Pope be so peereleſſe as you pretend: those Hereticks also, and the enemies of the Church, which know not, or acknowledge not the weight of Peters authority, are to receiue the whole fruit of a generall Councell. But euen they also, if they understand that no Bishop may giue voyce in Councell, but he that is sworn to maintain the Papacie, will easily know, that all the Bishops voices are but one onely voyce of the Bishop of Rome, which carrieth the Bishops tongues tied underneath his girdle: and therefore will lesse beleeue all the Bishops (who haue sold their voyces, and let forth their tongues) then the Bishop of Rome alone, who for Bishoprickes bestowed upon them, hath hired them to speake what he thinketh good. As for the successe of our Synods, wee report it to the conscience of all men: and know well that it is such, as for the victory that it gaineth against Popery, it causeth your hearts to fret in your bellies, and your teeth to gnash in your heads.

Verse 31 Which when they had read, they reioyced upon the consolation.

RHEM. 15. [31 Reioyced upon the Consolation.] Straight vpon the intelligence of the Councels determination, not onely the Gentiles, but euen the Masters of the former troubles and dissension, were at rest, and all tooke great comfort that the controuersie was so ended. And so should all Christiane men doe, when they see the sects of our time condemned by the like authority and most graue iudgement of the holy Councell of Trent. Against which the hereticks of our time make the like friuolous exceptions and false cauillations, as did the Heretickes heretofore against those Councels that specially condemned their errors. The Pope and Bishops (say they) are a party, and they ought not to be our iudges: they are partiall and come with preiudicate mindes to condemne us, and we accuse them of Idolatrie & other crimes, and we will be tried by Gods word only, and we will expound it according to another rule, that is to say, as we list. So say they against this Councell, and the like say the Arians against the first Nicene Councell, and all such like against those Councels namely that condemned their heresies. And so say all theeues against their correctors and punishers, and would both say and do more against temporall tribunals, Iudges, Iustices, and Iuries, if they had as much licence and libertie in those matters, as men haue now in religion.

All good Christians rest upon the determination of a generall Councell.

All hereticks make exceptions against the Councels that cõdemne them.

CARTVV. 15. [31. Reioyced upon the consolation.] We accuse you indeed of Idolatry, and of horrible Apostacie from Christ and his word. Whereof that you will admit no other Iudges then your selues, as the practise of your Late Tridentine Councell, utterly refusing us any audience, vnlesse wee would first recant, doth manifestly declare: let all the world iudge, whether you or wee are liker the Theeues you speake of, considering that you will admit nothing but that which the Pope (as it were Barguius your master thiefe) doth allow of.

Verse 39 And there rose a dissention, so that they departed one from another, and that Barnabas indeed taking Marke, sailed to Cypres.

RHEM. 14 [39 Dissension.] Such occasions of differences fall out euen among the perfect men often, without any great offence. And this their departing fell out to the great increase of Christians. And therefore it is very ridiculously applied to excuse the disagreeing of the heretickes among themselues in the principall points of religion, namely the Sacrament.

CARTVV. 14. [39 Dissention.] Your selues are ridiculous, that see not that if such a hote falling out, could be betweene two such excellent vessels about a matter of no other importance; there may be much more among those (which are so farre inferiour) differing in greater matters. And although we differ in a principall point of the Sacrament, yet differ we not in the fundamentall doctrines of our saluation. In which manner of difference of ours, although wee haue not examples in the Apostles, which could not possibly erre in doctrine: yet (which is for us sufficient) wee haue this common with the Churches of Christ, amongst whom there is disagreement, even in principall points of religion, as was this: whether the Law of Moses was to bee obserued or no. But wee will trauaile no further in this point, seeing all our defence therein, should be more to your aduantage then ours: which for one difference amongst us haue ten, wherein you vary with your selues, as hath beene partly obserued.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 11 (And these were more noble then they that are at Thessalonica, who receiued the word with all greedinesse, daily | searching the Scriptures, if these things were so.

RHEM. 3. [11 Searching the Scriptures.] The Heretickes vse this place to proue that the hearers must trie and iudge by the Scriptures, whether their teachers and preachers doctrine be true, and so reiect that that they find not in the Scriptures, as though here the sheepe were made iudges of their Pastours, the people of the Priests, and men and women of all sorts, euen of S. Pauls doctrine it selfe: which were the most foolish disorder in the world. And they did not therefore read the Scriptures of the old Testament (for none of the new were yet extant commonly) to dispute with the Apostle, or to trie and iudge of his doctrine, or whether they should beleeue him or no: for they were bound to beleeue him and obey his word, whether he alleaged Scriptures or no, and whether they could read or vnderstand the Scriptures or no, but it was a great comfort and confirmation for the Iewes that had the Scriptures, to find euen as S. Paul said, that Christ was God, crucified, risen, and ascended to heauen: which by his preaching and expounding they vnderstood, and neuer before, though they read them, and heard them read euery Sabboth. As it is a great comfort to a Catholike man, to heare the Scriptures declared and alleaged most euidently for the Churches truth against Heretickes, in Sermons or otherwise. And it doth the Catholikes good and much confirmeth them, to vew diligently the places alleaged by the Catholike preachers. Yet they must not be iudges for all that, ouer their own Pastours, whom Christ commandeth them to heare and obey, and by whom they heare the true sense of Scriptures.

The people may not indge of the sence of the scriptures.

The comfort of Christian men by hearing or reading the scriptures.

GARTVV. 3. [11. Searching the Scriptures.] The Iesuits haue no eyes to see, that these noble men of Thessalonica were not yet come so farre, as to know the Apostles prerogatiue, of not being within the reach of any error, in that which he taught. For beeing not yet setled in the faith of Christ, Pauls Master, it was no marvaile though they knew not the prerogatiue of his Embassage. And therefore euen as they (for the case wherein they apparantly stood towards Paul) did well to try his doctrine: so we for the case wherein our Ministers stand (truely and verily) towards vs; turne and search the word, whether the strings of their allegations be tuned with the keyes of the holy Scripture. For conceiving of them truely, as the Thessalonians did of Paul untruly; that they haue no such continuall and inseparable assistance of the holy Ghost, but that they may sometimes decline, either vpon the right or left hand: we do them no wrong to touch their gold at the touchstone of the word. And to take the end which you also truely assigne, of their searching for further comfort and confirmation, do you not perceiue, how that it alone, proving the Scriptures to haue been in the hands, not of the ministers onely, but also of the Laitie, avoweth our iudgement that the Scriptures ought to bee read of the people, and condemneth yours who hold the same inconvenient.

Verse 22 But Paul standing in the middes of Areopagus, said: Yee men of Athens, in all things I perceiue you as it were | superstitious.

RHEM. 4. [22 Superstitious] S. Paul calleth not them superstitious for adoring the true and onely God with much deuotion or many ceremonies or in comely prescribed order, or for doing due reuerence to holy Sacraments, to Saints and their memories, Images, or Monuments: or for keeping the prescribed Lawes, dayes and fasts of the Church, or for fulfilling vowes made to God, or for blessing with the signe of the Crosse, or for capping or kneeling at the name of IESVS, or for religiously vsing creatures sanctified in the same name, or any other Christian obseruation, for which our New masters condemne the Catholike people of Superstition: themselues wholy voide of that vice by all wise mens iudgement because they haue in manner taken away all religion, and are become Epicureians and Atheists, who are neuer troubled with superstitions, because it is a vice consisting in excesse of worship or religion, whereof they are void. But the Apostle calleth them superstitious for worshipping the Idols and goddes of the Heathen, and *for the feare that they had, lest they should leaue out any God that was vnknown to them, for thus their Altar was inscribed: Diis Asiæ, Europæ & Libiæ Deo ignoto & peregrino, that is. To the gods of Asia, Europe, and Libia: to the vnknowen and strange God. This superstition (saith S. Augustine) is wholy taken away from the Church by Christs incarnation, and by the Apostles preaching, & by the Martyrs holy life and death. Neither doth the Catholike Church allow this or any other kinde of superstitious obseruation. Onely we must take heed that we beleeue not her Aduersaries definition of superstition, for they would imply therein all true religion.

The Protestants call deuotion superstition.

The Apostle speaketh of the Heathens superstition.

The Catholike Church alloweth no superstition.

CARTVV. 4. [22. Superstitious.] You are as right brethren of the superstitious Athenians, as if one father the Diuell, and one mother Ignorance had begotten you. For as the Athenians in a greedinesse of Idolatry, and an vnsatiable thirst of spirituall fornication, having ordained a worship, and builded Altars to all the false Gods they could heare of, were not yet filled, vnlesse they erected up an Altar vnto other gods that they could not attaine the knowledge of: euen so you, rearing vp Churches and Chappels, and other Diuine worship to Paul, Peter, and other knowne Saints of God, content not your selues therewith, but performe the same or like worship to S. George, S. Christopher, S. Sleepers, or rather S. Sluggards, S. Benit, S. Francis, S. Becket, and a number such pettie Saints, whereof some of them (doubtlesse) never were, other were wicked, and some doubtfull whether they were good or no. And as the Athenians set up an Altar to the vnknown god, in feare lest any being passed by, should wrecke his anger vpon them: so you, lest there should be any angry Saint, which should reuenge his contempt vpon you, haue ordained Alhallowes, or all Saints day, wherein by worship of them all, they might might all looke merrily vpon you. Although if they were all Saints, which you worship, as some of them (in all appearance) are diuels: yet hath it been shewed, that therein your religion differeth not from the superstition of the Gentiles. Neither doth Paul in these words reproue them for that they erected Altars vnto wicked men: but that they erected them insatiably to so many, pinching them for their excesse of superstition aboue other Idolaters, which for their learning and knowledge of the creation, should haue approched neerer to the glorifying of God, then they. Augustine hath not the words you alledge, but he sheweth that the Iewes were forced to giue a great testimony to the Christians. For that according to the old Scriptures (whereof they were the keepers) they brake downe Images. And thereunto alledgeth the commandement, Thou shalt make no image nor likenesse of any thing. &c. whereof it is plaine, that when you make so many images in matter of religion, and worship of God, you take that witnesse of the truth from the Gospell, and cause the Iewes through your Idolatry to speake euill of the Churches holy faith concerning the Trinitie.

Verse. 29 Being therefore of Gods kinde, we may not suppose the Diuinitie to be like vnto gold, or siluer, or stone, the graving of Art, and deuise of man.

RHEM. 5. [29 The Diuinitie to be like.] Nothing can be made by mans hand of what forme or sort so euer, that is like to Gods essence, or to the forme or shape of his God-head or Diuinitie, therefore howsoeuer the heathens did paint or graue their Idols, they were nothing like to God. And this also is impertinently alleadged by Hereticks against the Churches images: Which are not made, either to be adored with godly honour, or to be any resemblance of the Diuinitie, or any of the three persons in the God-head, but onely in Christ as he was in forme of man who in that respect may be truely expressed, as other men by their purtraits, and of the holy Ghost, not as he is in himselfe, but as he appeared in firy tongues or in the similitude of a Doue, or such like. And so to paint or graue any of the three persons as they appeared visibly & corporally, is no more inconuenient or vnlawfulthen it was vndecent for them to appeare in such formes. And therefore to paint or portraite the Father also being the first person, as he hath shewed himselfe in vision to any of the Prophets of the old or new Testament (namely to Daniell as an olde man) or the three Angels representing the three Persons to Abraham, or the one Angell that wrastling with Iacob bare our Lords Person, no such thing is any where forbidden, but is very agreeable to the peoples instruction. In which sort the Angels were commonly pourtered (and namely the Cherubins ouer the Propitiatorie) as they be now in the Church, not in their naturall forme, but with corporall wings (as the Seraphins appeared to Esay the Prophet) to expresse their qualitie and office of being Gods Angels, that is, Messengers, and God the Father with the world in his hand to signifie his creation and gouernment of the same, and such like: Whereof the people being well instructed may take much good and no harme in the world, being now through their faith in Christ farre from all fond imagination of the false gods of the Pagans. And therefore S. Gregorie saith of the Churches Images, That which scripture or writing doth to the readers, the same doth the picture to the simple that looke thereupon, for in it euen the ignorant see what they ought to follow, in it they do read, that know no letters. Where he calleth it a matter of antiquity and very conuenient, that in holy places Images were painted to the peoples instruction, so they be taught that they may not be adored with diuine honour, and hee in the same place sharply rebuketh Serenus the Bishop of of Massilia, that of indiscrete zeale he would take away Images, rather then teach the people how to vse them.

How there may be images or resemblances of the three persons in the Trinity, and of Angels.

Images are for the peoples instruction.

CARTVV. 5. [29. The Diuinitie to be like.] The Popish Image-mongring is no lesse detestable, then the Heathens. And so much more horrible then theirs, as the heathen conceiving some shape of God, were more excuseable in their indevour to expresse it: whereas the Papists denying it in words, in their deeds of this Image-makiug, are much more inexcusable. Their worship also of the Image, is by so much grosser and filthier then the heathens: as the heathen esteeming their Images to be the very representation of the Diuinitie, are more to be borne with, for giving honour unto it, then the Papists, which now (for shift of answer) denying that they are Images of the Diuinity, yet notwithstanding giue unto them the honour that they doe. Which honour of religious kneeling before them, offering up candles unto them, sensing them, and burning incense unto them, &c. albeit it is the worship that in times past under the Law, was given unto God himselfe, and hath (for the religious kneeling) been proved (vpon Math. 4. 11.) to be Diuine honour: yet taking your own fond distinction, we demand of you, what further honour you could giue it, if it were possible to bee the Image of God himselfe. Therefore that you both call them the Images of God the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost; that you also giue them more worship, then to the Images of any Angell, Saint, or other creature: it argueth plainly, that you propound them unto the people, as the very image and portraiture of the persons in Trinitie: Wherein you haue yet further ensnared your selues, in that indiscreetly following some antiquitie, you affirme that the three persons in Trinitie were represented by three Angels: not onely contrary to your owne saying, which grant that there can be made no image or resemblance of any person in Trinitie, but very un-divine-like, who by such representation ground not onely a distinction, but also a division and separation of the persons. Not to speake further of the discourse of that place, wherein one of those three onely hath the title of Iehouah: the other two being expresly noted to be created Angels. And if you take them not as the Images of the persons in Trinity, but as images of those things wherein they appeared, as of Angels, the Doue, and the Tongues: then are you notwithstanding both sottish and filthy Idolaters. Sottish, for that you giue as much honour to the Image of a Doue, and Tongue, as of an Angell: Filthy, for that you giue so great honour to the Image of such vile and base things, as are Doues & tongues, which is not due vnto the things themselues whereof they are Images: no not unto the graces and gifts of Gods spirit, which they represented; vnlesse you thinke, that you must worship and fall downe before the gift of humilitie, or abilitie to speake the Greek or Hebrue tongue in whomsoever you finde them. And this is one cause of your grosse error in this poynt, if you regard your owne Lee, that you consider not that the Doue and the tongues tongues were representations, not of the person, but of the gifts of the holy Ghost. And if it be so agreeable to the peoples instruction, to haue the pictures of these in their Churches: it is much more agreeable, that they haue a faire white Pidgeon indeed, to be fed and set in such a place of the Church, as all the people may looke upon it, considering that no Art of man in painting or graving, is able to attaine the perfection of nature therein. And therefore there cannot be so liuely a representation of humilitie, in the picture of a Doue, as in the Doue it selfe. Look Leo Serm. 1. de Pentecost.

Further if there were any Image or representation of the holy Ghost in his giftes to be made in the Church: it ought to be rather in water, which he hath commanded to be vsed as a sacrament to set forth the vertue & power of his spirit, then in a doue, whereof he hath giuen no such commandement. And that God the father. Daniell 7.22, shewed himselfe to Daniell, as an old man; is a meere falshood, both for falsification of the words, and of the meaning of the prophet: of the words, first because there is no mention made of a man: secondly for that the prophet doth not say, that the auncient in tyme did shew himselfe vnto him, but saith that the fourth beast should vex the Church cruelly vntill the auncient in time should come; which was many hundreth yeares after Daniels death: for the sense, for that his meaning is not that he would exhibite himselfe in any visible shape, but onely that he would declare himselfe the deliuerer of his Church; which effect of his presence, the scripture often calleth the comming of God. This might haue been more probably gathered, vpon another verse in that chapter, howbeit neither doth Daniel there affirme, that he saw the ancient of dayes: But sheweth that he saw the thrones of the Tyrants, of the fourth beast thrown down, at what time the auncient in dayes sat and iudged his people: describing the maiestie of the Iudge by pleasant and elegant metaphors drawn from his singuler, exact, and diuine knowledge of the word, and not from any sight or reuelation by vision; like as Dauid also did. Neither can the Iesuites shew out of all the old Testament, that any of the persons (the Sonne of God excepted) whose appearance in forme of man, then did foreshew and setforth his manifestation in flesh in the full and proper times:) was euer (by vision) represented in any forme or shape of creature: yea it is vnlawfull once to imagine a figure of any of the persons: And to paint God the father in forme of an old man, more then the Sonne and holy Ghost: what els can it instruct the people in, but in Arianisme: that is, that he was before the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, which are as old and ancient in yeares as the father, that is to say eternall. Neither do the Iesuites see, that by this falsifying of the scripture, they contrarie themselues, as they do the truth: for likening the Father vnto an olde man, they make an euident representation of the person, for so much as thereby, they vnderstand not the eternitie of the Father, which is common vnto him with the other two persons: but note out by his age, something wherein he differeth from the Sonne and the holy Ghost, which is properly the person: as that wherein he is incommunicable. Wherefore Augustines sentence hath here place, that no such should be once conceiued, much lesse painted of the Father: whereby he might be thought to haue, either right or left side. Touching our Sauiour Christ, we will not here make any long dispute, whether considered in the nature of his body, which he tooke of the holy Virgin, he may be painted or grauen. But this we we dare say, first for as much as the making of it, regardeth either the furtherance of the feare of God and of his worship, or some carnall contentment of mens myndes: the first being forbidden by the law, that forbiddeth all worship of God by images; the other of our delight and pleasure is too base and contemptible a thing, for the fulfilling wherof the Image of our Sauiour Christ (if any were lawfull) should be abused. Secondly hauing regard to the great vncertentie of his stature, of his countenance, & of the rest of the frame and fashion either of his whole body iointly, or of the members, thereof seuerally, it is very incounenient, that it should be either painted, or grauen, wherein first of all, let it be obserued that where the scripture sometimes describeth, the lineaments, or fauour of their bodies, which are of note and marke: as of Iacob, of Moses, and Dauid: yet it carefully auoideth to make any manner of mention of the stature or fauour, either of the whole bodie, or of any member of the body of our Sauiour Christ, the notableſt person among all the Sonnes of men. And namely Luke notwithstanding that he vndertaketh to write an exact storie of him, vnder which other historiographers are accustomed, not to passe by the grace and comelines of the bodie: yet hath he not (that we remember) one word sounding that way whereby it is apparant, that the holy Ghost was so far from placing great instruction, in the picture of Christ: that by this concealment, he would of purpose wring out all pensiles, and grauing tooles out of the hands of those painters, and grauers, which would attempt the counterfeit of his body. This is yet more euident, in that after Luke (as a cunning Apelles) had in most excellent colours, and most artificiall draughtes, painted out all that our Sauiour Christ, that was with profit to be looked vpon: there arose certen Cobblers, which as if they would haue made supply of that which Luke had forgotten, haue with the blunt penne of their owne brayne, written how many spannes high he was, what was his countenance what the colour of the heare, of head and beard, what was the frame and fashion of his eyes and eares, with other partes of his body, which saucines and malapert bouldnes of the Sowe, teaching the Elephant: the Lord hath sufficiently branded by iarres, as it were gruntinges and gronings of one of them, with an other. But the licence of the Painters and Grauers, is here more monstrous: whose fond, and sometimes drunken phansie must be the rule, of the whole frame and fashion of our Sauiour Christ. Wherof also such diuersities of Christs body low in one Church & high in another, of swarth colour in one place, of fairer in another, here red headed, there black, with a hundred more, rise to the nourishing of sundry monsters: For all these diversities being Canonized, by the Church rulers that set them up: the Iewes are thus occasioned to continue in their errour that Christ is not yet come: The Atheists to make a scorne of the truth of the Gospell, that is grounded upon Christs humanity: the weake, to fall into doubt whether there bee any truth in that matter, whereof there are as many differences, as there are heads either to deuise, or hands to make these pictures. Beside the dishonour that redoundeth unto our Saviour Christ, whose body is by this meanes, made like a peece of waxe, fit to receiue euery print and marke that Painter or Graver shall transforme it into. And of this iudgement Epiphanius appeareth to have beene of, who tooke away an image of Christ that was hanged up in a Church, as that which in ſtead of increaſing a reverent feare in Chriſtians, was like to ingender a ſuperſtitious contempt in their hearts, through the difference of the liuely and living countenance of our Sauiour Chriſt, with the dead and doleſull looke that the Painters and Gravers ſet him in.

Touching your reaſon of portraying Angels, not in their naturall forme, but in corporall ſhapes: When you can ſhew the commandement of God for your pictures of the Trinitie, which wee can for theirs, wee will allow it ſome weight. Albeit it is your ignorance, that you herein beare no more reverence unto the nature of God, then unto the Angels nature: and that you dare uſe the ſame boldneſſe of painting the body of Chriſt, which with his ſoule is inſeparably united in one perſon with the Sonne of God, which you uſe in painting of an Angels body, that either was a reſemblance of a body, rather then a body; or elſe if it were a true body, was taken up but for a ſhort time of ſome ſpeciall meſſage, to be laid down againe as ſoone as the ſame was accompliſhed. Neither ſhew you any reaſon, why the people of God now are better fenced againſt the Idolatry of Pagans then were his people under the Law, which often fell from the true feare of God, unto the ſuperſtition of the Pagans, conſidering that the Apoſtle upon their ſliding thereunto, exhorteth us to a carefull watch and ward againſt the ſame falling away. But if they haue ſome helps and ſtaies now, that they had not then; yet to enioy them, they muſt of neceſſitie come out of your Babylon, where reading in all places, and Preaching in the moſt, being wrung from them, they are left naked to all the temptations and aſſaults of the enemy that way. For ſo you haue taken away their buckler of faith, wherewith through a reſt in God alone, as all-ſufficient for them, they ſhould haue warded and latched the enemies ſtrokes: and haue further bereaued them of their ſword, wherewith (by the good inſtructions which the Law furniſheth them of) they ſhould haue beene able, to haue ſtricken him againe.

As for the Popes iudgement, of eſteeming them Lay mens bookes, wee make no account of it: But we give credite to the Prophets, who tell us plainly that a molten image, and conſequently graven or painted, is a lying Doctor: and that an image of wood, and therefore of ſtone, gold, &c. is the inſtruction of vanity. Wee hearken alſo rather to the Councell, which is not pleaſed that pictures ſhould bee in the Church, leſt that which is ſerued and worſhipped ſhould be painted in walles: Likewiſe to Auguſtine, who affirmeth, that they deſerue to erre which ſeek Chriſt and his Apoſtles, not in the ſacred bookes, but in painted walles. And in a word, to a great harmony of ancient Writers, who in diuers notes ſing all one ſong of baniſhment of images from the Church.

S. Dionyſius Areopagita is all for the Catholiques.

RHEM. 6. [34 Dionyſius Areopagita.] This is that famous Denys that firſt conuerted France, & wrote thoſe notable and diuine works De Eccleſiaſtica & cæleſti hierarchia, de diuinis nominibus, and others, in which he confirmeth and proueth plainely almoſt all things that the Church now vſeth in the miniſtration of the holy Saerament, and affirmeth that he learned them of the Apoſtles, giuing alſo teſtimony for the Catholike faith in moſt things now controuerſed, ſo plainely, that our aduerſaries haue no ſhift but to deny this Denys to haue been the author of them: fayning that they be an others of later age. Which is an old ſleight of Heretickes, but moſt proper to theſe of all others. Who ſeeing all antiquitie againſt them are forced to be more bold or rather impudent then others in that point.

CARTVV. 6. [34 Dionyſius Areopagita.] What likelihood there is, that the workes of Dionyſius Pauls ſcholer, ſhould be paſſed by of Euſebius, which both ſpeaketh of him, and noteth the bookes of every one, as he was more famous and renoumed aboue the reſt: let thoſe iudge, which haue any iudgement. Let them alſo iudge what probabilitie there is, that theſe were either Dyoniſius workes, or written ſome hundreth yeares after his death: that is neuer alledged by any of the ancient fathers, Greek or Latin, who in controuerſies of the Trinitie eſpecially, and of the two natures of Chriſt, ſought farre and neere, for the teſtimonies of men of mark, for their learning and godlines, wherfore take him hardly vnto you, firſt a baſtard, then as one borne out of time, that is after chaſter and purer tymes. Laſt of all, a dreamer, which ſaw in the ſleepe of his fooliſh curioſitie, that which other auncient fathers, with all their waking and painfull labours, could neuer attaine unto. For further anſwer look before, upon the Act. 6. 3. Albeit there be diuers pointes of controuerſie between vs, where you would gladlie haue Dyoniſius long tongue ſomwhat ſhorter: as in the adminiſtration of the ſacrament, for he alloweth not your ſeruice in a ſtrange tong, the ſcriptures being read in a tongue ſo vnderſtood of the cõmunicants, as they could diſcerne of the doctrines and examples there recknoned vp, as they were thereby diſpoſed to taſt of the holy things. Neither alloweth he of your tranſubſtantion, which diſtinguiſheth between the ſubſtantiall ſignes: and Chriſt ſignified by them: ſaying that by thoſe reuerent ſignes and ſimboles, Chriſt is ſignified and the faithfull made partakers of him. He condemneth alſo your ſacriledge of renting one kind, from another: nor alloweth of your priuate maſſe.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe 3 BVT he ſaid, in what then were you baptized? who ſaid, ‡In Iohns Baptiſme.

RHEM.

RHEM. 1. [3 In Iohns baptisme.] Iohns baptisme not sufficient.

CART VV. 1. [3 In Iohns baptisme.] Luke meaning to referre the gifts of the Holy Ghost, which the twelue Disciples at Ephesus were to receiue by putting on of hands, unto the performance of the truth of the promise, figured by baptisme, and so to ioyne the signe with the thing signified: in the fourth verse sheweth (in Pauls words) how Iohn preached that his Disciples should beleeue in Iesus Christ that came after him. After in the sixth verse he sheweth that those Disciples of Iohn, and not (as you suppose) the twelue Disciples of Ephesus, having heard Iohns preaching, and not (as you suppose) Pauls, were baptised into the name of the Lord Iesus. Which interpretation as it floweth, and hath plaine proofe of the two coniunctions, that haue relation one to another, and cannot without violence bee severed: So, of all other it stoppeth the mouth of the Anabaptists, taking all colour of argument from them: whilst thereby it appeareth, that they received the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, not by any second Baptisme which Paul ministred, but onely by the laying on of hands. And if therefore the Baptisme of Iohn bee insufficient, because it is said, they had not received the Holy Ghost which were baptised by him: then it followeth that the Baptisme which Philip the Evangelist ministred at Samaria, is also insufficient, considering that notwithstanding it is expressly said, that the baptised by him were baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus: yet is it also as expressly said, that the Holy Ghost was not come upon them, untill such time as by the comming of Peter and Iohn, they receiued him by their laying on of hands. Wherefore if in that place of the Acts, by the Holy Ghost bee meant the extraordinarie gifts of the Holy Ghost, and not the gift of sanctification: it must follow, that there is the same understanding heere. Which is manifestly also declared in the sixth verse, where the gifts of the tongues and prophecy are expresly mentioned, and none other. And if Iohns baptisme be insufficient, the Baptisme which our Saviour Christ received at his hand, is also insufficient; in whole Baptisme all ours being sanctified, it followeth that our Baptisme is much more insufficient. μετ, Ν

The contrary doth appeare manifestly; for both Lukes words here used, note an open and a cleere confession, and declaration of them: such as the Church from time to time hath obserued, when men are received first to the profession of the Gospell from some superstition, wherein unto that time they had beene misled. CART VV. 6. [24 Temples of Diana.] They use the word shrine to note a difference betweene the places where men met for the seruice of God, and wherein these Puppets were set. ANNOTATIONS.

Touching of reliques, and miracles done by the ſame. Act. 5. 15.

RHEM. 8. [12 Napkins.] The napkins that had touched S. Pauls body, wrought miracles, and it was no ſuperſtition to attribute that vertue to them which God gaue to them indeed, nor to ſeeke to touch them for health, was any diſhonour to God, but it much proued Chriſts Religion to be true and him to be the onely God, whoſe ſeruants, yea whoſe ſeruants * ſhade and napkins could doe ſuch wonders, as S. Chryſoſtome (to. 5. cont. Gentiles, quod Chriſtus ſit Deus, in vit. Babilæ) ſheweth in a whole booke to that purpoſe, againſt the Pagans, prouing hereby and by the like vertue of other Saincts & their relikes, that Chriſt their Lord & Maſter is God, for it is all one concerning the bodies of Saints, reliques, garments, ſtaues books, or any thing that belonged to them, all which may and haue done, and yet do (when it is neceſſary to our edification) the like wonders to Gods great honor: not onely in their life time, but after their death much more, for S. Pauls napkins had as great force when hee was dead, as when he liued, and ſo much more, 'as his grace and dignitie with God is greater then before. Which S. Chryſoſtome in the place alleaged proueth at large by the ſhrine of S. Babylas the Martyr: and to thinke the contrarie, is the Hereſie of Vigilantius, condemned ſo long ſince as S. Hieromes time, and by him refuted aboundantly.

CARTVV. 8. [12. Napkins.] That which is before anſwered (vpon Act. 5. 15.) of the ſhadow of Peter, ſerueth for the Napkins of Paul. Touching Ierom againſt Vigilantius, you may know that Eraſmus requireth fewer reproches, and better arguments againſt him. Although if Ierom helpeth you ſo much in affirming that by reliques miracles were done, yet he hindereth you as much, in ſaying in the ſame Epiſtle, that he hath a mad head which adoreth any Martyr, much more if he adore his reliques. If you hold Ierom in the one, hold him likewiſe in the other.

Verſe 15 But the wicked ſpirit anſwering, ſaid to them, IESVS I know, and Paul I know: but you, what are yee?

The name or preſence, or reliques of Saints and holy men, confound the Diuell. In vit. Hilarionis. Chryſ. loco citato.

RHEM. 9. [15 Paul I know.] Both the ſaid napkins taken from S. Pauls bodie, and his name alſo were dreadfull and able to expell diuels. Whereby we learne that not onely Chriſts name, which is the principall, but his ſeruants names alſo inuocated vpon the poſſeſſed, haue power ouer diuels: which is a maruellous honour to Saincts, and nothing diminiſheth the glory of Chriſt, but exceedingly increaſeth the ſame, not onely himſelfe but his ſeruants alſo being able to do ſuch things, and to be ſtronger then any deuill in hell. So we read in S. Hierome that many did inuocate the name of S. Hilarion vpon the poſſeſſed, and the diuels ſtraight departed, ſo did the diuell know * S. Babylas and other Saincts euen after they were dead, when they could not ſpeak for the preſence of their reliques, and when they were tormented and expelled by them, whereof all antiquitie is full of teſtimonies: But our Heretikes Luther and Caluin and their ſchollers attempting to caſt out deuils, ſped much like as theſe good fellowes did.

CARTVV. 9. [15. Paul I know.] You are very lewd, ſo impudently to falſifie the Scriptures, in affirming that Pauls and the Saints names, were invocated vpon the poſſeſſed: whereas it is manifeſt, that theſe Exorciſts called vpon the name of Ieſus ouer the poſſeſſed, or in their behalfe. And where there were diuers Ieſuſes, for diſtinction ſake they added, whom Paul preacheth. And if this bare naming of Paul, be to inuocate the name of Paul: you may as well ſay, that they invocated the name of Iudas, who preached Ieſus as did Paul. Beſide another plaine dotage in alledging that example, to proue the inuocating of the names of Saints, wherein the invocation (if any were) auailed not to the caſting out of the Diuell. The like falſhood you haue vſed in Ierom, who maketh no manner of mention of invocating Hilarions name vpon the poſſeſſed. He ſheweth that there was a great contention between thoſe of Paleſtina, and Cyprus: the one affirming that they had his body, & another his ſoule. Which doting opinion (manifeſtly repugning the Scriptures, which teach that the ſoules of the righteous are forthwith carried into heauen, as they haue taken their leaue of the bodies) Ierom ſeemeth to allow of: in ſaying that miracles were done in both places. Now what a fond dottrell this Hilarion was, let all the world iudge of Ieroms owne words. Firſt he gaue away all, fearing Ananias and Saphiras examples: as if they had beene ſlaine, for that they gaue not all away, which therefore onely periſhed, becauſe pretending a gift of the whole price of their field, they reſerued a portion, whereof being demanded, they lied in the preſence of the Church. Another cauſe moving him to wilfull povertie, was, for that otherwiſe he could not be Chriſts diſciple, unleſſe he renounced all. By which reaſon he ſhould as well haue killed himſelfe, as given away his goods: conſidering that the place alledged, requireth as well the life as the goods. Secondly, being ſore oppreſſed with luſt, he ſought the remedie thereof in eating chaffe, in carrying great burdens, in extreame heates and colds. Thirdly, he was ſo cleanly, that hee iudged it ſuperfluous to waſh his clothes. Fourthly, he was ſo full of fooliſh confidence in God, that he eſteemed the ſicke and diſeaſed, to haue need of no other Phyſician then Chriſt, ſo that they gaue that they had to the poore. Fifthly, ſo loath he was to do any good, that when ſome would haue ſtayed him for his miracles in eaſing the ſick and poſſeſſed: he determined and cried out, that he would neuer eate untill they let him goe: and ſo after ſixe dayes faſt, they were content to diſmiſſe him, having more conſcience of killing him, then he had of murdering himſelfe, Sixthly, he had the holy Scriptures in ſo great eſtimation, that he choſe rather to pay his fare unto the ſhipper with his Teſtament then with his Coule.

Eccleſ. 12. Luke 16.

Laſt

Laſt of all (for to reckon up all his follies would be too tedious) to the end to make himſelfe a ſecond Moſes, hee ſware certaine that they ſhould not ſuffer him to lie aboue the ground one minute of an houre after his death, but bury him in paradice, as he was in his ſacke Coat, his Coule, and his Countrey Cloke. Belike the man had ſome conſcience, leſt men ſhould worſhip him and his reliques, if hee had left any behind him. Wherein he is the Ieſuites enemy: vnleſſe peradventure they will ſay, that he gaue ſo ſtreight a charge of hiding his corpes, that men (as their cuſtome is) ſhould more greedily ſeeke vnto it, becauſe there was ſome pretended care to hide it from them. That Chryſoſtom here twice fledged, exceeded in his eſtimation of Babylas, is manifeſt by that he doubteth, whether he may call him a man or no. Alſo, for that he matcheth him with Elias and Iohn Baptiſt, to whom it appeareth that he would haue preferred Babylas, if he had not ſtood in ſome awe of the evill ſpeech of men. And if the Ieſuites grant an exceſſiue ſpeech in this, there is no cauſe why they ſhould deny it in the other that follow. And if it ſeemed good unto him, to uſe his Rhetoricke in deſcribing the man, it is not unlike, but that he would uſe the ſame Rhetoricke in deſcribing his deeds. Albeit, if the Diuels did ſo know him, as is ſaid, yet it proveth not that his name either was, or might be invocated.

Verſe. 19 And many of them that had followed ‖ curious things, brought together their ‖ bookes, and burnt them before all: and counting the prices of them, they found the money to be fiftie thouſand pence.

RHEM. 10. [19 Curious things.] Curious and vnlawful ſciences, as Witchcraft, Necromancie and other meanes of diuination by ſouth-ſaying, figure caſting, interpretation of dreames, or any way not allowed by God and his Church, muſt much more be abhorred of old Chriſtians when theſe ſo lately conuerted were ſo zealous and diligent to leaue them. And by this example all that are newly reconciled to the Church, are taught, the firſt thing they do, to burne their hereticall and naughty bookes.

Superſtitious, hereticall, and all hurtfull bookes muſt be made away.

by reason of the generall concourse of people to the same, the better to deale for their saluation and to spread the Gospell of Christ, yet it is like that they now kept solemnly the Christian Pentecost or Whitsontide, for memorie of the holy Ghost, and that S. Paul went to that Feast of the Christians rather then the other of the Iewes. And Ven. Beda saith here, The Apostle maketh haste to keepe the fiftieth day, that is, of remission and of the holy Ghost. For, that the Christians already kept the eight day, that is, the Sunday or our Lords day, and had altered already the ordinary Sabboth into the same, it is plaine by the Scriptures (1. Cor. 16. 2. Apoc. 1. 10.) and by antiquity. Iustin. Mart. Apolog. 2, *ad Anton. Aug. ep. 118 cap. 1.

CARTVV. 5. [16 Pentecost.] It is but a gesse, and too childish a gesse: First, for that hee keepeth the name of the Iewes feast still: whereas the feast of the seuenth day is called, not by the name of Saboth, which it might well haue, for the proper signification of rest which it betokeneth, but it is termed by the name of the Lords day. Secondly, for that the end of the Apostles hasting to Ierusalem, was to do good vnto the Iewes, assembled at that day from all the quarters of the world whether they were scattered: following therein the wise dispensation and policy of Christ, who picked out the Iewes Pentecost, to send his Spirit vpon the Apostles, to the easier conueyance of the sound of that glorious work, into all the corners and angles of the world? Whereas, if it had bene the Christians Pentecost, he might haue had the same appearance vpon any Sonday which he might haue had vpon the feast of their Pentecost, if then they had any. Last of all, your feare that seemeth to haue thrust you vpon this dotage, least Paul by assisting that feast should yeeld too much to Iudaisme: is vaine. Considering that to support their weakenesse, hee was content to vse euen Circumsion, and other ceremonies, of greater weight then was the obseruation of the Pentecost once in the yeare.

Verse. 29. I know that after my departure there will I rauening wolues enter in among you, not sparing the flocke.

Rauening Wolues are Heretickes of all ages.

RHEM. 6. [26 Rauening wolues.] The gouernors of the Church are foretold of the great danger that should fall to the people by wolues, that is to say, by heretickes, whose cruelty toward the Catholikes is noted by this terme. They bee knowen by the forsaking the vnity of the Church whereof they were before, by going out and drawing many disciples after them, and by their peruerse doctrine. Such wolues came afterward indeed in diuers ages, Arius, Macedonius, Nestorius, Eutyches, Luther, Caluin, great bloodsucking wolues, and wasters of the flocke of Christ.

CARTVV. 6. [29 Rauening Wolues.] How forgote you the Pope, who as the euening Wolfe is not content onely to eate the flesh and drinke the bloud of Gods Saints, except hee also crash their bones asunder: Whom because Luther and Calvin haue so coursed and bitten, as in bleeding hee must bleed to death: this last littor of the Pope cannot abide.

Vers. 35. I haue shewed you all things, that so labouring, you must receiue the weak, and remember the word of our Lord IESVS, because he said. ‡It is a more blessed thing to giue rather then to take.

Christs speeches not written in the Gospell. Great Almesmen blessed.

RHEM. 7. [35 More blessed to giue.] Among many other infinite goodly things and speeches which Christ spake and be not written in the Gospels this sentence is one: which S. Paul heard of some of the Apostles daily conuersant with him, or els learned of Christ himselfe, or of the holy Ghost. And it signifieth, that whereas the world commonlie counteth him happie that receiueth any benefit as almes either temporall or spirituall, yet indeede he that giueth or bestoweth, is more happy. Which if the world did well consider, men would giue almes faster then they do, if it were but for their own benefit.

CARTVV. 7. [35 More blessed to giue.] Wee are well assured that Paul learned it not of any of the Apostles, of whom he learned nothing. But whether hee learned it by reuelation from Christ, or rather by analogie of other sayings of Christ, written in the story of the Gospell, we leaue it indifferent to the Readers iudgement: For teaching both in plaine words and by parables, that in the workes of mercy, wee approach to the perfection of God our heavenly Father, it must needs follow, that to giue is much more blessed then to receiue: as that which is a part of the Lords blessednesse, who dealing out his gifts to all men receiueth nothing of them againe. Whereupon Augustine hath a notable saying: where hee affirmeth, that whatsoever Christ would haue vs read either of his sayings or of his doings, that hee gaue to the foure Euangelists, as to his hands to write.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 9 And he had ‡ foure daughters | virgins that did propheſie.

RHEM. 1. [9 Foure daughters.] As S. Peter had a wife, but vsed her not after his calling, as it is noted els where out of S. Hierome Luke 4. 38. so may it be said of S. Philip being Deacon.

CARTVV. 1. [9. Foure daughters.] The former hath been shewed to bee manifestly false, (vpon Math. 8. 14. & 19. 27. & Luke 4. 38.) therefore the latter, which is grounded of that, must needs goe to the ground, and so this nothing confirmeth your error of merit for the deed done.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 2. [9 Virgins.] S. Luke noteth specially that his daughters were Virgins, meaning (no doubt) doubt) that they were of the ſtate, profeſſion, or purpoſe of perpetuall virginitie not onely that they were young maides vnmarried: and that they were the rather for that endued, with the gift of prophe-ſie, as S. Hierome ſaith, lib. 1. adu. Ion. c. 24. See Oecum. c. 29. in hunc locum.

CARTVV. 2. [9. Virgins.] What cauſe ſoever Ierom and Oecumenius aſſigne, it is evident e-nough that Luke noteth, that Philips daughters were virgins: thereby to ſhew the good gouernment of his houſe, and chaſte education of his children, which God requiring at a Biſhops hands, doth much more require it in him which was an Evangeliſt. For otherwiſe it appeareth, that the Lord beautified Elizabeth the Prieſts wife, with a more ſpeciall gift of propheſie, then ever were theſe virgines. And Hulda, a married woman even under the Law, when theſe gifts were more rare then at this time, was the mouth of God to all that ſought the Lord then. Neither doth Ierom or Oecumenius affirme theſe virgins to haue been vowed virgins. And as for Oecumenius in proving hereby, that men in exerciſing the function of a Deacon, may be partakers of marriage: declareth plainly, that he liked not of the vowed virginitie in maidens, that would not haue it in Deacons. If Ierom ſhould affirme any thing that way, he hath left himſelfe no credit: which to aduance virginitie aboue her due place, hath thrown marriage to hell it ſelfe: affirming it to be no gift of God comming from heaven, directly contrary to the Apoſtle, which ſaith that euery one hath a proper gift of God, one ſo, and another ſo: affirming further, that the married are not fit to wait for the ineritance that withereth not, that they cannot gird up the loynes of their minde, bee ſober, and a holy royall Prieſthood: all which unſauoury geare he letteth fall in the place by you alledged.

RHEM. 3. [24 Keeping the Law.] All the obſeruation of the Law were now in themſelues dead and vnprofitable, yet till further propagation of the Goſpell, they were not damnable to the kee-pers, nor offenſiue to God, but might be obſerued even of the Chriſtian Iewes, and for feare of ſcan-dalizing the weake of that nation, newly conuerted or prone to receiue the faith, the Apoſtles by Gods ſuggeſtion did thinke it good to obſerue them as occaſion requited.

Verſe 17. And now what tarrieſt thou? Riſe up, and be baptiſed, and ‡ waſh away thy ſins, invocating his name RHEM. 1. [17 Waſh away thy ſinnes.] The Sacrament of Baptiſme doth it ſelfe waſh away ſinnes as here is plaine, and therefore doth not onely ſignifie (as the Heretickes affirme) that our ſinnes be forgiuen before, or otherwiſe by faith onely remitted. Whereby the Churches doctrine is proued to be fully agreeable to the Scriptures, that the Sacraments giue grace ex opere operato, that is, by the force and vertue of the worke and word, done and ſayd in the Sacrament.

CARTVV 1. [17 Waſh away thy ſinnes.] As if it were not more evident, then needeth any proſe: that the ſacraments haue thoſe things aſcribed vnto them, which are properlie belonging vnto the thing they ſignifie and ſea'e vp, as when it is ſaid, the three branches, are three daies, the ſeuen kine, are ſeuen yeares, the rocke, is Chriſt. And it is euident out of this ſtory, that Paul had remiſſion of his ſinnes before he was baptized, for otherwiſe how could ſuch a fierce wolfe as he was, humble himſelfe to all manner of obedience of God, as if he were a lamb? How coulde he alſo pray acceptably, vnleſſe his ſinnes were forgiuen him? And the Apoſtle himſelfe, noting his calling to the Apoſtleſhip, as an vndouted effect of Gods mercy: declareth that at the very inſtant of his calling, he had obtayned remiſſion of his ſinnes, much more before Ananias came to baptize him; which was three dayes, after his ſolemne ordination to the Apoſtleſhip.

Ver. 3 THen Paul ſaid to him, ‡ God ſhall ſtrike thee, thou whited wall. And thou ſitting iudgeſt me according to the law, and contrary to Law doſt thou com-mand me to be ſmitten.

RHEM. 1. [3. God ſhall ſtrike thee.] He ſaid not this through perturbation of minde, or of a paſſion, but by way of propheſie, that this figuratiue high prieſthood then trimmed like a whited wall, was to be deſtroyed, whereas now the the true Prieſthood of Chriſt was come. Beda in hunc locum.

CARTVV. 1. [3. God ſhall ſtrike thee.] He ſpeaketh not here againſt the prieſthood, but a-gainſt the hypocriſie of the Prieſt, which pretending by the ſeat of iudgement to doe rightly and or-derly, faulted againſt both right and order, in cauſing him to be ſmitten. Verse 11 And the night following our Lord ſtanding by him, ſaid, Be conſtant: for as thou haſt teſtified of mee in Ieruſalem, ſo ‡ muſt thou teſtifie at Rome alſo.

RHEM. 2. [11. Muſt thou teſtifie.] Though God who could not lie, had promiſed Paul that he ſhould goe to Rome: yet the Apoſtle omitted not humane meanes to defend himſelfe from his enemies, and otherwiſe. Neither ſaid he as the Heretickes called Predeſtinates, Let them doe what they will, they cannot hurt me, for I am predeſtinate to goe to Rome. See his doings and ſayings to ſaue himſelfe in the chapter following.

Alſo the bleſſed Apoſtle when it was ſayd to him. Doeſt thou aſſaile the high Prieſt ſo with ill words? ſpake not any thing contumeliouſly againſt the Prieſt, whereas he might haue put forth himſelfe ſtoutly againſt them which hath both crucified our Lord, and which had now alſo loſt their God and Chriſt, Temple and Prieſthood, but though in falſe and ſpoiled Prieſts, yet conſidering the very bare ſhadow of the name of Prieſts, he ſaid, I knew not brethren that he was high Prieſt.* By which words of the Apoſtle, either it may be thought he knew not indeed that he was in that function, becauſe he had not been of long time in thoſe parts: or els that he ſo ſaid in reſpect of abrogation of the high Prieſthood of the Iewes, whereby he knew this man not to be truely any prieſt, as alſo becauſe at this time they came not orderly to it by ſucceſſion of Aaron and Law of Moyſes, but by the Roman Emperours fauour, *as is ſaid before though (as it is lawfull in ſuch a caſe) the leſſe to iritate them, he frameth his ſpeach ſo as they might not take occaſion of further accuſation againſt him.

Verſe 8 For the Saduces ſay, there is no reſurrection, nor Angell, nor Spirit: but Phariſees confeſſe both.

Mach. lib. 2. cap. 12. 43. The Sadducees (as it ſeemed) denyed prayer for the dead.

RHEM. 4. [8 The Sadduces.] This was the worſt Hereſie among the Iewes, denying that there bee any Angels or ſpirits, the Reſurrection alſo of the bodies: and conſequently (as it may very well be gathered by the booke of the Machabees) they denied prayer for the dead: for to offer or pray for the dead and to thinke rightly and Religiouſly of the Reſurrection are made there ſequels one of another, Of this ſect of Sadduces was (as Euſebius writeth li. 2. c. 22. Ec. hiſt.) this Ananias the High Prieſt, that cauſed Paul to be ſmitten for their Prieſthood had now no more the protection of God to preſerue it in truth and right iudgement, the Chriſtian Prieſthood being then eſtabliſhed.

CARTVV. 4. [8. The Saduces.] If you had learned, that of that which is falſe, a truth may be concluded: you would haue beene aſhamed to haue vſed the error of the Saduces, in denying that there is any ſoule, to preiudice the truth of not praying for the dead. For that the world was not made, is manifeſtly falſe: yet the concluſion, therefore the Angels made it not, is both truly and Logically brought in. Likewiſe, that the ſoules were without beginning, is falſe: but that which is inferred, that therefore they be without ending, is very true. It is therefore too childiſh an argument, to reaſon as you doe: the Saduces error was foule in denying there were ſoules: Ergo, they erred in taking away prayer for the dead. Wherefore the booke of Machabees, which (by your confeſſion) maketh each of them the ſequel one of another: diſputeth very bluntly. Not to ſpeake of the light account of that booke, both by reaſon of commending a man that killed himſelfe, and craving pardon of his reader, which is not fitting to the holy Ghoſt. Not to ſpeake of the authoritie of Cyprian, Auguſtine, and others; nor to ſpeake of the Greeke there ſo corrupted, as no good ſence, neither one nor other, good or bad, can be gotten out of it. Albeit if we tendred the credit of that booke, we might anſwer that it doth onely commend the good cogitation they had of the hope of the reſurrection, not commending the meanes whereby the ſame was declared: whether the author had any meaning to commend the ſacrificing or no, we know this, that the ſame hath not onely no ground of the Law, which never commanded any ſacrifice for the dead, but is alſo directly contrary vnto the Law, which requireth that all Sacrifice ſhould bee offered with ioy. Whereupon the Prophet expreſly affirmeth, that the ſacrifice which is for the dead, ſhall not come into the houſe of the Lord.

RHEM. 5. [12 Vowed themſelues.] Such vowes, othes, or execrations as this, bind no man before before God, yea they must in no wise be obserued. It is a great offence either to vow voluntarily, or to take any such thing vpon a man for feare or by commandement. For example, if thou haue rashly by promise, vow, or oath appointed to be reuenged vpon any man, thou bindest not thy selfe thereby, neither must thou keep thy promise. If thou be put to an oath to accuse Catholikes for serving God as they ought to doe, or to vtter any innocent man to Gods enemies and his, thou oughtest first to refuse such vnlawfull oathes: but if thou haue not constancy and courage so to doe, yet know thou that such oaths binde not at all in conscience and law of God, but may and must bee broken vnder paine of damnation. For to make or take such vowes or oaths is one sinne, and to keepe them is another far greater: as when Herod to keep his oath killed Iohn Baptist. And such vowes or oaths to God as these are vnlawfull, and must be broken; and not the vowes of Chastity and Religion, as our new ministers teach by their words and workes. Vnlawfull oathes and vowes must not be kept. Mat.14.9.

CHAP. XXVII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Vers. 24. SAying, Feare not Paul, thou must appeare before Cesar: and behold God hath ‡ giuen thee all that saile with thee.

RHEM.1.[24. Giuen thee.] Paul (saith S. Hierome) had so many soules in the ship giuen him, that is, so many men saued for his sake: and after he is with Christ, shall he shut his mouth, and not be able once to speake for them that haue beleeued in his Gospell? Hierom. adv. Vigil. Whereby he proueth that if God do much for the merits of Saints in this life, much more at their intercession and prayer in heauen.

CARTVV.1. [24. Giuen thee,] But the same Ierome, in a former Epistle to Vigilantius affirmeth, that they neither worship or adore Angell, Archangell, Cherubin or Seraphin, or any other name, either in this world or in the world to come: which is that which in generall is in question betweene vs. For whether they pray for us or no, is not the queſtion: whether we ought to pray to them is the controverſie: wherein Rome forbidding all worſhip and adoration of them, doth manifeſtly ſtand for us. That Pauls merites procured deliverance to the paſſengers is your forge; wherof there is no marke in the text: but the contrary rather is marked out in that their liues are giuen to him.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 23. For ‖ an Angell of the God whoſe I am, and whom I ſerue, ſtood by mee this night.

Gods prouidence to the See of Rome.

RHEM. 2. [23. An Angel.] S. Paul had many viſions, ſpecially to aſſure him that he ſhould to Rome and ſtand before Cæſar, our Lord himſelfe before (23. 11.) appearing to him, and here an Angell, for that purpoſe. Whereby wee plainely ſee the ſpeciall prouidence of God towards that See, where his two principall Apoſtles were deſigned to preach, plant the faith, liue, die, be buried and honoured till the worlds end, CARTVV. 2. [23. An Angell.] If this be a ſpeciall prouidence towards Rome, divers times to ſignifie Pauls journey thither; then his prouidence towards it ſlept in Peters ſuppoſed voiage thereunto: which is not once ſo much as mentioned; whereupon it followeth, that either Peter was never at Rome; or if he were, he was there without the ſpeciall providence which accompanied Paul. Further if it be Romes Priviledge that Pauls going thither was ſignified unto him; then hath her Elder ſiſter Ieruſalem a far greater priviledge then ſhe hath; conſidering that the H. Ghoſt teſtifying of his intreaty there in every City that he paſſed by, did conſequently ſo many times foretell his comming thither, whereby we may ſee what a hongry cauſe it is that is fed with ſuch ſcraps as theſe.

Verſ. 31. Paul ſayd to the Centurion and to the ſouldiers ‖ Vnleſſe theſe tarry in the ſhip you cannot be ſaued.

Gods predeſtination and appointment taketh not away mans free will and endevours.

RHEM. 3. [31. Vnleſſe theſe tary.] When God reuealeth to vs any thing, or aſſureth vs of any euent to come, he diſchargeth vs not thereby of our requiſite endeuours and labours for atcheiuing the ſame, not executing ordinarily his deſignments towards men otherwiſe then by their own free will and actions. S. Paul ſaid not here, Let vs do what we liſt: worke we or ſit wee ſtill, whether the mariners go out, or tary within, we are all ſure to be ſaued, for ſo God hath reuealed to me, and he cannot lie, neither can it fall otherwiſe, but contrariwiſe ſaith he. If theſe mariners leaue the ſhip, you cannot bee ſaued. So ſay all true Catholike preachers to Chriſtian people: What prouidence, predeſtination, or foreſight ſo euer God haue of your ſaluation, you are not thereby conſtrained any way, you haue freewill ſtill, and cannot be ſaued (though you be predeſtinate (except you keepe Gods commandements, repent you of your ſinne, beleeue, liue and die well. And if it were reuealed to any man, that he were one of Gods elect, and that he ſhould finally die in grace and be ſaued, yet he were bound to worke his ſaluation with feare and trembling, as * S. Paul both did, and taught, leſt he become reprobate, no leſſe then the ſame Apoſtle here and his fellowes, though they had their life promiſed to them of God, yet were bound to labour and vſe all poſſible diligence that they might not be drowned.

CARTVV. 3. [31. Vnleſſe theſe tarry.] Looke the Anſwer before upon Acts 23. 11. As for the freewill you talke of, when you ſhall haue proved any: we will not ſtick to grant you, that the ſame is not hindered by predeſtination. In the meane ſeaſon your tongues are notoriouſly falſe, which would inſinuate a conſtraint of will, maintained of us under the colour of Gods predeſtination.

CHAP. XXVIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe AND when we had eſcaped, then we knew that the ‡ Iland was called Mitylene. But the barbarous ſhewed us no ſmall curteſie.

RHEM. 1. [1. Iland was called.] This Iland (now Malta) is the ſeate of the Knights of the Rhodes, the inhabitants whereof haue a ſpeciall deuotion to S. Paul: to whom both the chiefe Church (being the Biſhops ſeate) is dedicated, and the whole Iland (as they count it) conſecrated, where the people ſhew yet to ſtrangers, his priſon and other memories of his miracles.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Iland was called.] Where if Paul were now, the Knights there would make a fire to burne him, and not (as the Barbarians did) to warme him, and to dry him. And they might as well haue ſaid that Paul created that Ile, as to dedicate and conſecrate it to him.

Verſe 27. For the heart of this people is waxen groſſe, and with their eares they haue heauily heard, and their eies ‖ they haue ſhut: leaſt perhaps they may ſee with their eies, and heare with their eares, and underſtand with their hearts, and be converted, and I heale them.

RHEM. 2. [27. They haue ſhut.] Here alſo (as Mat. 13. it is plaine that they would not ſee, nor heare, that their excecation is to be attributed to themſelues and not to God. See Annot. Iohn. 12. 40.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 5. And he indeed ‖ ſhaking off the beaſt into the fire, ſuffered no harme.

RHEM. 3. [5. Shaking of the beaſt. The promiſe of Chriſt (Mar. 16.) that venemous ſerpents ſhould not hurt them that beleeue in him, is fulfilled not in all beleeuers, but in ſuch as had the gift of miracles, as S. Paul had. Whom here a viper by nature so venemous, that the people thought hee should haue died out of hand, did no whit annoy: hee extinguishing by the power of Christ all the poison of the beast. Yea and (as the Christian people there till this day beleeue) by S. Pauls prayers the Iland was deliuered for euer from all such venemous serpents, insomuch that children there play with scorpions euer since that time, and Pilgrims dayly carry with them pieces of stone out of the place were Paul abode, by which they affirm that they heale them which in other countries adioyning are bitten of scorpions the medecine therefore being called, S. Pauls grace. The hereticks that know not the power of God nor the miraculous vertues giuen to his saints, marvel and blaspheme, when they heare such things as be proper to certain countries, atributed somtimes to Gods miracles done by his Saints: as though that were not possible, or were not as much to Gods honor, & more: then things proceeding only of natural causes. Such prophane men would not haue attributed the holesomnes of the waters of Iericho to Eliseus his vertue & miracles, amending them by casting salt into them, if the Scripture had not expresly testified the same, It is the part of all faithful men to refer such things to God, when any iust occasion is giuen thereunto, rather then to nature: though the incredulous do alwayes contrary, for feare of superstition and dishonouring God. As though this escape of drowning, might better and more to Gods glory be referred to chance and the mariners industry, then to S. Pauls prayer and extraordinary working.

Tho. Fazel-lus de rebus Siculis decad. 1. lib. 16. 1° Malta hath Saint Pauls blessing and grace untill this day. Gods miraculous vertue in certain Countries and creatures by his Saints.

CARTVV. 3. [5. Shaking of the beast.] The Evangelist Lukes indiscretion is here deeply charged, which remembring Pauls gathering of stickes, maketh no mention either of his prayer for that ile, or of such a miraculous fruit thereof, as was to continue so many hundred yeares after him: we know that God can, and hath done many wonders at the praiers of his Saints: but by the power that came from him, and not from them, to glorifie himselfe thereby, and not to glorifie them. And the Glorie of God is so perfect and so full, in his ordinarie and common course of gouernment, that it needeth not the support of these fables of extraordinarie working.

Gal. 1. 24.

Verse 20. For this cause therefore I desired to see you, and to speake to you, for, becauſe of the hope of Iſrael, am I compaſſed with this chaine.

RHEM. 4. [20. Chain.] I would wish now (saith S. Chrysostom) to bee for a time in the place where these chains remain, and to see the fetters which diuels feare, and Angels reuerence. hom. 5. ad populum Antiochenum. See also S. Gregory lib. 3. epist. 30. of the miracles done by S. Pauls chains, and that he sendeth the Empresse Constantia some dust thereof filed off, for a great relike and holy gift.

Saint Pauls chaines honored.

CARTVV. 4. [20. Chaine.] There is no such thing in the place you alleadge out of Chrysostome. As for Gregories place, it may well make you blush: for first he esteemed it unlawfull to touch these chaines with hands, contrary to your practise. Secondly hee saith, hee durst not looke upon them, contrary to the testimony cited out of Chrisostom, which would haue them seene. Thirdly for that he bewrayeth his foolish and blockish superstition, who making a conscience (for reverence sake) to touch them with his hand, made none to touch them and cut them with a file: wherein you are his right disciples, which would haue the Sacrament touched with a piece of a stincking hide of a beast, of the Glovers frame, rather then with the hands of the Communicants, which are the beautifull creatures of God, and the precious purchase of Iesus Christ. Last of all, that he maketh the chaines to those that sought unto them sometimes so free, that in a trice the file tooke a peece from them: and sometimes so churlish that with much endeavour and long travaile of the file, nothing conld be obtained of them.

Verse 22. But wee desire of thee to heare what thou thinkeſt: for! concerning this ſect, it is knowne to us that it is gainesayed every where.

RHEM. 5. [22. Concerning this sect.] The hereticks of all sorts comfort themselues much, when they find here or elsewhere the Christian faith called of the Iewes or incredulous persons, a sect or an heresie, and sometimes in contempt of Christs person the Master of the same, the sect of the Nazarens: as though the Church of God might as well erre in naming their doctrine heresie, as the Iews and Pagans might and did misse in condemning Christian religion for an heresie: or as though the Protestants doctrine were as well proved and tried to be no heresie, by the Prophets and other scriptures, Miracles, and consent of all Nations and ages, as Christs blessed Doctrine is: whereas indeed the Protestants doctrine is evidently convinced to be hereticall, by the same arguments that Christs religion is proved to be the onely true doctrine of salvation, and not an heresie. And whosoever can deduce the Christian faith from Adam to this day, throughout all the Fathers, Patriarcks, Prophets, Priests, Apostles, and Bishops by discent and succession of all lawes and states of true worshippers and beleevers (which is the onely or speciall way to proue that the Christian faith is no heresie) he shall by the same meanes all at once proue the Protestants doctrine to be an heresie and a false sect. That the Iewes therefore and ill men in all places contradicted the Christian Religion, calling it an heresie or sect, as though it had a beginning of some certaine sect-master other then God himselfe, they were deceived: and the Church of God nevertheles calling the Protestants doctrine heresie in the worst part that can be, and in the worst sort that ever was, doth right and most iustly.

The name of Sect is well given to all heresies, though the Christian Religion at the first was falsely so called.

CARTVV. 5 [22. Concerning this sect] As if you had proved your selues to be the Church Of God, or members of Christ: which are so manifestly and manifouldly argued, to be the Synagogue of Satan and limbes of Antichrist: and if you had proved your selues, to haue been sometimes the Church: yet what priviledges haue the branches of the wild oliue, that they cannot by infidelitie be broken down as well as the boughes of the naturall olive. Whether our doctrine be wel proved, to be the Doctrine of Christ: we leaue it to the judgement of the indifferent. And if the proofe thereof depended of a diduction of our faith from Adam untill now: the same is made by us, more sufficiently, with fewer discontinuances, and interruptions, then hath or can be shewed by any of your side.

M. Fox. Flaccus Illyricus in lib. quem inscripsit Test. veritat.

RHEM. THE END OF THE ACTES OF THE APOSTLES: Whereunto we ioyne for the readers behalfe, two tables of the two chiefe Apoſtles, and a note of the reſt, as an abridgement of the ſaid booke, and a ſupply of ſome things not there mentioned.

THE SVMME OF THE ACTES OF THE APOSTLES, CONteining, ſpeciallie the Geſts of the two principall Apoſtles, S.S. Peter and Paul, in ſuch order of time and yeares of the Emperours, and from Chriſts Nativitie, and Aſcenſion: as they were done ſo farre as by holie Scriptures or Eccleſiaſticall writers may be gathered. Wherein though it bee not poſſible to ſet down the preciſe and undoubted time or yeare of everie thing, becauſe neither S. Luke nor others doe note particularly and orderly the moments of every action of the ſaid Apoſtles: yet we follow the moſt probable and plaine plat that we finde in holie Scripture and ancient writers. Whereby the ſtudious reader may eaſily diſcover the folly of the Proteſtants, that can finde no time when Peter* might poſſibly come to Rome, be Biſhop, and die there: divers things in S. Paules actes being no leſſe hard to reconcile to the courſe of S. Lukes narration, then any thing touching the hiſtorie of S. Peter, namely his * three yeares preaching in Arabia: all which muſt needs be true, whether we hit the very iuſt time or no, and howſoever Authors differ about the ſame.

OF THE OTHER APOSTLES.

Genebr. out of divers Authours.

THE Acts of the rest of the twelue Apostles be not much written of in this book: but as other Ecclesiasticall writers do testifie, they preached specially in these nations: as followeth. Andrew in Achaia, Iohn in Asia, Philip in Phrygia, Iames in Iewrie, Bartholomew in Scythia. Thomas in India, Matthew in Aethiopia, Simon in Persia, Thaddeus in Mesopotamia, the other Iames in Spaine, Matthias in Palestine. So distributing themselues thorough out the world, to gather one Catholike Church of all Nations, according as Christ gaue them commission, Mat. 28. 19. and as it was prophesied of them before, Psal. 18. Their sound is gone forth into every country, and their words into the ends of the whole world. But before they departed one from another (the time wherof is not certeinlie known) all Twelue assembling together, and full of the holy Ghost, each laying down his sentence agrees upon the twelue principall Articles of the Christian faith, and appointed them for a rule to all beleevers which is therfore called and is THE APOSTLES CREED: Not written in paper as the Scripture, but from the Apostles delivered by tradition. Ruff. & Hier. loci citatis, Which, as of old (Hier. cont. Lucif.) so at this day all solemnely professe in their baptisme either by themselues or by others; and all that be of age and capacity, are bound to know and beleeue everie Article of the same. Which are these that follow.

It doth appeare that M. Cartwright hath answered these tables in many particulars, by his references to them in his booke, which is not yet come to our hands: wee desire therefore those that haue them to deliver them to some of M. Cartwrights friends that it may come to our hands and we wil cause them faithfullie to be printed that they may be inserted hereunto.

THE RHEMISTS ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLES IN GENERALL.

AFTER the Gospels, which is a story of Christ himselfe, and after the Acts of the Apostles, which is a story of Christs Church: now follow the Epistles of the Apostles, which they wrote of such matters, as they had then occasion to write of. For being the Founders and the Doctors of the Church, they did in their time, as the Doctors that succeeded them, did after them: who from the beginning unto this day, haue written Epistles and Bookes against heresies, ever as they arose, and of all other Ecclesiasticall matters, as they had occasion ministred unto them. Of which their doing, the Apostles first gaue heere the ensample: as also S. Luke in the Acts of the Apostles, led the way to all the Writers of Ecclesiasticall hystories after him. For although there be no comparison between them for authority, forasmuch as these are Canonicall Scripture, and so are not any writings of their successours: yet the occasions and matters (as I haue said) are alike.

Most of these Epistles, are S. Pauls Epistles, the rest are called * Catholica Epistola the Epistles Catholicke. For S. Paul writeth not any Epistle to all (howbeit every one of them is for all the Church) but some to particular Churches of the Gentiles, as to the Romanes, to the Corinthians, to the Galathians, to the Ephesians, to the Philippians, to the Colossians, to the Thessalonians: some to particular persons, as to Timothy, to Titt (who were Bishops among the Gentiles, to wit, of Ephesus, and of Crete) and to Philemon, and then one to the Hebrewes, who were the Iewes of Ierusalem and Iury. But the Epistles of the other Apostles, that is, of S. Iames, S. Peter, S. Iohn, and S. Iude, are not so entituled to any one Church or person (except S. Iohns two latter short Epistles, which yet might not be separated from his first, because they were all of one Authour) and therefore they are termed Catholike, that is, Vniuersall, for so writeth S. Iames, To the twelue Tribes that are in dispersion, greeting. And S. Peter in his first Epistle, thus: To the elect strangers of the dispersion of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia, in his second thus: To them that haue obtained equall faith with us: Likewise S. Iude, To them that are in God the Father beloued, and in Iesus Christ preserued and called: and S. Iohns first is without title.

Euseb. lib. 2. Eccl. hist. cap. 22.

Now, for the occasions of their writings, whereby we shall perceiue the matters or arguments that they handle; it must be remembred (as the Story of that time in the Acts of the Apostles doth at large declare) that the Church then beginning, was planted by the Apostles not onely in the Iewes, but also in the Gentiles: yea and especially in the Gentiles. Which thing offended the Iewes many waies, For they could not abide to see, so much as their own Country to receiue him for CHRIST whom they had reiected and crucified: much lesse to see them Preach him to the Gentiles also, that offended even those Iewes also, that beleeved him to be Christ. Howbeit such of them as were Catholickes, and therefore not obstinate, were satisfied, when they understood by the Apostles that it was Gods pleasure, as Act. 11. we reade. But others of them became heretickes, and Preached to the Christian Gentiles, that it was necessary for them to receiue also the Iewes Religion. Of such we reade, Act. 15. Vnlesse you be circumcised you cannot bee saued. And as these did so Preach against the truth, so did the vnchristned Iewes not onely themselues persecute, but also stirre up the Idolatrous Gentiles every where to persecute the Christians: by such obstinacy provoking God to reprobate their Nation: which yet they thought unpossible to be done, because they were the seed of Abraham, and were circumcised, and had receiued the Law by Moses: for such carnall respects they trusted in themselues, as though God and Christ were unseparably bound unto them: attributing also so much to their own workes (which they thought they did of themselues, being holpen with the knowledge of their Law) that they would not acknowledge the death of Christ to be necessary for their saluation: but looked for such a Christ, as should be like other Princes of this world, and make them great men temporally.

Heereupon did S. Paul write his Epistles, to shew both the vocation of the Gentiles, and the reprobation of the Iewes. Moreover, to admonish both the Christian Gentiles, not to receiue Circumcision, and other ceremonies of Moses Law, in no wise; and the Iewes also, not to put their trust in the same, but rather to understand, that now Christ being come, they must cease. Againe, to shew the necessity of Christs comming and of his death: that without it, neither the Gentiles could be saued: no nor the Iewes, by no workes that they could do of themselues, although they were also holpen by the Law, telling them what was good and what was bad: forsomuch as all were sinners, and therefore all impotent and infirme: and the Law could not take away ſinne, and infirmity, and giue ſtrength to fulfill that which it gaue knowledge of, but this was God onely able to do, and for Chriſts ſake onely would he do it. Therefore it is neceſſary for all to beleeue in Chriſt, and to be made his members, being incorporated into his Body, which is his Catholike Church. For ſo (although they never yet did good worke, but all ill) they ſhall haue remiſſion of their ſinnes, and new ſtrength withall, to make them able to fulfill the commandements of Gods law, yea and their workes after this ſhall be ſo gracious in Gods ſight, that for them he will giue them life everlaſting. This is the neceſſity, this is alſo the fruit of Chriſtian Religion. And therefore he exhorteth all, both Gentiles and Iewes, as to receiue it humbly, ſo alſo to perſever in it conſtantly unto the end, againſt all ſeduction of hereſie, and againſt all terrour of perſecution: and to walk all their time in good workes, as now God hath made them able to do.

The doctrine of the Catholike Church concerning good workes.

The ſame doctrine doth the Catholike Church teach vnto this day moſt exactly: to wit, that no works of the vnbeleeuing or vnbaptized, whether they be Iewes or Gentiles, can ſaue them: no nor of any Heretick or Schiſmatike, although he be baptized, becauſe he is not a member of Chriſt, yea more then that, no worke of any that is not a liuely member of Chriſt, although otherwiſe hee be baptized, and continue within his Church, yet becauſe he is not in grace but in mortall ſinne, no worke that he doth, is meritorious or able to ſaue him.

S. Pauls doctrine concerning faith and good workes.

This very ſame is S. Pauls doctrine, he denieth to the works of ſuch as haue not the Spirit of Chriſt, all vertue to iuſtifie or to ſaue: neither requireth he a man to haue had knowledge of the Law, or to haue kept it aforetime, as though otherwiſe he might not be ſaued by Chriſt: but yet when hee is Chriſtened, he requireth of neceſſity, that hee keepe Gods commandements, by auoiding of all ſin, and doing good works, and to ſuch a mans good workes he attributeth as much vertue as any Catholike of this time.

2. Pet. 3.

Neuertheleſſe there were certain at that time (as alſo all the Heretickes of this our time) whom S. Peter termeth vnlearned and vnſtable, who reading S. Pauls Epiſtles, did miſconſter his meaning, as though he required not good works no more after Baptiſme, then before Baptiſme: but held that only faith did iuſtifie and ſaue a man. Thereupon the other Apoſtles wrote their Epiſtles, as S. Auguſtine noteth in theſe words: Therefore becauſe this opinion (Ad ſalutem obtinendam ſufficere ſolam fidem, that onely faith is ſufficient to obteine ſalnation) was thenniſen: the other Apoſtolicall Epiſtles, of Peter, Iohn, Iames, and Iude, do againſt it ſpecially direct their intention, to anouch vehemently: fidem ſine operibus nihil prodeſſe, that faith, without works profiteth nothing. As alſo Paul himſelfe did not define to be quamlibet fidem, qua in Deum creditur, whatſoeuer manner of faith wherewith we beleeue in God, but that holeſome expreſſe and Evangelical faith, whoſe works proceed from loue; and the faith (quoth he) that worketh by loue, when upon that faith, which ſome thinke to bee ſufficient to ſalnation, he ſo affirmeth to profit nothing, that he ſaith, If I ſhould haue all faith ſo that I could remoue mountaines, and haue not charitie I am nothing.

Therefore that wil not erre in this point, nor in any other, reading either S. Pauls Epiſtles, or the reſt of the holy Scriptures muſt ſtick faſt to the doctrine of the Catholicke Church, which Church S. Paul termeth the piller and ground of the truth: aſſuring himſelf that if any thing there ſound to him as contrary hereunto, he faileth of the right ſenſe: and bearing alwaies in his minde the admonition of S. Peter, ſaying: As alſo our moſt deere brother Paul according to the wiſdom giuen to him, hath written to you: as alſo in all his Epiſtles, ſpeaking in them of theſe things, in the which are certaine things hard to underſtand, which the vnlearned and vnſtable deprane: as alſo the reſt of Scriptures, to their own perdition. You therefore brethren, foreknowing take heed leſt ye be led amiſſe by the error of the vnwiſe, and fall away from your own ſtedfaſtneſſe.

CARTVV. It is no mervaile although you tranſforme Timothy and Titus being Evangeliſts into Biſhops, which throw down Peter from the top of his Apoſtleſhip, and from the higheſt Miniſterie of the word to the eſtate of a Biſhop, which is the loweſt calling amongſt thoſe that labour in the word; for Timothie being of the Apoſtle expreſly called an Evangeliſt, it followeth that Titus having the ſame charge in Crete that he had at Epheſus, that they were both Evangeliſts. Againſt which authority of the Apoſtle, neither the ſubſcription of the Scholiaſt at the end of the Epiſtles, nor yet the vnproper, and vnexact ſpeeches of ſome of the ancient writers ſpeaking of the Miniſters of the Apoſtles times, as of the Miniſters of the times wherein they lived, can haue any weight or value at all. For the Apoſtles once onely naming them Evangeliſts, hath more pith and force in it then 10000 voyces of other men calling them otherwiſe.

2. Tim. 4. 5

Concerning the rotten building of Iuſtification by workes it ſhall appeare in the diſcourſe upon the Epiſtles, that it is caſt down by ſundry blaſts of the Apoſtles that wrote them, not onely in ſentences, but in whole Treatiſes of that matter, Auguſtines words we acknowledge, but the ſenſe forced by the Ieſuites, Auguſtine himſelfe doth not know, whoſe purpoſe is to ſhew, that the faith which doth ſaue and iuſtifie, is not the dead faith, but the faith which worketh by loue, which thing wee willingly yeeld unto. Wherefore he ſaith not (as they would make him) that it is erronious to ſay onely faith is ſufficient to ſaue; but to ſay that it ſhould ſo be ſufficient to ſaue as it ſhould make men negligent to liue well and to hold the way of God in good workes: which addition followeth theſe words immediately: And this is yet more evident in the ſame Chapter, where it is thus found, When the Apoſtle ſaith, that hee eſteemeth that a man is iuſtified by faith without the workes of the Law: he meaneth not that after faith received and profeſſed, the workes of righteouſneſſe ſhould be contemned, but that every one ſhould know that hee may bee iuſtified although there haue no workes of the Law gone before, for they follow the iuſtified, and do not go before him that is to bee iuſtified. Whereupon it is plaine that both a man is iuſtified, and made righteous or ever he haue done any good worke, and that the good workes that are done by a iuſt man, are no part of his righteouſneſſe, as thoſe which come after hee is made righteous: and conſequently that the good workes which are done by a iuſtified man, are thoſe which the Apoſtle ſhutteth out from iuſtification. And this point he doth not lightly trip upon, but handleth by a whole diſcourſe; where among other ſayings, he affirmeth that by faith Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts, &c. As therefore faith onely is it, whereby Chriſt dwelling in us, good workes are yet not ſhut out; ſo faith being

that onely which iuſtifieth, doth not therefore ſhut out good workes. And againe, The faith of Chriſt the faith that Chriſtians haue by grace, that is to ſay, the faith which worketh by loue, which is ſet in the foundation, doth ſuffer no man to periſh. So defining what it is to beleeue in Chriſt, by the which we haue eternall life, he addeth in the end of that chapter. This is not to haue the faith of the diuels, which is rightly eſteemed dead, but the faith which worketh by loue. The like purpoſe and meaning is in the other place vpon the Pſalme; where diſcourſing, that it is dangerous in this point either to lift up the iuſtice of man, or to flatter men as though they ſhould be ſaued by mercy, howſoeuer they liue. He ſaith, Let us heare Moſes, decline neither to the right hand, nor to the left, preſume not of thy iuſtice to obtaine the Kingdom of God, nor preſume to ſinne of the mercy of God. So that as the mercy of God is no cauſe to ſinne; ſo our righteouſneſſe is nothing to bring us (as a cauſe) to the kingdom of heaven, which is yet more manifeſt by his words that follow. Who (ſaith hee) are bleſſed, not thoſe in whom he findeth no ſinne, for he findeth ſinne in all, for all haue ſinned and need the glory of God: If therefore ſinnes bee found in all, it remaineth that none be bleſſed, but they onely whoſe ſins are forgiuen. But to him that beleeueth in him that iuſtifieth the wicked, faith is reckoned for Iuſtice, as Dauid doth deſcribe the bleſſednes of a man to whom God imputeth righteouſneſſe without workes of faith, which good workes do not preuent, and which good workes do follow. Wherefore this being ſpoken of Abrahams workes after faith, proue euidently that alwayes and in all, workes follow the iuſtification, wherein we are bleſſed, which iuſtification and bleſſedneſſe is alwayes one and the ſame.

THE TIME WHEN THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANES WAS Written, and the Argument thereof.

THE hiſtory of S. Paul, vntill he came to Rome, S. Luke in the Actes of the Apoſtles wrote exactly: and though without any mention of his Epiſtles, yet certaine it is that ſome of them he wrote before he came there, to wit, the two vnto the Corinthians and this to the Romanes: and (* as it ſeemeth) before them all, the Epiſtle to the Galatians. Wherein yet becauſe hee maketh mention of the fourteenth yeere after his conuerſion, it appeareth, that he preached ſo long without any writing. ROME. Galat. 2.

And this order may thus briefly be gathered. Firſt he preached to the Galatians. Act. 16. and paſſing through Phrigia and the Country of Galatia. Whereof hee maketh mention himſelfe alſo, Galat. 1. We euangelized to you and Gal. 4. I euangelized to you heretofore. After which the falſe Apoſtles came and perſwaded them to receiue Circumciſion. Whereupon he ſaith Gal. 1. I marueil that thus ſo ſoone you are transferred from him that called you to the grace of Chriſt, vnto another Goſpell, and wiſheth therefore Galat. 4. ſaying. And I would I were with you now. And accordingly he came vnto them afterward, as we reade Act. 18. VValking in order through the countrie of Galatia and Phrigia, confirming all the Diſciples. At which time alſo it ſeemeth, that he tooke order with them about thoſe contributions to helpe the need of the Chriſtians in Hieruſalem whereof he ſpeaketh 1. Cor. 16. And concerning the collection that are made for the Saincts, as I haue ordeined to the Churches of Galatia, ſo do you alſo. By which words alſo it is euident, that the Corinthians had not as then made their gathering. But when he wrote the Second to them (where in the 11. Chapter he maketh mention of 14. yeeres, not only after his Conuerſion, as to the Galatians, but alſo after his Rapte, which ſeemeth to haue been when hee was at Hieruſalem Act. 9. foure yeeres after his Conuerſion, in a traunce, as hee calleth it Act. 22. 17.) then were they ready. For ſo he ſaith 2. Cor. 8. You haue begonne from the yeere paſt. and 2. Cor. 9. For the which I doe glory of you to the Macedonians that alſo Achaia is ready from the yeere paſt. howbeit it followeth there: But I haue ſent the brethren, that as I haue ſaid) you may be ready: leſt when the Macedonians come with me, and find you vnready, we be aſhamed. But when he wrote to the Romanes, then was he now come to Corinth for the purpoſe, and had receiued their contribution, and was ready to go with it vnto Hieruſalem. For ſo he ſaith Rom. 15. Now therefore I will goe vnto Hieruſalem to miniſter to the Saints. For Macedonia and Achaia haue liked well to make ſome contribution vpon the poore Saints that are in Hieruſalem.

So then, the Epiſtle to the Romanes was not the firſt that he wrote. But yet it is * and alwayes was ſet firſt, becauſe of the primacie of that Church, for which cauſe alſo hee handled in it, ſuch matters as pertained not to them alone, but to the vniuerſall Church, and ſpecially to all the Gentiles: to wit, the very frame (as it were) of the Church of Chriſt, Tanquam enim pro ipſo Domino legatione fungens, hoc eſt pro lapide angulari, vtrumque populum tam ex Iudeis quam ex Gentibus conſtruit in Chriſto per vinculum gratiæ, ſo ſaith S. Auguſtine, giuing vs briefly the argument, in Engliſh thus: As being a legate for our Lord himſelfe, that is, for the corner ſtone, he knitteth together in Chriſt by the band of Grace, both peoples, as well of the Iewes as of the Gentiles. Shewing that neither of them had in their Gentilitie or Iudaiſme any works to bragge of, or to chalenge to themſelues iuſtification or ſaluation thereby, but rather ſinnes they had to be ſorrie for, and to humble themſelues to the faith of Chriſt, that ſo they might might haue remiſſion of them, and ſtrength to do meritorious works afterward. In which ſort, becauſe the Gentiles did humble themſelues therefore had they found mercy, [though they neuer wiſt of the Law of Moſes. But the Iewes, becauſe they ſtood vpon their own works, which they did by their own ſtrength, with the knowledge of the Law (being therefore alſo called the works of the Law,) and ſo would not humble themſelues to beleeue in Chriſt crucified, they miſſed of mercie, and became reprobate, excepting a few Reliquiæ that God of his goodneſſe had reſerued to himſelfe. Howbeit in the end, when the fulneſſe of the Gentiles is come into the Church, then ſhall, the fulneſſe of the Iewes alſo open their eyes, acknowledge their error, and ſubmit themſelues to Chriſt and his Church in like manner. In the meane time, thoſe that haue found the grace to be Chriſtians, he exhorteth to perſeuerance (as it was ſpecially needfull in thoſe times of perſecutions) and to leade their whole life now after Baptiſme in good workes: and to be carefull of vnitie, bearing therefore one with another both Iew & Gentile, all that they may, and giuing no offence to them that are weake. Thus he diſputeth, and thus he exhorteth through the whole Epiſtle: though if we wil diuide it by that which is principall in each part, we may ſay that vnto the 12. Chapter is his diſputation: and from thence to the end his exhortation.

The workes of the Law.

Rom. 1. Rom. 16. Now, in theſe points of faith, and in all others (as alſo in example of life) the commendation that he giueth to the Church of Rome, is much to be noted. Your faith is renoumed in the whole world, and your obedience is publiſhed into euery place. I reioyce therefore in you. And againe: you haue obeyed from the heart vnto that forme of doctrine, which hath been deliuered to you. And thereupon againe; I deſire you brethren to marke them that make diſſenſions and ſcandals contrary to the doctrine which you haue learned, and auoide them For ſuch do not ſerue Chriſt our Lord, but their own belly, and by ſweete ſpeaches and benedictions ſeduce the hearts of innocents. Therefore to ſhunne Luther and Calvin, and all their crewes, we haue iuſt reaſon, and good warrant. They make diſſenſions and ſcandals againſt the doctrine of the Romane Church. Let no man therefore be ſeduced by their ſugred words.

Rom. 6. Rom. 16.

CARTVV. You are but poore husbands, which for ſo ſmall, or rather no fruit at all, take ſo much paines to proue that the Epiſtle to the Romanes was not firſt written: we would haue yeelded it unto you without your travell. But your fond concluſion, that being not firſt written, and yet ſet in the firſt place, argueth the Primacie of that Church, we eſteeme to be a meere dotage. For if that order had beene kept, that the worthieſt had gotten the firſt place, the Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, which are eſteemed to haue been written the firſt in order, ſhould haue been ſet, if not before the Epiſtle to the Romanes, yet at the leaſt next after it, as that whoſe vertues and Chriſtian faith and manners are ſingularly commended. But it is evident that in S. Pauls Epiſtles this order is kept, that thoſe Epiſtles are firſt ſet, which were written to whole Churches, and then thoſe which were written to particular perſons. And in both theſe ſorts the compiler of them ſeemeth manifeſtly to haue had reſpect of ſetting the Epiſtles in order according to their length, that every one as it is larger then other, ſo it obtained place before the other. And if the Primacie had been conſidered in placing of the Epiſtles; there was more reaſon by your doctrine, that S. Peters Epiſtles ſhould haue had the firſt place in the Synagogue or aſſembly of the Epiſtles, then the Epiſtle to the Romanes. For when you teach that the primacie of Rome is for S. Peters ſake; it was more fit that he ſhould carry the note of the primacie then Rome. At the leaſt if this Ieſuiticall concluſion were ought worth; they ſhould haue ſet S. Peters Epiſtles before all other the Epiſtles which are commonly called generall. Their ſecond reaſon, that matters pertaining to the univerſall Church, and not to them alone are handled in that Epiſtle, is more doltiſh then the former, as that which hath no colour of conſequence. For what Epiſtle is it in the holy Scripture, the doctrine and other contents whereof concerne not other either Churches or perſons, beſide thoſe to whom they are particularly dedicated. And if this were not ſufficient to convince this point, that there is one common ſalvation, and common faith, and doctrine of all the children of God; yet the Apoſtles commandement, that willeth that the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians ſhould be read in the Church of Laodicea, and that which was ſent from Laodicea ſhould be read in the Church of the Coloſſians, doth ſuffer no doubt to remaine in this point.

Col. 4. 16.

The teſtimony of Epiphanius quoted to proue that this Epiſtle was ſet firſt to note the primacy of Rome, will alwaies be to ſeeke. He affirmeth that the Epiſtle to the Romanes was the fourth in order of writing, but what is that to this queſtion. Indeed in the beginning of that Chapter he hath diverſe things wherewith to overthrow this primacy of Rome, but to the building of it not a word: For when he ſaith that Marcion was a Biſhops ſonne of our Catholicke Church, he declareth that every Church is Catholicke, and not Rome onely. After, when Marcion is ſaid to aske the Elders and Teachers of Rome why they would not receiue him, they anſwered, not becauſe they were the chiefeſt or higheſt, but ſaid; wee cannot do it without the permiſſion of thy reverend father, for there is one faith, and one agreement, and we cannot contrary our worthy fellow Miniſter, that is to ſay thy father. Here the Biſhop of Rome with his Presbitery confeſſeth that neither he, nor they could receiue him, whom another Biſhop had excommunicated without conſent of that Biſhop that gaue the ſentence of excommunication, calling him alſo his fellow Miniſter. The ſentence of Auguſtine is a catholike and ſound ſentence, but the Ieſuites gloſſe, not onely explaineth it not, but contrarieth it manifeſtly. For if by the band of grace, the Iewes and the Gentiles are knit together in Chriſt as the corner ſtone. none being knit and united with him, but ſuch as are iuſtified, it followeth that not onely remiſſion of ſinnes, but the iuſtification that they haue, commeth by grace, and if by grace then not by workes. Againe, if our uniting with Chriſt be by grace, the ſame uniting being advanced in vs according to the meaſure of faith which doth unite us; it muſt needs follow that as the beginning of our knot with him is by grace, ſo muſt be alſo the proceſſe and encreaſe thereof. They therefore impudently wreſt Auguſtine, as though he ſhould ſay, that after forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, men ſhould beginne to worke meritoriouſly. The open falſhood of which gloſſe appeareth; for ſhewing, that none attained to the Goſpell by merite of the worke of the Law, which went before, but by the faith in Chriſt, hee addeth not, That men did beleeue becauſe they were iuſt, but that being iuſtified by beleeuing, they might afterward beginne to liue iustly. This therefore the Apostle intendeth to teach that all came by the grace of the Gospell: which therefore hee sheweth to be called grace, because there was no debt as it were of righteousnesse rendred, but that it is given freely, which sheweth that it is neuer by merit, which is by faith.

The foolish exposition of the workes of the Law, that is, the works which are done by the knowledge of the Law, hath nothing to stay upon but the bare word of the Iesuites, (which never will bee taken but in the Popish Bursle) which the Apostle manifestly overthroweth, when he sheweth that it is one thing to heare or know the Law, and another thing to doe the Law, or the workes therof. Likewise when he confesseth that the Iew instructed in the Law, so that he was able to be a guide to the blinde, and a teacher of the ignorant, yet notwithstanding by transgression of the Law dishonoured God. Wherefore by the knowledge of the Law, he cannot do the Law: But the workes of the Law are those, which according to the prescript of the Law are wrought in men through the spirit of God in any measure, in which regard the Law may also be called spirituall, as that which cannot be done in any measure at all of a carnall or naturall man, which is destitute of the spirit of God, whereof it commeth that the workes of the Law are called, the workes or fruites of the Spirit. And when the wisedome of the flesh, or man unregenerate, is enmity unto God, and neither is nor can be subiect to the Law of God; it must follow that the least disposition of doing the Law must come from the spirit of God. This is yet more evident by the example the Apostle bringeth of himselfe, that he had delighted in the Law, onely in regard of the inward man, or part regenerate by the Spirit of God. And againe, that in his minde; or regenerate part, hee serued the Law of God; but in his flesh, or part not regenerate, the Law of sinne. It is evident therefore, that when the Apostle saith, that we are not iustified by the workes of the Law, his meaning is, that we cannot be instified by those workes which by the spirit of God are wrought in vs in some acceptable measure according to the direction of the Law. The places alledged out of the first and 16 chapters of the Romanes come to bee considered in their proper places, where these paltring Iesuits patter them up againe. Touching the sixth to the Romanes, if it were high praise to the Romanes then to obey from the heart the forme of doctrine which was delivered unto them by the Apostles, it is then a foule shame of the Romanists that now liue, to haue not onely swarved, but fallen utterly away from that forme of doctrine that their Predecessours did so precisely and religiously without addition or detraction obserue.

THE APOSTLE TO THE ROMANES.

CHAP. I.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 5. BY whom wee haue received grace and Apostleship * for obedience to the faith ‡ in all Nations for the name of him.

RHEM. 1. [5. In all Nations.] Saint Augustine useth this place and the like against Heretikes which would draw the common Catholike faith of all nations, to some certaine Countries or corners of the world.

CARTVV. 1. [5. In all nations.] Augustine (say you) useth this place against Heretikes, and therefore (say I) against the Papists, which shut up the Church now in Rome, as the old heretikes did in Affrick, overturning thereby the property of the Church, which is to be Catholike.

Verse. 11. For I desire to see you, that I may impart unto you some spirituall grace to ‡ confirme you.

RHEM. 2. [11. Confirme you.] The Romanes were conuerted and taught by Saint Paul before. Therefore he useth that speech to confirme them in their faith. Author Com. apud Hieron. Theodoret. in 16. Rom. & Chrysost.

CART VV. 2. [11. Confirme you.] Looke the answere before in the answere to the argument upon the Acts.

Vers. 17. For ‡ the iustice of God is reuealed therein by faith into faith: as it is written: And the iust liueth by faith.

RHEM. 3. [17. The iustice of God.] He meaneth not Gods owne justice in himselfe, but that Iustice wherewith God endueth man when he justifieth him. Aug. de Sp. & lit. cap. 9. whereby you may gather the vanity of the hereticall imputatiue Iustice.

CARTVV. 3. [17. The iuſtice of God.] This being the weightieſt controverſie ſhould not haue been ſlubbered over with a marginall note, and that without any teſtimony or proofe out of the word or otherwiſe; for Auguſtine hath no ſuch meaning in the place here quoted; for ſo the Apoſtle ſhould be manifeſtly contraried of Auguſtine, becauſe then a man ſhould liue by his owne righteouſnes, and not the righteous man by his faith. But his meaning is, that it is the iuſtice of God, Iſaiah. 23. 6 that is to ſay of Chriſt (who is the true and everliving God) that is our righteouſnes, as appeareth manifeſtly by the Prophet, who ſpeaking of Chriſt, calleth him Iehonah our righteouſneſſe. The Apoſtle 1. Cor. 1. 30 alſo affirmeth that Chriſt is made vnto vs of God righteouſneſſe, where adding further that he is made vnto vs ſanctification. If the Ieſuits doctrine of being iuſtified by the works which Chriſt worketh in vs by his ſpirit, were true, it ſhould follow that Iuſtice and Sanctification which the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth, ſhould be all one. But this blaſphemy hath ſufficient confutation out of this place of the Apoſtle. For when he ſaith it is that Iuſtice of God which is by faith, faith apprehending not the workes contained in the law, but Chriſt alone, it muſt needs follow that Chriſt whom faith apprehendeth is our iuſtice, and not the workes of the law wrought by the ſpirit of Chriſt, which is not the ſubiect of Gal. 3. 12. faith. And hereupon the Apoſtle teacheth, The Law is not of faith, but the man that doth them ſhall bee ſaued by them. Againe, when he ſaith that this Iuſtice is reuealed in the Goſpell, he manifeſtly diſcerneth betweene the righteouſneſſe which is inherent, which is reuealed by the law onely: ſo that the Ieſuites by this gloſſe of theirs confound not onely Iuſtification and Sanctification, but alſo confound the Goſpell with the law an argument of extreame blindneſſe which ſee no difference of things which are ſo diuerſe. Laſt of all, when he ſaith that it is reuealed from faith to faith, he declareth that we are iuſtified by faith, not onely at that time when we firſt beleeue, but that our whole and continuall iuſtification is by faith; otherwiſe if the Ieſuits dreame were true, the Apoſtle ſhould not haue ſaid, that righteouſneſſe is reuealed in the Goſpell from faith to faith, but from faith to workes. And if Chriſt were not our righteouſneſſe himſelfe, but obtained onely a faculty for vs, that we might haue righteouſneſſe in our ſelues; then he ſhould not be our Sauiour, but an inſtrument of our ſalvation. Auguſtine alſo in the ſame Booke hath theſe words: We gather that a man Aug. de ſpir. & lit. c. 12. is not iuſtified by the precepts of a good life, but by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, not by the law of workes, but by the law of faith; not by the letter, but by the ſpirit; not by merit of workes, but by free grace. And hee alleadgeth alſo, that we are iuſtified in beleeuing him that iuſtifieth the vngodly, which faith is imputed for righteouſneſſe, to proue that the perſon baptizing ſhould not be depended on, but Chriſt onely by faith Aug. contra lit. Petilian cap. 36. 43. that no glory might be in man.

Verſe 23. And they changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into a ‡ ſimilitude of the image of a corruptible man, and of foules and foure footed beaſts, and of them that creepe.

RHEM. 4. [23 Similitude of the image.] Loe theſe and the like are the Images or Idols ſo often condemned in the Scriptures, and not the holy images of Chriſt and his Saints.

CARTVV. 4. [23. Similitude of the image.] Behold ſuch as this is alſo the abominable Idolatry of the Papiſts, not onely changing the glory of God the Father into the ſimilitude of a mortall old man; but alſo in worſhipping beſides the Lord, the Saints, which be but creatures.

Verſ. 24. For the which cauſe God ‡ hath delivered them up unto the deſires of their heart into uncleanenеſſe: for to abuſe their owne bodies amongſt themſelues ignominiouſly.

RHEM. 5. [24. Hath deliuered them vp.] Eph. 4. 19. he ſaith, They haue deliuered or given vp themſelues to all vncleanneſſe. By which conference of Scriptures we learne that themſelues are the cauſe of their own ſinne and damnation, God of his Iuſtice permitting and leaving them to their owne will, and ſo giuing them vp into paſſions, &c.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 7. To all that are at Rome the beloved of God, called to be Saints. Grace to you, and peace from God our Father and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

Apoſtolicall ſalutation or bleſſing. The ſame vſed of heretickes.

RHEM. 6. [7. Grace to you and peace] It is a kinde of bleſſing rather then a prophane ſalutation, proper to the Apoſtles, of greater vertue then the benedictions of the Fathers in the old Teſtament. The holy Fathers of the Church ſeemed to abſtaine from it for their reverence to the Apoſtles. * The Manichees (Aug. cont. ep. fundа. c. 5. 6.) and other heretikes (as alſo theſe of our time) becauſe they would be counted Apoſtles, often uſe it.

CARTVV, 6. [7. Grace to you and peace.] Chriſtian ſalutations ought not to bee prophane, but holy. And therefore this being a holy and ſacred ſalutation, is not unfit for Chriſtians that profeſſe holineſſe in words and workes. Otherwiſe it ſhould not be lawfull for us to uſe the ſalutation Luk. 10. 5. of peace be to thee, or to you; which the Apoſtles were commanded to vſe in their firſt voiage of preaching in Iudea. Conſidering that that is alſo a holy bleſſing, and no prophane ſalutation. And if it be lawfull for your Biſhops to imitate that Apoſtolicall bleſſing, and that to whole Townes and Cities at once, were the Apoſtles did it but to houſes and to ſeverall families, there is no cauſe why they ſhould be ſcrupulous in this except onely that themſelues and their miniſteries being bitterly accurſed, they are utterly unfit to giue either the one or the other bleſſing. As for us we are aſſured that 2. Cor. 11. 1 wee haue good warrant (for the place and calling that wee occupie) to be followers of the Apoſtle in that wherein he is a follower of Chriſt. And as for Epiphanius & Auguſtine you falſifie them impudently: for both of them reproving Manichens for that he wrote himſelfe an Apoſtle; neither of them both hath a word of reproofe for praying for grace and peace &c. Beſides that, they ſpeake impudently, conſidering that the Fathers doe often uſe to haue ſuch ſalutations both in the beginning and the ending.

Verſe

Vers. 8. First I giue thankes to my God through IESVS CHRIST for all you, because your faith is renoumed in the whole world.

RHEM. 7. [8. Your faith renoumed.] The holy doctors vpon these words of the Apostles, and specially by our Masters promise *made to Peter, that his faith should not faile, giue great testimonie for the prouidence of God in the preseruation of the Romane faith, S. Cyprian thus: *ep. 55. nu. 6. They are so bold to carry letters from prophane Schismatickes to the chaire of Peter and the principall Church whence priestly vnitie rose: not considering the Romanes to be them whose faith (the Apostle being the commender) was praised to whom misbeleefe cannot haue accesse. So S. Iicrom. Apol. adu. Ruffin. li. 3. c. 4. to 2. Know you that the Romane faith commended by the Apostles mouth, will receiue no such deceits, nor can be possibly changed, though an angell taught otherwise being sensed by S. Pauls authoritie. Againe ep. 6. 3. ad Pammach & Oceanum. c. 4. to 2. VVhatsoeuer thou be that anonchest new sectes, I pray thee haue respect to the Romane eares, spare the faith which was praysed by the Apostles voice. And in another place. Will ye know O Paula and Eustochium, how the Apostle hath noted euery pronunce with their proprieties? the faith of the people of Rome is praised. Where is there so great concourse to Churches and Martyrs sepulchres? Where soundeth Amen like thunder from heauen, or where are the temples (voide of Idols) so shaken as there? Not that the Romanes haue an other faith then the rest of the Christian Churches, but that there is in them more deuotion and simplicitie of faith. In another place the same holy Doctor signifieth that it is all one to say, the Romane faith, and the Catholike. Apolog. 1. adu. Ruff. c. 1. So doth S. Cyprian ep. 52. num 1. ad Antonianum: and S. Ambrose de obitu fratris, in med. Whereupon, this word Romane, is added to Catholike, in many countries were Sectes do abound, for the better distinction of true beleeuers from Heretickes: which in all ages did hate and abhorre the Romane faith and Church, as all malefactors do their Iudges and correctors.

The Roman faith highly commended. Luk. 22. It cannot faile, nor be corrupted. Proœm. l. 2. com. in in ep. ad Gal. The Romane stations, a token of greater faith and deuotion. The Catholick and Roman faith all one.

CARTVV. 7. [8. Your faith renoumed.] It will require the end of some new logicke to make good any of these arguments. The Church of Rome was faithfull in S. Pauls time, in Cyprians and Icroms, &c. therefore it is not now an harlot: she was sometimes siluer, therefore shee is not now copper: she was faithfull vnder the persecution of Tyrants, therefore she is now faithfull, being the tyrant and bloudy Citty, and murdresse of all the faithfull. Peters faith could not faile, therefore the Bishop of Romes faith cannot decay. But what is here spoken of the Church of Rome, which is not spoken as amply, and rather more amply of other Churches. The Apostle affirmeth that the Church of Corinth was rich through Christ in all things, both in word and knowledge: and briefly that it was inferiour in graces to no Church. And further affirmeth that God would establish them vnto the end, euen vnto the day of our Lord Iesus Christ; which if he had said of the Church of Rome, you would haue made many pay deere for that sentence, which set forth to the sale such beggarly allegations as you bring, although euen so you should not haue come neere the mark you shoot at, whereas he shooteth off against the Church of Rome a warning peece, that if the Iewes, which were the Lords peculiar people fell away, that much more they might be broken from the faith of Christ; cleane contrary to your doctrine, which beare the world in hand of greater priuiledges of stablenesse in the faith giuen to the Church of Rome, then euer was granted to the Iewes. or is Rome onely exempted from being in the hands of God, as the clay is in the hands of the Potter, that he may not speake a word to destroy or to plant as seemeth good vnto him? And if the vision was taken from their Prophets, and the law perished from their Priests, and counsell from their Elders, (I meane the Iewes) what preseruatiue hath Rome that none of these can lay hold of her. And writing to the Thessalonians hee saith, From you sounded out the word of the Lord, not onely in Macedonia and Achaia, but your faith which is towards God is gone forth into all places, that we haue no need to speake any thing. Where also it must not bee forgotten, that Rome being then the imperiall City of all the world, whereunto, and from whence there was resort to and from all places: had better commodity of sending out the fame and beauty of her faith into all coasts then other Churches, to the which there was no such resort neither to nor fro. Seeing then that other Churches attained to the same renowne of faith that she did without the helpes that she had, it is euident that their faith was more shrill and sounding of it selfe, then was the faith of the Romanes, and that the faith of the Thessalonians went rather as it were of its owne feete, where the other was carried vpon the feet of infinite and continuall passengers to and fro, and as the Apostle at the time he wrote this Epistle, ascribeth no such speciality of excellency, but that which is to be found to the full in other Churches: so of her continuance in that fame and renowne of faith, he giueth no manner of testimony: yea it may manifestly be gathered that euen in his time the glory of her faith was greatly blemished, and decayed very much: For beside the cold entertainment that Paul had of it, when he arrived at Rome; what a decay of loue (and consequently of faith) was there when the Apostle was faine to haue his reliefe wherewith he was maintained in his imprisonment at Rome, sometime from the Church of Philippos, and at other times from Ephesus? But aboue all other what a shamefull and unworthy betraying of the truth was it, when in the first defence that hee made for the Gospell, there was not so much as one in that Church which stood by him to giue him any assistance. Cyprian is here, in his words corrupted, and in his meaning vtterly perverted For first they haue translated perfidia, misbeleefe: where the Grammer teacheth them that the proper signification of the word is to note vnfaithfull dealing, and a contrary worke to that which is promised or pretended. And as the word bindeth men to this signification; so it is plaine by the circumstance where Cyprian is to deale with the Romanes not for a matter of faith, but for vnsimple and couert carriage of themselues: If (professing vnity and reuerence to their Church) they should so lightly receiue such men into their Communion, which they had cast out from amongst them. Secondly that it was no part of Cyprians meaning to insinuate that they could not be ouerseen that way, or erre otherwise because they were the head Church, may appeare first by that Epistle, where hee sheweth they ought not there to haue been heard or received: For (saith he) when it is determined of vs all, and is both right and iust that euery mans cause be heard where the crime is committed, and that to euery Pastor a portion of the Lords flock is ascribed, which euery one ought to rule and gouerne, as he that shall giue an account of his owne act vnto the Lord. It behooveth verily that thoſe that we haue vnder our government, ſhould not rome hither a d thither,, nor yet by their deceitfull raſhneſſe breake the faſt agreement of Biſhops, but there to pleade their cauſe where they may haue the accuſers and witneſſes of their crime, vnleſſe the authority of the Biſhops of Affricke ſeeme to a few caſt-awaies and deſperate men to be leſſe, then the authority of the Biſhops of Rome: With whom he there compareth the African Biſhops; & that he eſteemed that that Church both might and d d erre is manifeſt, where he confuteth Stevens allegation in a matter of faith. For when he alleadgeth that no new thing ſhould be brought in, but that which hath been delivered: he anſwereth: From whence is this tradition? whether commeth it of the Lords, and of the Goſpels authority, or commeth it from the Apoſtles commandements and Epiſtles? for that thoſe things are to be done the Lord witneſſeth to Ioſuah &c, If therefore it be commanded in the Goſpell, or contained in the Epiſtles and Acts of the Apoſtles, that thoſe which come from what hereſie ſoever ſhould not be baptiſed, but onely haue hands put vpon them to repentance: let hardly this divine tradition be obſerved. But if in all places &c. And ſo proceedeth in declaring the contrary to Steven Biſhop of Rome out of the Scripture. Laſt of all, if Cyprian had eſteemed the Biſhop of Rome free from all attaint of Error, he would never with any patience haue heard any other, not onely confuting Steven Biſhop of Rome, but checking him as making vaine boaſt of his ſucceſſion from Peter, Who (ſaith he) giveth out that he hath by ſucceſſion Peters chaire, which notwithſtanding is moved with no zeale againſt heretikes. In the firſt place of Ierome the words alleadged by the Ieſuites, haue a ſufficient anſwere, which is not that the faith of Rome cannot be changed: but that that faith of Rome could not be changed which the Apoſtle praiſed, and which is fenced with the Apoſtles authority. Vnderſetting the faith of Rome, not with the authoritie of the Biſhops of Rome, but with the Apoſtolicall authority of S. Paul. And the truth is, that that faith and Religion of Rome, which S. Paul praiſed, and which is garded by his authority, hath a nature leſſe alterable then the heavens and the earth. But how far the Romaniſts of theſe latter ages haue removed themſelues from that faith and religion, the whole diſcourſe of this booke hath and ſhall (God willing) evidently declare.

Epiſt. 74. ad Pomp.

Cypr. Epiſt. 75. Numb. 6. 16.

In the ſecond place Ierome exhorteth Ruffine not to tranſlate Origenes errors into the Lattin tongue, which is the reſpect of their eares and faith he mentioneth, and not to aſſaile the religion which the Apoſtles praiſed, his reaſon is: Why doeſt thou ſet out that which neither Peter nor Paul would bring to light, which proveth rather that the Romanes were ſubiect to error. For Ierom feared that if Origens errors were ſet forth in the Lattin tongue, that they would haue been miſlead by them, and would haue been ouercome if they had been aſſailed.

In the third place his purpoſe is to ſhew, how the Apoſtle noteth every Province by certaine ſeverall properties that they had, the ſteps whereof either in vertue or error remained vnto that day. Now as hee commended their faith not becauſe they could not erre, but becauſe they were more religious in ſerving God, and more ſimple in receiving the truth: So that he eſteemed that they might be and were in danger of error, he noteth out by the two vices in them; the fountaine of error, and thoſe are a lightneſſe and eaſineſſe to receiue things without a due examination: and pride. The former whereof hee draweth from Rom. 16. I beſeech you brethren that you marke &c, The other from Rom. 12. For I ſay by the grace that is given vnto me. By which two vices of eaſineſſe to receiue traditions, and ſuch like: and pride of fained gifts and priviledges, as by two pully ropes the Romiſh Church hath been hoiſed up to the top of all hereſie and pride. Laſt of all, as hee ſheweth that loue in the Macedonians and Theſſalonians is not praiſed ſo, but that by other vices of idleneſſe, &c. they might fall into the contrary. So is hee to be underſtood concerning the Romanes faith, as appeareth in that as he dealeth with the one, ſo he doth with the other. For the fourth teſtimony out of Ierome, they haue wreſted his words: for he ſheweth that the faith that then the Romanes had being the Catholike faith, if he were of that faith he ſhould be of the Catholike faith And the reaſon wherewith hee proveth that Rome had the Catholike faith, is not becauſe it could not erre, but becauſe it had tranſlated none of Origenes errors.

In Cyprian it is evident that Antonianus ſaying that hee agreed with Cornelius, the Biſhop of Rome maketh a kinde of expoſition which hath a marke of correction: as if he ſhould ſay, I agree not ſo much with Cornelius, as with the Catholike faith. And that he meaneth not to meate out the catholike faith by Cornelius yard it is plain by the words imediately going before: where hee noteth the Catholike faith to be that whereunto the whole Colledge and fellowſhip of Prieſts did accord: where alſo Antonianus calleth Cornelius his fellow Biſhop, noting thereby his equality with Cornelius. The occaſion of Amboſe his place is in prayſing his brother, not onely zealous, but wary againſt errours, who asked firſt of a Biſhop whom he ſuſpected whether he were a Catholike, that is, whether he agreed with the Roman faith, wherein he calleth it the conſent of the Roman faith: in regard of one point which the Romans maintained againſt the Schiſmatikes. Now though one diſtinguiſh the Catholike faith (for brevitie ſake) by the faith of one Church, maintaining ſome one point of truth oppugned by another Church, yet that can be no reaſon to proue that the Catholike faith is alwaies one with the faith of the Church of Rome, Verſe. 9. For God is my witneſſe ‘ whom I ſerue ’ in my ſpirit in the Goſpell of his Sonne, that without intermiſsion I make † a memory of you.

How God is ſerued in ſpirit.

RHEM. 8. [9 Serue in ſpirit.] Divers heretickes when they heare that God is a Spirit, and muſt be ſerved and adored in ſpirit, imagine, that he muſt be honoured onely inwardly, without ceremonies and externall workes, which you ſee is otherwiſe, for that the Apoſtle ſerved God in Spirit, by Preaching the Goſpell. To ſerue God then in ſpirit, is to ſerue him with faith, hope, and charity, and withall workes proceeding of them: as to ſerue him carnally, is, with workes externall, with the ſaid internall vertues.

CARTVV. 8. [9. Serue in Spirit.] It is like enough that we are free from this hereſie whom ſuch bitter quarelling, and impudent adverſaries dare not touch. And as wee bee farre from that iudgement: ſo you are as farre from the true meaning of the Apoſtles words, who having taken God to witneſſe of his great affection to the Romans, to the end that hee might giue greater authority vnto his oath, as to that which came from a good conſcience: affirmeth that he ſerued God in the Goſpell, not as many for vaine glory, or for gain, but even from his heart. Wherefore although he heere ſever not the outward ſervice from the inward, yet he doth manifeſtly diſtinguiſh between the one and the other, which you Babilonically and confuſedly ſhuffle together.

RHEM. 9. [9. A Memorie of you.] A great example of charitie for all men, ſpecially for Prelats and Paſtors, not onely to preach, but to pray continually for the converſion of people to Chriſts faith? Which the Apoſtle did for them whom he neuer knew, in reſpect of Gods honour only, and the zeale of ſoules. Prayer for converſion of ſoules.

GARTVV. 9. [9 A memory of you.] S.

RHEM. 10 [15. To Evangelize] The Goſpell is not onely the life of our Saviour written by the foure Evangeliſts, nor onely that which is written in the new Teſtament: but their whole courſe of preaching and teaching the faith. Which faith commeth ordinarily of preaching and hearing, and not of writing or reading. And therefore S. Paul thought not himſelfe diſcharged by writing to the Romanes, but his deſire was to preach vnto them, for that was the proper commiſſion giuen to the Apoſtles, to preach to all nations. The writing of the bookes of the Teſtament, is an other part of Gods prouidence, neceſſary for the Church in generall, but not neceſſary for euery man in particular: as to be taught and preached vnto; is for euery one of age and vnderſtanding. And therefore S. Peter (who was the chiefe of the commiſſion) wrote little: many of them wrote nothing at all: and S. Paul that wrote moſt, wrote but little in compariſon of his preaching: nor to any but ſuch as were conuerted to the faith by preaching before. The Goſpel is not onely the written word Math. 28. The Apoſtles writing and preaching, whether more neceſſary, and how.

CARTVV. 10 [15 To Evangelize] The ſumme and ſhort of that which all the Apoſtles Preached, is written and ſet down, which written bookes of the new Teſtament that they belong vnto all men, looke before, where this point is at large diſcourſed, in the Anſwer to the Preface.

RHEM. 11. [17 Liueth by faith.] In the 10. to the Hebrewes, he ſheweth by this place of the Prophet (Abacuc. 2.) that the iuſt, though he liue here in peregrination, and ſeeth not preſently nor enioyeth the life euerlaſting promiſed to him, yet holdeth faſt thereof by faith. In this place he applieth the Prophets words further to this ſenſe, That it is our faith, that is to ſay, the Catholike beleefe, (ſaith S. Auguſtine) li. 3. cont. 2. ep. Pelag. Which maketh a iuſt man, and diſtinguiſheth between the iuſt and vniuſt, and that by the law of faith, and not by the law of works. Whereof it riſeth, that the Iew, the Heathen philoſopher, and the Hereticke, though they excelled in all works of morall vertues, could not yet be iuſt, and a Catholike Chriſtian man liuing but an ordinary honeſt life, either not ſinning greatly, or ſupplying his faults by penance, is iuſt. And this difference riſeth by faith, not that faith can ſaue any man without works, For it is not a reprobate faith that we ſpeake of, (as the holy Doctor ſaith) but that which worketh by charitie, and therefore remitteth ſinnes and maketh one iuſt. See. S. Auguſtines place. The Catholicke or Chriſtian faith with good workes iuſtifieth: and without this faith, no works whatſoeuer.

CARTVV. 11. [17 Liueth by faith.] There is ſome ſuch property of faith which you ſpeak of ſet forth otherwhere, but in Hebrewes 10, faith is ſpoken of as in this place, to ſet forth our righteouſneſſe by it: For the Apoſtle having exhorted to patience, whereby they ſhould do the will of God, the eaſier to keep us therein, declareth that their patience ſhould not be long exerciſed for that the Lord will ſpeedily come. And in that exhortation to patience for obedience to the will of God, leaſt any ſhould thinke that he ſhould thereby gaine life everlaſting, he preventeth that, expreſſing that ſo they ſhould obtaine the promiſe; which the Apoſtle oppoſeth to the workes of the Law, which that he might proue, and further meet with the terrour that the comming of Chriſt might ſtrike into the hearts of the faithfull through conſcience of the remainder and reliques of ſinne in them: he addeth, that the Iuſt man liueth by faith; which is yet more manifeſt, in that he further adioyneth that the godly were of faith to the acquiſition and purchaſe of their ſoules, Noting there by faith, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt which faith layeth hold of. And if we ſhould yeeld to the ſenſe you make of Hebrewes 10. yet were that ſenſe but a ſtraggling and vagabond ſpeech, neither helping you, nor hurting us, onely packed in, that where you haue nothing to anſwere ſuch evidence of truth, your vnlearned and partiall reader, might thinke that you were yet able to ſhake your nebbes againſt it. Auguſtines place is anſwered before, in the anſwer of the Argument of the Epiſtles. And if the Catholike and true faith make a iuſt man, then the workes which come after hee is made iuſt, cannot iuſtifie. And if it diſtinguiſh the iuſt man from the vniuſt, as the ſpecifical and formall difference, then in faith conſiſteth onely perfect righteouſnes. The lewd and vnlearned ſhift of the works and morall vertues of Iewes, Philoſophers and Heretickes, there will be a fitter place to ſpeake of. Hebr. 10. 36. 37. 38. Rom. 4. 13. 14. Heb. 10. 39

Verſe. 18. For the wrath of God from heaven is reuealed, upon all impiety and iniuſtice of thoſe men that detaine the verity of God in iniuſtice.

RHEM. 12. [18 Is reuealed.] By all the paſſage following you may ſee, that the Goſpell and Chriſts Law conſiſteth not onely in Preaching faith (though that bee the ground, and is firſt alwaies to be done) but to teach vertuous life and good workes, and to denounce damnation to all them that commit deadly ſinnes and repent not. And againe we ſee, that not onely lacke of faith is a ſinne, but all other actes done againſt Gods commandements. Not onely faith.

CARTVV. 12. [18 Is reuealed.] The iudgement here is true, but gathered not upon this place, but of your imagination.

Verſe. 26. Therefore I God hath delivered them into paſſions of ignominy. For their women haue changed the naturall uſe, into that uſe that is contrary to nature.

RHEM. 13. [26 Hath deliuered them vp.] As he ſaith here, God deliuered them vp, ſo to the Epheſians (c. 4. 19) he ſaith of the ſame perſons & things, They deliuered themſelues vp to al vncleanneſſe. So that it is not meant here that God doth driue, force or cauſe any man to ſin, as diuers blaſ- God is not the author of ſinne.

phemous Heretickes do hold: but onely that by his iuſt iudgment, for their own deſerting, and for due puniſhment of their former greevous offences, he withholdeth his grace from them, and ſo ſuffereth them to fall further into other ſinnes. As for their crime of Idolatrie, to ſuffer them to fall into vnnaturall abominations: as now for hereſie, taketh his grace and mercy from many, and ſo they fall headlong into all kind of turpitude, as contrariwiſe for ill life, he ſuffereth many to fall into hereſie. And for Chriſts ſake let euery one that is entangled with the Idolatry of this time, that is to ſay, with theſe new ſects, look well into his own conſcience, whether his forſaking the true God, may not come vnto him for a puniſhment of his former or preſent ill life which he liueth.

God puniſheth ſinne by permitting men to fall further and further.

Sins mortall and veniall.

RHEM. 14. [32. Worthy of death.] Here you ſee why the Church taketh ſome ſinnes to bee deadly, and calleth them mortall: to wit, becauſe all that do them, are worthy of damnation: others be veniall, that is to ſay, pardonable of their own nature and not worthy of damnation.

CARTVV. 14. [32 worthy of death.] Hereby all men may ſee what a blind buſſard the Church of Rome is, which knoweth not that he is curſed that abideth not in all the Law to do it, and that the wages of ſinne is death. They may alſo ſee, that as ſhe is departed from the truth, ſo ſhe is bereaved of her wits, and of all ſoundneſſe of iudgement: For how blunt and groſſe is this reaſon, that for ſomuch as the ſinnes wherewith the Gentiles are heere charged are worthy of death: Therefore there are ſinnes which are veniall and deſerue not death: as if there were no more ſinnes then thoſe whereof rehearſall is made in this place; or as if theſe things being damnable in the Gentiles which had no light of knowledge out of the word, leſſe then theſe were not damnable in ſuch to whom the glorious light of the Goſpel hath ſhined. Laſt of all, they may ſee, how (as if ſhe had drunke of the water of Leeth) ſhe forgetteth the beginning of a ſentence, or ever ſhe can come to the latter end thereof, For whereas all ſinne is either impiety or iniuſtice. The Apoſtle teacheth, that the wrath of God is reuealed from heaven againſt all manner of impiety and iniuſtice of men that hold the truth in vnrighteouſneſſe. And even in the beginning of the ſame place, where this enumeration of ſinnes is ſet out, it is noted that they were full of all manner of wickednoſſe or iniuſtice. Now if men be worthy of death for all manner of iniuſtice, that is of all manner of ſinne committed againſt the ſecond Table, they are much more worthy of death for all manner of vngodlineſſe, that is all manner of ſinne committed againſt the firſt Table, and conſequently are worthy of death for all manner of ſinne whatſoever, or how little ſoeuer: for further anſwer look before, upon Math. 5. 23. & 6. 12. & 12. 36.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſ. 6. VVHO will render to euery man | according to his workes.

RHEM. 1. [6. According.] Good men alſo according to the merits of their good will ſhall haue their reward. Aug. ep. 24.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1 FOr the which cauſe thou art inexcuſable O man whoſoeuer | thou be that iudgeſt, For wherein thou iudgeſt another thou condemneſt they ſelfe, for thou doeſt the ſame things which | thou iudgeſt.

Iudging other men.

RHEM. 2. [1, Thou that iudgeſt.] Such as by publike authoritie either ſpirituall or temporall haue to puniſh offenders, be not forbidden to iudge or condemne any for their offences, though themſelues be ſometimes guiltie in their conſcience of the ſame or greater: yet may it be matter of aggravating ſinnes before God, when they will not repent of thoſe offences themſelues, for the which they puniſh others, but if they be open offenders themſelues, in the ſame ſort for which they iudge other, they giue ſcandall, and thereby aggravate their ſinnes very much. Properly here he forbiddeth to charge another falſly or truely with theſe crimes whereof himſelfe is as far guilty or more then the other, as the Iewes ſpecially did the Gentiles, to whom he ſpeaketh here.

CARTVV. 2. [1 Thou that iudgeſt.] You wreſt the words of the Apoſtle from his naturall ſenſe, who from the nature of the Law ſheweth that ſuch reprehenders ſhall be condemned, and cannot ſtand in their own righteouſneſſe: for where the Apoſtle before ſaid that they were worthy of death, that not onely do, but alſo allow evill: the Iewes might thereby think that they were not ſubiect to death which condemned the evill.

Verſe. 4 Or | doeſt thou contemne the riches of his goodnes, and patience, and longanimity, not knowing that the benignitie of God bringeth thee to penance?

Gods long ſuffring is for our repentance.

RHEM. 3. [4. Doeſt thou contemne?] This proueth that God offereth his grace and mercy to many, and by long patience and ſufferance expecteth repentance, differring their puniſhment of purpoſe that they may amend, and that he is not delighted in their perdition, nor in the cauſe of their ſin; but but contrariwiſe that they harden their own hearts: and of their own freeewill reiect his grace and contemne his benignitie.

CARTVV.3. [4 Doſt thou contemne.] S.

RHEM.4. [6. According to his works.] Though the holy Apoſtles ſpeciall purpoſe bee in this Epiſtle, to commend vnto the Gentiles that truſted ſo much in their morall workes, the faith in Chriſt: yet leſt any man ſhould thinke or gather vntruely of his words, that Chriſtian mens works were not meritorious or the cauſe of Saluation, he expreſly writeth, that God giueth as well euerlaſting life and glory to men, for and according to their good works, as he giueth damnation for the contrary works. And howſoeuer Heretickes fondly flee from the euidence of theſe places, yet S. Auguſtine ſaith, Life euerlaſting to be rendred for good works according to this manifeſt Scripture. God ſhall render to euery man according to his works.

Lib. de grat. & lib. arb. c. 8.

CARTVV.4. [6 According to his workes.] A good worke is one thing, and a meritorious worke is another, conſidering that the worke in it ſelfe is not able to ſtand in Gods iudgement (much leſſe merit) which for manifold imperfections may bee worthily condemned, but onely in that God in Chriſt doth accept them, ſo that, if men ſhould haue life for good workes, yet ſhould they not haue life by merite of good workes. And as there is great difference betweene good and meritorious workes, ſo there is great diuerſity betweene receiuing reward according to his good works, and for or becauſe of his good workes, conſidering that the word according, noteth not the cauſe of that wherewith it is ioyned, but the manner and order thereof. And we willingly yeeld that between the calling, and the reward of life euerlaſting there muſt be good workes, without the which the faith of the Goſpell which men profeſſe is argued to be a vaine and a dead faith. Auguſtine moving a queſtion vpon theſe words how theſe two can ſtand, That God will render to euery one according to his workes, and how life euerlaſting ſhould be by grace; For reſolution of the doubt, his anſwer ſtandeth on two parts, the one that the good workes to which the reward is given, proceed from Gods grace, and are his grace, the other is, that eternall life is freely given to a good life, which good life is the free gift of God: For ſo he concludeth in the ſentence which you alledge. But that (meaning good life) to whomſoeuer it is given is onely of grace: But this (namely eternall life) which is given to it (to wit, to good life) becauſe it is the reward thereof, it is grace for grace, as it were a reward for righteouſneſſe: that it may be true (which indeed is true) that hee rendreth vnto euery man according to his workes: whereby it is euident that the reward according to workes by Auguſtine doth neither ſhut out the grace of God in the good life, nor in the life euerlaſting which is given according to the good workes; but of the contrary, that both being of grace alone, good workes in the cauſe of ſalvation are quite ſhut forth, and haue not where to ſet a foot: although in the order and meane to come to ſalvation they haue neceſſary ſtanding. In the other teſtimony of Auguſtine, wherewith they haue garded or rather ragged their Margent, ſpeaking of the queſtion between them and the Pelagians, he ſaith, that as thoſe of diſcretion periſh not onely for originall but for actuall ſinne; ſo euen good men themſelues ſhall obtaine the fruitfull and deſerued reward of a good will, and alſo haue reckoned by grace the very good will it ſelfe. And ſo having anſwered the Pelagians onely, which gaue not good workes wholy to grace. For the other queſtion, whether our merits are indeed merites in regard of the workes themſelues, or in regard of Chriſts merits, he referreth himſelfe to the place ere-while by us alledged. Thus alſo appeareth that as often as theſe men through the mighty tempeſt of the truth are driven for ſhelter vnto Auguſtine, ſo often, in a manner, are they conſtrained to leaue a peece of their goates haire behind them. Notwithſtanding that in ſome ſenſe this is true, even according to the doctrine of the Goſpell, which teacheth the carefull indevour of all good workes of the Law, yet here the meaning is farre otherwiſe.

Eph. 2. 3. 4. Eph. 2. 10. Ierem. 2. 17 Lib. de grat. & lib. arb. c. 8.

Verſe. 13 For *[1] not the hearers of the Law are iuſt with God: but the doers of the Law [2] ſhall be iuſtified.

RHEM.5. [13. Not the hearers.] This ſame ſentence agreeable alſo to Chriſts words (Mat. 7. 21.) is the very ground of S. Iames diſputation that not faith alone, but good works alſo do iuſtifie. Therefore S. Paul (howſoeuer ſome peruerſly conſter his words in other places) meaneth the ſame that S. Iames. And here he ſpeaketh * not properly of the firſt iuſtificaition, when an Infidell or ill man is made iuſt, who had no acceptable workes before to be iuſtified by (of which kind he ſpecially meaneth in other places of this Epiſtle) but he ſpeaketh of the ſecond iuſtification or encreaſe of former iuſtice, which he that is in Gods grace, dayly proceedeth in, by doing all kind of good works, which bee iuſtices: and for doing of which, he is iuſt indeed before God, and of this kind doth S. Iames namely treate. Which is directly againſt the Heretickes of this time, who not onely attribute nothing to the works done in ſinne and infidelitie, but eſteeme nothing at all of all Chriſtian mens works toward iuſtification and ſaluation, condemning them vncleane, ſinfull, hypocritall, and Phariſaicall: which is directly againſt theſe and other Scriptures, and plaine blaſpheming of Chriſt and his grace, by whoſe ſpirit and cooperation we do them,

The firſt, iuſtificaition, without workes: the ſecond, by workes.

S. Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt ſpecially, S. Iames of the ſecond.

CARTVV.5 [15. Not the hearers.] And if the wreſting of mens words from their honeſt meaning be a ſin worthy of death, what a horrible condemnation waiteth for theſe Ieſuits, that pull and hale the Lords words to a quite contrary meaning then he ſet them downe. For the Apoſtle having diſputed in the former chapter, that no man hath any righteouſneſſe of his owne by any manner of worke. In this ſecond chapter he deſcendeth to the ſpeciall cauſe of the Iewes, which of all other might ſeeme to be exempted from that generallity of Iniuſtice, wherewith hee had charged the whole world; the opinion of whoſe Iuſtice might riſe in that they had not onely an exact knowledge of the law, in ſuch ſort, that every Iew was able after a ſort to be a guide vnto the blinde, and a Doctor to the vnlearned: But alſo for that in ſome meaſure of the holy ſpirit they received, many of them gaue their endeavour to do the works of the law. Now the Apoſtle to throw down this ſtately & proud Caſtle of the opinion of their own iuſtice, declareth that the Iuſtification that is of the law, ſtan-deth not in the hearing or knowledge of the law, no if (possibly) they could attaine the full and perfect knowledge thereof, but in the full and perfect doing and accomplishment thereof, which hee doth more expresly set foorth to the Galathians, where he requireth to justification by the workes Gal.3.10. of the law a performance of all the commandements, and that constant and perpetuall without any intermission or interruption by stepping a haire breadth aside, either on the right hand or on the left. Now that the Apostle meaneth not those onely which either heard the law onely, or did the outward and civill workes of the law, which a mere naturall man doth, but that he withall compriseth those which having beleeved brought foorth by the worke of the spirit, good fruits; it appeareth diversly. First by the writing of this Epistle, wherein he instructed those that beleeved in Christ, but not without some wavering in this doctrine which he so largely unfoldeth, as appeareth in that his desire was Rom.1.11. to come to them, that they might bee strengthned. Secondly it appeareth by the testimony

Ezc.36.20 21.22. of the Prophet Ezechiel, who doth evidently as well by that which goeth before, as by that which commeth after, reforre the sentence which the Apostle draweth from him, touching the name of God blasphemed amongst the Gentiles for the Iewes sake, unto the true Church and spouse of Christ. And this the floating and unconstant Iesuites haue in their marginall note at unawares confessed. wherein they say; It is a great sinne that by the evill life of the faithfull our Lords name should be evill
2.Sam.12. 14. spoken of. And the example of David, a faithful man, who caused the name of God to be blasphemed, will not suffer us to remaine in any doubt, but that the cause of blaspheming of Gods name may fall into the Church of God. Last of all, this is evident by the examples of Abraham and David, which the Rom.4. Apostle setteth forth. For touching Abraham, he obaying the voice of the Lord when hee called him first out of Caldea, and then out of Charan, must needs even then haue faith; yet some yeeres after upon the promise made unto him of the blessed seede received by faith, it is said that his faith did iustifie him, and not his good workes, which he had done very excellent and manifold. So that although hee were a doer of the law after he beleeved, yet still his Iustification is placed in faith. This is yet more manifest in the example of David, who having beleeved, or at least having been sanctified more then 40 yeers, and done many singular acts of true godlines before his foule crimes, of the murder of many his faithfull servants by the sword of the Ammonites, of the adultery with Bathsheba, and finally of the Psa.32.1.2. drunkennesse that he threw Vriah into, placeth his repaire not as the Iesuits blasphemously doe in the satisfaction which is by workes, but in faith which beleeveth and layeth hold of remission of sinnes by Christ. Whereby appeareth the leud and blockish answer of the Iesuites, which wrest the Apostles denial of justification by workes of the law to those civill workes that men either worke by the light and strength of nature, or by a bare knowledge of the law, without any assistance of Gods spirit, and withall their sottish καινοφωνία, and new fangled distinction of the first iustification by faith alone, and of the second iustification by faith and works together is crushed all to peeces; seing the Apostle ascribeth the iustification which men haue after they are entred into the way of righteousnesse, not to workes
Rom.1.17. done, either before or after to be done, but unto that faith which being first planted in their hearts after waxeth and groweth to that proportion that the Lord seeth good in his great wisdome to bee fit for every one according to the place he occupieth in the body of Christ, and trials that hee will proue them with. Heereupon the Apostle in the staires whereby we orderly come to the kingdome of 1.Cor.1.30 heaven, doth never set one iustification after another, but placeth sanctification after iustification. And if this new and vnlawfull coine of distinction were true, then the sentence of the Apostle, should
Eph.4.4.5. not haue where to set foot, which declareth that as there is but one true body, one spirit whereby that body liveth, one hope of our calling, one true Lord, one lawfull baptisme, one true God: so there is but one true and holy faith. Touching Saint Iames it shall be answered (God willing) in the proper place. As for Augustine, he utterly refuseth to be fraughted with such beggerly merchandice, as you would loade him with. But so (saith he) it must be understood that the doers of the law shall be iustified, that we may know that they are not otherwise doers of the law, vnlesse they be iustified: that iustification should not come to the doers of the law, or be an after commer to them, but that iustification should goe before the doers of the law, which cleane overturneth the Iesuits diversly. First that he maketh the doing of the law to be the effect of iustification, which they make the cause, and call it the second Iustification. Secondly because he maketh one Iustification which alwaies goeth before good workes, and is done that wee may be fit for good workes. So this giveth answere to his words alleadged in the next Annotation. For those words meane thus much, that we being iust in Christ, because wee haue in him done the law, must haue that grace ere we can doe the law, as apeareth first because these words follow upon the former sentence, and is so expounded by the words immediately following. And by this it is as much as if a man would say, they shalbe made doers of the law, not that they were, but that they may be, that so the Iews might understand which are the hearers of the law, that they haue need of the grace of the iust iustifier: that they may be doers. For that Augustine doth not acknowledge a second righteousnesse, whereby a man may be iustified, shall once for all appeare by these places following. Every living man iustifieth
Aug. Psal. 142. himselfe before himselfe, not before thee. How before himselfe? In pleasing themselues and displeasing thee. But before thee no man is iustified. Enter not therefore with me into iudgement O Lord my God, how much soever I seeme to be righteous. Thou bringest out of thy treasure a rule, which when thou applyest unto me I shall be found nought. And after having noted with thy servant, that all, even the Apostles, after they were Apostles must pray, forgiue us our sinnes. Hee saith in the end; Let therefore the Apostles say, Let them hardly say forgiue us our debts as we forgiue our debters. And when it is said to them, why say you so? what be your debts? Let them answere, because no man living shall be iustified in thy sight. And in another place he saith; He said not I shall not be able to abide it, but who shall be able to abide it, for that the whole life of man is in a manner
Aug. in Psal. 130. & secundum illum 129. darked at by their owne sins, that all consciences are accused by their owne thoughts, that there is not found a chaste heart which presumeth of it owne righteousnesse. If therefore there is no chaste heart that can presume of it own righteousnesse, let every mans heart presume of Gods mercy, and let it say unto God; If thou O Lord wilt observe or marke vp our iniquities, O Lord who shall abide it? But what hope is there? because with thee there is mercy: And what is this mercy but the sacrifice? And what is the sacrifice but that which was offered for us? even the innocent blood that was shed hath done away all the sinnes of the guilty: the price onely which was given re- deemeth all captiue from the hands of the enemie that carried them captiue. Therefore there is mercy with the Lord: for if there were not mercy with thee: and if thou wilt be nothing elſe but a Iudge, and not merciſull, and ob'erue or marke vp all our iniquities, and inquire into them, who ſhall be able to abide it; who ſhould ſtand and ſay I am innocent.

As for the other traſh which they haue in their next noteleſſe note. Firſt let the good Reader marke, that they confeſſing proofe of our part out of the Scripture that to iuſtifie is to impute iuſtice, bring nothing to the reproofe thereof beſide their owne barking. For their ſottiſh conſequence that God ſhould be either ignorant or vniuſt, if he ſhould repute him as righteous which is not ſo, is vnworthy any anſwere: for firſt he hath Chriſts righteouſneſſe, which being a true and perfect righteouſneſſe is as verily his through faith, as if he had done it in his owne perſon. Secondly, they wickedly ſpeak of a man that being iuſtified by faith, is made a member of the body of Chriſt: when they ſay he is wicked, impious and vniuſt: for although they haue remnants of ſinne in them, yet for that the ſame is not imputed vnto them, it is blaſphemous againſt Chriſt to account his members impious, and to make him a head of any impious body. Thirdly, this is not ſo much againſt vs as againſt the Apoſtle, who ſpeaketh ſo plainely that God iuſtifieth the wicked, that he loued vs when we were his enemies, as we cannot ſpeake plainelyer. Againe they impudently bely vs, when they make the ſtate of the queſtion betweene vs and them; Whither it be more glory to God, and more to the commendation of Chriſts iuſtice, to call and count an evill man ſo continuing for iuſt, then by his grace to make him of an evill one iuſt indeed, and ſo truly to iuſtifie him. For they know well that we teach, that the iuſtified man muſt walke in all the waies and commandements of God, and vrge the keeping of the Law much more ſtreightly then they do, which make partly ſin no ſin, partly make veniall ſins, which a little holy water may take away: yea ſo we vrge it, as we pronounce that they neuer truly beleeved, nor were ever iuſtified which remaine in the ſame wickedneſſe wherein they were when they firſt obtained mercy. Now take away your ſlanderous and lying forgery of vs, that a man iuſtified by faith remaineth ſtill in impiety. And we boldly affirme that there is more glory to God, and commendation to Chriſts Iuſtice, to call and account an evill man iuſt; then to make him of an evill one iuſt, in the workes that are done in and by himſelfe. And this we ſay not onely as you beggarly Sophiſters are wont to doe, but with ſound and ſubſtantiall proofe. And firſt after this ſort, it is more to Gods glory, whereby glory is to be taken from men and giuen vnto God, then that whereby glory being added to men is taken from God: But by iuſtification through faith alone, or by imputation, glory is taken from men, and given to God; and contrariwiſe in iuſtification by the deeds of the law. Wherefore it is more to Gods glory that he iuſtifieth vs by faith onely then by the workes of the law. The firſt propoſition is both evident in it ſelfe, and is confirmed by the plaine teſtimonies of the Apoſtle. The ſecond is as euident by the ſame Apoſtle, who ſhutteth out glorying from men not by the law of workes, but by the law of faith. Where if the Ieſuits would run to their old hole, that hee meaneth the civill and outward workes done of Iewes and Gentiles not beleeving in Chriſt, their own diſciples would hiſſe and clap their hands againſt them: for ſo much as ſo they ſhould place greater excellency in workes done in infidelity, then in the faith that is in Chriſt; conſidering that the Apoſtle by that doing of the law there ſpoken of, affirmeth that more glory is pulled to men from God, then when their iuſtification ſtandeth by faith without workes, wherein if there were yet any manner of ſcruple, yet the ſame is moſt evidently remedied of the Apoſtle, who by and by aſking whether faith which he had mentioned in the former words were contrary to that law which likewiſe he had mentioned before: he (with great deteſtation) affirmeth, that faith not onely doth not make the law void, or is contrary vnto it: but that by faith he and all other of his fellows did eſtabliſh the law. And indeed whither we conſider the exact righteouſneſſe which God requireth in his law, it was never heretofore, nor ever ſhall bee hereafter, that any the ſonnes of Adam beſide Chriſt, could or can preciſely obſerue the law of God, or whither we conſider that the Lord requireth ſanctification in ſome acceptable meaſure, according to the gifts which he hath dealt to every of the faithfull: there could not ſo much as the leaſt and ſmalleſt commandement of God bee once with a good heart (I ſay) not done, but not ſo much as endeuoured by vnbeleevers, ſeeing all good workes come from faith as the fountaine of them all. Now it is manifeſt that the faith of Chriſt is contrary to all ſuch workes proceeding from infidelity, as thoſe which are not done of faith, nor proceede from a pure conſcience purged by faith. Secondly we ſay that by our iudgement of faith alone in the cauſe of ſalvation the iuſtice of God is maintained, which by their fantaſie of iuſtification by workes of the law is vtterly overthrowne. For whileſt the redemption and riddance from ſinne is placed in the death of Chriſt, and our ſtole and robe of righteouſneſſe, whereby we may confidently ſtand againſt the ſentence of Gods iudgement is placed in the obedience which our Saviour Chriſt yeelded vnto God his father in his own perſon: It is brought to paſſe that we haue both a full & perfect ſatisfaction for all our ſinnes, and a whole and vnmaimed righteouſneſſe, againſt which God in his moſt exact iuſtice cannot proceede, no more then he can call his owne ſonne vnto a ſecond death, or not accept his face, who is the righteouſneſſe of God himſelfe. On the other ſide, if he ſhould accept in Chriſt mens owne ſatisfaction for their ſinnes, or the worke that they doe after they be ingraffed in this body of Chriſt for righteouſneſſe. It muſt neceſſarily follow, that God ſhould be vniuſt in both, for he ſhould take that for a perfect ſatisfaction which is not, (no man being able to make payment for the manifold talents wherewith he is indebted vnto God) and that for a perfect and whole righteouſneſſe, which hath many tranſgreſſions of the law ioyned therewith: when therefore this iuſtice (wherein his glory conſiſteth as well as in his mercy) would not ſuffer him to ſhew mercy without a full recompence for ſinne, and an exact righteouſneſſe of the law: there remained onely this way to accord his iuſtice and mercy, and to cauſe them to embrace one another, that Chriſt ſhould be both our ſurety to pay our debts, and our righteouſneſſe, by the which we might come into the preſence of God. And if this imputatiue Iuſtice without the workes of the law be ſo ſtrange in your eares; how commeth it to paſſe that your ſelues hold that originall ſinne of infants that are baptized is (without any worke of theirs) pardoned in the blood of Christ? If imputation be generally refused in the Scripture, why haue you admitted it in the remission of sinnes? why should you thrust it out in the other part of our saluation, which is righteousnesse. And if God may impute mens sinnes to Christ being iust, why may he not impute his righteousnesse to those that are not in themselues righteous? If therefore the pride of your heart doth carry you away that you will not amend your selues at our correction, yet suffer your selues to be corrected by your selues. Having answered your question tell vs we pray you, whether there is more honour to a King in freely forgiving his seruant a debt, and giving him foorthwith to be rich of; or to giue him some meanes of office or occupation, whereby he may in time (if he will) both pay his debt, and grow to wealth againe. And for that you would seeme to be iealous of Gods glory, and of the commendation of Christs Iustice, tell us further whither we or you shot neerer this mark: we which affirme that we haue no manner of ability in our selues, or by our naturall power to doe any thing which is good, but onely by the grace of God in Christ; or you that affirme that we haue some strength of nature in our selues, which being helped by the grace of God in Christ is able to doe the will of God. We which say with the Apostles that naturally we are stark dead; or you that say we are but halfe dead: we which giue greater power unto Christ in the healing of the soule, then to the Phisition in healing of the body, or you which giue no more unto Christ in healing the soule then is given to Phisitians in healing the body: For when as the Phisitian through his cunning is able to recouer a man that is halfe dead by his skill, notwithstanding cannot attaine to the restoring of a man that is dead: By this doctrine of yours you match and mate the Phisitians cunning in his faculty, and our Saviour Christs in his. Finally wee which make Christ a whole Saviour, or you that make him halfe a Saviour.

Gen. 2. Ind. 12.

Against imputatiue iustice.

RHEM. 6. [16. Shall be iustified.] Of the other articles deceitfully handled by Heretickes, they vse most guile in this of Iustification: and specially by the equivocation of certaine words, which is proper to all contentious wranglers, and namely in this word, Iustifie. Which because they find sometime to signifie the acquiting of a guilty man of some crime whereof he is indeed guilty, and for which he ought to be condemned, (as by mans iudgement either of ignorance or of purpose often a very malefactor is deemed or declared and pronounced innocent) they falsly make it to signifie in this place and the like, whereseuer man is said to be iustified of God for his works or otherwise: as though it were said, that God iustifieth man, that is to say, imputeth to him the iustice of Christ though he be not indeed iust: or of fauour reputeth him as Iust, when indeed he is wicked, impious, and vniust. Which is a most blasphemous doctrine against God, making him either ignorant who is iust, and so to erre in his iudgement, or not good, that can loue and saue him whom he knoweth to be euill. And a maruelous pittifull blindnesse it is in the Churches Aduersaries, that they should thinke it more to Gods glory, and more to the commendation of Christ iustice, merits, and mercy, to call and count an ill man so continning, for iust: then by his grace and mercy to make him of an ill one, iust indeed, and so truely to iustifie him, or as the word doth here signifie, to esteeme and approue for iust indeed, him that by his grace keepeth his law and commandements. For, that the keepers or doers of the commandements be iust, and so reputed, it is plain by the correspondence to the former words, Not the hearers are iust, but the doers. Whereupon S. Augustine de Sp. & lit. c. 26. to 3. hath these words, When it is said, The doers of the Law shalbe iustified, what other thing is said, then, The iust shall be iustified? for the doers of the Law verily are iust.

True inherent iustice more for Gods glory and for the commendation of Christ.

CARTVV. 6. [15 Shall be iustified.] Look the answer in the fore-going Section.

Verse. 26 If then the prepuce | keepe the iustices of the Law: shall not his prepuce be reputed for circumcision;

True iustice both in Iew and Gentile, is by keeping the Law.

RHEM. 7 [26. Keepe the iustices.] If a Gentile either now since Christ, by his grace & faith, or any other before Christ, not of the stock of Abraham, through the Spirit of God keepe his iustices of the Law, he is iust no lesse then if he had been outwardly circumcised, and shall condemne the circumcised Iew not keeping the Law, without which his outward Sacrament cannot serue him, but shal be much to his condemnation, that hauing the Law and peculiar Sacraments of God, hee did not keepe the Law, nor inwardly exercise that in his heart which the outward signe did import. And all this is no more but to insinuate that true iustice is not in faith only or knowledge of the Law, or in the name either of Iew or Christian, but in doing good workes and keeping the Law by Gods grace.

CART VV. 7. [26 Keep the Iustices.] Because the Iewes attributed so much to the bare cutting off the fore-skin, without regarding the truth of the covenant whereof it was the seale. Therefore he sheweth that it is turned into incircumcision, that is; that they in effect gained no more thereby, then if they had not beene circumcised at all. Now when the Apostle teacheth that circumcision is the seale of the righteousnesse by faith: he declareth sufficiently that therefore they remained unrighteous, and were transgressours of the Law, because they beleeved not, and therefore that a Gentile hauing the faith of God in Christ, should although he were not circumcised, condemne the Iew which was circumcised in the flesh and not in the heart, for so hee should be first perfectly righteous, by the righteousnesse of our Saviour Christ imputed unto him. Secondly, he should be sanctified by the spirit of God which would restraine him from his former greedinesse to sinne and inkindle a loue of righteousnesse, which would put him forward to pursue in some measure after righteous and commendable actions. And it partly deceiveth the Iesuites, that from the 17. of this chapter, the Apostle speaketh not onely of the law of commandements, but of the whole doctrine of the Law and Prophets that the Iewes were trusted with, wherein the iustice by faith is singularly commended. Beside this, the Iesuites understand not that the Apostle putteth a ease onely, and sheweth not what was done of the Gentiles under the Law, and before the coming of our Saviour Christ: for to them there was no way of salvation (unlesse it were very extraordinary) but by incorporating themselues into the body of the the Iewes, and receiving the seale of Circumcision.

Deut. 29.

Vers.

Verse. 29 But he that is in secret is a Iewe: and the circumcision of the heart, in spirit not in the letter: whose praise is not of men, but of God.

RHEM. 8. [29 In spirit, not letter.] The outward ceremonies, Sacraments, threats, and commandements of God in the Law, are called the letter: the inward working of God in mens heart, and enduing him with faith, hope, and charitie, and with loue, liking, will, and abilitie to keep his commandements by the grace and merits of Christ, are called the spirit. In which sense, the carnall Iew, was the Iew according to the letter, and he was circumcised after the letter, but the true beleeuing Gentile obseruing by Gods grace in heart & in Gods sight, that which was meant by that carnal signe, is a Iew according to the spirit, & iustified by God. Of the spirit and letter S. Augustine made a famous worke, very necessary for the vnderstanding of this Epistle.

CARTVV. 8. [29. In spirit and not letter.] In all that famous worke of Augustine, de spiritu & littera, the Iesuites are not able to shew that any man hath any such ability given him, as that thereby he should be able exactly to keep the commandements, unlesse it be that he keepe them through faith in Christ, who hath fulfilled the Law for him.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 4. GOd forbid. but * God is true: and * I euery man a lyar, as it is writen That thou mayest be iustified in thy Words, and overcome when thou art iudged.

RHEM. 1. [4. Every man a lyar.] God onely by nature is true, all mere men by nature may lie, deceiue, and be deceiued: yet God by his grace and spirit may and doth preserue the Apostles and principall governours of his people, and the Church and Councels in all truth, though they were and are mere men.

CARTVV. 1. [4. Every man a lyar. The Apostles, Prophets, and other the publike notaries of the Lord are not exempted from this sentence, no further then in their function and Ministeries, by word or by writing. For Iudas an Apostle having in his function taught nothing but the truth, was notwithstanding mervailously unfaithfull to an utter falling from the truth. And S. Peter keeping alwaies a streight course in preaching and writing, yet in the practise of his life by dissimulation, when certain Iewes from Ierusalem came unto him at Antioch gaue a very dangerous offence. But that either Governours of the Church or Councell now hath this prerogatiue in the Church, that they cannot erre in their publike ministery is false, never proved of the Iesuites, and often reproved of us. Verse. 22. And the Iustice of God by faith of Iesus Christ, unto all and upon all that ‡ beleeue in him. For there is no distinction.

RHEM. 2. [22. Beleeued in him,] To beleeue in him heere compriseth not onely the act of faith, but of hope and charity, as the Apostle explicateth himselfe, Gal. 5. 6.

GARTVV. 2 [22. Beleeue in him.] It is an absurd speech, and without warrant either of Scripture, or trope and figure of speech that the word Faith, compriseth hope and charity: for that the Apostle Gal. 5. 6. expoundeth himselfe so is most false, as shall appeare in that place.

Vers. 24. Iustified ‡ gratis by his grace, by the redemption that is in CHRIST IESVS.

RHEM. 3. [24. Gratis by his grace.] No man attaineth his first Iustification by the merits either of his faith or workes, but merely by Christs grace and mercy, though his faith and workes proceeding of grace, be dispositions and preparations thereunto.

CARTVV. 3. [24. Gratis by his grace.] The rediculous and new start up distinction worthy to be whipped out with rods starke naked, as indeed it hath not a rag of reason to cover it with, hath been overthrowen by reasons. The filth and shame whereof appeareth in this place. for that thereby the precious redemption, which is purchased unto us by Christ is so embased, and so called downe by these popish bankers, that none but the sinnes before faith can be ransomed by this infinite redemption in Christ, where the Apostle reasoneth cleane contrary, that if we were saved by Christ before faith, we shall be much more saved by him after that through faith we are reconciled unto him. So that if the redemption in Christ saued us when we were void of all grace, it shall haue yet greater power to saue having obtained grace. And as if this horrible blasphemie were but a small thing in the eies of these uncleane spirits, they affirme, that even the first grace is provoked and after a sort procured of us, directly contrary to the Apostle, that affirmeth that he loved vs when we were his enemies, and before we loved him, and was found of us when we sought not after him.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 5. But if our iniquity commend the Iustice of God, what shall wee say? Is God iniust that executeth wrath? (I speake according to man.)

RHEM. 4. [5. If your iniquity.] No maruell that many now adaies deduce false and detestable conclusions out of this Apostles high and hard writings, seeing that S. Peter noted it in his daies, and himselfe heere confesseth that his preaching and speeches were then falsly misconstrued: as though he had taught that the Iewes and Gentiles ill life and incredulity had been directly the cause of Gods more mercy, and that therefore sinne commeth of God to the advancement of his glory, and consequently consequently that men might or should doe ill that good might ensue thereof. Which blasphemous

S. Paul speeches mistaken of the [illegible]ked.

Rom. 5. 20. constructions they tooke of these and the like words; Where sinne abounded, there did grace more abound:
Rom. 3. 4. and the law entred in that sinne might abound: and out of Psalm 50. Thou mayest be iustified in thy words, and ouercome when thou art iudged. As though he meant that men doe sinne to the end that God may be iustified. And at all these and the like places of the Apostle, though forewarned by S. Peter, and by the Apostles owne defence and protestation, that he never meant such horrible things, yet the wicked also of this time do stumble and fall. But the true meaning is in all such places, that God can and doth when it pleaseth him, conuert those sins which man committeth against him and his commandements, to his glory: though the sinnes themselues stand not with his will, intention, nor honour, but be directly against the same, and therefore may not be committed that any good may fall: For what good soever accedentally falleth, it proceedeth not of the sinner but of Gods mercy that can pardon, and of his omnipotency, that can turne ill to good. And therefore against those carnall interpretations S. Paul very carefully and diligently giveth reason also in this place, v.6. that it is impossible: because God could not iustly punish, any man, nor sit in iudgement at the latter day for sinne without plaine iniury, if either himselfe would haue sinne committed, or man might doe it to his glory. Therefore let all sincere readers of the Scriptures, and specially of S. Pauls writings, hold this for a certainety, as the Apostles owne defence (whatsoever he seeme to say hereafter sounding in their sence, that sinne commeth of God, or may therefore be committed, that he may work good thereof) that the Apostle himselfe condemneth that sense as slanderous and blasphemous.

The sense of the places that sound as if God caused sin.

CARTVV. 4. [5. If your iniquity.] You should be the wonder of the world if you could proue either by Peter or otherwise, that men perverted the words of this Epistle, or ever it was yet come into any mans hands. That God so farre willeth sinne, as that hee giveth life and moving unto those that commit it, directeth it how far or how short a way it shall goe, (but yet for his glory onely, and the edifying of his Church, and not for that it is sinne) And finally whatsoever belongeth unto this place looke before upon Mat. 6. 13. & 13. 15.

Verse 10. As it is written, That there is not any man iust.

*How it is said, none Iust. Iob. 1. * Luke. 1.*

RHEM. 5. [10. Not any iust.] These generall speaches, that both Iew and Gentile be in sinne, and none at all iust, are not so to be taken, that none in either sort were euer good, the Scriptures expresly saying that Iob, Zachary, Elisabeth, and such like, were iust before God, and it were blasphemy to say that these words alleaged out of the 13. Psalme, were meant in Christs mother, in S. Iohn the Baptist, in the Apostles &c. For, this onely is the sense, that neither by the law of nature, nor law of Moses, could any man be iust or auoide such sinnes as here be reckoned, but by faith and the grace of God, by which there were a number in all ages (specially among the Iewes) that were iust and holy, whom these words touch not, being spoken onely to the multitude of the wicked, which the Prophet maketh as it were a seuerall body conspiring against Christ, and persecuting the iust and godly, of which ill company he saith, that none was iust nor feared God.

RHEM. 5. [10. Not any iust.] There is no hedge so high, nor ditch so defensiuely made against these wild beasts, which they will not giue the assay, either by some sophisticall sleight to leape ouer, or else by some blunt and blockish attempt to rush thorow: of which latter kinde their answer is in this. For if the Prophet and Apostle had laid their heads together, to haue found out the most forcible words, and most significatiue to shut all men borne of the seed of man from righteousnesse, and to shut them under sinne, they could not haue used more effectuall speeches then these, which the Prophet and Apostle haue used, when they say that all, both Iewes and Gentiles haue not only sinned, but Vers. 9. are under sinne; that all the world is in Gods danger by reason of sinne, that there is no man iust. And in an infi-Vers. 19. nite foresight of such impudent deceiuers as these are, he contenteth not himselfe with this (which Vers. 10. was yet enough for all tractable and teachable spirits) but addeth that there is not so much as one that Vers. 12. is iust: which he yet repeateth the second time, that they might haue a double, or rather a manifold condemnation, which should giue the attempt of breaking thorow so many dores and barres to steale this truth of God out of his house, which is the Church. Where let the reader marke what good harmony these lying Iesuits haue with the Prophet and Apostle. They say that all both Iewes and Gentiles are sinners. The Iesuites, that neither all the Iewes nor all the Gentiles are sinners. They say that all are in Gods danger or debt by reason of sinne, whatsoever he be: the Iesuites that there are some that owe nothing in that regard; as if they esteemed it a great imbasement for such to be in Gods debt, which the Apostle teacheth to be to the high honour and glory of God. They say that all haue declined: the Iesuites not all. They say that there is no man iust: the Iesuits, that there are some. They that there is not so much as one, the Iesuits that there are many. This they affirme oft for greater vehemency and euidence of the truth: this the Iesuits deny more then twenty times, declaring thereby, that albeit they haue a mouth, yet haue they no forehead or bashfulnesse. Withall let the Reader consider what likelihood there is that these men will acknowledge any thing proued out of the Scripture which misliketh them, that spurne against so manifest a truth, and which (vile and miserable wormes as they be) being not able to beare the weight of the Scripture treading upon them, will yet wriggle their tailes against it. And where they take it for an absurd thing that these words should be verified of Iob, Zacharie, Elizabeth, the virgin Mary, and Iohn Baptist; It is onely their brutish Ignorance, which thorowout picking here and there a word or sentence; knowing no more the course and disposition of the bookes of Scripture, nor the knot and coherence of one sentence with another. then if they had never read the Scriptures: For the Apostle having shewed in the former part of this Chapter, that the Iewes were better then all other nations in regard of the gracious priuiledges that the Lord hath beautified them with: now sheweth that (those graces excepted) they were not a whit better then other nations, but were all both Iewes and Gentiles by nature the children of wrath, destitute of all goodnesse, and fraught with all vngodlinesse and vnrighteousnesse. Wherefore neither Iob, the holy virgin Mary, nor Iohn Baptist, nor any mere man is exempted from this ſenrence, as thoſe which haue the roote of all theſe, and ſo deſerue to haue by the tranſgreſſion of our fore-father Adam; And not that onely, but for the ſame bitter rootes ſake, deſerue to be giuen over to bring forth the poiſoned fruits thereof. Therefore that thoſe fruits are reſtrained by the ſpirit of God working in them, and the contrary brought forth, according to that meaſure that the euill fruits are ſubdued: it proceedeth not of any better nature in them then is in the moſt ungodly, but onely from the undeſerued grace of God in Chriſt Ieſus. And for ſo much as of this naturall poyſon which we ſucked from the old ſerpent, there is no counterpoyſon ſo ſtrong as can ſo rid us of it during this life in the higheſt ſtep of godlineſſe, that any man through Chriſt hath attained unto, but that there will alwaies bee ſome remnants and reliques thereof: It muſt neceſſarily follow that there can be no ſuch righteouſneſſe as can deſerue the reward of life at Gods hands: For if one dead flie be able to marre a whole box of pretious ointment, how much more many infinite dead workes (which are committed by the iuſteſt) make abhominable all his righteouſneſſe, were it not that their wicked actions being forgiven, thoſe that are done well, though in imperfection, by the grace of God, and for the promiſe in Chriſt, are accepted for good, which of themſelues (although not in the ſame fulneſſe of euill that wicked actions are done in) are naught and damnable. Laſt of all, if they had attended to the concluſion of the Apoſtle ver. 19. 20. that the Prophets ſayings are to all vnder the law, that no fleſh ſhould be iuſtified by the works of the Law, unleſſe they doubt whether Zacharie the good Prieſt, and Mary the holy virgine were vnder the Law, or whether they be fleſh or no, they could not haue beene ſo brutiſh as not to know that the ſentence of the Prophet layeth hold euen of them. Pſal. 19. 12. Pſal. 130. 3.

Verſe. 20. Becauſe by the works of the Law no fleſh ſhall be iuſtified before him. For by the Law is the knowledge of ſinne.

RHEM. 6. [20. By the works of the Law.] S. Hierome and S. Chryſoſtome expound this of the ceremoniall works onely, and in that ſenſe the Apoſtle ſpecially proſecuteth this propoſition in his Epiſtle to the Galatians, but it is true alſo of all mans morall works done without faith and the grace of God: which cannot be acceptable or auailable in Gods ſight, to iuſtifie any man. And ſo S. Auguſtine taketh it de Sp. & lit. c. 8. to. 3. Workes auaile without faith and grace.

CARTVV. 6. [20 By the workes of the Law.] If you had no eyes to ſee, yet you might haue groped the contrary of that, which you haue here cavilled: For in the verſe that goeth before, where the Iewes were ready with their Rabbins to anſwer that the Pſalme ſpeaketh of the wicked Gentiles that were without God, the Apoſtle meeteth with them ſaying: that which the Law ſpeaketh, it ſpeaketh to them that are in or vnder the Law: But the godlieſt Iewes were in or vnder the Law. Therefore to the godlieſt Iewes this was ſpoken: and conſequently the godlieſt Iewes could not open their mouth to pleade any iuſtice in themſelues, and were in the Lords debt through their ſins. Secondly, you are refuted out of this verſe; for the Law heere ſpoken of, is that by which commeth the knowledge of ſinne: but the knowledge of ſinne commeth by the Morall Law, and more by it then by the ceremoniall; wherefore he ſpeaketh heere aſwell of the Morall, as the Ceremoniall, and rather of that then of this. Now unleſſe you will ſay that the godly haue no vſe of the Law to know their ſinnes by, it muſt follow that the workes of the Law done by the iuſteſt are ſubiect to this triall of the Law. The abſurdnes of their iudgement of carnall workes, that is, thoſe that are done without the ſpirit of God, hath beene before ſhewed in the Argument: And may further appeare, for that they by this meanes make the Apoſtles ſo large a diſputation very trifling, and full of dalliance, for they make the queſtion to be this in effect, whether a man may be iuſtified by thoſe workes which are meerely ſinnes without any mixture of goodneſſe at all: for whatſoever workes are done without faith and without the ſpirit of ſanctification given through faith in Chriſt, be ſinne, and nothing but ſinne, albeit they be not ſo heynous ſinnes as thoſe which with the inward pollution of the heart break down all bounds and railes of outward order and honeſty. They ſuppoſe alſo that ignorance in the Church of Rome (for whoſe cauſe this was written) that is amongſt the moſt barbarous and moſt godleſſe people that ever lived, to thinke, that they could be made righteous by doing actions and workes, which the civill iudgement cannot worthily take hold of. For that there haue beene ever any which haue thought themſelues iuſt by manifeſt and apparant diſobedience to parents, by manifeſt murder, adultery, theft, lying, I ſuppoſe that the Ieſuites cannot ſhew. And if there had beene any of the Church ſo ſenſeleſſe, may we thinke that the Apoſtle would haue beene ſo looſe and negligent a diſputer, as not to ſet forth the abſurdity of their opinion, by ſome ſuch words as we haue before ſpoken of: namely that they in affirming that a man may be ſaued by civill works done without faith, do in effect affirme that a man may be ſaued from ſinne by ſin. It is falſe that either Ierome or Chryſoſtome expound this of the ceremoniall workes onely. For Chryſoſtome upon theſe words (If they which are of the Law be heires, Rom. 4. 14.) ſaith, Hee hath ſhewed that faith is neceſſary, more ancient then Circumciſion, ſtronger then the Law, for if all haue ſinned, it is neceſſary; if hee haue beene iuſtified being yet uncircumciſed it is more ancient; if by the Law be the knowledge of ſinne, and is notwithſtanding reuealed without the Law, it is ſtronger: if it haue witneſſe of the Law and eſtabliſheth it, then is it not contrary to the Law, but as a friend and aſſociate unto it. Where it is apparant that by the Law he meaneth that Law which reuealeth ſinne, which eſpecially is the Morall Law: which is ſo ſhut forth as the righteouſneſſe of God is made manifeſt without it, much more ſtandeth without it. The ſecond point is manifeſt when he ſaith in three or foure lines after. And leaſt any ſhould ſay that hee hath faith and keepeth the Law, hee ſheweth that it is impoſſible: for hee that is holden of the Law (that is, holdeth of the Law) as of that which ſhould ſaue, diſhonoureth the ſtrength of faith: wherefore he ſaith, faith is made voide, that is to ſay, there is no need of ſalnation which is by grace. Of Ierome alſo it is moſt plaine: for though he by the workes of the Law underſtand Circumciſion, and other ſuch like; yet that he meant not to underſtand them onely, 'is evident of his own words: For in this ſentence, That no fleſh ſhall be iuſtified by the workes of the Law, he ſaith, that the fleſh is accuſed, whoſe Verſe. 19.

providence or wiſedom cannot be ſubiect to the Law of God. Whereas it is eaſier for the fleſh to be ſubiect to the ceremoniall Law of God, then to the Morall, that being a bodily ſervice, and this a ſpirituall. Secondly, he addeth, that the Law knoweth how to ſhew ſinne, and a little after, That before the Law lighted ſinnes were not known, but ſheweth not how it ought to be kept. Where beſide that the Morall ſheweth ſinne more then the Ceremoniall, as is afore ſaid, it is evident that in that he ſaith, that the Law ſheweth not how it ſhould be obſerved, he meaneth the perfect obſervation which is onely by the faith of Chriſt, for otherwiſe the Law ſheweth that it ſelfe is obſerved by a perfect obſervation of the whole thereof; which becauſe none can accompliſh Ierome ſaith, that the Law ſheweth not how it ſhould be obſerved. Againe he ſaith, It puniſheth the faults, but giveth no pardon to the repentant, but that Chriſt giveth forgiveneſſe of ſinne unto thoſe that beleeve. And yet againe, That without the Law of the letter, righteouſneſſe is made manifeſt, which is freely given unto us not ſought by our labour. And expounding the words, That wee are iuſtified freely by grace, he addeth, without any doing of workes by Baptiſme, for that he forgiveth ſins freely to thoſe that merit not. And that the workes after faith are heere ſhut forth, he ſheweth plainly in the fourth chapter, where on theſe words, Abraham beleeved, &c. he ſaith, So great was the faith of Abraham that both the old ſinnes are forgiven him, and it alone was taught to bee accepted aboue all righteouſneſſe. And a little after, who purpoſed freely through faith alone to forgive ſinnes. And yet further, It is a great bleſſednesſe without labour of the Law, or about the Law, and of repentance, to deſerue the grace of God, as if a man ſhould receive a dignity for nought. Finally, that this which was in Abraham after many good workes ſhould bee in us alwaies, namely that faith onely is imputed for righteouſneſſe by his words upon this, that he might be father. Where he addeth that they which beleeve of the Gentiles ſhould bee the ſonnes of Abraham, whilſt to them alſo faith alone is reputed to iuſtice.

The hereticks phantaſticall or imputatiue iuſtice.

RHEM. 7. [22. Iuſtice of God.] Beware of the wicked and vaine commentarie of the Caluiniſts, gloſing, the iuſtice of God to be that which is reſident in Chriſt, apprehended by our faith, and ſo that imputed to vs which we indeed haue not. Wherein at once they haue forged themſelues againſt Gods manifeſt word, a new iuſtice, a phantaſticall apprehenſion of that which is not, a falſe faith and vntrue imputation, whereas the iuſtice of God here, is that wherewith he endueth a man at his firſt conuerſion, and is now in a man, and therefore mans iuſtice: but yet Gods iuſtice alſo, becauſe it is of God. Of this iuſtice in vs, whereby we be truely iuſtified and indeed made iuſt, S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh thus: The grace of Chriſt doth worke our illumination and iuſtification inwardly alſo. And again He giueth to the faithfull the moſt ſecret grace of his Spirit, which ſecretly he powreth into infants alſo. And againe They are iuſtified in Chriſt that beleeve in him through the ſecret communication and inſpiration of a ſpirituall grace whereby every one leaneth to our Lord. And againe, He maketh iuſt renewing by the Spirit, and regeneration by grace.

True inherent iuſtice.

CARTVV. 7. [22 The Iuſtice of God.] Woe and thrice woe vnto thoſe that take their caueat and watch-word of ſuch blind guides as theſe be, which in ſo weighty a matter as this, haue not a word of addreſſe and direction out of the Scripture. Wherein let the Reader obſerue the evidence of the truth, which we teach in this point: For where the Ieſuites haue in ſome other controuerſies between us and them, ſome dead colour of reaſon wreſted out of the Scripture wherewith they may deceiue dimme eyes: heere in this caſe they haue not ſo much as a ſhadow or reed of reaſon which they can wreſt out of the Scripture. Wherefore (as empty barrels) they giue the greater ſound of rayling, reviling and ſcoffing words hoping of the ſimplicity of their Reader, who will (happily) beleeue that there wanteth not altogether ſome ſtrength of reaſon, where there are ſo ſtrong and confident words. As for their ſotterie, as it hath beene before manifeſtly confuted, ſo it is ſmitten ſtark dead by the circumſtance of this place. For this iuſtice of God heere ſpoken of ſtandeth without the Law of workes, but that which they forge of inherent iuſtice in vs cannot be without the workes of the Law. This iuſtice hath the Law for witneſſe, that of theirs hath the Law for the materiall cauſe of it. This iuſtice is by faith, that by works: This iuſtice is given to all beleeving, albeit it be with much imperfection of faith; that to thoſe onely that doe, and do all and every iot perfectly which is commanded in the Law: this iuſtice is imputed of God, for that all, even the beſt without it, haue ſinned, and therefore are ſinners, and deſtitute of the glory of God, that is, inherent and abiding in our ſelues. This iuſtice is given for naught, and by grace; but that being of workes is not of grace, for then workes were no workes. Finally, this iuſtice ſtandeth in the redemption which is in Chriſt, but that ſtandeth (when they ſpeake beſt) by the redemption in Chriſt which is in themſelues. In Auguſtine there is not a word that ſtandeth up againſt the righteouſneſſe by imputation, ſeeing it is done by inſpiration of the ſpirit, &c. whereby we are made one with Chriſt, and haue his righteouſneſſe to become ours. But there is to the contrary of that they alledge him for, for in that he ſaith, that wee are iuſtified by the ſecret inſpiration of grace, whereby every one leaneth to the Lord: he thereby ſignifieth that all the grace towards Iuſtification in us, is that we are knit unto Chriſt, in whom (and not in us) our righteouſneſſe is inherent; yea it is manifeſt in the ſame diſcourſe, that he maketh this righteouſneſſe to ſtand in imputation: For thus he writeth, But from Chriſt in whom wee are all iuſtified, we obtaine not onely remiſſion of originall ſinne, but alſo of all other ſinnes which we haue added thereunto. And ſhewing how grace doth reigne by righteouſneſſe to eternall life, he ſaith, yet no iuſtice beſide Chriſt, as there are other ſinnes beſides Adams. Wherefore when he had told how ſinne reigned unto death, he added not by one or by Adam, becauſe it was ſaid before, that the Law entring ſinne abounded, which is not originall ſinne, but of our own will. But where hee had ſaid that ſo grace reigned by iuſtice unto eternall life, hee added by Ieſus Chriſt our Lord: for whilſt fleſh doth beget that onely is drawn from it, which is originall ſinne, but when the ſpirit doth beget againe, there is remiſſion not onely of originall, but alſo of voluntarie ſinnes. Where we may ſee that he noteth both parts of our Iuſtification in the free remiſſion of our ſinnes by Chriſt, and the receiving of righteouſneſſe inherent in him onely, for hee saith there is no righteousnesse but Christ. And againe that there is sinne besides that from and in Adam, but no righteousnesse besides Christ, which if it be spoken of the righteousnesse that is in us cannot be true, seeing that is in us by actuall obedience, as well as the unrighteousnesse by actuall sin. As for your scoffe of a new no iustice, unlesse you speed your repentance, it had beene better for you to haue beene a no new man, that is never to haue been borne.

Vers. 28. For we account a man to be iustified by faith without the workes of the Law.

RHEM. 8 [28. By faith without workes.] This is the place whereupon the Protestants gather falsly their onely faith, and which they commonly avouch, as though the Apostle said, that onely faith doth iustifie. Where hee both in words and meaning excepteth onely the works of the Law done without Christ before our conversion; neither excluding the Sacraments of Baptisme or Penance, nor hope and charitie, or other Christian vertues, all which bee the iustice of faith, as the good works proceeding thereof, be likewise the law and iustice of faith. All which the aduersaries would exclude by foisting in the terme, onely. Of which kind of men S. Augustine vpon this place saith thus: Men not vnderstanding that which the Apostle saith (nor counts a man to be iustified by faith without the workes of the Law) did thinke that hee said, faith would suffice a man though he liued ill, and had no good workes. Which God forbid the vessell of election should thinke: who in a certaine place after he had said, * In Christ Iesus neither circumcision nor prepuce auaileth any what, he straight added, but faith which worketh by loue. — What works are excluded from iustification. — De grat. & lib. arb. c. 7. — Gal. 2.

CARTVV. 8. [28 By faith without workes.] If our Sauiour Christ vpon the words of Moses that men should serue God and not Idols, gathered that we must serue God alone. Tell us why we may not conclude, that because we are iustified by faith without workes, we are iustified by faith alone. For if there be any thing that can iustifie besides faith, the same are workes. They being therefore removed, there remaineth onely faith to iustifie. As for the fonish distinction that the Apostle would standeth onely the shutting forth of the workes before conversion, it hath beene manifoldly confuted, & is beaten to peeces in this place. For the Apostle speaketh of the works of the Law, that is which the Law commandeth: whereas the Law condemneth the workes before faith and conversion. How soundingly all antiquity soundeth out these words of faith onely iustifying which the Popish Synagogue could never learne to speak out, looke before, vpon Luk. 10. 28. Augustine as he hath not a word against us in this place, so he vtterly overthroweth you, seeing his answer to a carnall obiection is not that first are iustified by faith, and after by faith and workes, which yet must haue beene his answer, if either it had been true, or he would haue delivered your meaning, but his whole answer is (as ours) that the iustifying faith is that which worketh by loue. — Math. 4. 10

CHAP. IIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Vers. 9 THis blessednesse then doth it abide in the circumcision or in the prepuce also; For wee say that unto Abraham faith was reputed to iustice.

RHEM. 1. [9. Reputed to iustice.] The word Reputed, doth not diminish the trueth of the iustice, as though it were reputed, for iustice, being not iustice indeed but signifieth, that as it was in it selfe so God esteemed and reputed it, as the same Greeke word must needs be taken v. 4. next going before, and 1. Cor. 4. 1. and else where.

CARTVV. 1 [9. Reputed to Iustice] We grant that the word of imputation excludeth not iustice, but implieth it rather, for that it noteth that we haue by it in the person of Iesus Christ a perfect and exact righteousnesse: howbeit it diminisheth not onely, but vtterly abolisheth the righteousnes that is in us or any by work of ours, as that which is directly opposed unto that righteousnesse. Neither helpeth it them that the word imputation is v. 4. transferred to the reward which is by debt, it being a καταχρησις or unproper speech, used for all writers holy and prophane. Neither hindereth it any whit that the word used simply should note out a righteousnesse of grace & acceptation, when as ioyned with other words, noting desert and debt, it may signifie the cleane contrary. For example, when it is said that God giveth gifts unto the sons of men, all understand a free bestowing of good things amongst them, But when he saith hee giveth them a spirit of slumber, eies that they should not see, eares that they should not heare; then albeit the word of giving in it selfe promiseth some grace, yet being matched with such words it hath a contrary signification to that which it naturally signifieth. When mention is simply made of violent men, and of raveners or snatchers, by and by all that haue iudgement understand men of wicked life, but when it is said that the kingdome of heaven suffereth violence, and that the violent catch it away; it is easie to know that this violence and catching falleth not into the lot of the wicked. Likewise the word prophane soundeth in all mens eares some foule and damnable thing. But when it is said the Priests prophane the Sabbath, and are guiltlesse, all know that it is no word of reproach. And this also serveth for answere to the place, 1. Cor. 4. 1. where this word is so ioyned and applyed to the Apostles ministery, as it can haue no such signification as here it hath. Now therefore as these unproper uses of the words giving, violence, catching, and prophane, cannot make but that the naturall signification remaineth still: so some use of the word imputation otherwise then we urge it here, doth not overthrow the signification that we set downe so manifestly out of the Apostles opposition, which setteth imputation against the reward for workes. Beside all this, can the Iesuits be ignorant that the word λογιζομαι hath divers significations, as of concluding in which sense the Apostle hath used it before. Last of all, they ought — Rom. 3. 28.

to haue vnderstood that the Apostle borrowed this phrase of Moses, and from the Hebrew, which hath no such variety of signification as hath the Greeke.

Verse. 11 And * he receiued the signe of circumcision a seale of the iustice of faith that is in prepuce that he might be the father of al that beleeue by the prepuce that vnto them also it may be reputed to iustice:

RHEM. 2. [11. The signe of circumcision.] Our Sacraments of the new Law giue ex opere operato, that grace and iustice of faith which here is commended, whereas circumcision was but a signe or marke of the same.

CARTVV. This is answered in the Annotation vpon the 11. verse of this chapter.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 What shall we say then that ! Abraham did find, our father according to the flesh?

RHEM. 3. [1. Abraham.] The Apostle disputing in this chapter as before, against them that thought they might be iustified by their works done without the grace of Christ and faith in him, propoſeth Abraham for an example, and proueth that hee had no iustice nor estimation of iustice before God by any works done before he had faith, or that proceeded not of faith and Gods grace.

Abrahams works before faith.

CARTVV. 3. [1 Abraham.] These are examples of the generall doctrine before handled; which being shewed to shut up all men (euen the iustest) vnder sinne; it followeth that the examples are of the same kind. And indeed the Apostle made speciall choise of these two Patriarches which came into speciall couenant with God, and had the promises, which for their priuiledges and rare godlinesse were most esteemed amongst all beleeuers, especially Iewes, to the end that all men might know that when these so holy men were not iustified by their workes, but onely by faith in Christ, that is to say by Christ alone which our faith layeth hold of: the rest how godly soeuer, should not so much as turne an eye aside to goe a whoring after their workes: For further proofe of the absurdity of the Iesuites answer in this example of Abraham, look before vpon Rom. 2. 13.

Verse. 2. For if Abraham were iustified ! by workes: he hath glory, but not with God.

RHEM. 4. [2. By works.] If Abraham did any commendable works before he beleeued, as many Philosophers did, men might count him iust therefore: but in Gods sight (who accepteth nothing without faith in him, or that proceedeth not from his grace) he should neuer haue had the estimation of a iust man. Therefore God in the Scriptures reputing him as a iust man, giueth the cause thereof, saying, Abraham beleeued God, and it was reputed to him for iustice.

Iustice before men, and iustice before God.

CARTVV. 4. [2 By workes.] The Apostles argument is this, if Abraham were iustified by the workes of the Law, he should haue whereof to glory, meaning with or before God: But he hath not whereof to glory before God: Therefore he was not iustified by the workes of the Law. The first proposition he taketh for granted; for otherwise, if it should be vnderstood of the glory before men in ciuill workes without faith, as the Iesuites say, it should giue to vnderstand that hee might haue whereof to glory in his workes, if (as indeed they were) they had beene done in faith and after grace, directly contrary to the course of the whole Scripture, which is carefull to shew that no man hath any thing of his or in him, either by nature or by grace to boast on before God. Beside, that by their sense of taking glory, which is in the first place for the glory which is before men, and the glory, which is in the second place, for that glory that is before God, they make Paul a Sophister like themselues, for so can he conclude nothing, for who euer (who hath any light of Logicke) would reason thus. If Abraham were iustified by his workes, he hath to glory before men, but Abraham hath not to glory before God, therefore Abraham was not iustified by his workes. Whereupon it is euident that by glory in the first place must needs be vnderstood the glory before God. And here againe the beggarly distinction of the Iesuites meere ciuill actions onely shut out in the cause of Iustification, as the Philistimes Dagon falleth of all foure before this place as before the Arke of the Lord: For seeing the workes of the Law heere spoken of, would procure glorying and boasting before God, if a man were iustified by them; and seeing it is cleere if it were possible for a man to be iustified by his workes, yet it were impossible that he should boast or make his vant before God of euill workes, or workes done before faith. It followeth therefore by the workes of the Law must needs be vnderstood, not the workes before faith and grace, but those workes that are done in faith and after grace. The second Proposition, hee could not glory before God, hee proueth in that righteousnesse was imputed vnto him through faith. which imputation could not bee if he had a righteousnesse in himselfe for the which he deserued to be iust. But so he imputed righteousnesse vnto him as the maister of the vineyard, which gaue a peny to those which had laboured but one houre or two in the day in his vineyard, and that in the coole thereof accepted them, and reputed of them as if they had laboured the whole day from Sunne-rising vnto Sunne-setting, bearing all the heat and vexation thereof. Likewise so he imputeth righteousnesse as a man which adopteth a son doth in all respects take him for his sonne, and so vse him, when notwithstanding in himselfe he is no sonne, but onely by his accompt that hath adopted him, where also (at the last) the Iesuites haue met with that sentence of the Apostle, that for the euidence and plainenesse of the truth in this controuersie hath vtterly sealed vp their mouthes, namely, That by beleeuing God it was reputed to Abraham for iustice.

Ier. 9. 23. Rom. 3. 19. 1. Cor. 1. 29. 30. 31.

Verse. 4. But ! to him that worketh the reward is not imputed according to grace, but according to debt.

RHEM. 5. [4. To him that worketh.] That is to say, Hee that presumeth of his own works as done of himselfe without faith, Gods helpe and grace: and saying, that grace or iustification were giuen to him for his works: this man doth chalenge his iustification as debt, and not as of fauour and grace. Not workes but meere grace is the cause of our first iustification.

CARTVV. 5. [4 To him that worketh.] He proueth that imputation of righteousnesse by faith shutteth out all glory by an argument of contrary causes, for that if the reward should be giuen according to workes, God should be debter unto man: But it is absurd to make God a debter to man, the Creator to the creature, the Maister to his slaue: Whereas all men are debters to God, and that in 10000 talents: therefore the reward cannot be given by workes. As for your glose it hath no support either in the words of the Text, or in the circumstance before or after, but it is a meere slim-slam invented cleane contrary to the text and circumstance thereof: for the Apostle disputeth of no such workes as are done in presumption of naturall strength, but of the true workes of the Law, as hath beene shewed. Secondly, he speaketh not of that reward that ignorant men chalenge unto themselues, but of the reward that God should in iustice giue, if men had deserved it by their workes; even as he speaketh of that righteousnesse that God imputeth to the beleevers, not of that which those that beleeved did challenge unto themselues. Last of all, this answer of the Iesuites, presupposeth that if men worke good workes not presuming of themselues without faith, Gods help and grace, &c. that then the reward is due unto them from God by debt, which is full of blasphemy as hath been declared. Lnk. 17. 9. 10. Rom. 11. 35 Math. 6. 12 Mat. 18. 24 Rom. 3. 19.

Verse 5. But to him that worketh not yet beleeueth in him that iustifieth the impious, his faith is reputed to iustice according to the purpose of God.

RHEM. 6. [5. To him that worketh not.] Hee worketh not (in this place) that hath no worke or alleageth not his works done in his infidelitie as cause of his iustification, but faith in Christ; and that proceeding of meere grace. Whereupon S. Augustine saith: Know thou that faith found thee vniust. And if faith giuen to thee, made thee iust, it found thee a wicked one whom it might make iust. If it found thee wicked, and of such an one made thee iust, what works hadst thou being then wicked? None couldest thou haue (nor canst haue) before thou beleuedst. Beleeve then in him that iustifieth the impious, that thy good works may be good works indeed. August. in Psal. 31.

CARTVV. 6. [5. To him that worketh not.] If faith haue that force, that it is able to iustifie a man that is wicked, how much more is the same faith (especially day by day increased) able to iustifie him that in some measure is entred into the way of righteousnesse: and if it deliuereth him that goeth a cleane contrary way to righteousnesse, how much more him that walketh in the way, although it be haltingly, and with weaknesse? And this place is so pregnant to proue the iustification by faith alone without workes, that after that your own Deus had deuised a simple shift to avoyd it, the truth doth cause him to confesse that he might peradventure so satisfie his reader, but himselfe hee could not satisfie in it.

Verse. 6 As Dauid also termeth the Blessednes of a man, to whom God reputeth iustice without workes.

RHEM. 7. [6. As Dauid termeth.] The Protestants for termeth, translate, describeth, for that they would haue the ignorant beleeue the whole nature and definition of Iustification to be nothing else but remission of sinnes, and no grace or inherent iustice giuen from God at all. When the Apostle would say nothing else, but that in the first iustification God findeth no good works or merits to reward, but onely sinnes to forgiue vnto such as haue faith in him. λέγει. Heretical translations.

CARTVV. 7. [6. As Dauid termeth.] There are two parts of Iustification, the one is a free acquitall of our sinnes through the sufferings of Christ, and especially his death by faith imputed and reckoned unto us, as if we had suffered all that he suffered in our persons, bodies and soules. The other is, that being freed from sinne, we haue also the righteousnesse and obedience that Christ gaue vnto his holy Father in the dayes of his flesh, by faith imputed and reckoned unto us, as if wee had done it in our owne persons, bodies and soules. And for the inseparable nature of one of these from the other they are by a Trope, wherein the part is put for the whole, each of them set for the whole iustification of a man. And therefore in the example of Abraham, the remission of sinnes (not mentioned) must of necessitie be understood, considering that Abraham could not be iustified without remission of sinnes in nature first vnderstood. Likewise in the example of Dauid, in the remission of sinnes the Apostle must needs understand the imputation of righteousnesse, for that otherwise hee cannot be blessed which hath his sinnes forgiven, and yet hath no righteousnesse, without the which he can never passe by the gates of heaven, which are the gates of righteousnesse, that is, whereat the righteous shall enter. Therefore the Protestants haue well translated the Greeke word, by the word describeth. And if there were no such Trope here of putting the part for the whole, yet it helpeth them nothing. For if righteousnesse be in the example of Abraham imputed unto those that beleeue, and remission of sinnes be likewise imputed in the example of Dauid, it followeth that the whole iustification of a man is by imputation, and therefore not by workes: for their distinction of first and second iustification, and how it can by no meanes agree to this example of Dauid, looke before upon Rom. 2. 13. λέγει

Verse. 7 Blessed are they whose iniquities be forgiuen, and whose sinnes be couered.
Verse. 8 Blessed is the man to whom our Lord hath not imputed sinne.

RHEM. 8. [7. Couered 8. not imputed.] You may not gather (as the Heretickes do) of these termes, couered, and not imputed, that the sinnes of men bee neuer truely forgiven, but hidden onely, for that derogateth much to the force of Christs blood and to the grace of God, by which our offences be truely remitted. He is the Lambe that taketh away the sinnes of the world, that washeth and blotteth out our sinnes, therefore to couer them, or, not to impute them, is, not to charge vs with our sinnes, because by remission they be cleane taken away: otherwise it were but a feined forgiuenesse. See S. Augustine in Psal. 31. enarrat. 2. What is sinne couered or not imputed. Ioh. 1. 29. 2 Cor. 6. 18 Apoc. 2. 5.

CARTVV. 8. [7. Couered. 8. not imputed.] It is true, that our ſinnes are by forgiueneſſe of ſinnes taken away and aboliſhed in ſuch ſort as they cannot hurt us, yet the remiſſion of ſinnes is defined in that they being ſinnes unto us, they are not ſo reckned, and being worthy of the puniſhment of hell fire, yet is not that puniſhment laid upon us. For otherwiſe the ſinne that wee haue committed can never be but our ſinne, and it can never be, but that we conſidered in our ſelues, are worthy to beare the puniſhment thereof, although both the ſinne was imputed unto Chriſt, and the due puniſhment thereof borne by him. And this ſentence doth Auguſtine evidently declare, when hee ſaith, That therefore they are ſaid to be recovered, becauſe God marked them not. And againe, Why doth he ſay, whoſe ſinnes are couered? That they ſhould not be ſeene. For what is it that God doth ſee ſinnes, but that hee puniſheth them? Where he deſcribeth the remiſſion of ſinnes by not ſeeing or beholding them, by not puniſhing them, For a man is not ſayd not to marke that, which becauſe it is not, cannot be marked; but is ſaid not to marke that which may be marked. If this therefore bee hereſie, Auguſtine hath his part in it. Hither alſo belongeth, that the remiſſion of ſinnes is deſcribed by not remembring of them, in paſſing by them, ſparing them, caſting them vnderneath his feet, bi hinde his back, into the depth of the ſea, but men are not ſaid, nor cannot be ſaid to do or not to doe theſe things of that which is not. Therefore this Ieſuiticall charge of hereſie ſpareth not the holy Prophets themſelues.

The Sacraments are not mere markes: but cauſes of iuſtification

RHEM. 9. [11. A ſeale.] The heretickes would proue hereby, that the Sacraments of the Church giue no grace or iuſtice of faith, but that they be notes, markes, and badges onely of our remiſſion of ſinnes had by faith before, becauſe Abraham was iuſt before, and tooke this Sacrament for a ſeale thereof onely. To which muſt be anſwered, that it followeth not that it is ſo in all, becauſe it was ſo in the Patriarch, who was iuſt before, and was therefore as it were the founder of Circumciſion, or he in whom God would firſt eſtabliſh the ſame: no more then it followeth, that becauſe the holy Sacrament of the Altar remitted not ſinnes to Chriſt nor iuſtified him, therefore it hath that effect in none, Looke S Auguſtine de baptiſmo contra Donatiſtas lib. 4. c. 24. Where you ſhall ſee that (though not in Abraham) yet in Iſaac his ſonne, and ſo conſequently in the reſt, the Sacrament went before, and iuſtice followed.

CARTVV. 2. [11. The ſigne of circumciſion.] S. Paul doth not onely call circumciſion a ſigne but alſo a ſeale: whereby it is evident, that God ſo wrought by this ſigne, that thereby hee came to further aſſurance of his righteouſneſſe, which he had before the ſetting to of the ſeale, which when it could not be done by the bare cutting of the fore-skin; it is euident that therewith was ioyned the worke of Gods holy Spirit. And whereas they would haue this righteouſneſſe which was before the ſeale thereof, to be peculiar unto Abraham, and that in others the righteouſneſſe is not before the ſeale, but with it; it is firſt directly contrary to the whole diſcourſe of the Apoſtle, who bringeth the example of Abraham to ſhew the way that all men ſhall be ſaued by, applying it to the generall diſputation which he hath had in the three former chapters. Then it is abſurd that thus the ſeale is ſuppoſed to be put before the Iuſtice, whereof it is the ſeale: for if the ſeale doth giue righteouſneſſe, it followeth, that that which giueth, muſt be not onely with, but euen (at the leaſt in the order of nature) before that which is given. And thus the Lord (which for mens better vnderſtanding, borroweth his ſacraments from the common uſage of their compacts and couenants as neere as may bee) is brought firſt to ſeale, and then to write that which he ſealeth, cleane contrary to that uſage of men from whence he draweth the reſemblance of his Sacraments, ſo that now the ſeale is not an appendant vnto the writing, but the writing is appendant unto the ſeale; neither is now the Sacrament a witneſſe and a pledge of Gods promiſe made unto us, but the father & founder of it. And as it is vtterly falſe, that the Sacraments under the Law had not grace given with them: ſo it is as falſe, that any ſacrament new or old doth by the meere worke that is wrought, giue grace. For Peter ſaying that baptiſme 1. Pet. 3. 21 ſaueth, declareth forthwith, that this is not alwayes when the filth of the body is waſhed away by the ſacrament all water, but then onely when a good conſcience maketh requeſt unto God. As for Auguſtine, he is flat contrary unto the Ieſuites; for they ſay, that the ſacrament of baptiſme giueth righteouſneſſe, and Auguſtine ſaith, that in infants which are baptiſed righteouſneſſe followeth as the childe groweth in age. Secondly, he doth not ſay, that baptiſme remitteth ſinnes in yong children, but onely ſealeth it. Thirdly, it is to be obſerued, that Auguſtine reſtraineth this onely to young children (which by their age cannot haue faith) declaring that all of diſcretion firſt muſt make profeſſion of the faith whereby they are iuſtified, or ever they ought to be baptiſed. Where the Ieſuites except Abraham onely from this order, as the founder of the ſacrament of circumciſion, directly contrary to their own Dewys, which ſaith that this is performed in other Gentiles, and namely in Iob, before the time of circumciſion. And if it be ſaid, that as Auguſtine is againſt them, ſo he alſo is againſt vs, which ſay, that grace muſt go before baptiſme: we anſwer, that euen little infants, which are in the couenant, are (as farre as the Churches iudgement reacheth) all iuſt in as much as they are members of Chriſt, and haue Chriſts righteouſneſſe imputed unto them. For although they haue no faith to apprehend it, yet Chriſt communicateth himſelfe unto them in ſuch ſort as he is theirs ſufficiently unto ſaluation. Neither doe the words of Auguſtine hinder this. For he ſaith, that righteouſneſſe by faith in infants, followeth baptiſme, which we accord, but the ſame righteouſneſſe the children had from their mothers wombe, and then onely began to haue it by faith, when they came to the age of underſtanding, and did lay hold of that by faith which God before had given them by a ſecret meanes beſt knowne Gal. 2. 15. vnto himſelfe alone. This is euident in that the Apoſtle declareth, that the Iewes which were in couenant by nature or birth, are not ſinners as the Gentiles are which are out of the couenant. Neither can Auguſtine be thought to eſteeme that children haue no grace of regeneration before they come to yeares of diſcretion, or to haue it by faith; ſeeing that being before that time members of Chriſt, they muſt needs haue the ſpirit of Chriſt. For he that hath not the Spirit of Chriſt is none of Chriſts. Rom. 8, 9. But hereof looke before, upon Math. 3 11. and otherwhere.

Verſe. 24 But alſo for vs, to whom it ſhall be reputed beleeuing in him, that raiſed vp IESVS CHRIST our Lord from the dead.

RHEM.

RHEM. 10, [24. For vs, to whom it shall be reputed,] By this it is most plaine against our Adversaries, that the faith which was reputed for iustice to Abraham was his beleefe of an Article reuealed to him by God, that is to say, his assent and credit giuen to Gods speaches: as in vs his posteritie according to the spirit, it is here plainely said, that iustice shall be reputed to vs by beleeeuing the Articles of Christs death and Resurrection and not by any fond speciall faith, fiducia, or confidence of each mans own saluation to establish the which fiction, they make no account of the faith Catholike, that is, wherewith we beleeue the Articles of the faith, which onely iustifieth, but call it by contempt an historicall faith, so as they may terme Abrahams faith, and our Ladies faith, of which it was * said, Beata quæ credidisti, Blessed art thou that hadst beleeued. And so in truth they deny as well the iustification by faith, as by works. By what faith we are iustified. Luk. 1. 47.

CARTVV. 10. [24. For vs to whom it shall be reputed.] The words of the Covenant, I will be thy God, doe euidently convince you, and proue that it is not required onely for euery of the faithfull to know and beleeue that God is God, but also to know and beleeue that God is his God, hereof this place which they haue alledged for them is a plaine and euident proofe. For he saith not, who was betrayed for sinnes, or rose againe for iustification, but speaking in his owne person, and other the faithfull at Rome, he saith, who was betrayed for our sinnes, and who rose againe for our iustification, applying the death and resurrection of Christ to himselfe, as other where he doth in more precise words, and teaching the faithfull to doe the same. Even so Abraham applied the promise unto himselfe, not onely in regard of his posterity, but also in regard of Christ, according to that which is said, In thy seed shall all the Nations of the earth bee blessed, which could not be performed but in Christ alone. And if wee feele that Christ dwelleth in every one of our hearts, it cannot but follow, but that he must be particularly applied unto every one, so that every one may say with testimony of his owne heart, Christ is mine. As for the faith which the Iesuits dreame of, of beleeuing all the articles of the faith to be true, it is no other then that the Diuels themselues haue, which knowe them, and beleeue them certainly. And hereof let the Iesuites heare their owne Glosse, who noting the proper nature of faith, obserueth, that the Apostle saith to him that beleeueth in him, and not to him which beleeueth him: for he beleeueth him which beleeueth that those things are true that he saith, which euen the wicked men do. To beleeue him is to beleeue that he is God, which euen the Diuels doe: but to beleeue in him, is in beleeuing to loue him, and to be incorporate into his members. And if the holy Virgin Mary had not beleeued that she bare our Saviour Christ as well to her selfe, as to others, shee should haue had no blessednesse nor saluation at all. Gen. 17. 7. MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 2 BY whom also we haue ‖ accesse through faith into this grace wherein we stande, and glory, ‡ in the hope of the glorie of the sonnes of God.

RHEM. 1. [2. In hope of the glory.] Christian men do not vaunt themselues of the certaintie of their saluation, but glorie in the hope thereof onely, which hope is here insinuated to be giuen in our iustification, and is afterwards to be confirmed by probation in tribulation.

Verse. 6 For why did Christ, when wee as yet were weake, according to the time die for the impious;

RHEM. 2. [6. Weake.] The heretickes falsly translate, of no strength, to take away all free-will No. Test. 1580.

CARTVV. 2. [6 VVeak.] The Writer to the Hebrewes shewing what efficacie the ceremoniall Law is of, either to giue righteousnesse, or to take away unrighteousnesse saith that it was ἀσθενὲς καὶ ἀνωφελὲς. Now if ἀνωφελὲς be well translated of no profit; let them tell us why ἀσθενὲς should not be translated of no strength; but let the Writer of the Epistle to the Hebrewes interpret himselfe, which he doth in the next verse, when he saith that the Law could bring nothing to passe. In another place it is said, that a woman had a spirit of infirmity or weaknesse (as they would haue it translated.) And the Euangelist expounding her weaknesse, saith she was not able one whit to erect her selfe vp. And in another place it is said of the body in death, that it is sowen in weaknesse; and can they tell us of any manner of strength in a dead body. Why therefore should we not reioyce that our translation is counted hereticall, when by the same stroke of condemnation the interpretation of the Scriptures themselues are attainted. For further answer looke D. Fulke in his answer to Martin. Heb. 7. 18, 19. Luk. 13. 11 1. Cor. 15. 43.

Verse. 19 For as by the disobedience of one man, many where made sinners so also by the obedience of one, many ‡ shall be made iust.

RHEM. 3. [19. Shall be made iust.] Here we may see against the Heretickes, that they which be borne of Christ and iustified by him, be made and constituted iust indeed, and not by imputation onely, as all that be borne of Adam, be iniust and sinners in truth, and not by imputation.

CARTVV. 3. [19 Shall be made iust.] Their reasons being weaker then water, their forehead is harder then the North iron, which dare alledge that for them against us, which is so directly against them. For heerein the Apostle compareth Adam unto Christ, that as by Adam we are made iniust by doing no iniustice our selues: so by Christ we are made iust by doing no iustice our selues. And as Adams sinne is imputed unto us, although we do it not as he did: So the righteousnesse of Christ is imputed unto us, although we do it not as Christ did it. And least that this righteousnesse of Christ imputed unto us without our deed should seeme to go no further, then to the iustifying of Ier. 15. 12.

us from our former ſinnes, which the Ieſuits call the firſt iuſtification. The Apoſtle ſheweth therein the great diſſimilitude betweene the ruine that came by Adam onely, and the repaire which is purchaſed by Chriſt: that whereas that is to the imputation onely of one ſinne to his poſterity, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt ſerveth to the iuſtification from many ſinnes. And as for their diſtinction and 1.Cor.1.28 difference of Iuſtice in truth, and iuſtice by imputation, it is fooliſh: For the Iuſtice which God imputeth, that calleth things that are not as if they were, is as well iuſtice in deed and truth, as if it had been perfectly done in our perſons. And if it be heere replied that the naturall corruption is inherent in us, and therefore alſo that the righteouſneſſe by grace ſhould be likewiſe, it is to be underſtood firſt that the onely and ſingular ſinne of Adam and condemnation therefore, as of him that bare the perſon of all his poſterity, is iuſtly the ſinne and condemnation of the whole poſterity. And therefore the Verſ. 17.18 Apoſtle doth not onely ſay that by one Adam all were made unrighteous, but by one ſinne of Adam. And if all were not guilty of ſinne by one ſingular act, God could not (in iuſtice) haue permitted the naturall propagation of ſinne in his off-ſpring: had not they been guilty of ſuch a puniſhment being already ſinners in Adam. And heereupon it commeth that the inherent corruption of nature in us, is not the firſt cauſe of our guilt and condemnation, but a fruite or reward thereof, proceeding
Aug. contra Iulian. lib. 5 cap. 3. of the iuſt iudgement of God for our ſinne done in the perſon of Adam: Whereupon Auguſtine calleth it the penalty of ſinne. The ſame points are to be obſerved in our Saviour Chriſt who is here oppoſed unto Adam, for by his one and onely obedience are all made and accounted righteous before God: whereout, as out of the cauſe and fountaine, by the vertue of the working of his Spirit, ſanctification is wrought in us, as a fruit of our iuſtification in Chriſt: even as originall ſinne is the fruit and effect of our guilt and condemnation in Adam. The two former points of each of the oppoſitions of Adam and Chriſt are manifeſt in this 19 verſe, namely, that all men are uniuſt by the particular diſobedience of Adam, without the ſinne they haue by propagation: And that of the other ſide all are iuſt by the obedience of Chriſt without any inherent iuſtice in them. And this the whole diſcourſe of the Apoſtle doth evidently proue from the fifteenth verſe unto this, where Adams offence and death on many are oppoſed unto the grace of God and gift by grace of one ſingular man Ieſus Chriſt, abounding to life for many. The argument therefore of compariſon is, that as the ſingular ſinne of Adam inherent in himſelfe alone, was truely communicated with all his poſterity, which then ſinned in his loynes as Levi tithed in Abrahams; even ſo that the ſingular and particular righteouſneſſe of our Saviour Chriſt inherent onely in himſelfe, is truely communicated with all the faithfull. Where if it be yet further replied, that the inherent ſanctification ſhould be as able to make men iuſt before God, as the inherent righteouſneſſe doth make us guilty before him. The anſwer Pſal. 19. Pſal. 143. is, that the caſe is not alike, conſidering that our proneſſe unto evill, and untowardneſſe unto good being both our own, and throughly perfect, our ſanctification is the gift of God, and alwaies incumbred with many ſinnes.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1 Being iuſtified therefore by faith | let vs haue peace toward God by our LordIESVS CHRIST:

Againſt the Heritikes ſpeciall faith and ſecurity

RHEM. 4. [1. Let vs haue.] Whether we read, Let vs haue peace, as diuers alſo of the Greeke Doctors (Chryſoſt. Orig. Theodor. Oecum. Theophyl.) do, or, We haue peace: it maketh nothing for the vaine ſecuritie and infallible certainetie which our aduerſaries ſay, euery man ought vpon his preſumed iuſtification by faith, that himſelfe is in Gods fauour, and ſure to be ſaued: peace towards God, being here nothing elſe, but the ſincere reſt, tranquility and comfort of mind and conſcience, vpon the hope he hath that he is reconciled to God. Sure it is that the Catholike faith, by which, & none other, men be iuſtified, neither teacheth nor breedeth any ſuch ſecuritie of ſaluation. And therefore they call Fiduciam, quite without the compaſſe of the Creede and Scriptures.

CARTVV. 4. [1. Let vs haue] Being iuſtified and made righteous. We may not doubt but that we are in the loue of God, vnleſſe wee will doubt whether God loueth righteous men or no, which were to doubt whether himſelfe be righteous or no, and conſequently whether he be God or no, And if men feare no harme from upright and well meaning men, with whom they haue a league of peace and friendſhip, how much leſſe ought wee to feare any harme from the moſt holy and vnchangeable God, which in Chriſt hath entred into a covenant of peace and friendſhip with vs. And if honeſt men do account themſelues wronged, and diſgraced, when men doe doubt of their promiſe eſpecially ſtrengthned with an oath. VVhat great diſhonour is done vnto the liuing God, when neither promiſe, nor his oath is ſo taken as it ſhutteth forth all doubtfulneſſe and ſtaggering through vnbeleefe in the performance of that whereof he hath made ſo ſtrong aſſurance. And the Ieſuits ſtrugling with the euidence of this cauſe, haue euen their tongues ſo bound with ſtrength of the trueth, that ſeeking to wreſt it and wring it from the naturall ſenſe, they can find no words to do it with, for if it be nothing els bnt reſt, tranquillitie and comfort of conſcience, it is that which we affirme and you (indeed) deny. For how can a man haue reſt, &c. in his conſcience, if he bee in doubt whether the Lord of hoſts loue him, or hate him. If doubtfulneſſe of the Kings goodwill towards his ſubiects, ſetteth the ſubiect in a broyle and diſquietneſſe of minde: how much more will it ſturre vp a tempeſt Pro. 6. 3. 4. 5. in mens conſcience, when hee ſhall doubt whether he remaine in Gods fauour or no. And if Salomon will haue a man that is raſhly become ſuertie for an other to take no reſt vntill ſuch time as he hath gotten himſelfe out of that ſuertiſhip: how much leſſe can wee haue any quietneſſe, that raſhly and vnaduiſedly haue made a debt of our own vnto the Lord, for the which hee may euery moment caſt vs into the priſon of hell vntill ſuch time as wee know that we haue our Sauiour Chriſt to bee ſuerty for the paiment thereof, for that helpeth not to the reſt of our conſcience if wee bee loued of God vnleſſe we vnderſtand the ſame as appeareth in thoſe which being choſen before all worlds, are notwithſtanding in the chappes of deſperation before that by faith they are iuſtified, yea and after that they are iuſtified, yet when the Lord to trie their faith hideth himſelfe and ſtandeth as it were behind the dore for a while, dayly experience teacheth what stormes are stirred up in their conscience onely through a doubt whether God loueth them or no. That the word hope in the scripture, and things belonging vnto the Kingdom of God is certaine and vndoubted, & not according as it is vsed in the commmon speech for a good likelihood of things to come or not to come, the Apostle himselfe would haue taught you in this chapter, when hee saith that hope is not confounded. VVhich notwithstanding it must needs be, if the thing that is hoped for should fall from him that hopeth after it. And for this cause it is compared to a sure and stedfast anchor that is able to hold the ship of our soule what foule weather so euer come, and the house that it hath is assigned to be in the heauens, where no power neither in earth nor in hell is able to come to lose it if you haue neuer read in the scripture of πιστωσις which signifieth a persuasion nor of πληροφορια, which signifieth a ful persuasion & certificat of mind, nor of παῤῥησια, which signifieth a confident boldnes, nor yet of ὑποστασις, which being ioyned with faith signifieth as great assurance of good things that we beleeue shall come vnto vs, as if they were already performed. Is it meete therefore that wee (yea the truth it selfe) should beare the blame of this your blockish ignorance? The old fathers had read these words; otherwise they would not haue said, wee are call'd faithfull that wee should beleeue (without any doubting) whatsoeuer is said vnto vs; Nor that our hope is as certeine as if the thing were already done.

RHEM.5.[2. Accesse through faith. Iustification implieth all grace and vertues receiued by Christs merits, but the entrance and accesse to this grace and happie state is by faith, because faith is the ground and first foundation to build on, and port to enter into the rest. Which is the cause that our iustification is attributed to faith namely in this Epistle, though faith it selfe be of grace also.

Iustification attributed much to faith as to the foundation.

CARTVV.5.[2. Accesse through faith.] Iustification especially here spoken of is diligently distinguished from other graces of sanctification and mortification receiued by Christs merits. And therefore it is false that it implieth all graces receiued by Christ. And faith is therefore said to iustifie, because that both the beginning the middle and ending that is our whole saluation standeth in faith, and dependeth vpon the righteousnesse of Christ which faith apprehendeth. But if faith be the ground and foundation to build on; it followeth that good works are built vpon it, and haue their being of it: and therefore also what value good works haue, they haue it not of any merit in themselues, but of faith which vpholdeth them. And indeed when faith is no otherwise the ground and foundation then that it apprehendeth Christ, which is the foundation; unlesse we will deny that Christ is the cause of all good works, and that their value dependeth vpon him and his merits, they cannot deny but that the same things are verified of faith especially so farre forth as it apprehendeth Christ and not as it is an inherent qualitie in vs.

Verse 4 And patience, probation: and probation, hope.

RHEM.6.[4. Probation, hope.] This refelleth the errour also of the Protestants, that would haue our hope to hold onely on Gods promises, and not a whit of our doings. Where wee see that it standeth (and is strengthned also) vpon patience and constancie, and good probation and triall of our selues in aduersities: and that so grounded vpon Gods promises and our owne doings, it neuer confoundeth.

Our hope is strengthend by well doing.

CARTVV.6. [4. Probation, hope.] These must be called backe to their Grammer to know the difference between a word actiue and passiue, for to haue triall of the truth God in our troubles by assisting of vs in them, and delivering vs from them is no vertue of ours, but is the constant fidelitie of the Lord whereby all his promises made in Christ are in him yea and Amen. And therefore hope staied vpon this probation, or triall is not staied vpon our worke, but upon the truth of Gods promises. Howbeit we will take pittie of you, and grant that by our good works as by patient indu-ring of troubles our hope is strengthned. But if you thinke to conclude thereof that hope hath two causes or fundations to vphold it: one of Gods promises, the other of our good works, you are greatly abused for not euery thing that strengthneth another, is by and by the cause and ground thereof for the adiuncts, and (as the writer of the epistle to the Hebrewes saith, the things which accompany saluation,) are not all causes and grounds of saluation, which notwithstanding are vndoubted testimonies of our saluation. And to leaue our good works because you make question thereof, what will you say to affliction whereof mention is here made: it is that which followeth all those that will liue godly in Christ Iesus: It must necessarily go before glory, and to the children of God it is a token of Gods fauour. Dare you also say that it is the cause of saluation.

Verse. 5 And hope confoundeth not: because the charitie of God is powred foorth in our harts by the holy Ghost which is giuen vs.

RHEM.7.[5. Charitie is powred.] Charitie is also giuen vs in our first iustification, and not onely imputed vnto vs, but indeed inwardly powred into our hearts by the holy Ghost, who with and in his gifts and grace is bestowed vpon vs, for this Charitie of God is not that which is in God, but that which he giueth vs, as S. Augustine expoundeth it: li. de Sp.& li.c.32. Who referreth this place also to the grace of God giuen in the Sacrament of Confirmation, de bapt.cont.Donat.li.3.c.16.

Charitie is a qualitie in vs.

CARTVV.7[5. Charitie is powred.] It is evident by the three next verses following that the place must be understood of the loue of God that we feele in our harts towards vs, for they intreating of the loue of God towards us, and being ioyned with a note of a cause vnto this place it must needes follow that the causall sentence being vnderstood of the loue of God towards vs the other wherwith it is so ioyned must belikewise. Aug. followeth that iudgment which the Iesuits here set down; but Chrys. which attended better vnto the circumstance of the place affirmeth that the Apost. referreth all not unto our worthy acts but to the loue of God, which must be vnderstood of the loue of God that he loueth us with, considering that our loue to him is one of our worthy acts. And of this iudgement is your own Glosse.

Verse. 10 For if, when we were enimies, wee were reconciled to God by the death of his sonne: much more being reconciled, shall we be saued in the life of him

RHEM. 8. [10. By one man ſinne entered.] By this place ſpecially the Church of God defendeth and proueth againſt the old Heretickes the Pelagians, that denied children to haue any originall ſinne, or to be baptized for the remiſſion thereof: that in and by Adam all be conceiued, borne, and conſtituted ſinners. Which no leſſe maketh againſt the Caluiniſts alſo, that affirme, Chriſtian mens children to be holy from their mothers wombe; And the ſame reaſon which S. Auguſtine deduceth (li. 1. c. 8. 9. de pec. meritis) out of this text, to proue againſt the ſaid Pelagians, that the Apoſtle meaneth not of the generall imitation of Adam in actuall ſinnes, ſeruеth againſt Eraſmus and others inclining rather to that new expoſition then to the Churches and Fathers graue iudgement herein, Cone. Milevitanum. c. 2.

Conc. Tri. ſeſſ. 5. decr. de pec: orig. All by Adam borne in original ſinne.

CARTVV. 8. [12. By one man ſinne entred.] Do the Ieſuites thinke to turn away the ſhame of Pelagianiſme from themſelues by a falſe and ſlanderous accuſation? If this be not Pelagianiſme, we know not what is: to define ſinne to be that which is done with free will, and of knowledge, whereby originall ſinne is cleane ſhut forth out of the definition of ſinne, and right Pelagians which require voluntarineſſe and knowledge in all ſinnes, where we by the grace of God are farre from that. For although we affirme with the Apoſtle, that the children borne in the covenant are borne holy: yet we affirme that it is by grace and not by nature. Whereas of themſelues they are the corrupt ſeed of Adam, in which reſpect we affirme with the Apoſtle, that they are by nature the children of wrath. Neither doe we aſſigne Gods grace in that they came forth of their mothers wombe without ſinne, as do the Pelagians; but place it in this, that their ſinne which they bring with them, is for Chriſts ſake not imputed unto them but forgiven. Beſides that the Ieſuites declare themſelues very ignorant of Pelagius errour, which ſay that we are Pelagians, for affirming the children to be borne holy: For the Pelagian holdeth that men are borne neither good nor evill.

Verſe. 14 But death reigned from Adam vnto Moſes, euen on them alſo that ſinned not after the ſimilitude of the preuarication of Adam, who is a figure of him to come.

RHEM. 9. [14. Vnto Moyſes.] Even in the time of the Law of nature, when men knew not ſinne, and therefore it could not by mans iudgement be imputed: and in the time of Moyſes Law, when the commandement taught them to know it, but gaue them no ſtrength nor grace to auoid it, ſinne did raigne, and thereupon death and damnation, euen till Moyſes incluſiue, that is to ſay, euen till the end of his Law. And that not in them onely which actually ſinned; as Adam did, but in infants which neuer did actually offend, but onely were borne and conceiued in ſinne, that is to ſay, hauing their natures defiled, deſtitute of iuſtice, and auerted from God in Adam, and by their deſcent from him: Chriſt onely excepted, being conceiued without mans ſeed, and his mother for his honour and by his ſpeciall protection (as many godly deuout men iudge) preſerved from the ſame.

Chriſt only not conceiued in ſin, and (as it is thought) our B. ladie.

CARTVV. 9. [14 Vnto Moſes.] The Apoſtle the better to ſet forth the benefite of Chriſt by compariſon of the calamity that came by Adam ſheweth that ſinne hath beene at all times untill the Law of Moſes was given, whereby ſinne increaſed, And that as it was in all times, ſo it was in all ſorts of men, even in infants which had not committed ſinne as Adam did, but had his ſinne imputed unto them. And therefore it is falſe that theſe words include the time of the Law: conſidering that the Apoſtle reaſoneth of the compariſon of the leſſe, that forſomuch as ſinne both was, and was puniſhed by death before the Law came, that it was under the Law both much greater, and much more to be puniſhed. And therefore that the Law was ſo farre from iuſtifying and ſaving men, that through the corrupt nature of men, and their own fault, it made them more uniuſt, and brought greater condemnation. That the mother of Chriſt is not exempted from this common corruption looke before, upon Acts 2. 14. You forget your ſelues alſo, that make this but the iudgement of many deuote men, which the Councell of Trent will haue holden of all. It had wont to haue had the name of the iudgement of the whole Catholick Church.

Verſe. 20 But the Law entred in, that ſinne might abound. And where ſinne abounded, grace did more abound.

The Law did not cauſe more ſinne. Though that were the ſequele thereof.

RHEM. 10. [20, That ſinne might abound.] That, here hath not the ſignification of cauſalitie, as though the Law where given for that cauſe to make ſin abound: but it noteth the ſequele, becauſe that followed thereof, and ſo it came to paſſe, that by the prohibition of ſinne; ſinne increaſed: by occaſion whereof, the force of Chriſts grace is more amply and aboundantly beſtowed in the new Teſtament.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſ. 4 FOR we ‡ are buried together with him by Baptiſme into death: that as Chriſt is riſen from the dead by the glory of the Father, ſo we alſo may walk in newneſſe of life.

RHEM. 1. [4. VVe are buried.] Remiſſion of ſinne, new life, ſanctification, and iuſtification are giuen by baptiſme, becauſe it reſembleth in vs and applieth to vs Chriſts death and reſurection, and engraffeth vs into him.

CARTVV. 1. This is anſwered in the Annotation upon the fourth verſe.

Verſe

Verse. 17. But thankes be to God, that you were the servants of sinne, but ‡ haue obeyed from the heart unto that forme of doctrine, into the which you haue beene delivered.

RHEM. 2. [17. Haue obeyed from.] Here againe is signified, that our discharge from the bondage of sinne, is by the Christian faith, and by obedience to the whole doctrine of Christs religion: in that the Apostle attributeth this their deliuerance from sinne to their humble receiving of the Catholike faith.

CARTVV. 2. [17.] Looke the answer before, vpon Rom. 5. 4. & 6. 3. Where it hath beene shewed, that many things necessarily accompany salvation, which are not causes thereof. Besides that the thankesgiving for this obedience declareth that it is the free gift of God, without defect of the good and lawfull vse of the former graces.

Vers. 19. I speake an humane thing because of the infirmitie of your flesh, for as you haue exhibited your members to serue uncleanesse and iniquitie unto iniquitie: so now exhibite your members to serue iustice ‡ unto sanctification.

RHEM. 3. [19. Vnto sanctification.] He signifieth that as when they were subiect to sinne by continuall and often working wickednesse, they increased their iniquitie: that so also now being iustified, they may and should by externall works of iustice, increase their iustice and sanctification.

CARTVV. 3. [19. Vnto sanctification.] The sanctification and inherent iustice increase daily in us: but the iustice wherewith we are iustified before God, can no more increase then our Saviour Christ can bee more righteous to morrow then he is to day: considering that in beleeving wee lay hold at once of him, and with him of his whole righteousnesse.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3. Are you ignorant that all we which are baptised in Christ Iesus, in his death we are baptised.

RHEM. 4. [3. We that are baptized.] That which before hee chalenged from the Law of Moyses to faith, is now attributed to baptisme, which is the first Sacrament of our faith, and the entrance to Christian religion, whereby it is plain that he meaneth not only faith to iustifie, but the Sacraments also, and all Christian religion, which he calleth the Law of spirit, grace, and faith. Not onely faith.

CARTVV. 4. [3 We that are baptised.] Baptisme under the Gospell is the same that Circumcision was under the Law, but that was the seale of righteousnesse, not righteousnes it selfe. The same cale therefore is of baptisme, that it is the seale of righteousnesse, and not righteousnesse it selfe. And the Apostle otherwhere doth ascribe the whole righteousnesse, whereby wee are the sonnes of God, not unto baptisme, but unto Christ, whom we put on in Baptisme. And even in this place, where he considereth not baptisme as the seale of Iustification, or remission of sinnes (as in other places he doth) but as the seale of sanctification; he giueth notwithstanding the whole sanctification to the power of Christs death and resurrection, and not unto baptisme, which is onely a seale thereof. Col. 2. 11. 12. Rom. 4. 11. Gal 3. 26. 27.

Vers. 6. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin may be destroyed, to the end that we may serue sin no longer.

RHEM. 5. [6. Old man, bodie of sinne.] Our corrupt state subiect to sinne and concupiscence, comming to vs from Adam, is called the Old man: as our person reformed in and by Christ, is named the New man, And the lumpe and masse of sinnes which then ruled, is called the corps or body of sinne. The old man and the new.

CARTVV. 5. [6. Old man, body of sinne] S.

Verse 10. For that hee died, ‡ to sinne he died once: but that hee liueth, hee liueth to God.

RHEM. 6. [10. To sinne he died.] Christ died to sinne, when by his death he destroyed sinne: We die to sinne, in that we be discharged of the power thereof, which before was as it were the life of our persons, and commanded all the parts and faculties of our soule and body: as contrariwise wee liue to God, when his grace ruleth and worketh in vs, as the soule doth rule our mortall bodies. Dying to sin. Living to God.

CARTVV. 6. [10 To sinne he died.] S.

Vers. 12. Let not ‡ sinne therefore reigne in your mortall bodie, that you obey the concupiscences thereof.

RHEM. 7. [12. Sinne Reigne.] Concupiscence is here named sinne, because it is the effect, occasion, and matter of sinne: and is as it were a disease or infirmitie in vs, inclining vs to ill, remaining also after Baptisme according to the substance or matter thereof: but it is not properly a sinne, nor forbidden by commandement, till it reigne in vs, and wee obey and follow the desires thereof. August. lib. de nupt. & concupisc. cap. 23. cont. 2. epist. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 13 Conc. Trident. Sess. 5. decret. de pec. orig. How concupiscence is called sinne.

CARTVV. 7. [12. Sinne reigne.] There is no great appearance that these Iesuites did euer so much as salute the Logicke schooles, they speake alwayes so confusedly and vnproperly, whatsoeuer in a manner they speake of. For here they babble of concupiscence, that it is the effect, the occasion and matter of sinne. Where if it be the effect of sinne, it cannot be the matter, which is a cause thereof, the same thing being impossible to be the cause and effect of one and the same thing. And if it be an occasion onely, it is neither the effect nor matter of sinne, but an adjunct thereof. But whatsoeuer these doctrels say, it is very true that in regard of the particular sin of Adam, whereof wee all are guiltie guiltie, it is the effect and fruit of ſinne, but in regard that dwelling in us, it conceiveth and bringeth forth actuall ſinnes, it is the cauſe, not materiall, but efficient of ſinne. And therefore it cauſing ſinne, is in it ſelfe much more ſinfull, then that whereof it is the cauſe. And when ſinne is whatſoeuer is a-

In which iudgement of his wee cannot reſt. For firſt he ſetteth not downe this ſenſe certainly, as appeareth. Now although in ſome ſence it be true, that the ſinne whoſe guilt is removed, is it ſelfe alſo taken away in regard of the force to condemne: yet this is not true according to the nature of ſinne, which is to ſwerue from the Law, and to haue an infirmitie contrary unto the righteouſneſſe
Heb. 2. 2. thereof, whoſe guilt being proper ſinne, is not yet of the being of it, ſeeing the Scripture doth plain-

Epiſt Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 13.* and in the places you alledge) vicious deſires not conſented unto, no ſinne, yet hee maketh every thought, bee it never ſo little, proceeding from originall ſinne, to be ſinne. They are done (ſaith he) either by working or by ſpeaking, or which is eaſieſt and ſooneſt, by thinking. Now therefore ſeeing every moving of concupiſcence is a thought, it muſt needs follow that the deſire which hath no conſent being a thought proceeding from that concupiſcence, is ſinne. Whereof alſo followeth another contradiction, that he hath even in the ſame line: that every evill thing is ſin, whereof pardon is aſked in the petition, Forgive us, &c. and yet ſaith, whatſoever is not conſented unto, pardon thereof is not there given. Alſo, that the ſinnes which are then remitted, haue the guilt then taken away in baptiſme, which is the cauſe that concupiſcence is not any longer accounted ſinne, when as actuall is becauſe it commeth after Baptiſme: whereas this is as true of the motions

And therefore we will here appeale to Auguſtine himſelfe, where he was better awake, for anſwering to Iulian, that would haue gathered of Auguſtines words, that concupiſcence was no ſinne, becauſe
Contra Iulian lib. 5. cap. 3. Auguſtine ſaid, it was the puniſhment of ſinne: he ſaith, As the blindneſſe of the heart is both a ſinne whereby a man is hindred from beleeving in God, and the penaltie of ſinne wherewith the proud heart is juſtly puniſhed; and becauſe of ſinne, while ſomewhat is ill done through errour of a blind heart; even ſo concupiſcence, againſt which the good ſpirit of God doth conet.is both ſin, becauſe there is in it a diſobedience againſt the rule of the minde; and the penaltie of ſinne which is rendred for the deſerts of our diſobedience: and the cauſe of ſinne through the de-

Verſe. 23 For the ſtipends of ſinne, death, but the grace of God, life euerlaſting in Chriſt IESVS our Lord.

RHEM. 10. [23 The grace of God, life euerlaſting.] The ſequele of ſpeech required, that Life everlaſting a ſtipend, and yet grace. as he ſaid, death or damnation is the ſtipend of ſinne, ſo life euerlaſting is the ſtipend of iuſtice, and ſo it is, and in the ſame ſenſe he ſpake in the laſt chapter, that as ſinne reigneth to death, ſo grace reigneth by iuſtice to life euerlaſting, but here he changed the ſentence ſomewhat, calling life euerlaſting, grace, rather then reward, becauſe the merits by which we attaine vnto life, be all of Gods gift and grace. *Aug. CARTVV. 9. [23 The grace of God.] The order of ſpeech did ſo require that he ſhould haue ſaid. everlaſting life is the ſtipend of iuſtice: And this order he would haue kept if the truth of the matter had not ſhut him from it. And if ever there was a fit place to utter this doctrine, heere was the place: Wherefore because he uttered it not here (where as a word uttered in time and place it should, as it were, haue gone upon the wheeles) it is euident that this doctrine hath not a foot of ground in the whole and wide field of the holy Scriptures to stand in. And therefore it is, false that hee might haue said so, especially considering that he saith the cleane contrary of it. For if life everlasting be of the free grace and gift of God, then is it not due unto the righteousnesse of any; as the wages wherewith to get meate and drink is due to the Souldier for his Souldier fare. And this difference of reward due to the sinne of man, but not due to his righteousnesse, Iob also doth evidently confirme, saying, If I haue done wickedly woe be unto me, but if I haue beene iust, I can not lift up my head: Aud where they say that the like sense is in these words, as sinne reigneth to death so grace reigneth by iustice to life, They impudently face down the truth of the Apostle, which both by the word of grace, and by the signification of Iustice, noting the righteousnesse of Christ (as the whole discourse doth evidently declare) leaveth not a step or light footing of the blasphemous opinion of mens merites. Augustine heere quoted in sense and discourse is all one with his places alledged chapter 2. about this matter, and therefore receiveth the same answer. This appeareth by his words in the same place: Wherefore O man, if thou shalt receiue eternall life, it is indeed the wages of Iustice, but to thee it is grace, to whom the righteousnesse it selfe is grace: for to thee it should bee rendred as due, if the Iustice whereunto it is due were of thee: Now therefore wee haue received of the fulnesse, not onely grace wherewith we liue now in labour unto the end, but grace for grace, that we may after liue in the Kingdom without end, Whereby it is plaine that Augustine granteth that he might haue said, the reward either of faith or righteousnesse, but that he would signifie that it is so a reward, that it is not due to us: both because that to which it is given is a grace, and given us being ungodly: and therefore cannot deserue, seeing it doth not comprehend all from our first conception to the end of our life. And also because it is not otherwise given then one grace, that is an undeserved gift to another grace, which is likewise undeserved. Iob. 10. 16.

CHAP. VII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 2 For * the woman that is vnder a husband: ‡ her husband liuing is bound to the law, but if her husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

RHEM. 1. [2. Her husband liuing.] Nothing but death dissolueth the band betwixt man and wife: though for fornication one may depart from anothers company, therefore to marry againe is aduoutrie, during the life of the party separated.

CARTVV. 1. [2 Her husband liuing.] Let the Apostles own words answer, which are that the woman that is subiect to her husband, her husband liuing is bound unto the Law: but we deny that after lawfull divorce she is subiect to her husband, from whose bond the divorce hath loosed her in such sort as she is not subiect to the Law, which requireth of her both to communicate her body with her husband, and not to communicate it with any others. Wherefore the Iesuites not being able to deny, but that shee is free from one duety of the Law in communicating her body with him from whom she is divorced: can shew no reason why she should not bee as free from the other duty which the Law requireth, as well as that touching the not communicating of her body with another, whom she shall in the way of marriage make choise of: look further answer before, upon Matthew 5. 32.

Verse. 4 Therefore my brethren you also are made dead to the law by the body of Christ: that you may be another mans who is risen againe from the dead, that we may fructifie to God.

RHEM. 2. [4. You also are made dead.] Being now baptized and dead to sinne, and engrafted in Christs mysticall body, you are discharged of the Law of Moses, and are free in Christ.

CARTVV. 2. [4 You also are made dead.] It is false that we are discharged of the Law of Moses, but onely his meaning is that we are dead to the Law as it worketh and encreaseth sinne, and consequently condemnation, that is to say, that the Law hath not that power in us after faith in Christ, as that the corruption that is in us should (as before faith) take occasion of further sinne, when as of the contrary side, living unto God we bring forth fruits according unto the Law of Moses.

Verse. 6 But now we are loosed from the law of death, wherein we were deteined in so much we serue in † newnesse of spirit, and not in the oldnesse of the letter:

RHEM. 3. [6. Newnesse of spirit, and not.] By Baptisme wee haue not Christs iustice imputed to vs, but an inward newnesse of spirit given vs and resident in vs.

CARTVV. 3. [6 Newnesse of spirit, and not] Baptisme sealeth both the perfect righteousnesse which faith layeth hold of, and the imperfect which is inherent in us, comming from faith which in it selfe being unperfect cannot ingender a perfect obedience in us. And heere the Iesuits take that from the Sacrament of Baptisme, which the Apostle ascribeth to the Sacrament of Circumcision. Look further answer before upon Rom. 6. 3. 4. Rom. 4. 11. 12.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 7 What shall we say then; is the Lawe sinne; God forbid. But sinne I did not know, but by the Law: for concupiſcence I knewe not, vnleſſe the Law did ſay: Thou ſhalt not couet.

Actual concupiſcence forbidden, not habitual.

RHEM. 4. [7. Thou ſhalt not couet.] It is not the habituall concupiſcence or infirmitie of our nature or ſenſuall deſire or inclination to euill, coueting againſt the ſpirit, that is forbidden properly in this precept: but the conſent of our reaſon and minde vnto it, to obey and follow the luſts thereof that is a ſinne and prohibited.

CARTVV. 4. [7 Thou ſhalt not couet.] Directly contrary to the Apoſtle, which alledgeth this as the tenth commandement, whereas concupiſcence conſented unto, our Saviour Chriſt refereth to the ſixt, ſeventh, and eighth commandements, according to the divers kinds and ſorts of concupiſcences whereunto conſent is given. If therefore the breach of the tenth commandement be not ſinne: 1. Ioh. 3. 4. Iohn muſt change his definition of ſinne, which is that which is againſt the Law. And the Ieſuiticall exorciſts that vant themſelues of the power of miracles, had need to ſhew heere a caſt of their cunning, to make that the root ſhould not be naught, when the fruite is evil; eſpecially when the Apoſtle declareth that this root hath ſuch a ſtrong poiſon in it, that the more it is holden down by the weight of the Law of God, the more forcibly and proudly it lifteth it ſelfe againſt it, like unto lime, which the more water is poured into it the more it burneth, look further anſwer before, upon Rom. 6. 12.

Verſe. 15 For that which I worke, I vnderſtand not: for not that which I will the ſame doe I: but which I hate, that I doe.

Sudden inuoluntary motions are no ſinne.

RHEM 5. [15. That which I worke.] This being vnderſtood of S. Paul himſelfe or any other iuſt perſon, the ſenſe is, that the fleſh & inferiour part ſtirreth vp diuers diſordered motions and paſſions or perturbations againſt the mind, and upon ſuch a ſudden ſometimes inuadeth the ſame, that before it attendeth, or reaſon can gather it ſelfe to deliberate, man is in a ſort (though vnwittingly) entangled. Which as ſoone as it is perceiued, being of the iuſt condemned, reiected, and reſiſted, never maketh him a ſinner.

CARTVV. 5. [15. That which I worke.] Let the Reader note the falſe interpretation firſt of words that they haue wreſted from the meaning of the Apoſtle, and then the falſehood in the whole ſentence. The word of fleſh uſed by the Apoſtle doth not ſignifie the inferior part of a man, and reaſon the ſuperior, but ſignifieth all the faculties and powers of the ſoule, ſo far as they are not renued by the ſpirit of God, whereupon the very minde it ſelfe, which the Philoſophers call the guide and controwler of all, is reckoned a part of this fleſh, and is condemned of the Apoſtle. And in regard of this hereſie and Idolatry, which are ſins proceeding from the error which is in the minde & underſtanding are called works of the fleſh. The falſhood in the whole ſentence is that the ſudden motions proceeding from originall ſinne foorthwith reſiſted and condemned make not men ſinners; which although it might haue a reaſonable conſtruction, yet it is as much to ſay with them as no ſinne. Whereinto let paſſe that ſin can beget nothing but ſin, and that the daughter can haue no bette nature then her mother: what can they anſwer to the law, which requireth a continuall aboade in all the law, without the intermiſſion of one onely moment or minute of time. To help forward their error they haue tranſlated the greeke word otherwiſe then the circumſtance of the place will ſuffer, which was not to be tranſlated I underſtand not, but I approue not, as appeareth manifeſtly by the ſimilitude that the Apoſtle uſeth in the verſe next before, whereof this is the reddition or part that anſwereth unto it: for a ſlaue doth well underſtand that he is a ſlaue, and underſtandeth alſo the drudgery that his maſter driveth him unto; but yet he liketh not of it, nor approveth it. And this ſignification of the greeke word according to the Hebrew phraſe is evident in other places of the Scripture. And thus the Apoſtle doth euidently interpret it himſelfe verſ. 19. when he ſaith that I will not the euill that I doe, that is to ſay, I loue it not, or delight not in it, as appeareth manifeſtly, firſt by verſ. 15. where to that which wee will is oppoſed that which wee hate: Secondly for that if to will that which is good be all one as to be delighted with that which is good (as appeareth by the verſ. 19. and 22.) it muſt needs follow, that not to will the euill is not to delight in it. It is therefore falſe which they ſay, that ſuch ſudden actions as theſe are involuntary, which are in regard of the outward man moſt voluntary, although in regard of the inner man, the will is ſo much abated that there is no pleaſure taken in thoſe motions. Now although their tranſlation were true (as it is falſe) yet they can gaine nothing thereby to the diſcharge of theſe motions from ſinne: if they remember that David deſireth to be cleanſed from his ſecret ſinnes, that is from the ſinnes which he underſtood not to bee ſinnes. Pſal. 19. 12. And if unlawfull things done in ignorance be ſinne, much more are they which are done unwittingly or at unawares.

Concupiſcence taketh not away freewill. cap. 5. 17.

RHEM 6. [15. Not that which I will.] He meaneth not, that he can do no good that he willeth or deſireth, or that he is euer forced to do that which his will agreeth not vnto; but that by reaſon of the forcibleneſſe of concupiſcence, whereof hee cannot rid himſelfe during life, hee cannot accompliſh all the deſires of his ſpirit and minde, according as he ſaith to the Galatians, The fleſh coueteth againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh, that not whatſoeuer you will, you can do.

CARTVV. 6. [15. Not that which I will.] He meaneth that he cannot doe or perform the law as it is commanded, becauſe to the performance of the law it is required that a man ſhall not couet, nor haue any motion be it never ſo ſmall, contrary to the law of God. And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place, who upon theſe words of the Apoſtle, that will is preſent, but that he cannot finde to perfect the good, he ſaith, for the perfection or accompliſhment of that which is good, is when there is not ſo much as the concupiſcence of ſinne in a man.

Lib. 1. Retract. cap. 15

Verſe. 19 For not the good which I will, that doe I, but the euill which I will not that I doe.

RHEM. 7. [19. Not the good which I will.] So may the iuſt alſo bee forced by the rage of concupiſcence or ſenſuall appetite, to do or ſuffer many things in his inferiour part of externall members, bers, which his will consenteth not vnto. And so long it is so farre from sinne, that (as * S. Augustine saith) he need neuer say to God, forgiue vs our sinnes, for the same; for sinne is voluntary, and so bee not these passions. Ep. ad Aselicum 200.

CART. 7. [19. Not the good which I will.] Looke the answere before vpon Rom. 6.12. & 7.7.15. where also the same sentence and words of Augustine are answered. Onely let the Reader heere understand, that the reason which they bring, because it is not voluntary, is not Augustins seeing errors in the iudgement onely are accounted sinne of him.

RHEM. 8. [19. Which I will not.] It maketh not any thing against freewill that the Apostle saith, that good men do or suffer somet mes in their bodies that which the will agreeth not vnto: but it proueth plainely freewill, because the proper act thereof, that is, to will or nill, to consent or dissent, is euer (as you may see heere) free in it selfe: though there may be internall or externall force to stay the members of a man, that they obey not in euery act, that which the will commandeth or prescribeth. And therefore that is neuer imputed to man which he doth in his externall or internall faculties, when will concurreth not. Yea afterward (v. 20.) the Apostle saith, Non ego operor, man doth not that which is done by his will: which doth not most euidently proue freewill.

CART VV. 8. [19. Which I will not.] We deny not, but that we haue naturall power to will or nill, to chuse or refuse, but we deny that by the naturall power of our will vnreformed and vnrenued we are able to will or chuse any good, or nill or refuse any sinne, especially as it is sinne. And this the Apostle confirmeth manifestly when he saith, that there dwelleth not in vs, that is in our flesh (which is all that is not begotten againe by the spirit of God, as hath been proued) any good. For if there be no good thing in a man not regenerate, it is certaine that he hath no free will to doe good, which free-will must needs goe in the account of good things. And therefore willing of the thing that is good, and nilling of that which is evill commeth by the spirit of Regeneration onely. Heereunto as the Apostle himselfe vers. 14. So also Augustine agreeth saying, that by nature a mans will is made a bond slaue vnto sinne. And where they would vpon the words of the Apostle, now not I worke it, conclude that it is not his doing which is done without his will, they little differ from the detestable sect of the Libertines, who to excuse their most vilanous facts say, that it was not they that did it, but the spirit then put them forwards thereunto. Whereas the meaning of the Apostle is to shew, that he doth it not according to the part renued: whereunto the name of a whole person is given whilest it is called the inward man. Beside that, the Apostle by a trope wherein the part is taken for the whole, might deny that to be done of him which was not done of one part of him, that is to say of the regenerate: especially considering that that is the more principall part, whereby the whole in such tropes is most commonly called. And we would gladly know of those Iesuits how the adiunct of sin which was in Paul can worke that which is not good, vnlesse Paul himselfe, which was the subiect thereof did worke it. Rom. 7.18. Lib. 2. retract. cap. 9. 2. Cor. 4.16 Ephes. 4.24

Verse. 25 The grace of God by IESVS Christ our Lord. Therefore I my selfe with the mind serue the Law of God, but with the flesh, the Law of sinne.

RHEM. 9. [25. With the minde with the flesh.] Nothing done by coucupiscence (which the Apostle here calleth sinne) whereunto the spirit, reason, or mind of man consenteth not, can make him guilty before God, neither can the motions of the flesh in a iust man euer any whit defile the operations of his spirit, as the Lutherans do hold; but make them often more meritorious, for the continuall combat that he hath with them, for it is plaine that the operations of the flesh and of the spirit do not concurre together to make one act, as they imagine: the Apostle concluding cleane contrary, That in mind he serueth the Law of God, in flesh the law of sin, that is to say concupiscence. Concupiscence defileth not a iust mans actions as the Lutherans say.

CART VV. 9. [25. With the minde, with the flesh.] Flesh signifying all that which is vnregenerate in a man as hath been shewed: it must needs follow that the minde which is heere opposed vnto the flesh, must signifie that part which is regenerate in a man. For it is sutable and conuenient, that when the Apostle had likened the vnregenerate man to the flesh, which is the grossest part of a man that he should compare the renued man with the minde; which is his subtlest and the finest part. Wherefore when he saith that in his minde he serueth the law of God: It is cleare that he serueth it both in knowledge and will, both which the action doth iointly require. Therefore on the contrary part, he that not being borne againe serueth sinne, serueth it with his reason and will, or affection both. And if he doe but serue sinne with one onely of the powers of his soule, yet the sinne must needes be sinne, as that which breaketh the law, requiring obedience of the whole man, and of all that is in him, to loue God with all his heart, with all his soule, with all his strength, with all his vnderstanding. Wherefore if there be never so little a motion stepping aside from the loue of God, and from his obedience in loue, the same is euidently a breach of the law, and consequently sinne. That the resistance and rebellion of our sinne against the spirit of God ouercomming the rebellion, should make the action more meritorious is a blasphemous speech, whereof followeth that our actions done in imperfection are more meritorious then those which are done in perfect obedience, and that our actions after the fall of Adam are more meritorious then those actions which were done of Adam before his fall, when there was no resistance of sinne in him, but a most franck and willing obedience in him unto God: yea that our actions are more meritorious then the action of our Sauiour Christ, in the which there is no manner of strife, nor which had any manner of corruption in him to wrestle or striue against the will of God, The Lord indeed disposed of this strife in our members with the good spirit to the end that thereby he might exercise our faith, and that in our weakenesse his vertue and power might the easlier appeare. But that it often or ever maketh the actions more meritorious, is full of bitternesse and wormewood. And where they will haue no mixture or concurrence of the euill with the good in the actions of the regenerate, they forget vtterly the fountaine of all our actions to proceed from the heart of man, of which because no man can say that it is clean and pure: It followeth, that it cannot be simply pure and cleane that proceedeth from a troubled Deut. 6. 5. Luk. 10.27 Pro. 20, 9.

fountaine. And as this is true in the whole heart or ſoule, ſo is it true in every faculty and power thereof, as well the underſtanding as the will, neither of them being fully purged. Againe, conſidering that all good actions proceed from faith, it being unperfect, which is incumbred with ſome reliques of infidelity, it muſt needs follow that the good workes which flow from thence are likewiſe unperfect: And if they were not unperfect, what need our prayers and thankeſ giving, which are of the fitteſt and choiſeſt of our workes, the mediation and interceſſion of our Saviour Chriſt, Ioyn hereunto the teſtimony of the Lord, which affirmeth that all we are like a defiled or leprous man worthy to be ſeparate from the company of God and his Angels, as an uncleane or leprous man deſerveth to be ſhut out from the company of other men, and our righteouſnes like unto a cloth that is to be removed, that is, which deſerue ſo to be removed out of the ſight of God, as a contagious cloath deſerveth to be removed from the ſight and uſe of men. Laſt of all Auguſtine (under whoſe banner you would ſeeme for the moſt part to fight) is witneſſe againſt you whilſt he ſaith, Thou (ſpeaking of God) doſt altogether ſine for nought, thou ſaveſt for nought, becauſe thou findeſt nothing wherof to ſane, and findeſt much whereof to condemne. And againe, woe unto mens life, how commendable ſoever, if it receive iudgement without mercy: ſo that not onely thoſe actions which are meerely ſinne, but thoſe alſo that are moſt commendable (called to the touchſtone of Gods righteous iudgement) are found uncurrant and unlawfull money. Where it is to be obſerved, that he doth not ſay, woe unto the man how commendable ſoever he liveth, if mercy and iudgement meet not together (for ſo a man might cavill that the woe is in regard of meere ſinnes) but woe unto the life it ſelfe how commendably ſoever it be led, unleſſe mercy come between it and iudgement, whereby he cutteth away all occaſion of cavilling.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 4 That the iuſtification of the Law might be fulfilled in vs, who walke not according to the fleſh but according to the ſpirit

RHEM. 1. [4. The iuſtification.] This conuinceth againſt the Churches aduerſaries; that the law, that is Gods commandements, may bee kept, and that the keeping thereof is iuſtice, and that in Chriſtian men which is fulfilled by Chriſts grace, which by the force of the Law could neuer be fulfilled.

CARTVV. 1. [4 The iuſtification.] The iuſtification of the Law is fulfilled in us, or by us, becauſe the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt through faith, is ſo reckoned unto us as if wee our ſelues had done it, which appeareth by the ſecond verſe, declaring that we haue our freedome by the Law of the Spirit of life which is in Chriſt, and not by the ſpirit of life which is in us. Likewiſe by the third verſe which ſheweth that through the fleſh or corruption within us, the Law is impoſſible to be obſerved by us, which fleſh, becauſe it alwaies dwelleth with us in ſome meaſure more or leſſe, it is manifeſt that in us, and in our proper perſons inherently it cannot be fulfilled, but in us onely by the reall and inherent iuſtice of Chriſt by faith. In which regard the Apoſtle otherwhere ſaith, becauſe by it we fulfill the Law, which otherwiſe we ſhould never fulfill. Indeed this he addeth (which hath been his diſcourſe and diſputation from the beginning of the ſixth chapter) that no man is partaker of this iuſtification, unleſſe he walke according to the Spirit and not according to the fleſh, coupling the ſanctification with the iuſtification, as the cauſe with the effect.

Rom. 3. 31.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 16 For the Spirit himſelfe giueth teſtimony to our ſpirit, that we are the ſonnes of God.

RHEM. 2. [16. The ſpirit giueth teſtimony.] This place maketh not for the Heretickes ſpeciall faith, or their preſumptuous certainty that euery one of them is in grace: the teſtimony of the ſpirit being nothing els, but the inward good motions, comfort, and contentment, which the children of God doe daily feele more and more by ſeruing him: by which they haue as it were an atteſtation of his fauour towards them, whereby the hope of their iuſtification and ſaluation is much corroborated and ſtrengthened.

The teſtimony of the ſpirit.

CARTVV. 2 [16. The ſpirit giueth teſtimony] It is the ſpirit of adoption which teacheth us in truth to call God our father, and that in great conſtancy and aſſurance that he is ſo, which the repetition of the word Father doth evidently declare. And this ſpirit of adoption is in nature before thoſe good motions of the ſpirit, which the Ieſuits babble of. For unleſſe we firſt know that God is our mercifull father in Chriſt Ieſus, we haue no courage to labour in any thing which we know to be acceptable unto him. But to grant you your falſe interpretation of this place, yet you are manifeſtly convinced by your own words: for if we feele the good motions and comfort of the ſpirit of God within us, thereof we may certainely conclude that we belong unto God, unleſſe Iohn haue deceived us, who ſaith: In this we know that we abide in him, and he in us in that he hath given vs of his ſpirit. And if we may be aſſured, that we are of the corrupt race of Adam, for that we are borne of his corrupt ſeed, why may we not alſo be certaine, that we are the ſonnes of God, being borne of the immortall ſeed, which is his word ſowen in our hearts by the ſpirit of God, or by the word which is ingrafted in us. And what meaneth this, that the Ieſuites call it an atteſtation of the ſauour of God? why vſe they not the word which the Apoſtle vſeth? If atteſtation be a word more delayed then giueth teſtimony, why haue they corrected the Apoſtle? whilſt for a word importing greater certaintie, they haue put put in the place thereof, a word of lesse weight. And if attestation and witnesse be all one, why haue they watered this word attestation with this clause as it were? whereas the Apostle doth not say, as it were witnesseth, but plainly and simply witnesseth. Where at once appeareth, that the Iesuites haue counterfeited the Apostles words, and endevoured by the strange word attestation, to bleare the eyes of the simple, which might thus think, that they haue somwhat to answer, when indeed they haue nothing at all

Verse. 17 And if sonnes, heires also heires truely of God, and coheires of Christ. Yet if we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified with him.

RHEM. 4. [17. Yet if they suffer.] Christs paines or passions haue not so satisfied for all, that Christian men be discharged of their particular suffring or satisfying for each mans own part: neither be our paines nothing worth to the attaintment of heauen, because Christ hath done enough, but quite contrary: he was by his passion exalted to the glory of heauen, therfore we by compassion or partaking with him in the like passions, shall attene to be fellowes with him in his kingdome.

Notwithstanding Christs satisfaction & passion, yet ours is also required.

CARTVV. 4. [17. Yet if they suffer.] We are not indeed discharged from suffering together with Christ, as our sufferings are testimonies of our incorporation into Christ, which as head of the body hath already suffered; but we deny that we suffer to satisfie for our sins, considering that we are members of Christ, and consequently saued before we can suffer with him. Beside that if our sufferings be satisfaction for our sinnes, one of these must necessarily follow, that either Christ hath not by his sufferings fully satisfied for our sinnes, or else that God doth require further satisfaction then is due, in that being fully paid and contented for all our sinnes in the passion of Christ, yet he pursueth his debt in us also, and so will be paid twice: first of Christ which is our surety, and then of us which are his desperate and forlorne debters.

Verse 18 For I thinke that the passions of this time are not condigne to the glory to come that shall be reuealed in vs.

RHEM. 5. [18. Condigne.] Our Aduersaries ground hereon, that the works or sufferances of this life bee not meritorious or worthy of life euerlasting, where the Apostle saith no such thing, no more then he saith that Christs passions be not meritorious of his glory, which I thinke they dare not much auouch in our Sauiours actions. He expresseth onely, that the very afflictions of their own nature, which we suffer with or for him, bee but short momentanie and of no account in comparison of the recompence which we shall haue in heauen, nor indeed were Christs paines of their own nature, compared to his glory, any whit comparable: yet they were meritorious or worthy of heauen and so be ours. And therefore to expresse the said comparison, here he saith, They are not condigne to the glory.* He saith not, of the glory, as the Heretickes falsly translate: though the scripture speaketh so also when it signifieth onely a comparison, as Pro. 3. in the greek, *Omne pretiosum non est illa dignum, S. Augustine, illi dignum, S. Hierom, non valet huic comparari, that is, No precious thing is worthy of wisdom or to be compared with it. See the like Eccles. 26. 20. Tob. 9. 2. But when the Apostle will expresse that they are condigne, worthy, or meritorious, of the glory he saith plainly, That our tribulation which presently is momentary, and light, worketh aboue measure exceedingly an eternall weight of glory in vs. The valew of Christ actions riseth not of the length or greatnesse of them in themselues, though so also they passed all mens doings: but of the worthinesse of the person. And so the value of ours also riseth of the grace of our adoption, which maketh those actions that of their natures bee not meritorious nor answerable to the ioyes of heauen in themselues, to be worthy of heauen. And they might as well proue that the works of sinne do not demerit damnation, for, sin indeed for the quantity and nature of the worke, is not answerable in pleasure to the paine of hell: but because it hath a departing or an auersion from God, bee it neuer so short, it deserueth damnation because it alwayes proceedeth from the enemie of God, as good works that bee meritorious proceede from the childe of God.

All suffring in this life is nothing in comparison of the heauenly glory: and yet it is meritorious & worthy of the same. Hereticall translation.

* ἄξιον αὐτῆς 2. Cor. 4. 17.

CARTVV. 5. [18. Condigne.] The distinction of worthy of, and worthy to, in this place especially is worthy nothing, but is blind shewing no light at all. For if the glory be infinitly greater then the afflictions, it is manifest that the afflictions cannot challenge the glory as desert and as merit, considering that betweene the duties deserving, and the reward deserued there must be an equall value, as betweene the price, and the thing that is prised. And when the Iesuites themselues confesse that worthy to, and worthy in comparison, are (as indeed they be) all one; and are further constrained to confesse that worthy of, and worthy in comparison are used for the same: It must needs follow that worthy of, and worthy to agreeing in one third, which is worthy in comparison, must needs agree also between themselues. And if they say they agree, but not in this place, all men see that it is a grosse begging of that which is in question. But touching the meaning of the Apostle in this place, First the words are plaine: Secondly, the drift of the Apostle also is manifest, for it is to encourage men to suffering for Christ, which comfort rather rising by reward according to grace, then according to desert, it followeth that the Apostles scope is for reward according to grace, and not according to merite; for if they should receiue reward according to merite, they should receiue onely as much ioy as they abode griefe, so much happinesse as they did beare miserie: In which regard all men would choose rather to auoide the present trouble, then to choose the comfort to come, considering that thereby they should gaine no more then they had lost before. But the reward being by grace, it is a singular incouragement, for that by making the accompt so the ioyes might be great although the sorrowes were small, and the happinesse everlasting, where the misery was but momentany and for a short time. And if they will not rest neither in the euidence of the words, nor in the sense that best suneth with the purpose of the Apostle, let them heare Cyprian who affirmeth, that when persecutions are raised then are given the crownes of faith, where hee calleth life everlasting, the crown of faith, not the crown of persecution which they suffer. And after speaking of these words of the Apostle that are now in hand he saith, that we receiue greater things in the Kingdom of heaven, then either we do or suffer for here, here. And a litle after (which is the thing especially to be marked) shewing that the wicked are guilty of the wretchednesse wherein they shall remaine for ever, he saith cleane contrary of us, that wee shall be blessed and ioyfull (not because we deserue it) but being honoured of God through his vouchsafing. Now where they obiect that our S. Christs glorie is greater then his sufferings, who notwithstanding meriteth that glory wherein he is, It is no mervaile though they speake thus basely of his sufferings, which make him to haue suffered no more then a common & ordinary death as other men suffer. Of the absurdity and blasphemie whereof let the reader looke before. Howbeit wee affirme that Christ in the exactest and most severe iustice of God bare as much in his body and soule throughout his whole life, (especially in the day of his crosse it selfe) as no other creature was able to beare and as was needfull ro make full satisfaction for the sinnes of all the elect: And therefore hath deserued for us that we can not (without blemish to Gods iustice) be punished for our sinnes; neither is the desert properly in respect of the nature of his diuinitie, wherein the humanitie subsisteth, for albeit the diuinitie of our Sauiour Christ did support and beare out the humanitie, inabling it to beare such torments, without the support whereof personally vnited vnto the humanitie of our Sauiour Christ, he must needs haue fallen flat vnder the weight of that burden, yet the merit of the sufferings belongeth properly to the humane nature of our Sauior Christ, & is not the merit of his divinity further then the vnseparable vnitie of the humanitie with his diuinitie doth require that that which is proper unto one nature is ascribed vnto another, and that the sonne of God by vertue of the union did sanctify and make of inestimable price and worth the sufferings of the humane nature assumed to him, Our meaning is that God can not be sure otherwise to haue deserved for vs, then he is sure to haue shed his blood for vs. And if Adam by his one transgression (for the transgressions sake, and for the guilt thereof) deserued in good iustice that both he and his posteritie should bee damned: how much more shall the humane nature of our Sauiour Christ by his so manifold & fearefull sufferings deserue in good and exact iustice that hee both for himselfe and for his generation should bee deliuered from that condemnation which Adam brought into the world. And if the merites of our Saviour Christ depend vpon his person and not vpon his sufferings; which is true so farre as his suffering could bee endured and ouercome of none other, but of him that is God: yet that helpeth not any thing to proue our merits, considering that there is no worthines of person in vs, but that which we receiue of Christ, & in him, If therefore our own persons haue no worthinesse in themselues, but in that God through Christ doth account them worthy: how much lesse can that which cometh from vs haue any worthinesse of it selfe further then of Gods grace in Christ: For seeing that we our selues, for whose sakes the sufferings are accepted, haue no acceptation by our desert but by grace onely: much lesse can the sufferings finde fauor by any desert of their own, but onely by the grace whereby he himselfe is accepted that suffereth them. Touching the testimonie 2. Cor. 4. 17. that the light and momentany afflictions worke vnto vs aboue measure exceedingly an eternall weight of glory. We acknowledge most willingly the truth of the Apostles words, but your false glosse of your condignes and merit of this weight and eternity of glory, wee utterly reiect: For things worke to glory either as causes, or occasions, or necessary adiuncts. And therefore it is sottish, of this, that we by afflictions, worke an eternall weight of glory to our selues, to conclude that the afflictions are causes of the glory, which you ought to conclude if you will merit by suffering of afflictions: for in this sort you may also conclude of the Apostles words, Sinne by the Law wrought in me all concupiscence, that the Law is the cause of concupiscence. Whereas the Apostle meaneth that God hath made afflictions to be the way whereby men must passe to the eternall weight of glory, according as he expressely declareth otherwhere, where he speaking to the faithfull, affirmeth, that by many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God. And that this is the meaning of this place to the Corinthes, to set out not the cause, but a necessary adiunct of our salvation, it is evident by that which followeth, where giving a reason of this weight and eternity of glory that afflictions worke, he sheweth how the afflictions and persecutions worke it, namely, whilst by them the earthly house of our Tabernacle is dissolved, that we may haue a building from God. And that the greatest afflictions of the Martyrs of Christ do not deserue or Merit any such glory, Iohn the Evangelist doth plainely testifie; for having seen in vision numbers cloathed in white stoales, he is taught by one of the 24 Elders that stood round about the throne of the Sonne of God: that they were such as came forth out of great affliction, which had washed their stoales, and made them white in the blood of the lambe. Where notwithstanding that they had endured great afflictions (as the stories of those bloudy times do record) yet it is not said that they had washed their stoales in their own bloud, but contrariwise that they had washed and whited them in the blood of the Lambe. And if their great afflictions were not able to wash them from their sinnes, and to deliver them from condemnation, much lesse were they able to make them white and righteous, whereby they might purchase so great a weight of eternall glory.

Verse. 24 For by hope we are saued. But hope that is seen, is not hope, for that which a man seeth, wherefore doeth he hope it?

As sometime faith only is named, so els where only hope, and onely charity, as the cause of our salvation.

RHEM. 5. [24 By hope saued.] That which in other places he attributeth to faith, is here attributed to hope, for whensoeuer there be many causes of one thing, the holy writers (as matter is ministred and occasion giuen by the doctrine then handled) sometimes referre it to one of the causes sometime to another: not by naming one alone, to exclude the other, as our Aduersaries captiously and ignorantly do argue, but at diuers times and in sundry places to expresse that, which in euery discourse could not, nor needed not to bee vttered. In some discourse, faith is to be recommended: in others charity, in others hope: sometimes, almes, mercie: else where, other vertues. One while, Euery one that beleeueth, is borne of God. 1. Io. 5. 1. Another while. Euery one that loueth is borne of God 1. Io. 4. 7 Sometimes faith purifieth mans hart. Act. 15. 9. And another time. Charity remitteth sinnes. 1. Pet. 4. 8. Of faith it is said, The iust liueth by faith. Ro, 1. 17. Of charity, Wee know that we are transferred from death to life, because we loue, &c. 1. Io. 3. 14.

CARTVV. 5. [24 By hope saued.] The Apostle meaneth that our salvation is not yet compleat, pleat, and is not that which we haue already, but that which we shall haue; so that hope in this place is not the cause, nor so much as an instrument whereby we are saued, but the very perfection of our saluation: so signifying by an vsuall and common trope, whereby the adiunct is put for the subiect, the hope, for that which is hoped for, which the circumstance of the same verse doth euidently conuince, when hee saith, that if we did see that hope, or did enioy it presently, then it should bee no hope. Verse. 27 And he that searcheth the hearts, knoweth what the Spirite desireth because according to God he requesteth for the saints.

RHEM.6.[27. The Spirit desireth.] Arius and Macedonius old Heretickes had their places to contend vpon, against the Churches sense as our new Masters now haue. They abused this text to prooue the holy Ghost not to be God, because hee needeth not to pray or aske but hee might command if he were God. Therefore S. Augustine expoundeth it thus. The Spirit prayeth, that is causeth and teacheth vs to pray, and what to pray or aske. S. Augustine de anima, & eius orig lib.4.c.9. & ep.121. c.15. Scriptures abused against the Godhead of the holy Ghost.

Verse. 30 And whom he hath predestinated them also he hath called & whom he hath called: them also hee hath iustified. and whom hee hath iustified: them also hath he glorified.

RHEM.7.[30. VVhom he hath predestinated.] Gods eternall foresight, loue, purpose, predestination and election of his deere children, and in time their calling, iustifying, glorifying by Christ as all other acts and intentions of his diuine will and prouidence towards their saluation, ought to be reuerenced of all men with dreadfull humility, and not to be sought out or disputed on with presumptuous boldnesse and audacity, for it is the gulfe that many proud persons, both in this age and alwayes, haue by Gods iust iudgement perished in, founding thereon most horrible blasphemies against Gods mercy, nature and goodnesse, and diuers damnable errors against mans free will, and against all good life and religion. This high conclusion is here set down for vs, that we may learne to know of whom we ought to depend in all our life, by whom we expect our saluation, by whose prouidence all our graces, gifts, and workes doe stand: by what an euerlasting gracious determination, our redemption, which is in Christ Iesus, was designed: and to giue God inceſſable thanks for our vocation and preferment to the state we be in, before the Iewes, who deserued no better then they, before the life of his mercy shining vpon vs accepted vs, & reiected them. But this said eminent trueth of Gods eternall predestination standeth (as we are bound to beleeue vnder paine of damnation, whether wee vnderstand how or no) and so S. Augustine in all his diuine works written of the same (De gratia & arb. lib. De corrept. & gratia. Ad articulos falso impositos,) defendeth, declareth, proueth, and conuinceth that it doth stand (I say) with mans free will and the true liberty of his actions, and forceth no man to be either ill or good, to sinne or vertue, to saluation or damnation, nor taketh away the meanes or nature of merits, and cooperation with God to our own and other mens saluation. The doctrine of predestination, how to be reuerenced and what it teacheth vs. Gods predestination taketh not away free will.

CARTVV.7. [30 VVom he hath predestinate.] We grant that Predestination taketh not free will away, but a seruitude and bondage to sinne, under which all men through the transgression of Adam are shut, doth raze it from the ground: whereof notwithstanding followeth not that men are forced to sinne, which they doe willingly and greedily. But predestination to life before the foundations of the world, and the loue of God before man hath done either good or euill, breaketh the neck of merit or desert by workes in vs. Also that he maketh them inst whom he hath Predestinate, and that not by any iustice in them, but by the iustice which is in Christ, doth likewise cut the winde-pipe of your merit. Ioh. 8.36. Rom.7. 14 Eph.2.2.3. & 4. 19. Rom.9.11.

Verse. 38 * For I am sure that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor Powers, neither things present, nor things to come, neither might.

RHEM.8.[38. I am sure.] This speach is common in S. Paul according to the latin translation, when he had no other assured knowledge but by hope: as Rom.15.14. 2.Tim.1.5. Heb.6.9. Where the Greeke word signifieth onely a probable perswasion. And therefore except he meane of himselfe by speciall reuelation, or of the predestination in generall, (in which two causes it may stand for the certitude of faith or infallible knowledge) otherwise that euery particular man should be assured infallibly that himselfe should be iustified, and not that onely, but sure also neuer to sinne or to haue the gift of perseuerance, and certaine knowledge of his predestination: that is a most damnable false illusion and presumption condemned by the Fathers of the holy Councell of Trent. Sess.6.c.9 12,13. πληροφορια. Confido. Hieron.q.9.ad Algas. No man ordinarily is sure of his saluation, but onely in hope,

CARTVV. 8. [38. I am sure.] That hope is certaine, and cannot deceiue, looke before, vpon Rom.5.4 which if they will not learne of their new masters, they might haue learned of their old master Lombard. As for their quotations wherein they shew that the greeke word is vsed of things that lie in coniecturall, and no certaine knowledge, it is lost labour, considering that we stand not vpon the word, but vpon the arguments wherewith the word is ioyned, and which are added to declare of what signification the word is here. For it is not ioyned with coniecturall and probable arguments, but such as are certaine and necessary: as it is necessary that the faithfull being iustified of God, cannot be condemned of any, not of God himselfe, (who so should bee changeable, if hee should condemne him whom he hath iustified) much lesse any creature, which the Apostle proueth by induction and enumeration of the parts. Againe, for so much as Christ making intercession for them, that their faith should not faile, cannot but be heard of his holy father: it must needs follow, that neither hee himselfe, M. Sentent. l.3, dist.26. Luk.22.32

himselfe, nor any of the faithfull, could fall away from the faith, and bee separate from the loue of God, wherewith he loued them in his Beloued. And therefore this certaine knowledge of finall perseuerance, commeth not to the children of God by speciall reuelation, but by certaine and undoubted charters of the holy Scriptures, which are common to all the faithfull and Saints of God. And al-
Rom. 14. 14 though the Iesuites should burst in indignation against the truth; yet this Greeke word in such cases as this, is taken for a certaine and undoubted perswasion, as appeareth by the Apostle other where.
Dyns. And here the Carthusian is manifestly against them, who affirmeth that the Apostle spake this of the certaintie of salvation, both of himselfe, and the rest of his fellow Apostles, whom hee knew to bee so confirmed in grace from that very houre that they had the spirit upon Whitsunday, that they could not sinne mortally: contrary to the Iesuites, which teach that the Apostle could not say this of the person of any particular man, nor of himselfe without some speciall reuelation. But it is a small matter for one Popish sect and rout to be against another, when here they haue lost a great aduantage of establishing the whole Church of Rome. For if they had well remembred it, although it is not easily auoyded, yet might they haue had a better argument out of this place to proue the perpetuall chastity of the strumpet of Rome, then they haue yet brought: forsomuch as the Apostle assureth us that the Church in Rome (meaning that which then was) should never depart from the truth. Nay, they haue cut deeply into the flesh of their owne mother the Whoore of Babylon. For in saying that the words of the Apo. Rom. 15. 14. I am perswaded my brethren of you that you are full of goodnesse, filled with all knowledge, able to admonish one another, are no assured knowledge. They at vnawares (in effect) affirme that
Rom. 1. 8. these words also of the Apostle, Your faith is renowned in the whole world, are but conjecturall, and spoken of him in no assured knowledge. For upon the renowne of their faith he gathered this perswasion; which being uncertaine as they say, it followeth that the renowne of their faith was likewise; so that here the very foundation of the fidelity of the Romish Church tottereth (by the Iesuites owne words) and the corner stone thereof so gapeth, and is cloven, that it threatneth ruine to all that behold it. Ierom hath the word confido: but that it signifieth a probable perswasion, he hath not a word. The clean contrary is manifest when (to make the objection strong between this place and that place following Hieron. in 8. cap. ad Rom. immediatly in the beginning of the ninth chapter) hee saith that the Apostle could not bee separate, which in his Annotation upon this word he maketh most plaine, expounding these words, I am certaine, by these, I certainly trust, not I trust onely. Not to speak of the shamefull impudency of these men which would wrest the words of the old Interpreter, whom they so superstitiously follow, and these words of this, I am sure, or certaine, to interpret I am probably perswaded, without any example either of holy or prophane writers. As for the Trent Councell as unsauoury salt, we esteeme our feet more fiuer to tread it, then our pen to answer it.

CHAP. IX.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Vers. AND not onely shee, but * Rebecca also conceiving | of one copulation, 10 of Isaac our father.

RHEM. 1. [10] S. Hierom. 9, 10. ad Hedibiam. All the Epistle to the Romanes needeth interpretation, and is enwrapped with so great obscurities, that to understand it we need the help of the Holy Ghost, who by the Apostle did dictate these same things: but especially this place. Howbeit nothing pleaseth us but that which is Ecclesiasticall, that is, the sense of the Church.

CARTVV. 1. [10] Ierome doth not meane by Ecclesiasticall sense (as you would haue it) whatsoeuer the Church alloweth; which appeareth by his own interpretation of it: Namely, which were are not afraid publikely to speake in the Church, but having warrant for it of the Scriptures; may not onely commit it to Epistle, but to Sermon and Pulpit. Which is evident in that he sheweth that it ought to be so, as should not draw any Gentilisme of the soules entering into men to be punished according to their deservings: Which entring of soules into men according to their deservings is repugnant to the whole course of the Scriptures.

Verse. 22. And if God willing to shew wrath, and to make his might knowen, ‡ sustained in much patience the vessels of wrath apt to destruction.

RHEM. 2. [22. Sustained.] That God is not the cause of any mans reprobation or damnation, otherwise then for punishment of his sins, he sheweth by that he expecteth all mens amendment with great patience, and consequently that they haue also free will.

CARTVV. 2. [22. Sustained] This argument, God sustaineth men in patience: Ergo, men haue free will, is Cloister and not Schoole Logick: The validitie, or rather vanity whereof they might haue learned of the Apostle, who shewing the patience and meekenesse of God toward the wicked, doth not bring this for an argument that they may repent, because they haue free-will, but cleane contrary, because God may giue them a will to repent; which the Apostle in another place (speaking of the naturall corruption in mens hearts) confirmeth, noting that they haue hearts which cannot repent, whereof it is also, that the Prophet calleth our hearts stony, which are onely mollified by the Spirit of God, given in the covenant of grace.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3. For I wished my selfe to be | anathema from Christ for my brethren, who are my kinsmen according to the flesh.

Anathema. RHEM. 3 [1. Anathema.] Anathema, by vse of Scripture is either that which by separation from profane vse, & by dedication to God, is holy, dreadfull, & not vulgarly to bee touched: or contrariwise, that that which is reiected, seuered or abandoned from God as cursed and detested, and therefore is to be auoided. And inthis latter sense (according as S. Paul taketh it 1. Cor. 16. If any loue not our Lord Iesus Christ be he Anathema, that is to say, Away with him. Accursed be he, Beware you accompany not with him) the Church and holy Councels vse the word for a curse and excommunication against Hereticks and other notorious offenders, and blasphemers. Now how the Apostle, wishing himselfe to be Anathema from Christ to saue his Countrey men soules, did take this word, it is a very hard thing to determine. Some thinke he desired onely to die for their saluation. Others, that being very loth to be kept from the fruition of Christ, yet he could be content to be so still for to saue their soules. Others, he wished what malediction or separation from Christ soeuer that did not imploy the disfauour of God towards him, nor take away his loue towards God. This onely is certaine, that it is a point of vnspeakeable charity in the Apostles breast, and a paterne to all Bishops and Priests, how to loue the saluation of their flocke. As the like was vttered by Moyses when he sayd, Either forgiue this people, or blot me out of thy booke. In what sense S. Paul wisheth to bee Anathema. Exod. 32. 32

CARTVV. 3. [3 Anathema.] Loving our neighbours as our selues, we ought to loue God aboue our neighbours. Wherefore it is euident that we ought to loue God aboue our selues: it ought not therefore to be strange vnto any, if Paul in some measure of godly and true desire affected the glory of God before his own saluation; for having some motions in him to preferre his own saluation vnto Gods glory, yet the loue wherewith hee loued God preuailed and gat the mastery of these motions.

Verse. 6 But not that the word of God is frustrate, For, not all that are of Israell they be Israelites.

RHEM. 4. [6. Not all of Israell.] Though the people of the Iewes were many wayes honored and priuiledged, and namely by Christs taking flesh of them: yet the promise of grace and saluation was neither onely made to them, nor to all them that carnally came of them or their fathers: Gods election and mercy depending vpon his own purpose, will, and determination, and not tied to any nation, family, or person. Gods promise not made to carnal Israel.

CARTVV. 4. [6 Not of Israel.] S.

Verse. 7 Not that they are the seed of Abraham, all be children: but in Isaac shall the seede be called vnto thee:

RHEM. 5 [7. But in Isaac.] The promise made to Abraham was not in Ismaell: who was a sonne borne onely by flesh and nature: but in Isaac, who was a sonne obtained by promise, faith, and miracle: and was a figure of the Churches children borne to God in Baptisme. Isaac preferred before Ismael.

CARTVV. 5. [7 But in Isaac.] Isaac was a figure of the Churches children borne to God, as himselfe was in the covenant: which covenant is sealed in Baptisme.

RHEM. 6. [10. Of one copulation.] It is proued also by Gods choosing of Iacob before Esau (who were not onely brethren by father and mother, but also twinnes: and Esau the elder of the two, which according to carnall count should haue had the preeminence) that God in giuing graces followeth not the temporall or carnall prerogatiues of men or families. Iacob before Esau.

CARTVV. 6. [10 Of one copulation.] Not onely carnall prerogatiues of men and families, but the workes of men are shut out by the purpose of God and his decree, and that especially considering that the Apostle in the next verse, expresly shutting forth the workes from having any inclination to dispose of the decree of God, sheweth that he had in this saying especiall regard unto them.

Verse. 11 For When they were not yet borne, nor had done any good or evill (that the purpose of God according to election might stand)

RHEM. 7. [11. Not yet borne.] By the same example of those twins, it is euident also, that neither nations nor particular persons be elected eternally, called temporally, or preferred to Gods fauour before others, by their own merites; because God, when he made choise, & first loued Iacob, and refused Esau, respected them both as ill, and the one no lesse then the other guilty of damnation for originall sinne, which was a like in them both, And therefore where iustly hee might haue reprobated both, he saued of mercy one. Which one therefore, being as ill and as void of good as the other, must hold of Gods eternall purpose, mercy, and election, that hee was preferred before his brother which was elder then himselfe, and no worse then himselfe. And his brother Esau on the other side hath no cause to complaine, for that God neither did nor suffered any thing to be done towards him, that his sinne did not deserue, for although God elect eternally and giue his first grace without all merits, yet he doth not reprobate or hate any man but for sinne, or foresight thereof. By the example of Iacob and Esau is shewed Gods mere mercy in the elect, and iustice in the Reprobate.

CARTVV. 7. [11 Not yet borne.] The last clause of this Annotation halteth; For although God doth reprobate no man, but such as are to be condemned for their sinne: yet his own will is the efficient cause of the decree of Reprobation, and not the sinne it selfe, no more then the good workes are the efficient cause of our election to life everlasting: the Apostle shutting out the one as well as the other: for albeit the Lord reprobateth no man, but such as are to be condemned for sinne, yet doth he not regard this sinne in the decree of reprobation, as the first and efficient cause, but as the materiall cause of condemnation, even as of the election of the faithfull, the first and efficient cause is his onely will, yet he elected us in Christ, that is, in the sufferings and obedience of Christ: For what place Christ hath in the election of those that shall be saued, that place hath sin in the reprobation of the wicked. And therefore thus farre we yeeld to you, that seeing one end of reprobation is, to declare the iustice of God, as an end of the election is to declare his mercy, it must needs follow that in the reprobation he had a regard to sinne, without which regard the decree of reprobation could haue had no iust execution. And thus the glosse speaketh, God choose these without merit, and those also he reprobated: these he chose through mercy, those he reprobated or cast away through iustice.

Verse. 14 What ſhall we ſay then; ! Is there iniquitie with God? God for bid.

That God is not vniuſt, or an accepter of perſons, is declared by familiar examples. S. Auguſtines example is of two debters: the one forgiuen all, and the other put to pay all, by the ſame creditor. Lib de prædeſt. & gra. cap. 4.

RHEM. 7. [14. Is their iniquitie.] Vpon the former diſcourſe that of two perſons equall, God calleth the one to mercy, and leaueth the other in his ſinne, one might inferre that God were vniuſt and accepter of perſons, To which the Apoſtle anſwereth, that God were not iuſt, nor indifferent indeed, ſo to vſe the matter where grace or ſaluation were due, As if two men being Chriſtened, both beleeue well, and liue well: if God ſhould giue heauen to the one, and ſhould damne the other, then were he vniuſt, partiall, and forgetfull of his promiſe: but reſpecting or taking two, who both bee worthy of damnation (as all are before they bee firſt called to mercy) then the matter ſtandeth on meere mercy, and of the giuers will and liberalitie, in which caſe partialitie hath no place. As for exrmple.

1 Two malefactors being condemned both for one crime, the Prince pardoneth the one and letteth the law proceed on the other.
2 The theefe that is pardoned, cannot attribute his eſcape to his own deſeruing, but to the Princes mercy.
3 The theefe that is executed, cannot chalenge the Prince that hee was not pardoned alſo: but muſt acknowledge that he hath his deſerving.
4 The ſtanders by muſt not ſay, that he was executed becauſe the Prince would not pardon him, for that was not the cauſe, but his offence.
5 If they aske further, why the Prince pardoned not both, or executed not both, the anſwer is, that as mercy is a goodly vertue, ſo iuſtice is neceſſary and commendable.
6 But if it be further demaunded why Iohn rather then Thomas was executed: or Thomas rather then Iohn pardoned: anſwer, (that the parties being otherwiſe equall) it hangeth meerely and wholy vpon the Princes will and pleaſure.

1 So likewiſe, God ſeeing all mankinde and euery one of the ſame in a generall condemnation, and maſſe of ſin, in and by Adam, delivereth ſome and not other ſome.
2 All that he deliuered out of that common damnation be deliuered by grace & pardon, through the meanes and merits of Chriſt.
3 Such as be left in the common caſe of damnation, cannot complaine, becauſe they haue their deſeruing for ſinne.
4 We may not ſay that ſuch be damned, becauſe God did not pardon them, but becauſe they had ſin, and therefore deſerued it.
5 That ſome ſhould be damned, and not all pardoned, & other ſome pardoned rather then all condemned, is agreeable to Gods iuſtice and mercy: both which vertues in Gods prouidence towards vs are recommended.
6 That Saul ſhould be rather pardoned then Caiphas (I meane where two bee equally euill and vndeſeruing) that is onely Gods holy will and appointment, by which many and vnworthy man getteth pardon, but no good, or iuſt, or innocent perſon is euer damned.

Predeſtination and reprobation take not away free will, neither muſt any man be ſo wretchleſſe and deſperate.
2. Pet. 1. 10

In all this mercy of God towards ſome, and iuſtice towards otherſome, both the pardoned work by their own free will, and thereby deſerue their ſaluation: and the other no leſſe, by their own free-will, without all neceſſity, work wickednes, and themſelues and only of themſelues procure their own damnation. Therefore no man may without blaſphemy ſay, or can truely ſay, that hee hath nothing to do towards his own ſaluation, but will liue, and thinketh he may liue without care or cogitation of his end the one way or the other, ſaying, If I be appointed to be ſaued, be it ſo: If I be one deſigned to damnation: I cannot helpe the matter: come what come may. All theſe ſpeaches and cogitations are ſinfull and come of the enemie, and be rather ſignes of reprobation, then of election. Therefore the good man muſt without ſearch of Gods ſecrets, worke his own ſaluation and (as S. Peter ſaith) make his election ſure by good works; with continuall hope of Gods mercy, being aſſured that if he beleeue well and do well, he ſhall haue well, for example, if a husbandman ſhould ſay, If God will, I ſhall haue corne enough: if not, I cannot make it, and ſo neglect to till his ground: he may be ſure that he ſhall haue none, becauſe he wrought not for it. An other man vſeth his diligence in tilling and ploughing, and committeth the reſt to God, he findeth the fruite of his labours.

CARTVV. 7. [14. Is their iniquitie.] This note alſo towards the end thereof, goeth not up-right, whilſt it ſaith (and that upon no colour of words in the text) that the pardoned worke their owne ſaluation, which hath been before throughout this Epiſtle, and otherwhere confuted. Secondly, that they worke by their owne free will, ſpoken upon the like ground, confuted likewiſe of us, and contraried by themſelues, when they ſay, verſ. 11. that God giueth the firſt grace without any merit in us. And therefore without all regard of abilitie of will to doe good; contraried alſo by the word pardon, which ſhutteth out all merit of worke. Thirdly, that they ſay the wicked worke wickedneſſe of their own free will without neceſſity. Where it hath been often ſhewed, that the wicked before they are regenerate, cannot but ſinne, and ſinne neceſſarily, but not conſtrainedly, as thoſe which doe it even with greedy deſire. The doctrine ſet forth by the compariſon of the Husbandman we allow, if they meane as the words will well beare; provided that we eſteeme not that the labour of a man doth cauſe the decree of God, or elſe deſerueth the end of his labour.

Verſe. 16 Therefore it is ! not of the willer, nor the runner, but of God that ſheweth mercie.

Our election, or converſion is not of our ſelues, but of Gods grace and mercy.

RHEM. 8. [16. Not of the willer.] If our election, calling, or firſt comming to God, lay wholy or principally vpon our own will or works: or if our willing or endeuouring to be good, would ſerue without the helpe and grace of God, as the Pelagians taught, then our election where wholy in our ſelues, which the Apoſtle denieth, and then might Pharao and other indurate perſons (whom God hath permitted to bee obſtinate, to ſhew his power and iuſt iudgement vpon them) be conuerted when themſelues liſt, without Gods helpe and aſſiſtance: whereas wee ſee the contrary in all ſuch obſtinate offenders, whom God for puniſhment of former ſinnes, viſiteth not with his grace, that by no threats, miracles, nor perſuaſion, they can be conuerted. Whereupon ve may not with Heretickes inferre, that man hath not free will, or that, our will worketh nothing in our conuerſion or comming to God: but this only, that our willing, or working of any good to our ſaluation, commeth of Gods ſpeciall motion, grace, and aſſiſtance, and that it is a ſecondary cauſe, not the principall.

CARTVV. 8. [16. Not of the willer.] The Ieſuites haue this boldneſſe, that they dare not onely ſow the tares of their merits and freewill upon the ground of the Lords Scriptures, but even in that ground which aboue all other refuſeth this wicked ſeed: yea upon the very ſame verſe, as it were upon the ſame foot or ſtalke they will haue it ſtand, which beareth nothing elſe but the grace of God. For the Apoſtle doth here take all from us, and giveth it unto God. And therefore he ſaith not it is not onely in us to will or run, but in God alſo, as the Ieſuites make him to ſay, but ſaith plainly and ſimply, it is not in the will of him that runneth, or willeth, but of God which ſheweth mercy. And as they differ from the Apoſtle, ſo they are at variance with themſelues. For where they ſay, that our calling dependeth not wholly on our free will, they giue to underſtand that it dependeth in part upon our free will, contrary to that which they haue ſaid a little before, verſ. 11. God chooſeth and giueth his firſt grace without all merit. That good workes, and the graces in us are no cauſes of our ſalvation or election principall or ſecundarie, but effects, looke before throughout this whole Epiſtle, and otherwhere.

Verſe. 17 For the Scripture ſaith to Pharao: That to this very purpoſe haue I raiſed thee, that in thee I may ſhew my power: and that my name may bee renowmed in the whole earth.

RHEM. 9. [17. To this purpoſe haue I raiſed.] He doth not ſay that he hath of purpoſe raiſed, or ſet him vp to ſin, or that he was the cauſe of the ſame in Pharao, or that he intended his damnation directly or abſolutely, or any otherwiſe but in reſpect of his demerits: but rather (as the Apoſtle ſaith ſtraight after in this chapter of ſuch hardened and obſtinate offenders) that he with long patience and tolleration expected his conuerſion, and (as S. Chryſoſtome interpreteth this word, Excitaui) preſerued him aliue to repent, whom he might iuſtly haue condemned before. In the 9. of Exodus, whence this allegation is, we reade Poſuite. I haue put or ſet thee vp, as here, I haue raiſed thee, that is to ſay, I haue purpoſely aduanced the to bee ſo great a King, and choſen thee out to be a notorious example both of the obdurate obſtinacy that is in ſuch, whom I haue for ſo great ſins forſaken: and alſo to ſhew to the world that no obſtinacie of neuer ſo mighty offenders can reſiſt me to doe any thing which ſhall not fall to my glory. Which is no more to ſay, but that God often for the puniſhment of Nations, and to ſhew his iuſtice & glory, giueth wicked Princes vnto them, & indueth them with power & all proſperity, & taking his grace from thē upon their deſerts, hardeneth their hearts ſo, as they withſtand & contemn God, and afflict his people, in whoſe end and fall, either temporall or eternall, at the length God will euer be glorified. Neither would he either raiſe or ſuffer any ſuch, or giue them power and proſperity in this life, whereupon he knowet.. they will be worſe, but that he can work all that to his honour and glory: mary, that he vſeth not ſuch rigorous iuſtice on al that deſerue it, that is his great grace & mercy. And that he exerciſeth his iuſtice vpon ſome certaine perſons, rather then vpon other ſome of equall deſerts, that lieth wholy vpon his wil, in whoſe iudgements there be many things ſecret, but nothing vnjuſt.

Exod. 9. 16 In what ſenſe God raiſed up Pharao, &c.

CARTVV. 9. [17. To this purpoſe haue I raiſed.] We agree thus farre, tha God willeth not damnation abſolutely, that is, for damnations ſake. Alſo, that God damneth no otherwiſe, then in reſpect of ſinnes, it may well be accorded. But that there are greater reſpects then ſinne in Gods counſell and decree, whereby he ſetteth men apart to damnation, hath been already ſhewed, and is here evidently declared, where the cauſe of this ſeverity of God is noted to bee the declaration of his power to get him a name, and the principall end to be the will of God. Otherwiſe if there had been no cauſe but ſinne of this raiſing of Pharaoh, the Apoſtle needed never to haue fled to this anſwer, what art thou O man which overthwartly anſwereſt God? conſidering that it had been an eaſie and eaſonable anſwer, able to content a naturall man to haue ſaid that he had no cauſe to complaine, ſeeing by his ſinnes he had deſerued it. Where the Apoſtle for anſwer is faine to flye to Gods prerogatiue, whereby hee is freed from giving a reaſon of his doings unto his creatures, eſpecially ſuch a reaſon as falleth under their capacity.

Verſe. 20 O man, who art thou that doeſt anſwere God; Doth the worke ſay to him that wrought it; Why haſt thou made me thus;

RHEM. 10. [20. Who art thou?] Here the Apoſtle ſtayeth the raſhneſſe and preſumption of ſuch poore wormes, as take vpon them to queſtion with God of their election or reprobation: as certaine impious Heretickes of our time haue done, ſetting out bookes farſed with moſt blaſphemous and erronious doctrine concerning this high and hidden myſtery, and hauing giuen occaſion to the ignorant which alwaies be curious to iangle, & perniciouſly to erre in thoſe things, that are impoſſible to be vnderſtood of any, or well thought of, but of the obedient and humble.

Hereticall bookes concerning Predeſtination.

CARTVV. 10. [20. What art thou.] The ſecrets of the Lord are to himſelfe, but the things which are revealed are to vs and our children, not to iangle of them, but to ſpeake, to diſpute, to write, and to preach of them with all reverence. And if whole bookes haue been written of Predeſtination, it is no marvell, it being a principall poſt of true religion and feare of God, eſpecially ſeeing this pure and wholeſome water hath been troubled with the filthy feet of your Popiſh Sophiſmes. And if men haue abuſed theſe worthy treatiſes, and haue drawen poyſon from whence they might and ought to haue ſucked nouriſhment; yet that ought not to ſtoppe neither the preachers mouth, nor ſtay the pen of the learned Scribe, unleſſe you will haue almoſt all ſound doctrine buried in ſilence, which is of many racked to another uſe and ſenſe then it is delivered. For Auguſtine hauing in his time to do with the ſame quarrellers as the Ieſuites now be, ſheweth, that if preaching of predeſtination ſhould bee ceaſed or ſlacked for the abſurdities that raſh men imagine to follow thereof, that ſo alſo the doctrine of Gods decreed foreknowledge of every thing ſhould bee alſo in the grane of ſilence, Likewiſe the doctrine of prayer &c. But Auguſtine ſheweth, that a man is not onely not hindered, by the preaching of predeſtination (and that to the people)

Ibid. cap. 20 him that hath eares to heare, nothing be leacherously committed: and as charitie is to be preached, that of him that hath eares to heare both God and the neighbour may be loued: so predestination of the benefites of God is to bee preached, that he that hath eares to heare may not glory in himselfe but in the Lord. And seeing neither modesty, nor loue of shortnesse hath caused them to conceale any thing against us, wee are assured that if our bookes were farced with most blasphemous doctrine, they would haue rung us another manner of peale thereof, and haue caused it to bee proclaimed as it were at the sound of trumpet; where now beside the falshood of their tongue in belying us, they can alledge nothing whereby they may haue any tollerable colour of their accusation.

Verse 21 Or hath not ‖ the potter of clay power, of the same masse to make one vessell vnto honour, and another vnto contumelie.

The example of the pot and the potter. RHEM. 11. [21. The Potter. This example of the pot and porter reacheth no further but to declare that the creature may not reason with God his maker, why he giueth not one so great grace as another: or why he pardoneth not one as well as another: no more then the chamber pot may chalenge the Potter why he was not made a drinking pot, as well as an other. And therefore the Heretickes that extend this to proue that man hath no freewill no more then a peece of clay, do vntruly & deceitfully apply the example, specially when we may see expresly in the book of Exodus, that Pharao notwithstanding his indurate hart, had free will: where both it is said, He would not dimisse
2. Tim. 2. 21. the people, and He indurated his own hart himselfe, Exod. c. 8. 15. and (in the Hebrue) v. 23 &c. 9. 35. 1. Reg. 6. 6. And this Apostle also writeth, that a man may cleanse himselfe from the filthy, and so become a vessell of honour in the house of God.

CART VV. 11.]21. The Potter.] Here first the Apostle is falsified, which alledgeth this and the former verse to shew that men haue not to reply against God, albeit hee haue vnchangeably decreed the damnation of the wicked. For these verses are to answer him that shall dispute with God, for pu-

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. For Moyses wrote, ‡ that, the iustice which is of the Law, the man that hath 5 done it, shall liue in it.

RHEM. 1. [5. That, the iustice.] The iustice of the Law of Moyses went no further of it selfe, but to saue a man from the temporall death and punishment prescribed to the transgressors of the same.

CART VV. 1 [5. That the iustice of faith.] If the Iesuits be in other places more blasphemous, yet is it hard for them to be more brutish then heere: Where they say that the iustice of the Law of Moses, went no further of it selfe then to deliuer men from temporall death &c. directly contrary to our Mat. 19. 17 Luk. 10. 28 Saviour Christ, who to those which asked, in doing whereof they might haue life everlasting. Answereth that they may haue it in doing the commandements, meaning the Law of Moses, And if the reward of sin (which is the breach of the Law) be death & deprivation of the kingdom of heaven, as vpon Rom. 6. 23. they themselues confesse: it must needs follow, that the ful accomplishment of the law hath the reward of everlasting life. Which also is evident out of this place; for the same life reward is propounded by the iustice that is by faith: onely the one is noted impossible to bee done of us, where the other hath by grace a performance. And thus the Law of God, and the iustice thereof being placed onely in the outward actions, and not reaching to the inward affections, is made no better then the Lawes of diuers heathen nations, in the observation whereof many lived in that civill honesty, that they could not be convinced of any crime which deserved civill punishment either in body or goods. Thus also the Iesuites haue brought the death of our Saviour Christ to be in a manner worth nothing at
Gal. 3. 13. all: for he having taken away the curse of the Law from us, hath (in their iudgement) taken away nothing but a temporall death, from which notwithstanding our Saviour Christ doth not deliver those that (being his) haue by some crime either against godlinesse or honest peace, committed that which is worthy of death. Ierom indeed maketh mention of such a fond fantasie of certain men, but he utter-
Tho. in Rom. c 10. 5. lect. 1. ly rejecteth it as a false and erroneous opinion. And Thomas although he here sticke in the same mire with the Iesuites, yet affirmeth, that a certaine grosse faith, that the Law of Moses kept in the propertime thereof, did not onely bring temporall commodities, but gaue also eternall life.

Verse. 16. But all ‡ do not obey the Gospel. For Esay saith, Lord, who hath beleeued the hearing of vs?

RHEM. 2. [16 Do not obey.] We see then that it is in a mans freewill to beleeue, or not to beleeue, to obey or disobey the Gospell or truth preached.

CART VV. 2. [16. Doe not obey] As if they read a Lecture amongst their Iesuiticall novices, they continually (almost through all their notes) in the Epistles especially, cast forth confused and unlearned unlearned ſpeeches, without any ground or occaſion of the text, or proofe of reaſon, or authority whatſoever.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 3 For, not knowing | the iuſtice of God and ſeeking to eſtabliſh their own, they haue not been ſubiect to the iuſtice of God.

RHEM. 3. [2, The iuſtice of God.] The iuſtice of God, is that which God giueth vs through Chriſt, the Iewes owne proper iuſtice, is that which they had or chalenged to haue of themſelues and by their own ſtrength, holpen onely by the knowledge of the Law without the helpe, or grace of Chriſt, Gods iuſtice & the Iewes owne iuſtice.

CARTVV. 3. [3. The iuſtice of God.] This gloſſe is confuted by the next verſe, where for the iuſtice of God in this verſe, is put the perfect fulfilling of the Law by Chriſt, which is every ones righteouſneſſe that doth beleeue, and not which doth the Law himſelfe, through the grace of Chriſt. Their marginall note alſo doth confute it, which ſaith, that the Law bringeth a man to Chriſt to be iuſtified by him; where to haue made the note ſutable to their gloſſe, they ſhould haue ſaid, that the Law bringeth us to Chriſt to bee iuſtified by it, and not by him. Looke the anſwer more at large before, vpon Rom. 1. verſe 17.

Verſe. 6 But | the iuſtice which is of faith, ſaith thus, Say not in thy heart, who ſhall aſcend into heauen? that is to bring Chriſt downe.

RHEM. 4. [6. The iuſtice of faith.] The iuſtice which is of faith, reacheth to the life to come, making man aſſured of the trueth of ſuch articles as concerne the ſame, as, of Chriſts aſcenſion to heauen, of his deſcending to hell, of his comming down to be Incarnate and his reſurrection and returne againe to be glorified: by which his actions we be pardoned, iuſtified, and ſaued, as by the Law we could neuer be. Iuſtice of faith.

CARTVV. Looke the anſwer to the marginall note vpon the 5. verſ.

Verſe. 8 But what ſaith the Scripture, The word is nigh, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, this is the word of faith which we preach.

RHEM. 5. [8, The word of faith.] The word of faith is the whole Law of Chriſt, concerning both life and doctrine, grounded vpon this, that Chriſt is our Sauiour, and that hee is riſen again. Which point (as all other) muſt both be beleeued in heart, and alſo be confeſſed by mouth, for though a man be iuſtified inwardly when he hath the vertues of faith, hope, and charitie from God yet if occaſion be giuen, he is alſo bound to confeſſe with his mouth, and by all his externall actions without ſhame or feare of the world, that which he inwardly beleeueth: or elſe he cannot be ſaued. Which is againſt certaine *old Heretickes that taught, a man might ſay or doe what he would, for feare or danger, ſo that he kept his faith in heart. Open confeſſion and proteſtation of our faith, is ſometime neceſſary. Euſeb. lib. 9. c. 31. hiſt. Eccleſ.

CARTVV. 5. [8 The word of faith.] The Apoſtle giving to underſtand that righteouſneſſe and ſalvation cannot be in us by the doing of the Law, no more then either wee are able to climbe vnto the heavens to fetch a thing that is there, or go downe to the bottome of the deep ſeas to fetch ſomething there; ſheweth that it is not ſo in the righteouſneſſe that commeth by faith, but of the contrary part, that this Thing, that is to ſay, righteouſneſſe and ſalvation, is neere vnto us, and by the grace of God in Chriſt, made not onely poſſible, but eaſie, for that it is in our heart by faith, and ſo conſequently in our mouth by confeſſion: For as the Apoſtle otherwhere ſaith, that faith worketh and declareth it ſelfe by charity: ſo heere he ſheweth that it worketh by profeſſion of the name of Chriſt, which is an effect of faith, & not a fellow cauſe of making a man iuſt: which the Apoſtle doth evidently declare, when he citing the Pſalme, I beleeued therefore haue I ſpoken, hee addeth, We beleeue therefore we ſpeake, making confeſſion of the truth, the proper and moſt naturall daughter of faith, and not of charity and hope, otherwiſe then they themſelues are begoten of faith. And albeit before a man come to enioy and take poſſeſſion of ſalvation, it behoveth him to make confeſſion of faith, yet the Apoſtle aſcribeth the righteouſneſſe which hath ſalvation for a iuſt reward to faith alone, and ſuffereth not confeſſion to haue any part thereof. Charity and Hope are often ſaid by you to iuſtifie, but are never proved. Word for thing, according to the hebrue phraſe Gen. 5. 6. Pſa. 116. 10

Verſe. 14 | How then ſhall they inuocate in whom they haue not beleeued: Or how ſhall they beleeue him whom they haue not heard? And how ſhall they heare without a preacher?

RHEM. 6. [14 How ſhall they inuocate?] This maketh not (as Hereticks pretend) againſt inuocation of Saints: the Apoſtle ſaying nothing els, but that they cannot inuocate in Chriſt as their Lord and Maiſter, in whom they do not beleeue, and whom they never heard of. For he ſpeaketh of the Gentiles or Pagans, who could not inuocate him, vnleſſe they did firſt beleeue in him. To the due inuocation of Chriſt, we muſt know him, and our duties to him. And ſo is it true alſo that wee cannot pray to our B. Lady or any Sainct in heauen, till we beleeue and know their perſons, dignitie, and grace, and truſt that they can helpe vs. But if our aduerſaries thinke that wee cannot inuocate them, becauſe wee cannot beleeue in them: let them vnderſtand that the Scripture vſeth alſo this ſpeech, to beleeue in men, and it is the very Hebrew phraſe, which they ſhould not bee ignorant of that brag thereof ſo much. Exod. 14. 31. They beleeued in God and in Moyſes, and 3. Paral 20. 20. in the Hebrew. Ep. ad Philem. v 5. ſa ed: And how ſtrongly and effectually we conclude upon this place, that God onely muſt bee prayed to, becauſe we muſt beleeue in God alone, the Reader may eaſily know by the foule hand that the Ieſuites are conſtrained to make in the avoyding thereof. Firſt, by dalying with the ſignification of faith, as if to beleeue in God heere, were nothing elſe, but to beleeue that there is a God, and to know what he is, which may well be done by the knowledge of the Law, where the Apoſtle ſheweth that this faith leaneth upon the Preaching of the glad tydings of the Goſpell, which are, that God is our mercifull father in Ieſus Chriſt. Secondly, in that they are ſo diſtreſſed by this argument of ours, that they are driven to ſay, that we ought to beleeue in the Virgin Mary, and other Saints whatſoever, whereunto they ignorantly pretend, Exod. 14.31. and 2. Chron. 20.20. not knowing that the prepoſition ב in the Hebrew tongue ſerveth oftentimes to note the accuſatiue caſe, and is then all one with the particle את, as appeareth by theſe places in the Margent, whereof there can be no other conſtruction. And ſo the ſentence of Exodus ought to be turned. that they beleeved God and Moſes, as their own vulgar Interpreter doth tranſlate it, and not as the Ieſuites would haue it, they beleeved in God and in Moſes, for that was falſe in regard of God, who complaineth often of their infidelity towards him, and ſhould haue beene blaſphemous in regard of Moſes, whom ſo they ſhould haue made their arme, who himſelfe was but fleſh, that is but a man. And if the Ieſuites had attended but a little to the purpoſe of the Prophet in that place, they would haue beene aſhamed to haue alledged this place to proue that men may put their truſt in Saints: for Moſes ſpeaketh this in reproach of the Iſraelits, who beleeved neither the Lord nor Moſes touching their promiſe of their delivery out of Egypt, untill ſuch time as they having quite paſſed the red ſea, did ſee their enemies dead in the ſea. And if upon the uſe of the preposition they will conclude that the children of Iſrael beleeved in Moſes, they may as well conclude that we may put our truſt in this tranſitorie life, then which there is nothing more uncertaine and vaine. For Moſes threatning the tranſgreſſors of the Law, ſaith that they ſhall not bee ſure of their life, uſing the very ſelfe ſame word and conſtruction which he doth in this place: Where (by the Ieſuites tranſlation) the contrary bleſſing to thoſe that keepe the Law, is, that they ſhould truſt in their life. The ſame anſwer is to the place in the Chronicles, except this onely, that in Exodus the people are marked of ſlackneſſe in beleeving, which (as Thomas) would not beleeue, unleſſe they did firſt ſee and heare: but in the Chronicles the people is praiſed as thoſe which reſted in the word of the Prophet, before that the promiſe was effected. For the place to Philemon it is ſhamefully wreſted, Faith being referred onely to God, and loue to the brethren, as it appeareth manifeſtly, by the two verſes next following. In the former whereof faith is reſtrained unto Chriſt, and in the latter the loue here mentioned is carried to the brethren. As appeareth alſo plainely by that otherwhere, upon the ſame occaſion, he ſo diſtinguiſheth faith and loue, that the faith is appropriated unto Chriſt, and loue referred to the Saints. Where the Reader is to note the abſurde dealing of the Ieſuits, which alledge this place underſtood of Saints yet upon earth, to proue the invocation of the Saints which be departed. And where the elder Writers haue uſed this phraſe, I beleeue in the Church, it ſeemeth that they did it through ſome ignorance of this Hebrew phraſe, which doth not in any neceſſity ſignifie that which is pretended, howbeit the teſtimonies heere avouched are little worth for this purpoſe: For that Epiphanius having IN the Catholike Church, meaneth nothing elſe, but that he beleeveth that there is a Catholike Church, it is evident, conſidering that he uſeth the ſame phraſe of ſpeach, ſpeaking of Baptiſme, of the Reſurrection, and of the Kingdom of heaven: Vnleſſe therefore the Ieſuites will haue us confeſſe in our faith, that we beleeue in Baptiſm, in the riſing againe of the dead, and in the kingdom of heaven, Epiphanius helpeth them not a whit. And himſelfe doth afterward (leaving out the preposition) ſay, we confeſſe one Baptiſme, we looke for the riſing againe of the dead. In the expoſition of the Nicen Creed we finde no ſuch thing in Cyril, but he hath the cleane contrary. For upon this that we ſay, I beleeue in the Holy Ghoſt is gathered the divinity of the Holy Ghoſt his words are theſe. After that the moſt worthy Fathers had finiſhed their ſpeech of Chriſt, they make mention of the Holy Ghoſt, for they ſaid, we muſt beleeue in the Holy Ghoſt in like manner, that is to ſay, as in the Father and the Sonne. Where let the Reader note alſo that the briefe or abſtract of our faith, as it is repeated of Cyril himſelfe before his expoſition ſtayeth in theſe words, And in the Holy Ghoſt, and proceedeth no further. Ierome indeed hath the phraſe which muſt be underſtood as Epiphanius expoundeth his like phraſe, it being rather a Greek phraſe then a Latine.

RHEM. 7. [15. Vnleſſe they be ſent.] This place of the Apoſtle inuincibly condemneth all the preachings, writings, ordinances, innouations and vſurpations of Church, Pulpit, and whatſoeuer our new Euangeliſts haue intruded themſelues and entred into by the window: ſhewing that they bee euery one from the higheſt to the loweſt, falſe prophets running and vſurping, being neuer lawfully called. Verſe. 20 But Eſay is bold, and ſaith, I was found of them that did not ſeeke me: openly I appeared to them that asked not of me.

RHEM. 6. [20. That asked not.] That Chriſt was found of thoſe that neuer asked after him, it proueth that the firſt grace and our firſt iuſtification is without merits. That God called ſo continually and earneſtly by his Prophets and by other his ſignes and wonders, vpon the Iewes, and they withſtood it: free will is proued, and that God would haue men ſaued, and that they be the cauſe of their own damnation themſelues, The firſt iuſtification of meere grace, Freewill.

CARTVV. 6 [20. That asked not.] Free will muſt needs goe to the ground, whoſe foundation is of ſuch ſtubble as this is: if of diſobedience they conclude freedome and power to obey, for they may ſo proue that the Diuell hath power to doe well if he liſt, conſidering that he alſo doth not obey the truth. In the latter reaſon, becauſe being called of God by his miniſters (which the Diuell is not) they obey not, therefore they haue power to chooſe either good or euill, there is ſome more probability. But if they had remembred, that as God calling the dead in their graues, giueth them withall, all manner of ſtrength whereby they riſe, there being no force in the dead body to raiſe it ſelfe: ſo doth he alſo in the ſpirituall reſurrection to life everlaſting, as our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe doth compare them. And even in this place where he ſaith, that he was found of them that asked not after him: the free will for which they ſtruggle againſt the force of a manifeſt truth, is vtterly ſtricken through. For if there be an abilitie in men of themſelues to ſeeke after God, as there is a power to goe away from him, and the ſame power to ſeeke him as there is to run away from him when he ſeeketh vs, the ſame power and facultie muſt needes at ſome times and in ſome men come into act. But the Apoſtle teſtifieth that no man by nature ever ſeeketh after God, but is found of God when hee ſeeketh not, nor asketh after him: wherefore there is no man that hath any ſuch power or facultie to chooſe the good, and to eſchew the euill. Whereunto it commeth that our Saviour Chriſt chooſeth vs, and not we him: whereas if when he calleth and chooſeth vs, wee ſhould by any ſtrength in our own nature anſwer him, we ſhould alſo chuſe him as well as he choſe vs: which is directly contrary to the words of our Saviour, and ſo conſequently it ſhould alſo follow, that not ſo much as the firſt iuſtification (as you in your Babyloniſh tongue tearme it) ſhould bee of meere grace, ſeeing as the offer of grace is to be given of God, ſo the accepting of it ſhould be aſcribed to our free will, whereby the grace beſtowed, ſhould be no grace, but debt. Ioh. 5. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. & 11. 23. 24. 25. 26. Ioh. 15. 16.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 4 But what ſaith the diuine anſwer vnto him I haue left me ſeuen thouſand men that haue not bowed their knees to Baal.

RHEM. 1. [4. Baal.] The Heretickes adde here alſo, Image, to the text, as Act. 19. 35.

CARTVV. So ſhould the Ieſuites haue done if they had tranſlated truely; and becauſe they haue not ſo tranſlated it, therefore they haue laid themſelues open to the ſcorne of every Grammer-boy, whilſt they make Baal a woman, and of the feminine gender, which gender agreeth well with the word Image, which is underſtood, and can by no meanes agree with Baal, which is expreſſed.

Verſe. 20 Well: becauſe of incredulity they were broken, but thou by faith doeſt ſtand: be not too higly wiſe, but ‡ fear.

RHEM. 2. [20. Feare.] We ſee that he which ſtandeth by faith, may fall from it, and therefore muſt liue in feare, and not in the vaine preſumption and ſecurity of the Heretickes.

CARTVV. 2. [20. Feare] The argument followeth not, that wee may therefore fall from faith, becauſe we ought to feare, and not to preſume. For God that hath ordained that we cannot fall which truly beleeue, hath ordained theſe exhortations for the meanes whereby we ſhould be kept ſafe from falling; even as alſo the Apoſtle knowing that the faithfull amongſt the Theſſalonians were choſen of God, doth take thereby incouragement the rather to pray for them. Neither is the feare here commanded, a feare leſt they ſhould fall away, but a feare leſt they ſhould ſinne; and therefore it is oppoſed not vnto aſſurance, but to preſumption: for otherwiſe the Lord will haue vs, that being delivered from our ſpirituall enemies, wee ſhould ſerue him without feare in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe all the dayes of our life. But if other Churches may fall away from the faith of Chriſt, how is it that the Church of Rome (to the which this watch-word was given eſpecially) cannot depart from the truth. 1. Theſ. 1. 3. 4. Luke 1. 74. 75.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 3. [3. Seuen thouſand.] The Heretickes alledge this place and example very impertinently to proue that the Church may be wholy ſecret, hid, or vnknowen, for though the faithfull were forced to keepe cloſe in that perſecution of Achab and Iezabell, which was onely in the Kingdom of the ten tribes, that is, of Iſraell: yet at the very ſame time, in Ieruſalem and all the kingdom of Iuda, the externall worſhip and profeſſion of faith was open to all the world, and well known to Elias and the faithfull, ſo many, that *the very ſouldiers onely were numbred aboue ten hundred thouſand, beſides that there is a great difference between the Chriſtian Church and the Iewes, our reſting vpon better promiſes then theirs. And we will not put the Proteſtants to proue that there were Gods anſwer to Elias of 7000. maketh nothing for the Proteſtants inuiſible Church 2. Par. 17.

7000. of their ſect. when their new Elias Luther began: but let them proue that there were ſeuen or any one, either then or in all ages before him, that was in all points of his beleefe. Hereticks there were before him, as Iouinian, Vigilantius, Heluidius, Wicliffe, &c. and with him, Zuinglius, Caluin, &c. who beleeued as he did in ſome things, but not in all.

CARTVV.3. [4. Seuen thouſand.] This place euidently proueth, that there may bee ſeuen thouſand men in one land or kingdom, which hauing the true feare of God, are not yet by any apparant workes and exerciſes of religion made knowne, not ſo much as one of them to another, much leſſe to the enemies of contrary iudgement. And if there might be ſeuen thouſand in one land hidden and vnknown to Elias, that was of ſo quick ſight and ſharpe iudgement to diſcerne a true worſhipper from an Idolater; how much more may there bee ſeuentie times ſeuen thouſand in the whole world, which the beetle-blind Papiſts cannot know. And therefore it maketh nothing againſt vs, if there haue been times wherein ſeuen profeſſors of the truth could not haue been pointed out by vs. And if the truth of religion ſhould be meaſured by the agreement of ſeuen in all points of beliefe, it could not finde a nights lodging with you, whoſe ſword poynts in diuers and ſundry controuerſies are in your fellowes neckes; as euen in this place the maſter is directly againſt his ſchollers. For hee af-
Lumbard. firmeth, that by reaſon of the inter-marriage of Ioram king of Iuda, with Achabs daughter, that Elias eſteemed that not onely in Iſrael, but in the tribe of Iuda alſo they were become Idolaters, and that he alone remained in the true worſhip of God. And where they would make a differeuce of our times, and the time of the Law by reaſon of better promiſes giuen vnto vs then vnto them. Firſt it is falſe
Heb. 8. 6. that we haue any other promiſes then they had; they are (indeed) ſomewhere called better, but that betterneſſe is not either in the kind, or number of promiſes, but onely in the manner of cleereneſſe, and extent to a greater number of nations, of the ſelfe ſame promiſes that they had. Secondly, this anſwer is frivolous: for the Apoſtle applieth this teſtimonie of the godly vnknowne vnto the Church of the Iewes which lived vnder the Goſpell, and maketh his argument, that as there were many godly Iewes in Elias time vnder the Law, although they were not knowne, ſo there might bee at this time vnder the Goſpell many of them that did beleeue, although few were knowne.

Verſe. 6 And if by grace: | not now of workes, otherwiſe grace now is not grace.

What workes are not, and what are the cauſes of ſaluation.

RHEM.4.[6. Not now of works.] If ſaluation be attributed to good works done of nature without faith and Gods helpe, the ſame can not be of grace, for ſuch works exclude grace, fauour, and mercy: and challenge onely of debt, and not of gift. Therefore take heed here of the heretickes expoſition, that vntruely exclude Chriſtian mens works from neceſſity of merit of ſaluation, which are done with and by Gods grace, and therefore euidently conſiſt with the ſame, and bee ioyned with Gods grace as cauſes of our ſaluation. Our aduerſaries are like ill Potecaries, euer taking quid pro quo, either of ignorance, or of intent to deceiue the ſimple.

CARTVV.4. [6. Not now of workes.] If a man can draw cleane things from that which
Gen. 6. 5. is vncleane, and good from that which is naught, then good workes may come from evill nature, but good workes are not of our nature. Wherefore whenſoeuer the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of good workes, he ſpeaketh of them that are done in faith, which is moſt euident in this place, where the Apoſtle affirmeth that the whole election, or company elected of the Iewes, whereof a good number was already the called and the ſanctified of the Lord, was not iuſtified of the good workes which they did, but of grace. Even as alſo Abraham the father of them all, is affirmed not to be iuſtified of the good

CARTVV.5. But whether it be turned permiſſion, or conſent, let the Ieſuites tell vs how they can defend the iuſtice of God, either in conſenting to, or permitting evill, otherwiſe then by this, that hee either conſenteth to it, or permitteth it, thereby to draw good out of it, and that a more excellent

RHEM.6.[20, Becauſe of incredulity.] He repelleth the pride of the Gentiles vaunting themſelues of their receiuing, and of the Iewes reiection, namely, in that they thought the Iewes to be forſaken for no other cauſe: but that they might come into their roomes: declaring that the direct and proper cauſe of their forſaking, was their incredulity, exhorting the Gentiles to beware of the ſame, becauſe they may fall alwell as the other, and that God is as like to execute iuſtice againſt them as againſt the Iewes, as he hath done in many nations falling to hereſie.

RHEM. 7. [28. According to the Gospell.] In respect, or, as concerning beleefe in Christ and receiuing the Gospel, they are Gods enemies: by occasion of which their incredulity, the Gentiles found mercy: otherwise in respect of his speciall election of that nation, and the promises made to the Patriarches, the Iewes are deere to him still, for God neuer promiseth but hee performeth, nor repenteth himselfe of the priuiledges giuen to that nation.

Verse. 32 For God hath | concluded all into incredulitie, that he may haue mercy on all.

RHEM. 9. [33. Concluded all.] That so God taking all nations and all men in sinne (which they fell into, not by his drift or causing, but of their own free will) may of his mercy call and conuert whom and in what order he will: and the parties haue no cause to brag of their deseruings: but both Countries and particular men may refer their eternall election and first calling and their conuersion to Christ, and to his mercy onely: no works which they had before in their incredulity, deseruing any such thing, though their works afterward proceeding of faith and grace doe merit heauen.

CARTVV. 9. [32 Concluded.] This poyson of the Merit of workes after faith, which they let drop down in the most of their Annotations, without so much as noting any place where they sucked it, hath beene often discouered, and with the Triacle of substantiall arguments out of the Word driuen out. And although it were an easie matter at every mention of it, to bring forth a new confutation, yet to auoide tediousnesse, the Reader shall look for no answer in this and such like points, so often causelessely repeated, but there onely, where either they haue some reason, or some authority. Otherwise we could answer them heere, that the Apostle declareth that God is for all spirituall blessings to be praised, glorified and thanked, and therefore as well for sanctification (which summarily he setteth forth in the vertue of loue) as for our election. And if we haue to thanke him for them, as for our election they be of grace as well as the election. And if wee haue our whole sanctification of grace (which the Iesuits make the cause of our euerlasting saluation) the saluation which they make the effect and reward thereof, must needs be of grace. For if that which is supposed to deserue life everlasting doth not deserue, but is of grace, it must needs follow that the reward which is given thereunto is not given as due debt, but of undeserued grace. Ephes. 2. 3.

Verse. 33 O depth of the riches of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God: how incomprehensible are his iudgements, & his wayes vnsearchable?

RHEM. 10. [33 O depth.] The Apostle concludeth that no man ought to search further into Gods secret and vnsearchable counsels of the vocation of the Gentiles, and reiecting the Iewes, otherwise then this, that all which be reiected, for their sinnes be iustly reiected: and all that be saued by Gods great mercy and Christs grace be saued. And whosoeuer seeketh among the people to spred contagion of curiosity by seeking further after things past mans and Angels reach, they ouer-reach & ouerthrow themselues. If thou wilt be saued, beleeue, obey the Church, feare God and keep his commandements that is thy part & euery mans els. Thou mayst not examine whether thou be predestinate or reprobate, nor seeke to know the wayes of Gods secret iudgement toward they selfe or other men. It is the common enemy of our soules that in this vnhappy time hath opened blasphemous tongues, and directed the proud pennes of Caluine, Beza, Verone, and such reprobates, to the discussing of such particulars, to the perdition of many a simple man, and specially of yong Scholers in Vniuersities, which with lesse study may learne to bee proud and curious, then to bee humble, wise, and obedient. How far to deale and to know in the doctrine of Predestination

The heretikes writings of Predestination

CARTVV. 10. [33 O depth.] First, it is false, that God looked at nothing, but at sinne, in the reiection of the Iewes. For although they could not haue fallen away but by vnbeleefe: yet the Apostle sheweth he looked to a higher cause then that, namely that the Gentiles should haue an entrance to the Gospell: Whereupon (partly) commeth this exclamation, O depth, &c. which hath no place in their reiection if it be onely in regard of sinne. It is also a false doctrine, that we ought not to examine whether we bee predestinate or no: For the Apostle willeth us to examine our selues, whether wee stand in faith or no, whereby we may know whether we be in Christ or no, which will teach us whether we be reprobate or no. And if in examining our selues we may find out that we are not reprobate, we shall finde out that we are predestinate. And the Apostle teacheth us by many arguments of the effects of Predestination to come to the assured knowledge of predestination which is their cause. Peter also exhorting to make sure our election by good workes, doth declare that wee are by good workes made sure of our election. And as we may and ought to examine our own Predestination so (although it be more sparingly and rarely to be sought, and also is more difficultly and hardly found) yet we both may and ought by their workes to seeke sometimes into the Predestination of others; those namely who are supposed to haue sinned against the holy Ghost, to the end, that according to the commandement of God we Preach not vnto them, nor pray for their conversion. 2. Cor. 13. 5. Rom. 8. 30. Ephe. 1. 4. 5 2. Pet. 1. 10 Matth. 7. 6. 1. Iohn. 5. 16

The Apoſtolicall rule or analogie of faith.

RHEM. 2. [6. According to the rule of faith.] By this and many places of holy writ, wee may gather, that the Apoſtles by the holy Ghoſt, before they were ſundered into diuers Nations, ſet down among themſelues a certaine Rule and forme of faith and doctrine, containing not onely the Articles of the Creed, but all other principles, grounds, and the whole platforme of all the Chriſtian religion. Which rule was before any of the bookes of the new Teſtament were written, and before the faith was preached among the Gentils, by which not onely euery other inferiour teachers doctrine was tried, but all the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts preaching, writing, interpreting (which is here called prophecying) were of Gods Church approued and admitted, or diſproued and reiected. This forme, by mouth & not by Scripture, euery Apoſtle deliuered to the country by them conuerted. For keeping of this forme, the Apoſtle before praiſed the Romanes, and afterward eaneſtly warneth them by no mans plauſible ſpeach to bee drawen from the ſame. This hee commendeth to Timothy calling it his Depoſitum. For not holding this faſt and ſure, he blameth the Galatians, further alſo denouncing to himſelfe or an Angell that ſhould write, teach, or expound againſt that which they firſt receiued, Anathema, and commanding alwayes to beware of them that taught otherwiſe. For feare of miſſing this line of trueth, himſelfe notwithſtanding he had the holy Ghoſt: yet leſt he might haue preached in vaine and loſt his labour he went to conferre with Peter and the reſt, for the faſt keeping of this Rule of truth, the Apoſtles held Councels, and their ſucceſſors by their example. For the holding of this Rule, and by the meaſure thereof, were all the holy Scriptures written, for and by the ſame, all the glorious doctors haue made their ſermons, commentaries, and interpretations of Gods word, all writings and interpretations no otherwiſe admitted nor deemed to be of God, but as they bee agreeable to this Rule.

c. 6. 17. c. 16. 17. 1. Tim. 6. 20. Gal 1. 6. Gal. 2. 1. Acts 15. 6.

The Hereticks fantaſticall rule, or rules of faith, many and diuers one from another.

And this is the ſure Analogie and meaſure of faith, ſet down and commended to vs euery where for the Apoſtles tradition: and not the phantaſticall rule or ſquare that euery Sectmaiſter pretendeth to gather out of the Scriptures falſely vnderſtood and wreſted to his purpoſe, by which they iudge of Doctor, Scripture, Church, and all. Arius had by that meanes a rule of his own, Luther had his falſe weightes, and Calvin his own alſo. According to which ſeuerall meaſure of euery Sect, they haue their expoſitions of Gods word: and in England (as in other infected Countries) they kept of late an apiſh imitation of this prophecying which S. Paul here and in other places ſpeaketh of, and which was an exerciſe in the primitiue Church, meaſured not by euery mans peculiar ſpirit, but by the former rule of faith firſt ſet down by the Apoſtles. And therefore all this new phantaſtical Prophecying and all other preaching in Calvins ſchoole, is iuſtly by this note of the Apoſtle condemned, for that it is not according to, but quite againſt the Rule of faith.

CARTVV. 2. [6 According to the rule of faith.] By this Annotation we may know that the Ieſuites are drowſie dreamers, telling every one in the deame of his owne head, as confidently as if they had beene of, and in the counſell of the Apoſtles, not onely without either teſtimony of Scriptures, or Doctor, but cleane contrary to both, as hath beene before declared: where the Scripture hath been ſhewed to be both ſufficient, and the higheſt rule in the Church to decide all Controverſies by. Howbeit let vs look alſo ſomewhat into this idle ſpeculation of the Ieſuites. Where firſt the Reader may note that they underſtand this place cleane from the meaning of the Apoſtle: For he exhorting all men in generall to be modeſt and ſober, and not to take more upon them then they haue graces, and calling of God to anſwer and to diſcharge, applyeth this generall exhortation particularly and moſt directly unto them which haue publick callings to teach in the Church, as thoſe by whoſe over weening the Church might ſuffer greateſt hurt. Wherefore he exhorteth them that they ſhould teach not vantingly, nor ambitiouſly making a greater ſhew of knowledge then indeed they had, but according to the proportion of faith, that is to ſay, of the gifts which they had received by faith. And thus both Chriſoſtom and Ierom do expound it, when they ſay, That euery man receiueth ſo much as hee beleeueth, and ſo much as his veſſell of faith will hold. For the Analogy of faith is the ſame, which verſe 43. hee had called the meaſure or quantity of faith. And therefore they do not ſo faithfully interprete it, which turne it the Rule of faith. The Ieſuites therefore deceiue themſelues, firſt in that they take a meaſure and proportion for a rule; ſecondly, for that they underſtand not that in the word Faith there is a trope ordinarily uſed in the Scripture, of the cauſe put for the effect, namely, of faith for the gifts received by faith. Secondly, where haue they their ground in the Scripture of this, which they deliver so confidently that the Apostles met, and set down a rule of all faith and doctrine concerning all principles of religion before the faith was preached amongst the Gentiles. This as it hath no ground, so it is most like to be false: for seeing it was a wisedom in Paul, tending to the confirmation of the truth of the Gospell, first to preach the Gospell to the Gentiles, before hee conferred with any man of it, why should not the same wisedom for strengthening the truth of God be observed of the rest of the Apostles? It was a marveilous strong hold of the Gospell, both in the doctrine and discipline thereof, that Paul preached the same, that the rest of the Apostles did, albeit he had never consulted with them of it. And why then should not this fortification of the Gospell be greater when every one of the Apostles should haue done the same? Of the other side, who seeth not that it had been a great wound in the faith of Christian religion, if it should haue been knowen that the Apostles meeting and setting downe aforehand what they would teach, after went and taught the same: for so they might giue suspition that every one severally knew not certainly, what to preach, vnlesse he had consulted with his fellowes. We will not now argue of the truth of the story of the 70 Interpreters, agreeing all in the translation of the old Testament, both for the same sence and words, albeit they translated every one apart, not knowing any of their fellowes translation, but leaue it unto the iudgement of every one. But if it were so as it is storied, we would demand of the Iesuites, whether more authority riseth to that translation by meanes of making the same translation throughout every one apart, then if they had met all in one place, and had by conference one with another agreed thereof. And if the iudgement bee not hard in this case, it is easie to conclude that it commendeth more the preaching of the Apostles, that they first preached before they conferred of a rule of religion, then if they first had conferred and after preached it. Thirdly, we see that neither in places already subdued unto Christ by the preaching of the Gospell, neither yet in other that yet stood at the staues end with it, the Apostles did ever alledge the forme of doctrin agreed of by them, but onely taught the subjection unto the Gospell, and convinced the rebels thereunto with the Scripture, as appeareth by the whole discourse of the Acts. Where if they had set downe any such forme, Luke would never haue passed it (being a matter of so great weight) in such deepe silence. But, say that they agreed of such a forme and platforme of religion; yet it is plaine, that they taught it and delivered it out of the true interpretation of the Scripture. For the Apostle declareth that the Gospell is contained, and was made manifest by the Prophetical scriptures according to the commandement of the eternall God. And therefore as they exhort all to hold that which they haue retained: so they exhort them to hold it out of the Scriptures. And this your selues at unawares do confirme, when you say, that the Scriptures were written for the holding of this rule; for if they they were written for this purpose then they are either able to hold us in this rule, or else the writers of the Scriptures were deceived in their purpose, which is disappointed, if the Scripture bee not able to hold us in this rule: which latter point (although it be horribly blasphemous, yet) it seemeth that you will make no great difficulty to affirme, that the Lords Scribes & publique Notaries may be deceived, which shame not in this note of yours to say, that Paul for feare of missing the line of this truth, went to conferre with Peter and the rest. And was Paul indeed afraid lest he should misse the line of truth in his preaching. Why may you not also say that the Holy Ghost may be in feare lest he misse of the line of truth, seeing the Apostle both in speaking and writing the Gospell spake not, nor wrote of himselfe, but was the mouth and pen of the holy Ghost speaking in him, and writing by him. Whereof it is that hee is bold to say, that whosoever rejecteth him, rejecteth not man, but God, which had given his holy Spirit unto him. Away therefore with these filthy Iesuites that are come to the depth of spirituall drunkennesse, that they dare call in question whether the doctrine preached by the Apostle bee according to the line of truth or no; for as for that he went to conferre with Peter and the rest, lest he should haue run in vaine, are there any so blinde as not to know that he did that not in any feare or suspition of the truth of his doctrine; but onely to stop their mouthes which gaue out that this his preaching was divers from the preaching of the other Apostles. But to returne againe unto this platforme, which we affirme to bee drawne from the Scriptures, if there were any set downe by the agreement of the Apostles, for further proofe thereof we alledge Luke, who in his two bookes dedicated to Theophilus, affirmeth that he wrote them, having exactly attained unto all, that he might know the undoubted certaintie of those things whereof he had been instructed, meaning by the preaching of the Gospell. And if he in his two bookes wrote such a summe and short of all the principles and grounds of our religion, which were preached either by our Saviour Christ or by his Apostles, both in the doctrine and discipline of the Church, as there is no one poynt which we are not able to shew the grounds of in them, how much more is the rule of faith, which they followed in their preaching committed to writing by all the rest of the Evangelists and Apostles, especially if hereunto be added the old Testament, which is a noble storehouse of all necessary truthes to salvation. Wherefore this rule of faith (if it were such as you affirme) healeth not the deadly wound which your Popish traditions haue received by the sufficiency of the Scriptures. Considering that if there be any Apostolicall tradition, necessary to the perfecting either of the doctrine or discipline of the sonne of God, the same is contained in the holy Scriptures. Last of all, your owne Evangelicall Doctor saith, that by this rule of faith is meant either the Scriptures that were before written, or some thing drawn necessarily from the fountaine of the Scriptures.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 8 OWe no man any thing; but, that you loue one another: For he that loueth his neighbour, hath ‡ fulfilled the law.

RHEM. 1. [8. Fulfilled the Law.] Here wee learne, that the Law may bee and is fulfilled by loue in this life: againſt the Aduerſaries, ſaying, it is impoſſible to keepe the commandements.

1. Cor. 8. 2. & 13. 9. Eph. 1. 15. & 5. 2. Col. 1. 4. & 3. 14. 1. Theſ. 1. 3. & 4. 9. 10. Iohn Epiſt.

CARTVV. 1. [8. Fulfilled the law.] You learne without being taught of the Scripture. For the Apoſtle ſheweth onely that Loue doth all things commanded in the Law; according to the meaſure and proportion of loue. perfect loue perfectly, and unperfect loue unperfectly. Now ſeeing that no man loveth perfectly, ſeeing he doth not ſo much as know perfectly how to loue, it followeth that no man can perfectly fulfill the law. Hereupon the Apoſtles in their Epiſtles to thoſe Churches whom they moſt commend for loue towards their brethren, exhort them to a daily increaſe of loue.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1 Let † euery ſoule be ſubiect to higher powers, for there is † no power but of God And thoſe that are, of God are ordeined.

RHEM. 2. [1. Euery ſoule be ſubiect. Becauſe the Apoſtle preached liberty by Chriſt from the yoake of the Law and ſeruitude of ſinne, and gaue all the faithfull both example and commandement to obey God more then men, and withall ever charged them expreſly to be obedient and ſubiect to their Prelates as to them which had cure of their ſoules, & were by the holy Ghoſt placed ouer the Church of God. There were many in thoſe dayes newly conuerted, that thought themſelues free from all temporal Poteſtates, carnal Lords, and humane creatures or powers: wherupon the bond man tooke himſelfe to be looſe from his ſeruitude, the ſubiect from his Soueraigne, were he Emperour, King, Duke, or what other ſecular Magiſtrate ſo euer, ſpecialy the Princes of thoſe dayes being Heathens and perſecutors of the Apoſtles, and of Chriſts religion, for which cauſe, and for that the Apoſtles were vntruely charged of their Aduerſaries that they withdrew men from order and obedience to Ciuill Lawes and Officers: S. Paul here (as S. Peter doth 1. Chap. 2.) cleereth himſelfe, and expreſly chargeth euery man to be ſubiect to his temporall Prince and Superiour: Not euery man to all that be in Office or Superioritie: but euery one to him whom God hath put in authoritie ouer him, by that he is his Maiſter, Lord, King, or ſuch like: Neither to them in matters of religion or regiment of their ſoules (for moſt part were Pagans, whom the Apoſtles could not wil men to obey in matters of faith) but to them in ſuch things onely as concern the publike peace and Policie, and what other cauſes ſo euer conſiſt with Gods holy will and ordinance, for * againſt God no power may be obeyed.

Obedience to temporall rulers, and in what caſes Act. 4. 19. 3, 29.

RHEM. 3. [1, No power but of God.] S. Chryſoſtome here noteth, that power, rule, and Superioritie, is Gods ordinance, but not eſtſones all Princes: becauſe many may uſurpe, who reigne by * his permiſſion onely, and not by his appointment, nor all actions that euery one doeth in and by his ſoueraine power, as Iulians apoſtaſie and affliction of Catholikes, Pharaos tyrannicall oppreſſion of of the Iſraelites, Achabs perſecution of the Prophets, Neroes executing of the Apoſtles Herods and Pilates condemning of Chriſt, all which things God permitted them, by the abuſe of their power to accompliſh, but they were out of the compaſſe of his cauſing and ordinance.

In what ſence, all power of ſuperioritie is of God, Verſe. 2 Therefore he that reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth † the ordinance of God. And † they that reſiſt purchaſe to themſelues damnation.

RHEM. 4. [2. They that reſiſt.] Whoſoeuer reſiſteth or obeyeth not his lawfull Superiour in thoſe cauſes wherein he is ſubiect vnto him, withſtandeth Gods appointment, and ſinneth deadly, and is worthy to be puniſhed both in this world by his Superiour, and by God in the next life, for in temporall gouernment and cauſes, the Chriſtians were bound in conſcience to obey their Heathen Emperours: though on the other ſide they were bound under paine of damnation to obey their Apoſtles and Prelates, and not to obey their Kings or Emperours, in matters of religion. Whereby it is cleere that when wee bee commanded to obey our Superiours, it is meant alwayes and onely in ſuch things as they may lawfully command, and in reſpect of ſuch matters wherein they bee our Superiours.

In things lawfully commanded it is mortall ſinne not to obey our Superiors.

Verſe. 4 For he is Gods miniſter vnto thee for good. But if thou doe euil, feare. for he † beareth not the ſword without cauſe. For he is Gods miniſter: a reuenger vnto wrath, to him that doeth euill.

RHEM. 5. [4. Beareth not the ſword.] That the Apoſtle here meaneth ſpecially of temporall powers, we may ſee by the ſword, tribute, & externall compulſion, which he here attributeth to them. And the Chriſtian men then had no doubt whether they ſhould obey their ſpirituall powers, but now the diſeaſe is cleane contrary, for all is giuen to the ſecular power, and nothing to the ſpirituall, which expreſſely is ordained by Chriſt & the Holy Ghoſt: and all the faithfull are commanded to be ſubiect therevnto, as to Chriſts own word and will. There were Heretickes called Begardi, that tooke away all rule and Superiority: The Wickleſiſts would obey nor Prince nor Prelate, if hee were once in deadly ſinne. The Proteſtants of our time (as we may ſee in all Countries were the ſecular ſword is drawen againſt their Sects) care neither for the one nor for the other, though they extoll onely the ſecular when it maketh for them, The Catholikes onely moſt humbly obey both, euen according to Gods ordinance, the one in temporall cauſes, and the other in Spirituall: in which order both theſe States haue bleſſedly floriſhed in all Chriſtian Countries ever ſince Chriſts time, and it is the very way to preſerue both, as one day all the world ſhall confeſſe with vs.

The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of temporall powers. Hereſies againſt rule and Superioritie. The obedience of Catholikes, both to ſpirituall and temporal Superiors, CARTVV. To the three firſt Annotations S. The idle permiſſion onely excepted, whereof Chryſoſtom hath not a word, but rather the contrary when he ſaith, that euery Prince is choſen of God.

To the fourth note, praiſing God that our ſworne enemies are conſtrained to giue us the teſtimony of ſound doctrine in all duties towards Princes both good and bad, Fathers and Tyrants, for our practiſe accordingly we ar content to reſt in equall and indifferent iudgement. This one thing wee may we boldly ſay, that we ſeeke not to betray our naturall Princes, nor to lie in wait for their liues, as the Ieſuites moſt wickedly and unnaturally doe. Touching Wicliffe, it was an eaſie matter for you having then almoſt all pens and prints in your owne hands,, to ſurmiſe what you liſted and liked beſt.

Verſe. 6 For therefore | you giue tributes alſo. for they are the miniſters of God ſeruing vnto this purpoſe.

RHEM. 6. [6. You giue tributes.] Though euery man ought to be ready to ſerue his temporall Prince with his goods, by tribute or what other lawful taxes & ſubſidies ſo euer: yet they may exempt by priuileges whom they thinke good. As in all Countries Chriſtian: Prieſts for the honour of Chriſt, whoſe Miniſters they bee, haue by the graunts and ancient charters of kings been excepted and exempted. Notwithſtanding they were neuer unready to ſerue voluntarily their Soueraigne in all common cauſes with whatſoeuer they had. See Annot. in Mat. 17. 26. The Clergie exempted from tribute.

CARTVV. 6. [6. You giue tributes.] Look the anſwer before, upon Math. 17. 26.

Verſe. 13 As in the day let as walke honeſtly: | not in banketings and drunkennes, not in chamberings and impudicities, not in contention and emulation.

RHEM. 7. [13. Not in banketings.] This was the very place which S. Auguſtine, that glorious Doctor, was by a voice from heauen directed vnto, at his firſt miraculous and happie conuerſion, not onely to the Catholike faith, but alſo to perpetuall continencie, by this voice comming from heauen, Tolle lege: Tolle lege, Take vp and reade, Take vp and reade, as himſelfe telleth. Lib. 8. Confeſſ. cap. 12. S. Auguſtins conuerſion.

CARTVV. 7. [13. Not in banquettings] This place forbidding Chamberings commandeth chaſtitie, which is contrary thereunto, but commandeth not continencie: for then being given generally unto all Chriſtians, no man might lawfully marry. Wherefore Auguſtine could not be ſo ſimple a ſcholler, as to think continencie was taught him out of this place. His words are, Thou ſo turneſt me vnto thee, that I ſought not a wife, nor any hope of this world: Whereby appeareth that God had given him, beſides his true converſion unto Chriſt, this ſpeciall gift of continency, aboue that which either Miniſters or others receiue ordinarily.

CHAP. XIIII.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. For one beleeueth that he may | eate all things: but he that is weake, | let him 2 eate herbes:

RHEM. 1. [2. Eate all things.] By ſimilitude of words the ſimple are ſoone deceiued, and Heretikes make their vantage of any thing to ſeduce the vnlearned. There were diuers meates forbidden in the Law of Moyſes, and for ſignification made and counted vncleane, whereof the Iew might not eate at all, as porke, hare, conny, and ſuch like, both of fiſhes, foules, and beaſts, a great number. Chriſt diſcharged all them that became Chriſtians, after his paſſion, of that obſeruance and all other ceremonies of the old Law: Notwithſtanding becauſe diuers that were brought vp in the Law had a religion and conſcience, ſuddeuly to forſake the former manner, the Apoſtle here admoniſheth ſuch as be ſtronger & better inſtructed in the cauſe, to beare with the weaker ſort that being Chriſtians could not yet find in their harts to eate & vſe the meats forbidden by God in the law: as on the other ſide he warns the weak that would not eate, not to take offence or ſcandal at them that did eate without ſcruple, any of the irrgular or forbidde meats in the law, nor in any wiſe to iudge or condemn the eater, but commit that to God, and finally that neither ſhould condemne the other for eating or not eating. Now the Proteſtants fondly apply all this to the faſts of the Church, and differences of meats in the ſame: as though the Church did forbid any meat wholy never to be eaten or touched, or made any creatures vnclean, or otherwiſe preſcribed any abſtinence, then for chaſtiſing of mens bodies & ſeruice of God. It is a great blindnes that they can put no difference betwixt Chriſts faſts of fourty dayes, Matth. 4. Iohns abſteining from all delicate meates and drinkes, Matth. 3. 11. the widow Annes Luk. 2. 3. 7. the Nazarites, Num. 6. the Recabites, Ierem. 35. 14. the Niniuites. Iona. 3. S. Paules 2. Cor. 11. 27. S. Timothees 1. Tim. 5. 23. Iohns diſciples and Chriſts diſciples faſt. Mat. 9. 14, 15. (Which hee ſaid they ſhould keepe after his departure from them:) and the ceremoniall diſtinction of creatures and meats, cleane and vncleane, in the old Law, of which it is euident the Apoſtle treateth in all this Chapter, and of none other at all. Therefore when the Proteſtants by the words of this place would proue, that we be either free from faſting and obeying the Churches commandement, or following Chriſts example in that matter, or that the obſeruers of Chriſtian faſts be weake in faith, and ought not in any wiſe condemne of ſinne the breakers of the preſcribed faſts of the holy Church, they do abuſe ignorantly or wilfully the Apoſtles words and diſcourſe. The Apoſtles meaning about eating or not eating certain meates. The Heretikes fondly abuſe this place againſt the faſt of the Church. Fooliſh Heretikes ſee not the differences of things.

CARTVV. 1. [2 Eat all things.] Seeing you undertake ſo long a diſcourſe of this matter, you ſhould haue ſhewed how this that you ſpeake of the Iewes accordeth with the Apoſtles words, placing this weaknes in eating hearbs, conſidering that the Iewes had never any Law to reſtrain them to hearbs. Let the Reader therefore underſtand that this diuerſity of iudgement in eating, roſe not between the Iewes and the Gentiles, but between the weaker and ſtronger of both kinds, Iewes and Gentiles. And the ſcruple ſeemeth to haue riſen hereof, that for ſo much as the reſtitution to our former eſtate, was now wrought by Chriſt; that therefore men, as in the beginning, ſhould eate hearbes onely and no fleſh. And if this diuerſity of iudgement was between the Iewes and the Gentiles, the eating of the hearbes upon the Iewes part came not thereupon, that they thought they might not eate fleſh, but fearing ſome mixture of fleſh and fiſh forbidden by the Law in their meats ſet before them, eſpecially out of their own houſes, and companies of their iudgement, they did eate hearbes wherein they could be hardly deceived; as at this day in ſuch caſes their practiſe is. And if it be underſtood of the Iewes, we anſwer that the words of the Apoſtle, and his whole diſcourſe ſtrike now as deeply into the Popiſh ſuperſtition in meates and times, as they did then into the errour of the weake Iewes: For the Apoſtle condemned this, that the Iewes beleeved, that they might not eate certaine meates: and do not the Papiſts beleeue the ſame; The Iewes eſteemed amiſſe that the Law of God ſhut them from the uſe of certaine meats: and the Papiſts falſly think that the prohibition of the Synagogue of Rome doth barre them from their liberty of eating which Chriſt hath purchaſed unto them, the which the true Church it ſelfe is not able to forbid them. The Iewes are reproved for eſteeming that they pleaſed and ſerved God in abſtinence from certaine meates: And the Popiſh Ieſuites are not aſhamed to profeſſe that to abſtaine from certaine meates is a ſervice of God The difference is, that the Iewes ſcruple roſe of the Law of God, who hath authority to forbid meates that himſelfe hath made: but the Papiſts conſcience riſeth of the Law of men, who haue no authority to make a conſcience in meat, becauſe they can make no meate at all. The Iewes thought the meates which they abſtained from, alwaies unlawfull: but the Papiſts more abſurdly thinke it unlawfull at one of the clocke in the morning, which was lawfull at midnight. As for Chriſts, Iohns, and their diſciples, and Annas faſt, they haue been anſwered in their ſeverall places. There is no mention made of Timothies faſt, but onely of his temperate and ſparing diet. The Niniuites and Pauls faſt, we willingly embrace, and teach others to follow; the one publiquely in the common calamity of the Church; the other privately, as every mans calling, either by weight of buſineſſe committed unto him, or ſubduing of his fleſh ready to rebell againſt the Spirit do require. The Nazarites were commanded to abſtaine from wine, to the end, that (by the ſparingneſſe and homelineſſe of their diet, they being lifted up into the eyes of men) might ſerue for figures of our Saviour Chriſt, who being now come as the body of that ſhadow, the ſhadow muſt needs vaniſh away. Touching the Rechabites, it was an Oeconomicall, or houſhould ordinance, which they having received of their father were bound to obey: ſo farre forth as it ſerved to that end of the preſervation of their life, and propagation of their ſtock. For the father (fore-ſeeing by the inſtruction of the Prophets, the captivity of the people of God, amongſt whom his ſonnes ſhould dwell at the time of the calamity of that Country, and with all underſtanding that their greateſt ſafety ſhould bee in their going out of that Country which ſhould be horribly deſtroyed) thought good by forbidding them to drinke wine, and to build any houſe, but onely to dwell in Tents, thereby to prepare his ſonnes, both to the willinger departure from that place where they had no houſes, and to the eaſier and more commodious indurance of captivity in another Countrey, whilſt they had a long time before acquainted themſelues, both with a hard and homely diet, and with a ſimple and ſory lodging. And this commanding of Rechab, in regard and care of his poſterity belonging unto him as a father, the obedience thereof pertained to the Rechabites, as they were his ſonnes. For further anſwer (in this Iewiſh imitation) of the Papiſts, look before, upon Math.15.9. & Mark.7.7.

Verſe. 5 For one iudgeth | betweene day and day: and an other iudgeth euery day. | let euery one abound | in his owne ſenſe, Diſtinction of daies.

RHEM.2.[5. Between day and day.] By the like deceite they abuſe this place againſt the Holy-dayes of Chriſt and his B. Mother and his Saints, which concerneth onely the Iewes feſtiuities and obſeruations of times, whereof in the Epiſtles to the *Galatians cap.*4 10.

CARTVV.2. [5 Between day and day.] Do you thinke it like that God ſhould by Chriſt diſcharge his people of the yoke of the Law of Moſes, diſcerning one day from another, by doing of, or abſtaining from their ordinary labours, which daies he himſelfe ordained, to bring in another yoke of mens ordinance? Aud is there any likely-hood that he ſhould abrogate the feſtivall daies conſecrated to himſelfe and to his own Maieſty, to bring in thoſe that are conſecrated and ſet apart to the honour of Saints? Laſt of all, ſeemeth it reaſonable in your eyes that the Lord ſhould eaſe his people of the burden of a few feſtivall daies, to lay upon them a heavier burden by a greater number of them? For the ſanctifying of the ſeventh day, ſeeing it was ordained from the beginning when there was no ceremony ſhadowing out our redemption in Chriſt the Mediator, it cannot bee abrogated by his comming whereby ſhadowes onely of our redemption in him are put to flight.

The text explicated concerning every mans conſcience in Iudaicall meats and drinkes.

RHEM.3.[5. Every one in his own ſenſe.] The Apoſtle doth not giue freedome, as the Churches enemies would haue it, that euery man may do or thinke what he liſt, but in this matter of Iudaicall obſeruation of dayes and meates, and that for a time onely, till the Chriſtian religion ſhould be perfectly eſtabliſhed, he would haue no reſtraint made, but that euery one ſhould be borne withall in his own ſenſe: yet ſo that they ſhould not condemne one another, nor make neceſſity of ſaluation in the obſeruation of the Iudaicall rites of meates, dayes, &c.

CARTVV.3. [5 Every one in his own ſenſe.] The word that the Apoſtle vſeth, ſignifieth not to abound in ſenſe, but to be aſſuredly perſwaded in heart of that which is done: which certaine perſwaſion, becauſe it cannot be but in the truth (all other perſwaſions being but opinions and uncertaine) he exhorteth that both thoſe that eate ſhould do it groundedly, and upon the unfallible promiſes of God, and thoſe that eate not, for ſo much as they can haue no certaine perſwaſion in that iudgement of theris, ſhould ſeeke further for the truth of this cauſe, that in ſteed of floting and unſtable iudgement, which alwaies followeth errour, they might hane a ſetled and reſolute iudgement in the truth.

Verſe. 17 For the kingdom of God is | not meate and drink: but iuſtice, and peace, and ioy in the holy Ghoſt.

RHEM.4.[17. Not meate and drinke.] The ſubſtance of religion or the kingdom of God ſtandeth ſtandeth not in meate or drinke, and therefore the better might they vſe indifferencie and tolleration in that point for a time, for peace ſake to auoide ſcandall, but if the precept of Moyſes Law had bound ſtill as before, then (not for the meates ſake, but for the diſobedience) it had been damnable to haue eaten the vncleane meates. Not eating, but diſobedience & damnable.

Verſe. 22 Haſt thou faith? haue it with thy ſelfe before God. Bleſſed is he that iudgeth not himſelfe in that which he approueth.

RHEM. 5. [22. Haue it with thy ſelfe.] Thou that art perfect, and beleeueſt or knoweſt certainely that thou art free from the Law concerning meates and feſtiuities, yet to the trouble and hinderance of the feeble that cannot yet be brought ſo farre, be diſcreete and vtter not thy ſelfe out of ſeaſon.

Verſe. 23 But he that diſcerneth, if he eate, is damned, becauſe not of faith. for all that is not of faith is ſin.

RHEM. 6. [23. He that diſcerneth.] If the weake haue a conſcience, and ſhould be driuen to eate the things which in his own hart he thinketh he ſhould not do, he committeth deadly ſin, becauſe he doth againſt his conſcience, or againſt his own preteníed knowledge. To do againſt our conſcience is ſinne.

CARTVV. To theſe three Sect ons, S.

RHEM. 7 [23. All that is not of faith] The proper ſenſe of this ſpeach is, that euery thing that a man doth againſt his knowledge or conſcience, is a ſin, for ſo by the circumſtance of the letter, faith muſt here be taken, though S. Aug. ſometimes applieth it alſo to proue that all the actions of infidels (meaning thoſe works which directly proceede of their lacke of faith) bee ſinnes. But in any wiſe take heede of the Heretickes commentary, who hereby would proue that the infidell ſinneth in honouring his parents, fighting for his countrie, tilling his ground, and in all other works. And no maruell that they ſo hold of infidels, who maintaine that Chriſtian men alſo offend deadly in euery good deed. Chryſ. hom. 26. in epiſt. Rom. What actions of Infidels are ſin, and what are not.

CARTVV. 7. [23. All that is not of faith.] For as much as a man cannot be aſſuredly perſwaded in his conſcience that hee may eat meat unleſſe he firſt beleeue that Chriſt the heire of the world is his, and he a member of him, whereby he hath right and title to the meate. The Apoſtle doth fitly refer the doubting of eating of meat to a want and defect of faith whereby we are iuſtified. And therefore in another place he ſheweth that one thing required in the lawfull uſe of meates is, that we beleeue the word of promiſe, that the meate is giuen unto vs for Chriſts ſake. And as they are conſtrained to confeſſe that Auguſtine expoundeth this for us againſt them, ſo Chryſoſtome helpeth them not a whit, which onely ſheweth ſhortly, that every man ought to be perſwaded certainely of the lawfulneſſe of every his particular action (to which we accord) but ſpeaketh not a word of any ſeuerall kinde of faith in this place differing from the common and vſuall ſignification of faith in the reſidue of this Epiſtle. As for the eſcape that they would make from Auguſtine who affirmeth (as we do) that all the workes of infidels are ſin, by a reſtraint, to workes directly proceeding of want of faith, it is a meere mockery of the reader, conſidering that all the workes of Infidels muſt needes directly proceede from the want of faith, whereof they haue not ſo much as a grain of muſtard ſeed. And how vain this diſtinction is, Auguſtine himſelfe doth euidently declare, when he ſheweth that their beſt workes are ſinne. If (ſaith he) a heathen man ſhall couer one which is naked, deliuer him that is endangered, redeme the wounds of the ſoare, ſpeake no falſe witneſſe although he be conſtrained by torment, is it not to be iudged ſin becauſe it proceedeth not of faith? verily, foraſmuch as it is not of faith, it is ſinne; not becauſe that to couer the naked is a ſinne in it ſelfe, but not to glory in God of ſuch a worke, there is none denieth to be a ſinne but the wicked onely. Which he proueth both by the adjunct of the action, for that they doe not well: where the very heathen Philoſophers require to a vertuous action, not onely that a man do that which is good and iuſt, but alſo that he ſhould do it well and iuſtly: and alſo by the abſurdity which otherwiſe ſhould follow, that the heathen man being an euill tree, ſhould bring forth good fruit. Hereupon Lactantius compareth thoſe that by morall vertues behaue themſelues ciuilly and orderly, to a body which hath a goodly and comely frame in all the members, ſaying that it lacked a head from whence it ſhould haue life and ſenſe. It is alſo ſaid in a booke fathered upon Ambroſe, That without the worſhip of the true God, even that is ſinne which ſeemeth to be vertue. Your owne maſter alſo alledgeth out of Auguſtin, de vera innocentia, cap. 56. that the whole life of the infidels is ſinne, and that there is nothing good without the chiefe good at all. Finally, your Gloſſe hath the ſelfe ſame words that you maſter Lombard hath; and therefore if you beare no reuerence to Lactantius, Ambroſe and Auguſtine in this cauſe, but dare make them with the note of Hereſie, yet you ſhould haue had reſpect to your own maſter, you eſpecially which count it ſo heynous a crime that the ſcholler ſhould teach his maiſter, that the young fooles ſhould teach their old and wiſe fathers. Contra Iulian. lib. 4. 6. 3 Lactant. lib. 6. cap. 9

Ephes. 1. 1. CARTVV. 2. [25. Saints] All the faithfull are called by the Apostle Saints, the reason whereof is giuen, for that they are sanctified in Iesus Christ. Wherefore it is false that by Saints are meant those which forsake all their goods for Christ, and that the very next verse doth declare, where speaking of the poore amongst the Saints, he giueth also to understand, that there were rich Saints as well as poore, although these were not any such that became wilfully poore by giving away that which they had, to liue after of the sweat of other mens browes (which kinde of Drones the Iesuites meane) but either such godly poore whose estate was alwayes so, or which came to povertie by oppression of the wicked persecutors of the Church, of which sort of poore our Churches haue carefull regard, as their daily practise doth declare. And although Ierom doth apply this to the Monkes of his time, as to men comprehended in the compasse of poore Saints, forsomuch as they were not able to maintaine themselues, no not with the labour of their owne hands, which they customably used, as hath beene shewed, upon Math. 3. 1. Yet he giveth no other generall sense of the place then we doe, when hee saith, that this gathering was brought to those that beleeued, not for couetousnesse, but for a refreshing, not to gather riches, but to sustaine weaknesse of their bodies, and to auoid cold and penurie. Now how truely this can be applied to your Monkes which are full and fat, strong and stout, which haue Princes treasures, and fare delicately and superfluously, let all the world iudge.

RHEM. 1. [3. Salute.] The onely salutation of so worthy a man is sufficient to fill with grace that is so saluted. Chrys. in 2. Tim 4.

CARTVV. 1. [3. Salute.] It is false that the salutation of such a man as Paul was sufficient to fill him with great grace that is so saluted: for those whom the Apostles did salute face to face, might some-
Mat. 10. 12 13. time be unworthy men, and refuse the Gospell of Christ. And beside that, Chrysostom hath no such filling words as the Iesuites haue, he sheweth that the communication of grace standeth not in that the persons are saluted of the Apostle, but in that they receiue his salutation as becommeth. And therefore the grace standeth not so much in the worthinesse or godlinesse of the saluter, as in the worthinesse of the persons that are saluted and prayed for. Considering that Abraham, although a Patriarke and a Prophet, was not received in his prayer for the Sodomites. But if it be so as the Iesuites say that an Apostolicall salutation be able to fill men with great graces. It is evident that the Pope which saluteth and blesseth many graceless and curssed men, is not Apostolicall; and therefore neither Pauls successor, nor Peters, whom they esteeme as worthy as Paul.

Verse. 16 ‖ Salute one an other in a ‖ holy kisse. All the Churches of Christ salute you.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 5. [16. Salute one another.] Neuer Sectmaister made more foule or hard shifts to proue or defend falshood, then the Protestants: but in two points, about S. Peter specially, they passe euen themselues in impudency. The first is, that they hold he was not preferred before the other Apostles, which is against all Scriptures most euidently. The second is, that he was neuer at Rome, which is against all the Ecclesiasticall histories, all the Fathers Greek and Latine, against the very sense and sight of the monuments of his Seate, Sepulcher, doctrine, life, and death there. Greater euidence certes there is thereof & more waighty testimony then of Romulus, Numas, Cæsars, or Ciceros being there; yet were he a very brutish man that would deny this to the discredite of so many writers and the whole world. Much more monstruous it is, to heare any deny the other. Theodorete saith hee was there writing vpon this chapter. Prosper also *carmine de ingratis in principio. S. Leo, de natali Petri, S. That S. Peter was at Rome.

poſtles own ſcholler and Dionyſius the B. of Corinth. alleaged by Euſebius lib.2.c.14.& 24. Ignatius ep. ad Romanos. The holy Councell of Chalcedon, and many other affirme it, yea Peter himſelfe (according to the iudgement of the ancient Fathers) confeſſeth he was at Rome, calling it Babylon 1.ep.c.5. Euseb.lib.2.c.14.hiſt Eccleſ. Some of theſe tell the time and cauſe of his firſt going thither: ſome how long he lived there: ſome, the manner of his death there: ſome, the place of his buriall: and all that he was the firſt Biſhop there. How could ſo many of ſuch wiſdom and ſpirit, ſo neere the Apoſtles time deceiue or be deceiued: how could Caluin and his after fifteen hundred yeares know that which none of them could ſee. Chalced conc. act.3. See the Annotations 1 Pet. c.1.15.

Some great argument muſt they needs haue to controule the credit of the whole world. This of truth is here their argument, neither haue they a better in any place, to wit, if S. Peter had been at Rome, Paul would haue ſaluted him, as he did others here in the end of his letter to the Romanes. Is not this an high point to diſproue all antiquity by? Any man of diſcretion may ſtraight ſee, that S. Peter might be knowen vnto S. Paul to be out of the Cittie, either for perſecution or buſineſſe, when this Epiſtle was written, (for he went often out as S. Epiphanius declareth) and ſo the omitting to ſalute him, can proue no more, but that then he was not in Rome, but it proueth not ſo much neither, becauſe the Apoſtle might for reſpect of his dignitie and other the Churches affaires write vnto him ſpeciall letters, and ſo had no cauſe to ſalute him in his common Epiſtle, Or how know they that this Epiſtle was not ſent incloſed to S. Peter, to bee deliuered by his meanes to the whole Church of the Romanes in ſome of their aſſemblies? It is very like it was recommended to ſome one principall man or other that is not here named; and twenty cauſes there may be vnknown to vs, why hee ſaluted him not: but no cauſe why our Aduerſaries vpon ſuch friuolous reaſons ſhould reprooue an approued truth. For euen as well might they ſay that S. Iohn was neuer at Epheſus, becauſe S. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians doth not ſalute him. And plaine it is, that it is the Roman ſeate and faith of Peter, which they (as all Heretickes before them) do feare and hate, and which will be their bane; and they know that there is no argument which conuinceth in their conſcience, that Peter was neuer at Rome. Therefore to conclude, we ſay to them in S. Auguſtines words, Why call you the Apoſtolike chaire, the chaire of peſtilence? What hath the Church of Rome don against you, in which S. Peter did ſit, and from which by nefarious ſuite you haue ſeparated your ſelues. *The Proteſtants great argument, that Peter was neuer at Rome. CARTVV.5. [16 Salute one another.] Whenſoeuer we ſaile againſt the Pope of Rome, wee ſaile with a forewind, and wee haue ſea roome, and are driuen to no ſtraights or ſhifts: whereof let the Reader iudge (hardly) of both our writings: And how fondly the Ieſuites charge us of ſhifting in this point, by denying Peters ſeate at Rome all the world may know, conſidering that if the truth would beare it, we could as well afford Peters remaining at Rome as Pauls, without any manner of hinderance of our cauſe, as hath bene ſhewed, vpon Math.16.18. And as for the great army that is brought againſt vs of mens teſtimonies, that Peter was at Rome, although ſome of them are doubtfull, and haue no plaine ſentence (as Chryſoſtome) ſome of them are not found where they are quoted, (as Ambroſe) ſome contrary one another, (as Epiphanius and Ierome and Tertullian) yet if they all were plaine and vniforme in this point, conſidering firſt that they are a headleſſe multitude in this point, without any Generall or Captaine of the word of God to go before them, and to ſet them in good array; there is no man of courage that hath need to be diſmayed by them, for if where there are twenty, there were two thouſand, they being but men that may bee deceiued, cannot ground our faith in any aſſurance, which notwithſtanding ought to bee performed of you in this caſe, conſidering that you hang the faith and truth of all Religion vpon this narrow and headleſſe pinne of Peters being at Rome. Secondly, all theſe teſtimonies (depending vpon the credite of one man, which is Papias, from whom, as thoſe which were neereſt him ſucked this opinion; ſo they hauing drawn it from him ſuckled others therewith that were nurſed vp in their daies) it is euident that they are all to be conſidered as the witneſſe of one man alone, conſidering that although one and the ſame thing be ſpoken by diuers, yet one onely ſpeaking his own iudgement, and all the reſt that which they borrowed of him can bring no more credite vnto this cauſe then one and the ſame peny often giuen doth make the receiuer richer by the twentieth gift, then by the firſt. And if it be withall conſidered that Papias (whoſe bare word, without aſſiſtance of reaſon is taken in this matter) be not able for want of credite to diſcharge the truſt that men haue put him in: then it is manifeſt, that one other alone of all theſe here named, had brought greater weight of teſtimony, if either vpon report of his own ſight, or of that he had credibly heard, he had deliuered this of Peters being at Rome. Now it is well known that Papias, beſides his attaint of a Millenary ſchiſme, was father of diuers lewd traditions, which he couered vnder the credit of the Apoſtles, as of Iudas breaking the rope wherewith he hung himſelfe, directly contrary to Luke, who writeth that he dyed of that ſtrangle, where Papias ſaith he liued ſtill; and diuers other ſtrange doctrines of Chriſts, which he (as Eusebius writeth) for want of iudgement broached and ſcattered in the Church. As for the teſtimony out of Peter, where for the dearth of Scripture in this cauſe, they are driuen to expound Babylon for Rome, albeit it bee worthy to be hiſſed, yet the anſwer thereof the Reader ſhall look for in the proper place. Now that theſe Authours prevaile not ſo farre with vs, as to incline our iudgements to a probable opinion in this point, beſide thoſe before alledged, this is the principall cauſe, that the reaſons drawn from the word of God ſtand between vs and them. And if theſe authorities can haue no place contrary to the apparant reaſons of the word of God, much leſſe can the Monument of Peters ſeat at Rome, which he himſelfe never ſate in (who would haue beene glad at that time of a poore ſtoole to ſit vpon in the corner of a private houſe) or his Sepulchre, which if it might haue credit with ſome, yet with you it can haue none to proue his abode there, which tranſlate (as you ſay) dead bodies ſome thouſand miles from the place where they changed their liues. Therefore by your own rules his buriall at Rome proueth nor his death there, no more then the ſepulchres entitled to the three aſſemen in Colen, vpon Math. 2. proue that their corpſes are there. And as for his doctrine, life and death at Rome, it is either a beggarly asking of that in contro- Euſeb. hiſt. Eccleſiaſt.lib. 3. cap. 35. Act. 1. 18.

veriſie, or elſe it is an idle repetition of their reaſon drawne from antiquitie, conſidering that that onely excepted, there is no manner of proofe, that either he taught, lived, or died at Rome. As for your reaſons what they haue beene, let the Reader read and iudge of that before, in the anſwer to the Argument upon the Acts, and what our reaſon is upon this place; and whether it be ſo light as the Ieſuites, by the toſſing of it upon their forked pens do make ſhew of, let us now conſider. Our reaſon is, that Peter being ſuppoſed Biſhop of Rome at the time when Paul wrote this Epiſtle is falſly ſo eſteemed, becauſe that if he had been Biſhop there at that time, Paul would haue made ſome mention of him writing unto the Church of Rome. To this reaſon, becauſe the Ieſuites cannot ſhape, and cut out one good anſwer, they haue patched out three, if peradventure the unwary Reader would thinke it anſwered in number, which is wanting in weight.

The firſt is, that Peter might be known of Paul to bee out of the Citie for perſecution or buſineſſe, when Paul wrote, whereunto Epiphanius is brought. Epiphanius teſtifying that hee often went out. In which anſwer, firſt Peter is made a hireling which forſaketh his flock in time of perſecution when hee ſeeth the woolfe comming: For although an Apoſtle, whoſe charge is indefinite, may when he is perſecuted in one Citie, flye to another, yet for a Biſhop, which hath a particular Church, the ſame is not lawfull, the perſecution being addreſſed, not againſt the particular perſon of Peter, but againſt the generall cauſe of Religion. And Epiphanius doth helpe us againſt you: for firſt, it appeareth by him, that Peter going from Rome went to other Countries, as the reſt of the Apoſtles did, which then lived thereby to execute his Apoſtolicall office: Now if hee were then an Apoſtle, it is evident that he was then no Biſhop of Rome, an Apoſtle and a Biſhop being divers members of one diviſion: whereby his departure from Rome upon perſecution was blameleſſe, And this Epiphanius doth further confirme, when he ſheweth that in Peters abſence the Church of Rome could not be without a Biſhop. There being therefore a Biſhop at his departure from Rome ordained, and not a Biſhops deputy, it followeth that Peter was not then Biſhop of Rome, eſpecially in your ſchooles, which thinke it unlawfull to haue two Biſhops at once in one Citie. But if it were granted you (which you cannot proue) that Paul knew Peter to haue gone from Rome for a ſeaſon, yet do you not ſo eſcape our hands, for our argument is not (as you ſay) that Paul ſaluted not Peter in the cloſing up of his letter, but that he maketh no manner of mention in all his long letter, neither referring the Church to Peters further inſtruction, nor yet exhorting them to haue him in that regard as it became them to reſpect ſuch a worthy teacher, nor yet commending their eſtate aboue all other Churches, that God had beſtowed upon them ſuch a worthy man, or (as you uſe to tattle) the head and ruler of all the Apoſtles and the onely foundation of the whole Church under Chriſt. Theſe former titles which were due unto Peter, and latter titles alſo, if they had been due to him, Paul would not onely not haue refrained to giue unto him, becauſe he was abſent, but therefore eſpecially he would haue given them, becauſe he was abſent, and not in preſence when theſe letters were read, whereby he ſhould bluſh to heare himſelfe ſo much commended and recommended. For it is well knowne that Paul letteth paſſe no good opportunitie of the advancing the credit of the notable Miniſters of thoſe Churches which hee made famous by his letters. And this anſwer of ours marreth the faſhion of their two anſwers that follow.

1. Cor. 16. 19. 16. Epheſ. 6. 21 Phil. 2. 19. 20. & 25. 26. Col. 4. 12. 13. Act. 15. 2. 23. 30.

For although Paul might happily write priuate letters unto Peter, and therefore with conveniencie enough leaue him unſaluted in the common letters of the Church, yet hee ought not to haue failed to haue made an honourable mention of him to the Church, thereby to ſtrengthen and make more fruitfull Peters miniſtery towards them. Beſides that, herein the Ieſuites declare the ſmall skill which they haue in the Apoſtles diſcipline & order of the Church, that a thing touching the whole Church, as did the common letters, ſhould be conſigned unto ſome one particular man. The Apoſtles did not uſe to handle the moſt weighty affaires of the Church ſo ſlightly; as they might haue learned by the direction of the Church of Antioch Embaſſadors to the Apoſtles, and others at Ieruſalem, and of the return of their letters again unto Antioch. For the Church of Antioch directeth her Embaſſadors not unto Peter, or to any one of the Apoſtles to be by him conducted to the ſpeech of the reſt, but unto the Apoſtles and Elders. And they at Ieruſalem direct their letters not unto any one in Antioch, but unto the Church which was firſt aſſembled, or ever the letters were delivered. And if there were any truth in theſe anſweres, or any of them; yet for ſo much as they proue no more but that the caſe might be ſo, and proue not that it was ſo. It is evident that as they may ſerue for ſome anſwer againſt our argument out of this place; ſo can they not eſtabliſh your opinion of Peters being at Rome. In Auguſtines time, although Rome ſometime the faithfull Citty, was not yet a harlot, yet it is knowne that by manifeſt forgery of a Canon invented to pride and pricke up herſelfe aboue ſome other Churches, ſhe began to haue a wanton eye. Truth it is, that the Donatiſts, from whoſe error ſhe was free, had no iuſt cauſe of complaint of her. But Auguſtine even then, and in thoſe purer times, might (if he would) haue iuſtly complained of her in Zozimus her Pope, and chiefe governor, for that by a counterfeit Canon of the Councell of Nice, hee would haue encroached upon the right of the Biſhops of Affricke.

CARTVV. 7. And thus men that of their own corrupt nature runne to hell, by these sweet and entising speeches of freedom either from sinne, or from the iust punishment due unto sinne, goe post haste or rather flye unto hell. Name but one of our sweet words in this kinde of flattery of men, and name it truely, and without cavilling and slandering of our doctrine, and we will think that there is some conscience left in you of speaking truth; & if you cannot, then learn to know, that you haue bidden all modesty farewell, which having set your tongues and pens to sale for the fat and daintie morsels, dare charge other therewith, whom for want of truth in your accusations, you are compelled to discharge.

Verse. 19 For your obedience is published into euery place. I reioyce therefore in you. But I would haue you to be wise in good, & simple in euil.

RHEM. 8. [19. Your obedience.] Against Heretickes and their illusions, there is no better way then in simplicitie to cleaue vnto that which hath been taught before: for the which the Romane obedience is much commended, See Annot. vpon the first c. v. 8.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

HOW S. Paul planted the Church at Corinth, continuing there a yeere and a halfe together, we reade Act. 18. After that, when he was at Ephesus, Act. 19. about the end of the three yeeres that he abode there, he wrote this first Epistle to the Corinthians. For euen as S. Luke there writeth, when these things were ended, Paul purposed in the Spirit, when he had gone ouer Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Hierusalem: so likewise doth S. Paul himselfe writte here: I will come to you in Achaia, when I shall haue gone ouer Macedonia, for I will go ouer Macedonia, but I will tary at Ephesus vntill Pentecost. Act. 19. 21. 1. Cor. 16. 5

The matter that he writeth of, is not one, as in the Epistle to the Romanes, but divers: partly such faults of theirs, as were signified vnto him by them that were of Chloe, 1. Cor. 1. 11. partly such questions as themselues wrote to him of, And concerning the things that you wrote to me. 1. Cor. 7. 1. for so we may (as it seemeth) deuide the Epistle into these two parts. Or, to put all together, hee writeth of eight things: 1. Of certeine Schismes beginning among them, by occasion of certain preachers whom in the Second Epistle he toucheth more plainely, as being false Apostles: chap. 1. 2. 3. 4. 2. Of an incestuous fornicator, and some that went to law before infidell iudges. chap. 5. 6. 3. Of Matrimonie and continencie. chap 7. 4. Of meates sacrificed to Idols. chap. 8. 9. 10. 5. Of his traditions. chap 11. 6. Of the Giftes of the Holy Ghost. chap. 12. 13. 14. 7. Of the Resurrection. chap 15. 8. Of the Contributions that he gathered of the Gentiles, to succour the Christian Iewes at Hierusalem. chap. 16.

CHAP. I.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 5 That in all things you be made rich in him, in all uttrance, and] in all knowledge.

Faith commeth by hearing rather then reading.

RHEM. 1. 5. In all knowledge.] Obſerue that the Apoſtles neuer wrote their letters but to ſuch as were conuerted to Chriſts faith before, for men can not lightly learne the Chriſtian religion by reading Scriptures, but by hearing, and by the preſence of their teachers, which may inſtruct them, at large and particularly of euery Article, as cleerely and briefely by letters they could not do. Neither doth now any man learn his faith firſt, but by hearing of his parents and Maſters, for if we ſhould when we come to yeers of diſcretion, be ſet to pick out our faith of the Scriptures, there would a mad work and many faithes among vs.

CRATVV. 1. [5 In all knowledge.] This note for the ordinary calling of men to the knowledge of the Goſpell, eſpecially when and where the Goſpell is publiſhed, is true.

Verſe. 30 And of him you are in Chriſt IESVS, [who is made unto vs wiſedom from God, & iuſtice, and ſanctification, and redemption.

Chriſt is made our iuſtice, becauſe he is the author of the iuſtice in vs.

RHEM. 2. [30. Who is made.] Hee meaneth not, as our aduerſaries captiouſly take it, that we haue no iuſtice, ſapience, nor ſanctitie of our own, other then Chriſts imputed to vs: but the ſenſe is, that he is made the author, giuer, and meritorious cauſe of all theſe vertues in vs, for ſo the Apoſtle interpreteth himſelfe plainely in the 6. Chapter, following, when hee writeth thus, You bee waſhed, you be iuſtified, you be ſanctified in the name of our Lord IESVS Chriſt and in the ſpirit of our God.

CARTVV. 2. [30 Who is made.] If ſome of your aduerſaries ſo take it, they are neither alone (Chryſoſtom being of the ſame iudgement) and are but poorely confuted of you: conſidering that the faith in us, which is the gift of Gods Spirit, doth not proue any inherent matter in us whereby we may be ſaued, but hath reſpect unto Chriſt which is without us. Howbeit looking neerely unto this teſtimony of the Apoſtle, wee eſteeme that Wiſedome here is the true knowledge of God, and Sanctification our godly behaviour, and Redemption the full and perfect deliverance both of our body and ſoule from all miſery to everlaſting bleſſednesſe: And therefore that theſe three are inherent in us: Iuſtification onely being without us: and all, of the gift of God in Chriſt Ieſus. And to this expoſition we are led, not onely by the ordinary ſignification of theſe words in other places quoted in the Margent: by the generality of the ſentence, placing all things belonging unto our regeneration in the meere grace of God through Chriſt alone, and by the orderly placing of every of theſe benefites according as they are in nature and time wherein they are given, but alſo by the circumſtance of the place both before and after. The circumſtance before is, that the Apoſtle having ſhewed that no healthfull and ſaving knowledge can be drawn from the wiſedome of the world or otherwiſe, but from the Goſpell of Chriſt (for ſo much as the wiſeſt men that way, commonly, are furtheſt from ſalvation) he declareth that this healthfull and ſaving wiſedome is (as all other parts of the new creature) to be found onely in the free gift of God through Chriſt. And this to be his meaning the words immediately going before do evidently declare, when hee ſaith, that we are of him (meaning God) in Ieſus Chriſt: which is all one as if he ſhould ſay, whatſoever we are in the ſtate and condition of our new birth, we are it by the grace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, compriſing generally and totally that which in theſe words he doth ſpecially and by parts lay out. The other circumſtance which commeth after is drawen from the end of this dealing of the Lord, that no man ſhould glory but in the Lord: For if we haue the knowledge of Chriſt of our own nature, or by our deſert, or having that knowledge of Gods free gift in Chriſt, we were able to get true righteouſneſſe of our ſelues, or having both theſe of God in Chriſt, we were able to furniſh our ſelues of holineſſe of life: or finally, having all theſe three by the gift of God in Chriſt, we were able to raiſe up our own bodies, and ioyning them with our ſoules were able to cary our ſelues glorified into heaue; hereby our glory ſhould not be altogether in God, but partly in God, and ſomewhat in our ſelues. To be ſhort, there is nothing that ſhutteth out glory, but onely this, that wee haue nothing but that which (by grace) we haue received. And this is the very break-neck of the Popiſh freewill: for if it be in ones naturall power to chuſe the good that is offered, then it followeth that for ſo much as he hath not received that ability of God in Chriſt, that he may glory of it. And as wee conſent not with them which thinke none of theſe inherent in us, but this whole place to bee underſtood derstood of that which by faith we haue inherent in Christ: so the Iesuites that understand all these to be inherent in us, are absurd, as those which thus confound iustification and sanctification making them one, which the Apostle maketh divers. Neither is it strange in the Scripture that one and the same speech should be in the same sentence vsed diversly, according as the nature of the things wherewith it is ioyned doth require, and that more properly in the reference that it hath unto one, and lesse properly in the respect that it hath unto another. So that although these words, Christ is made unto us of God, be understood in the word of Iustification of that which is without us and inherent in Christ, yet it hindereth not but the same words may be applyed unto the three other, Wisedome, Sanctification and Redemption which are by some effects within us, and inherent in our soules and bodies.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, but ! the spirit of a man that is in him? so the things also that are of God no man knoweth, but the spirit of God:

How Angels & Saincts & mortall men know our cogitations.

RHEM. 1. [11. But the spirit of man.] One man can not know an others cogitations naturally: but God giueth the Prophets and other, euen in this world oftentimes, by extraordinary grace to know mens secrets. As he did to S. Peter, to know the fraude of Ananias and Sapphira: and to Eliseus, his seruants bribery in his absence, & what was done in the king of Syria his chamber, & as he giueth to all *Angels and Saints (so far as is conuenient to our necessities and their heauenly glory) to vnderstand not onely our vocall prayers, but our inward repentance and desires.

Tho 1. q. 57. art. 4. ad 3.

CARTVV. 1. [11. But the spirit of man] It is true that God giveth Angels and Saints to know so farre as is conuenient for our necessity; but that this conuenience reacheth to the understanding of the prayers and desires of our heart, or that we may ground our prayers unto any upon extraordinary revelation made unto them (if any be) is utterly false. For further answer to the latter part of this note, look before, upon Matth. 22. 30. & Luk. 15. 10. Onely here let the reader note, that their own Thomas Aquinas is flat against them: who affirmeth that no Angell either good or evill can know that which is hidden in a mans heart, further then the same is made manifest (not by speciall revelation as the Iesuites dreame) but by certaine effects.

Verse. 12 And we haue receiued not the spirit of this world, but the spirit that is of God: ! that we may know the things that of God are giuen to vs.

The Heretikes allegation for their vain security, as scorned.

RHEM. 2. [12 That we may know] The Protestants that chalenge a particular spirit reuealing to ech one his own predestination, iustification, and saluation, would draw this text to that purpose. Which importeth nothing els (as is plaine by the Apostles discourse) but that the holy Ghost hath giuen to the Apostles, and by them to other Christian men, to know Gods ineffable gifts bestowed vpon the beleeuers in this time of grace: that is, Christs Incarnation, Passion, presence in the Sacrament, and in the incomprehensible ioyes of heauen, which Pagans, Iewes, and Heretickes, deride.

1. Ioh. 3. 14 Rom. 8. 26, 35 &c.

CARTVV. 2. [12. That we may know] The trifling Iesuites will not see that the Apostle speaketh of all the guifts generally that are given us of God: whither serveth the argument of comparison; that as a mans spirit teacheth him to know all the thoughts that are within him at the least in some measure: so also the spirit of God teacheth the beleevers to know all that which God hath given them. Likewise they are willingly ignorant, that he doth not say that we know Gods gifts, but that we know the gifts which God hath given unto us. And if we know that Christ was incarnate for us, & that he suffred for us: It is manifest that we know also that we are predestinate, iustified, and saved. Last of all, their shift is frivolous, seeing that which here is spoken of the knowledge of all that which God hath given us, is otherwhere specially affirmed of the knowledge that we are saved.

Verse. 14 But ! the sensual man perceiueth not those things that are of the spirit of God for it is folishnes to him, and he can not vnderstand: because he is spiritually examined.

The sensuall man.

RHEM. 3. [14. The sensuall man] The sensuall man is he specially, that measureth these heauenly mysteries by naturall reason, humane prudence, externall sense, and worldly affection, as the Iew, Pagan, and Hereticke do: and sometime both heere and elsewhere, the more infirme and ignorant sort of Christian men be called sensuall or carnall also, who being occupied in secular affaires, and giuen to sensuall ioy and worldlines, haue no such sense or feeling of these great gifts of God, as the perfecter sort of the faithfull haue, who trying these high points of religion, not by reason & sense, but by grace faith, & spirit, be therfore called spirituall. The spirituall then is he, that iudgeth & discerneth the truth of such things as the carnall can not attaine vnto: that doth by the spirit of the Church, whereof he is partaker in vnity of the same, not only see the error of the carnal, but condemneth them & iudgeth euery power resisting Gods spirit and word: the carnall Iew, Heathen, or Heretick, hauing no meanes nor right to iudge of the said spirituall man, For when the spirituall is said to be iudged of none, the meaning is not that hee should not be subiect or obedient to his Pastors and spirituall Powers and to the whole Church, speciall for the triall or examination of all his life, doctrine, and faith: but that a Catholike man and namely a teacher of Catholike doctrine in the Church should not be any whit subiect to the iudgement of the Heathen or the Heretick, nor care what of ignorance or infidelitie, they say against him, for such carnall men haue no iudgement in such things, nor can attaine to the Churches wisdome in any ceremonie, mysterie, or matter which they condemne.

The spiritual man.

How the spiritual man iudgeth all, & is iudged of none.

Therefore S. Irenæus excellently declaring that the Church and euery spirituall childe thereof, iudgeth and condemneth all false prophets and Heretickes of what sort soeuer, at length he concludeth with these notable words: The spirituall shall iudge also all that make schismes, which be cruell, not hauing the loue of God, and respecting their own priuate, more then the vnitie of the Church, mangle, diuide, and (as much as in them lieth) kill for small causes the great and glorious body of Christ, speaking peace, and seeking battaile. He shall iudge also them that be out of the truth, that is to say, out of the Church, which Church shall bee vnder no mans iudgement, for to the Church are all things knowen, in which is perfect faith of the Father, and of all the dispensations of Christ, and firme knowledge of the Holy Ghost that teacheth all truth.

The Church vnderneoman's iudgement. Ire. lib. 4. cap. 62.

CARTVV. 3. [14 The sensuall man.] The spirituall man we acknowledge is not exempted from the examination and iudgement of the Church: yet notwithstanding so far as hee is spirituall, and iudgeth of things spiritually (that is to say, according to the Scripture wherein he hath by the Spirit beene taught) he cannot be so iudged of the Church, that it can alter or change, much lesse condemn his iudgement: Vnlesse it may condemn the minde and sense of the Lord, whose minde and sense the spirituall man hath, as the Apostle himselfe affirmeth, rendring the reason wherefore the spirituall man cannot bee iudged. And vpon such grounds as this is, one of your Abbots saith, That one priuate man speaking the truth is better to be beleeued then a whole Councell which declineth therefro. Irenæus testimony is against the Iesuites, for that it maketh every child of the Church Iudge of heretickes as well as the Church it selfe. And in the title of the next chapter attributeth the same knowledge of all things to every Minister of the Church which it ascribed before vnto the whole Church. Vnlesse therefore the Iesuites will say that Ireneus thought that no one of the children of the Church, or Minister can erre in their iudgement of heretickes: they cannot gather of this place that the Church cannot erre. And Ireneus doth himselfe specifie what that all is which the Church vnderstandeth; namely the fundamentall points of Religion, as to know the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghost, and the dispensation of Christ which if it should not know, it could be none of the Church of God: And that the Church cannot bee iudged of any man it hath this priuiledge common with every spirituall man, as the Apostle saith, which cannot be iudged of any in that he is spirituall. Beside that, when Ireneus exempteth the Church from the iudgement of man, the word Man is to be vnderstood as the Apostle heere vnderstandeth it for a sensuall man, or else for a spirituall man iudging in some points sensually, but it may well be iudged of a spirituall man, in that he is spirituall: because it may be iudged of the Lord whose minde and sense the spirituall man hath.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 9 FOR we are are ‡ coadiutors: you are Gods husbandry, you are Gods building.

RHEM. 1. [9 Coadiutors.] A marvellous dignity of spirituall Pastors, that they be not onely the instruments or Ministers of Christ, but also Gods Coadiutors in the work of our salvation.

CARTVV. 1. [9 Coadiutors of Gods] Corruptly, for workers with God, as the Greek word doth euidently declare, and as both the Syrian and Arabian Paraphrast, and their own interlineall haue turned it: Finally, their Vulgar, otherwhere hath turned the word whereof this commeth so: which is all one as if he should say instruments that the Lord useth in the saluation of men: as the Apostle himselfe doth a little before expound it, when he saith, that they are Ministers by whom men beleeue: Whereas a Coadiutor is properly there where the principall is not able to do it of himselfe, And as if this were not enough to proue that they haue such a meaning, they haue added, that the Pastors are not onely instruments, but Coadiutors, declaring plainly that the Ministers do performe another help vnto God besides an instrumentall helpe, which is blasphemy against God, and against Christ, who alone are the workers of our salvation. And if the Iesuites had used a naturall English word, there is no doubt but they would haue translated Fellow-helpers of God, mating the Ministers with God himselfe: Contrary to the words of the Apostle, who saith here of himselfe and his fellowes, that they were Nothing, and otherwhere, that it is not he but the grace of God in him.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 8 And he that planteth and he that watereth are one, And | euery one shall receiue his owne reward acording to his owne labour.

RHEM. 2. [8. Euery man shall receiue according.] A most plaine text for proofe that men by their labours, and by the diuersities thereof, shall be diuersly rewarded in heauen: and therefore that by their works proceeding of grace, they do deserue or merite heauen, and the more or lesse ioy in the same, for though the holy Scripture commonly vse not this word merite, yet in places innumerable of the old and new Testament, the very true sense of merite is conteined, and so often as the word merces, and the like be vsed, they euer be vnderstood as correllatiues or correspondent vnto it, for if the ioy of heauen, be retribution, repaiment, hire, wages for works (as in infinite places of holy Scripture,) then the works can be none other but the valure, desert, price, worth, and merite of the same, And indeed this word, reward, which in our English tong may signifie a voluntary or bountifull gift, doth not so well expresse the nature of the Latine word, or the Greeke, which are rather rather the uery ſtipend that the hired workeman or iourney-man couenanteth to haue of him whoſe worke he doth, and is a thing equally and iuſtly anſwering to time and weight of his trauels and works (in which ſenſe the ſcripture ſaith, Dignus eſt operarius mercede ſua, the workeman is worthy of his hire) rather then a free gift, though, becauſe faithfull men muſt acknowledge that their merits be the gifts and graces of God, they rather vſe the word reward, then hire, ſtipend, or repaiment, though indeed it be all one, as you may ſee by diuers places of holy write, as * My mercies, (reward) is with me to render to euery one * according to his works. And our Lord will render vnto me according to my iuſtice. Pſal.17. And the very word it ſelfe merite (equivalent to the Greeke) is vſed thus, Mercy ſhall make a place to euery one * according no the merit of works. Eccleſiaſtici 16.15. And if you do your iuſtice before men, you ſhall not haue reward in heauen Mat.6.1. Where you ſee that the reward of heauen is recompence of iuſtice. And the euaſion of the Heretickes is friuoulous and euidently falſe, as the former and like words do conuince, for they ſay heauen is our Merces or reward, not becauſe it is due to our works, but to the promiſe of God: where the words be plaine, According to euery mans works or labours, vpon which works, and for which works conditionally, the promiſe of heauen was made.

CARTVV.2. [Euery man ſhall receiue according.] The Apoſtle ſheweth that there ſhall be one reward of an Apoſtle, and another of an Euangeliſt: one reward of a Planter of Churches, and another of the Waterer of thoſe which are planted, whereof that the Ieſuites conclude merite is frivolous: for by the ſame reaſon that there are greater graces here upon earth given unto one rather then unto another, without deſert of him that hath the greater graces aboue him that hath the leſſe: by the ſame reaſon may God beſtow greater glory in heaven upon one rather then upon another, without any regard of difference in their deſert. Where if the Papiſts do reſiſt us in the former part of this argument for the conuincing of them we will go no further then to the preſent examples here mentioned: aſking them what merite there was in Paul that God ſhould beſtow the grace of Apoſtleſh p and Planterſhip upon him rather then upon Apollo, whom he appointed an Euangeliſt and a Waterer. And as the Lords free gift maketh a difference of graces in men at the firſt, ſo doth it alwaies after, for unto him that hath more ſhall be giuen, and not more ſhall be done, Wherefore the Apoſtle had ſaid a little before, that both he and Apollo, were Miniſters according as God had giuen to euery one. The ſecond argument to proue merite drawn from the Greek word, which ſignifieth hire due to a iourneyman for his worke, is both idlely proved, and ſuperfluouſly repeated. For we do not deny but that it ſignifieth ſometime a reward that is due and deſerued: but that it alwaies doth ſo is falſe; as appeareth by the reward given to them that had laboured but one houre, equall with them that had laboured the whole day, where if they which laboured but one houre, receiving a peny, receiued that which they deſerued: then they that had laboured all day and receiuing no more received not their deſert, and conſequently had wrong, which is abſurd. But of this matter, and of Retribution, looke before upon Math.5.12 & 6.4. Thirdly, where they urge the words, according to euery mans worke, they underſtand not that according is not a word of cauſe, but of the order that the Lord will will uſe in his free reward of works, whereof look before upon Rom.2.6

Mat.13.12, & 25.29.

Verſe. 12 And if any man build vpon this foundation, gold, ſiluer, pretious ſtones, wood, hay, ſtubble.

RHEM.3.[12. Vpon this foundation.] The foundation is Chriſt, and faith in him working by charitie. The vpper building may be either pure and perfect matter of gold, ſiluer, and precious ſtone, which (according to the moſt authenticall and probable expoſition) be good works of charitie and all Chriſtian iuſtice done by Gods grace: or elſe, wood, hay, ſtubble, which ſignifie the manifold acts of mans infirmitie and his veniall ſinnes. Which more or leſſe mixed and medled with the better matter aforeſaid, require more or leſſe puniſhment or purgation at the day of our death. At which day, if by penance or other meanes in the Church, the ſaid veniall ſinnes be before hand cleanſed, there ſhall need no purging at all, but they ſhall ſtraight receiue the reward due to them.

Building of gold or ſtubble

CARTVV.3. [12. Vpon this foundation.] As the Apoſtle had likened him elſe to a planter, and other miniſters that follow him in his worke, to waterers: ſo here he likeneth himſelfe to a maſter builder, to whom it belongeth to lay the foundation; and his after-commers in that worke to Maſons: whereof thoſe that be faithfull build upon this foundation nothing but gold, ſiluer, and pretious ſtones, matter anſwerable and ſutable to the foundation as did Apollos: other that were unfaithfull, retaining ſtill the foundation which is Chriſt, laid upon it wood, hay, and ſtubble, unfit and unſutable matter to the foundation, as did the falſe Apoſtles, who preaching Chriſt crucified, did teach alſo curious and vaine matters, and that in ſwelling ſpeeches and oſtentation of their learning very unmeet and unſuteable to the croſſe of Chriſt, and ſimplicity of the Goſpell: whereby it is evident what pilgrimes and ſtrangers the Ieſuites are in the Scriptures, which are not able to ſet a right foot almoſt in any way thereof: and wthall how fooliſhly and out of time they jangle here of their pelting purgatory.

Verſe. 13 The work of euery one ſhall be manifeſt: for the day of our Lord will declare, becauſe it ſhall be reuealed in fire: and the work of euery one of what kind it is, the fire ſhal trie.

RHEM.4.[13. Shall be manifeſt.] Whether our life and works be pure and need no cleanſing, now in this world is hard to iudge: but the day of our Lord, which is at our death, will make it plaine in what termes euery mans life is towards God, for then Purgatorie fire ſhall reueale and proue it, for, whoſoeuer hath any impure matter of veniall ſinnes or ſuch other dettes, to Gods iuſtice paiable and purgable, muſt into that fire, and after due payment and cleanſing, be ſaued through the ſame. Where the works of the perfect men and ſuch as died with all dettes payed, cleanſed, or forgiuen, are quitted from the fire, and neuer incurre domage, paine, or loſſe thereby. The places of fathers expounding this for Purgatorie, be very many moſt euident, which are cited in the laſt Annotation following.

Our workes ſhall be manifeſted by fire.

CARTVV.

CARTVV 4. [13. Shall be manifeſt] Firſt, it is contrary to all Greeke copies that you read the day of the Lord, when the Greeke hath onely the day. Secondly you ought to haue ſhewed where the day, or the day of the Lord is taken for the day of a mans death: for the places quoted in the next Section, ſhew it not; which are all underſtood of the generall iudgement, for the worke of God in us is never perfected untill that day: the Apoſtle for ſome cauſes ſpeaketh of the laſt day to the Chriſtians of his time, as if the day of the Lord ſhould haue come vpon himſelfe and them. And if you were able to ſhew it, yet it can haue no ſuch ſignification in this place, conſidering that the day of death doth not make manifeſt vnto other what a mans ſinnes haue been in his life time, but rather foldeth and ſealeth vp all thoſe ſinnes which were hidden at that time untill the day of iudgement. And both the circumſtance of the place, and the words do teach that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the manifeſtation that ſhall be made to others of the work of building, and not of the manifeſtation that is made to the man that worketh. Wherefore by the day is underſtood the light of the truth, as this word is vſed otherwhere. And the ſame ſignification hath fire in this place: for as the truth of the Goſpell is day and light, to diſcerne and reveale ſound and vnſound doctrine: ſo is it fire both to try it whether it be gold or ſtubble, and either to make it glitter if it be gold, or to conſume it if be ſtubble. For that day and fire ſignifie one thing it may appeare by the ſame effect that he giveth to both, which is to make the truth certainly knowen; whereunto although he vſe two ſeverall words, yet is there no difference in the ſignification, but that the one is a plain ſpeech without trope, the other is borrowed from the Goldſmithes, or Gold-finers. Wherefore, and further for the very expreſſe words of the Apoſtle, which ſaith that the fire ſhall try every mans workes: it is evident that through this fire muſt paſſe not onely the evill, but alſo the good workes. If then you will kindle a purgatory fire out of this place, not onely the evill workes, but the good alſo muſt be the matter and ſticks to feed the fire with, as it is ſome where obſerved of Auguſtine. Your diſtinction of veniall and light ſinnes to be purged in this fire, will hardly be forgiven you, being taken contrary to ſo manifeſt light of the text. For if by gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones be underſtood all even the beſt workes; by wood, hay, and ſtubble, which are oppoſed unto them, muſt needs bee underſtood all even the worſt workes.

RHEM. 5. [13. The day of our Lord ſhall declare.] That this purgation rather ſignifieth the place of Gods iuſtice after our death, then any affliction in this life, the Apoſtles preciſe ſignifying of fire declareth, and of reuealing notifying the difference of mens workes by the ſame: which is not done euidently euer in this life: and namely the word, day of our Lord: which commonly and properly ſignifieth in Scripture, and namely in this Apoſtle (1. Cor. 5. 5. 2. Cor. 1. 13. Phil. 1 10. 6. 1. Theſſ. 5. 2. 2. Theſſ. 2. 2.) either the particular, or the generall iudgement: and therefore that the triall ſpoken of is not properly nor litterally meant any affliction or aduerſitie of this life, as Caluin alſo confeſſeth, coyning a fooliſh new conſtruction of his own. Where you may note alſo in that mans Commentary, that this word, dies Domini, was ſo preiudiciall againſt him and all other expoſitions of the triall to be made in this world, that hee would gladly haue (Domini) out, reading thus. A day ſhal come which ſhall open, &c. Where vnderſtand, that if it were onely Dies (as* in the Greeke) yet thereby alſo the Scripture is wont to ſignifie the ſelfe ſame thing: as 2. Tim. 1. 12. 18. and 2. Tim. 4. 8. and Heb. 10. 25. the day, as in this place, with the Greeke article onely, which is all one with Dies illa, or Dies Domini.

CARTVV. 5. [13. The day of our Lord ſhall declare.] Looke the anſwer in the Annotation next before. For as for the places here quoted to proue that by the day without other addition, is noted the day of the Lord (which in the new Teſtament is alwaies taken for the latter day) beſides that it is againſt them which would haue it applied to purgatory, ſuppoſed to goe before that day; it is alſo deſolate of all proofe. For in all thoſe places quoted of them (beſide the common article which ſometime having force of noting a ſpeciall thing, at ſome other time is demonſtratiue, and other whiles hath no power at all but aboundeth) there is another word (as Lord or Chriſt) which reſtraineth that whereunto it is coupled, and diſtinguiſheth it from all other dayes. Wherefore thoſe words being not found here, this place is idlely and fondly likened vnto thoſe which they haue quoted as belonging vnto one family, which are not ſo much as of one tribe.

Verſe. 15 If any mans worke burne, he ſhall ſuffer detriment: but himſelfe ſhall be ſaued: yet ſo as by fire.

RHEM. 6. [15. As by fire.] S. Auguſtine vpon theſe words of the Pſalme 37, Lord rebuke me not in thine indignation, nor amend me in thy wrath. For it ſhall come to paſſe (ſaith he) that ſome bee amended in the wrath of God, and be rebuked in his indignation. And not all perhaps that are rebuked, ſhall be amended, but yet ſome there ſhall be ſaued by amending. It ſhall be ſo ſurely, becauſe amending is named: yet ſo as by fire, but ſome there ſhall be that ſhall be rebuked, and not amended to whom he ſhal ſay, Go ye into euerlaſting fire. Fearing therefore theſe more greeuous paines, he deſireth that he may neither bee rebuked in indignation by eternall fire, nor amended in his wrath, that is to ſay, Purge me in this life, and make me ſuch an one as ſhall not neede the amending fire, being for them which ſhall be ſaued, yet ſo as by fire. Wherefore? but becauſe here they build vpon the foundation, wood, hay, ſtubble: for if they build gold, ſilver, and pretious ſtones, they ſhould be ſecure from both fires, not onely from that eternall which ſhall torment the impious eternally: but alſo from that which ſhal amend them that ſhall be ſaued by fire, for it is ſaid, he ſhal be ſafe, yet ſo as by fire. And becauſe it is ſaid, he ſhall be ſafe, that fire is condemned. Yea verily though ſafe by fire yet that fire ſhall be more greeuous, then whatſoeuer a man can ſuffer in this life. And you know how great euils the wicked haue ſuffered, and may ſuffer: yet they haue ſuffered ſuch as the good alſo might ſuffer, for what hath any malefactor ſuffered by the lawes, that a Martyr hath not ſuffered in the confeſſion of Chriſt? Theſe euils therefore that are here, bee much more eaſie, and yet ſee how men, not to ſuffer them, do whatſoeuer thou commandeſt. How much better do they that which God commandeth, that they may not ſuffer thoſe greater paines. Thus farre S. Auguſtine. See S. Ambr. vpon this place. 1. CARTVV.

CARTVV. 6. [15. As by fire.] The hot fire of Purgatory which the Papists goe about with their cold arguments to make, is not onely cooled, but quite quenched with this one little word [as] which declareth that here is no true fire spoken of, but onely that which hath a resemblance with fire for the cause aboue rehearsed. Augustine is impudently here cited: for if hee haue one sentence to kindle Purgatory fire, he hath two at the least to quench it out. And this very interpretation (here alledged) you ought to know that he avoucheth not as a certaine interpretation, but disproving this that both sortes of workes shall be tryed by the fire, he urgeth another, and leaveth place for a better interpretation if any be found. The like fore-head they declare in quoting of Ambrose, for in the first to the Corinth. 3. he applyeth this to the Church Teachers, and in the 20. Sermon upon Psal. 118. he interpreteth the fire to be the word of God. This fire (saith he) is the word of Christ, and the good fire which knowing how to heate, knoweth not how to burn but sins alone. By this fire, &c. the Apostolicall gold is tryed, the silver manners are examined, the precious stones are lightned, the hay and stubble are consumed. And these words of Ambrose wherewith you would help your selues, contrary to his plaine discourse of the text (making fire the word of Christ) supposing the good, (even Iohn the Evangelist and Peter) and the bad to passe by it: and of bad) not veniall sinnes onely, but all sinnes) cannot help you. For speaking of hay and stubble which shall be consumed after this life, he declareth that it shall be done before the tribunall seate of Christ. where Paul shall be present in Purgatory. The Reader also may further see Ambrose his iudgement in this case of Purgatory otherwhere most cleere and evident against the Iesuits. With Ierom they haue dealt no better then with the other, who maketh no manner of mention of purgatory fire, nor any fire after this life, but assigneth the damage unto those that build wood, &c. to be the losse of their labour. And the same place of the Apostle he doth otherwhere apply to the last day, and day of the resurrection: saying, Their punishment shall be manifest unto all; who for gold silver and precious stones haue builded upon the foundation, hay, wood, and stubble. And when he saith, that whilst we are heere, we may help one another with prayer and counsell, hee giveth to understand that after this life our prayers will not help. And writing upon this place, he applyeth all this place unto the day of the last iudgement, and the fire he expoundeth to be the examination that shall bee in that iudgement. Orig. hom. 6. in cap. 15. Exod. and homil. 14 in 24. Levit. is openly belied, where he hath not a word of Purgatory, or of any cleansing by fire after this life: But he utterly overthroweth the Popish Purgatory, affirming that all must passe through this fire. And in another place that Paul and Peter must come to that fire. And a little before, in the fore-said Homily upon Exodus he teacheth, that all manner of sinne in thought, word, and deed, not Veniall sinnes onely, is noted out by the stubble wood and hay, as all good workes are marked by gold, silver and precious stones. As for Pope Gregory we make small account what he saith: But if you thinke that it is Gospell which he writeth: your Purgatory is so harrowed that there is not one poore soule that can come thither to haue the cleansing moneths or yeares that you imagine, for he saith, that at the time that a man falleth whether the good or the evill spirit or Angell take his soule, he holdeth it for ever without any exchange. And beside the ancient Fathers, it is no marvell if the ancient writers could find no tymber in this place of the Apostle to build Purgatory with: seeing one of your Friers in these corrupt times expounding the simple meaning of the place in his iudgement (so that he giveth you not so much as one spark to kindle this fire with) in the end findeth no manner of reason to lead him to dreame of Purgatory here, but onely the authority of the Church of Rome. And as for the paines and heate of Purgatory fire, the latter Popish Scullions haue (in favour of their bellies) made it hotter then those which first had a spice of this Fable; whilst they say that it differeth nothing from hell fire, but onely in the durance thereof. But (to go no further then you here professe) if the paines of Purgatory bee greater then all the paines of this life, how shall the poore soules beare it without falling into blasphemy and despaire: especially having no comfort of the Ministery. For if the strongest Sampsons which the Lord hath amongst his people finde their hands full of the paines of this life, and are not under the weight of them kept from despaire but by the Ministery of the Word: how shall they do, who having paines passing all the paines of this life, haue no support of comfort at all.

CARTVV. 1. [15 If you haue.] By the same right may Augustine the Monke call himselfe the Church of Englands father, as one of the Ptolmes which killed his father, was called Philopater, that is to say in our tongue, a louer of his father. For the stories are not so certaine that he killed his parents, as they are certaine that this Monke went about to murther the Church of England. For he was for his cruelty and pride worthier the name of an Apostata then of an Apostle. And if there be any credite to be given unto stories, either Paul or Ioseph of Aramathia, were the fathers of this Church.

ther could take vpon him to be iudge of his own hart and cogitations, whether they were pure or no, but the triall thereof he left onely to Gods iudging day.

CARTVV.2. [4 But not iustified.] These turnefick Iesuits make their note cleane contrary to the text: for they make Paul unassured whether hee were iustified or no: and Paul affirmeth plainely that he was not iustified, wherefore they in effect say, that Paul affirmeth that whereof hee had no assurance. But this place is the death of your iustification by workes; for if Paul knowing nothing by himselfe (in that wherein the Corinthes might suppose him guilty) was not so much as in that point iustified before God: who is he that shall dare to iustifie himselfe before God in any worke? As for the assurance of his iustification by faith in Christ, and consequently of his salvation, he giveth plentifull testimony other where. And as they make their note directly against the Text, so they make it directly against themselues, which not denying otherwhere, upon Rom. 3. 15. but that Paul by especiall reuelation might be assured of his saluation, here do precisely affirme that hee was not assured whether he was iustified or no.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 91 BVt now I wrote to you, not to keepe companie, if he that is named a brother, be a fornicatour, or a couetous person, or ‡a seruer of Idoles, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner: with such an one ! not so much as to take meat.

RHEM.1. [11. A seruer of Idols.] A notorious wilfull corruption in the Bible 1562. translating in the verse before, Idolaters: and here, worshippers of Images: the Apostles word being one, εἰδωλολάτρης, Idolater.

CARTVV.1. [11. A seruer of Idolds] It is indeed a fault in that translation to turne one word of the same signification by two seuerall English words: but it is a moat, considering that both the English words of worshipping Images and Idols signifie but one thing, as hath been shewed in the answer to Martins cavils against our translation. We haue the same chalenge against you that translate one and the same word of one single signification by divers words, which yet we would be loth to aggravate with such blustering words of corruption, and that notorious: for these titles are better deserved of you, where you translate in one place, Luk. 2. εὐδοκία good will, referring it to men, and in other places good accepting, ascribing it unto God: the circumstances of the place being all one. And in this one example is both the moat which we fault in, and the beame or notorious corruption whereof without cause you gaggle against us.

ANNOTATIONS.

*Vers.*3 ! I indeed absent in body, but present in spirit, haue already iudged, as present, him that hath so done.

RHEM.2. [3. I absent.] S. Paul here vseth his Apostolike power, of binding the incestuous person, excommunicating him by his letters and Mandatum, though absent.

Verse. 4 In the name of our Lord IESVS Christ, you being gathered together and my spirit, with the vertue of our Lord IESVS

The authority of Ecclesiasticall censures is in the Clergy onely, and is executed in the name of Christ.

RHEM. [4. You being gathered.] Though he commanded the act should be done in the face of the Church, as such sentences and censures be at this day executed also, yet the iudgement and authority of giuing sentence was in himselfe, and not in the whole multitude, as the Protestants and the popular Sectaries affirme, for the power of binding and loosing was not giuen to the whole Church, but as in the persons of the Prelates, and to them for the benefite of the whole. Wherevpon S. Chrysostome, vpon these words Dic Ecclesiæ, Tell the Church, Mat. 18. Complaine to the Church, that is, saith he, to the Prelats and Presidents thereof.

CARTVV.2. [3. I absent.] and [4 You being gathered] The Iesuits affirming that excommunication belongeth unto the Apostle onely, and consequently to the Bishop, and not to the Church: charge the protestants that communicate this Church power with the Church. Wherein how they striue against a forcible streame of the truth, let the reader obserue. For first it is evident that the Apostle did onely decree and giue his iudgement that he should be excommunicate, and did not excommunicate him: for if the Ministers of that Church with the rest of the body thereof had not shut him from the Church, and taken him for a publican and sinner, although he had been worthy to be excommunicate, yet he should not haue been cast out of the Church. Secondly, hee will not haue him delivered to Sathan, but in the assembly and meeting of the Church: where their fond shift that the Church is not there with any authority, but as witnesses and lookers on of the action, is manifoldly confuted. For it appeareth that the authority and name of our Saviour Christ (which is the principall cause of the casting out of a sinner) is annexed not unto the letters of Paul wherein he decreeth of this this excommunication, but unto the action which was done in the assembly: which is likewise true of these words in the vertue or power of the Lord Iesus. Thirdly, if the Church were assembled onely to beare witnesse, and not to haue authoritie in this case: it followeth that Pauls spirit also was there onely to looke and beare witnesse, considering that the personall presence of the Church, and the Apostles spirituall presence, are associated in this affaire of the Church. Againe, the figure of this excommunication whereunto it must answer, will suffer no such looking and gazing presence of the Church: for it was not enough for the Israelites not to eate, or not to touch leavened bread during the feast of the passe-over; but they were bound to purge their houses of it, and utterly to thrust it out: seeing then the Apostle willeth the Church to purge themselues of the incestuous man which was as it were leaven ready to infect others, it must needs follow, that it belongeth also unto the Church to remoue and thrust out the infected person. And thus the Apostle expoundeth himselfe and his Metaphor of purging the leven when he saith, Take away the evill one from amongst your selues. Whereupon the Apostle calleth it otherwhere the correction or rebuke that is from many. Further, when he saith, Do not you iudge of those that are within? He giveth more unto the Church in excommunication then to be witnesses and lookers on: for he useth the same word to declare the Churches interest, that he used before to note his owne. If then you will say, that the Churches iudgement in excommunication is but to beare witnesse: it followeth that the Apostles then, and consequently their successors now ate onely to beare witnesse of the excommunication. Hereunto also commeth that the release of this censure is ascribed in the same word of forgiuenesse or absolution unto the Church as unto Paul. Now to haue the same word in the same verse and the same cause to bee understood diversly and referred to Paul to haue the proper signification of remitting, but referred to the Church to signifie a witnessing of remission: needeth more learning for the defence of it, then falleth unto the Iesuites capacitie. And withall it is evident that for so much as the Church hath interest in the authority of forgiving or absoluing the excommunicate: it must consequently haue interest in the authority of binding and excommunicating him. Last of all, forsomuch as the Apostle reproveth the Church of Corinth for that they had not before his letters excommunicated the incestuous: it is evident that the Ministery and the rest of the Church there, had power and authority thereunto. And that this was both the doctrine and practise of the primitiue Church for divers hundred yeares, may evidently appeare by the testimony of antiquity. And the light of this truth is so great that some of the Papists themselues are ashamed to looke against it, as appeareth by Pighius, who (seeking all manner of colours to hide the filthinesse of Rome) could finde no colour to disguise this withall. For he affirmeth that it is not lawfull for any Bishop (the Bishop of Rome onely excepted) to excommunicate of himselfe alone. And Aquinas doth so ascribe this to the Apostle that hee shutteth not out the Church when he affirmeth that the manner of excommunication is prescribed in these words, when you are gathered together: for (saith he) weighty faults are to be punished (not by the witnesse of many, as the Iesuites giue to understand) but by the deliberation of many. And finally, the Glosse affirmeth, that Paul decreed that the Corinthians should giue him to Sathan. As for that out of Chrysostom, it maketh nothing against this cause. For as the Apostle was the chiefe in this action, and did direct it: so also we affirme, that the Bishop and Elders ought first to haue this matter brought to them: that by their ripe and graue deliberation aforehand, the Churches iudgement might haue the better addresse. And therefore also Tertullian doth declare, that in every Church there were certain Elders or Ancients, which had the chiefe presidence or direction of the Church in these causes, as Rhenanus doth expound it. And how farre Chrysostom was from mocking the people, as you Papists do, it appeareth evidently otherwhere, declaring that as of the one side he made not them Lords of the decree, to doe it without him: so of the other, that he made the Church partaker of the decree of casting the incestuous person out, shewing the reason why he alone gaue not the sentence, lest he might seeme to do them violence, or thinke that he trusted much to himselfe, and contemned them.

RHEM. 5. [5. To Satan.] To assure vs that all excommunicate persons bein the power & possession of the Diuell, and quite out of Christs protection as soone as they be separated by the Churches sentence, from her body and the Sacraments & fellowship of Christian Catholike men: it pleased God to giue power to the Apostles and Prelates in the primitiue Church, to cause the Diuell straight vpon their sentence of excommunication, so inuade the body of the excommunicate, and to torment him corporally, so Christ excommunicated Iudas, and the Diuell entred into him, and hee went forth of the happy fellowship of the Apostles, Io. 13. 27. so this Apostle excommunicated Alexander and Hymenaus, and Satan straight tooke them: 1 Tim. 1. Yea it is thought that S. Peter excommunicated Ananias and Sapphira. and for signe of his power and terrour of the sentence, strooke them both starke dead. *De mirabil. S. of his lawes, and ſpecially vpon the diſobedient, as Heretickes namely.

CARTVV. 4. [5. To Satan.] That the excommunicate in the Primitiue Church were forthwith poſſeſſed in their bodies of the Deuill, is a groundleſſe opinion: for to giue a man to Satan, is to giue him ouer to be out of the Church in the kingdom of Satan and to be ruled of his ſpirit as it is manifeſt by the contrary, for to be in the Church or kingdom of Chriſt is to be gouerned by the ſpirit of Chriſt. And this is further euident by the Apoſtle who expounds this giuing to Satan by theſe words take away from amongſt you or purge out or thruſt out the old leuen. And it is known that the giuing of a man to be in his bodie poſſeſſed of the Deuil is not an effect of excomunication which is an ordinary cenſure of the Church, but is the effect of an extraordinarie gift called power or vertue which the Church generally had not but a few onely vpon whom that gift was beſtowed, from whence it came alſo that S. Peter ſlew Ananias and Sapphira with a word. It being therefore before ſhewed that it belonged vnto the Church to giue to Satan: it is manifeſt that giving to Satan can not be a giuing to a poſſeſſion of Satan in the body. Neither had the giuing of one to a bodiile poſſeſſion of Satan been ſo fit a mark to haue noted ſuch criminall and ſinfull perſons with: conſidering that very godly and worthy citiſens and burgeſſes of the Church are and may bee ſo viſited of the Lord. And if to giue to Satan then had been as much as to haue had Satan to enter into his body: there needed not ſo earneſt an exhortation vnto the Church to keep themſelues from all familiarity with the excomunicate perſon, conſidering that euen naturally men abhorre the preſence, much more the familiar vſage of ſuch a one as is in his body poſſeſſed of the Deuill, from whom they will feare ſome violence eſpecially when as the poſſeſſed is through the rage of the Deuill tormented. The ſame anſwer is vnto Satans entry into Alexander and Hymeneus. The example of Iudas Iohn 13. is fondly alleadged, whom neither our Sauiour Chriſt did excommunicate, neither yet was hee bodily poſſeſſed of the Deuill, for where it is ſaid verſe 27. that Satan entred into him, the meaning is, not that Satan entred into his body or tormented it, but that Satan gat more power ouer him to pricke him on to worke the treaſon that he had purpoſed as appeareth manifeſtly both by the words of our Sauiour Chriſt in the ſame verſe and in the 30. verſ following: for as the holy ſpirit is ſaid to come vpon one when he doth ſome noble, rare & worthy act: ſo the wicked ſpirit is ſaid to enter into him when hee doth ſome notable & exceſſiue wickednes, which is yet more manifeſt in that it is ſaid of Iudas, that Satan entred into him, before the Paſſover two dayes, whereas this entry mentioned of Iohn was the ſame night wherin our Sa. Chriſt kept his Paſſouer, & after both Paſſover & ſupper were ended. If therfore theſe words of Satans entry into Iudas proue an entry into his body, to torment him, it followeth that Satan entred twiſe in the ſpace of two dayes into his body. But Iohn doeth himſelfe interprete Lukes words that Satan had entred into Iudas before he came to the Councell to compound with it of betraying of his Maſter: when Iohn ſaith that the Deuill had put it in Iudas to betray him. For as Sathan had poſſeſſed him from the beginning of his Apoſtleſhip, in which regard our Sauiour called him about a two yeares before this time a Deuill; ſo (as he more and more gained of him to bring him to his obedience or ſlauery) he is ſaid to haue entred into him. The example of Ananias and Sapphira his wife is out of time, for Satan had filled their hearts before the ſuppoſed ſentence of excommunication and being ſtricken downe in a moment they could not in body bee poſſeſſed of the deuill to be tormented of him, neither had this worke the end required in excommunication which is that the fleſh or corruption of ſinne being deſtroyed in this world the ſpirit might bee ſaued in the day of the Lord. Neither yet was there any exhortation to repentance which is carefully to be performed alwayes before it be proceeded to ſo heauie a iudgement. Neither could that kind of iudgement bee well called a rod, as the Apoſtle calleth it, but a ſword rather, and that to kill. Wherefore not ſticking greatly with you but that excommunication is the terribleſt and greateſt puniſhment that can be executed by men in this life, (although Anathematization bee greater, which the Church executed againſt Iulian the Apoſtata) wee do not allow your iudgement in this that you ſay, that the excommunicate perſons are quite out of the protection of Chriſt, for then ſhould it be no rod to chaſtice, as a father doth his child, nor no inſtrument to let bloud with for recovery of the infected perſon, but a hammer to breake the excommunicate all to peeces: neither ſhould it be (as it is) a medicine to reſtore the ſick, but a cup of deadly poiſon to ſend him to everlaſting deſtruction. You ought therefore to conſider that this ſentence of excommunication (whereby he is given into the power and kingdom of the devill) hath a condition wrapped in it, namely till he do repent and profit by this cenſure of the Church. For untill he giue evident ſignes of an invincible obſtinacy, he ought not to be taken for an enemy, but admoniſhed as a brother: Neither doth our Saviour Chriſt ſay that they be ſhut out of heaven, but that they be bound in heaven; nor hee ſaith not, that they are Heathen men, but in regard of the priviledges of the Church, they are as Heathen. And laſt of all, when as even in this place of the Apoſtle, the fleſh, which is the man unregenerate, is oppoſed unto the ſpirit: it is evident that the Church eſteemeth the excommunicate perſon to haue the ſpirit of God, and ſome part of him regenerate, which by this cenſure it endeavoureth to nouriſh and foſter, even untill the Lords day. And indeed hee having once received the ſpirit of adoption, which we are in Chriſtian and charitable iudgement to thinke of him that ioyneth himſelfe to the Church, it never departeth from him, but even in his greateſt declination from godlineſſe it lyeth hidden, as ſeed which, for a time, being buried under the mould, doth after ſprout out and beare fruite againe, or as a ſparkle, which being covered with many cold aſhes, after is blown of the Lord, and made to flame againe.

eaten with all puritie and sinceritie, in the holy Sacrament. Which mysterie the holy Church in these words commendeth to the faithfull euery yeere at the feast of Easter.

CART VV. 5. [8 Let us feast.] That we eate Christ in the sacrament is true: but wee eate him (that is, we are made partakers of him) by faith, and not by the mouth; in our hearts, and not in our belly. For further answer to this point, look the answer before, upon Luk. 22. 19. The commending of this Misterie by the feast of Easter once in a yeare, is fitter to bring in a forgetfulnesse of the Mysterie, rather then to keep it in any good and fresh remembrance: considering that the Apostle teacheth the Corinthians to celebrate this feast of Passeover all the yeare long: and to celebrate it not alone when we come to receiue the Sacrament, but whensoever wee haue any meeting, either Religious or Civill, one of us with another.

RHEM. 6. [11. Not to take meat] It is not meant that we shou'd separate our selues corporally from all sinners, or that wee might refuse to liue in one Church or fellowship of Sacraments with them, which was the errour and occasion of the Donatists great schisme: nor that euery man is straight after he hath committed any deadly sinne, excommunicated, as some Lutherans hold: but that wee should auoid them when the Church hath excommunicated them for such, though in mind, and condemnation of their faults, euery one ought to bee alwayes far from them. As for the Heathen and Pagans, which be not vnder the Churches discipline, and at that time in externall worldly affaires dealt with Christians and liued amongst them whether they would or no, the Apostle did not forbid Christians their companie.

We are bound to auoid, not all sinners, but the excõmunicate onely, and them, except in certain cases.

CART VV. 6, [11 Not to take meate.] They shew not what Lutherans hold that straight way after deadly sinne committed the offenders are to be excommunicated, but themselues which seeme to be of the minde that Peter excommunicated Ananias and Sapphyra, are manifestly taken in that fault which they would father upon the Lutherans.

Verse. 13 For them that are without, God will iudge, Take away | the euill one among your selues.

RHEM. 7. [13. The euill one.] He concludeth that though they cannot, nor himselfe, neither out of the Heathen that be publike offenders, yet the ill person by him excommunicated, being one of their own body, they may cut of, as is aforesaid, and auoid his company. Vpon which commandement of the Apostle, we see that we are bound by Gods word to auoide all company and conuersation with the excommunicate, except in causes of necessity, and the spirituall profit of the person excommunicate.

CART VV. 7. [13. The euill one.] That which requireth answer here, is answered before in the Annotations upon the 3. and 4. verse.

Verse 6. But brother with brother | contendeth in iudgement: and that before infidels?

RHEM. 3. [6. Contendeth in iudgement.] To be giuen much to brabling litigiousnesse for euery trifle, to spend a pound rather then lose a peny, the Apostle much reprehendeth in Christian men. For a Christian man to draw an other to the iudgements seates and courts of the Heathen Princes (which then onely reigned) and not to suffer their controuersies and quarrels to be taken vp among themselues brotherly and peaceably, was a great fault: as, for one Catholike to draw an other for meere trifles) before secular or hereticall Officers, is a very vnchristian part.

RHEM. 4. [7. A fault.] Hee forbade not all iudgemens of controuerſies, but onely ſignified that it was a fault, and that it proceedeth of ſome iniuries done one to another, and imperfections, that they ſo moleſted one another: and that it had been more agreeable to Chriſtian perfection and charitie, rather to tolerate and ſuffer a ſmall iniurie, then to draw his fellow to iudgement ſeates.

Verſe. 2. But becauſe of fornication let every man haue ǀ his own wife, and let every woman haue her own huſband.

The Apoſtle biddeth not all to marry, but to keepe their wiues before married.

RHEM. 2. [2. His own wife.] He ſaith not as the Proteſtants here pretend to excuſe the Vnlawfull coniunction of Votaries, Let euery one mary: but, let euery one haue, keepe or vſe his own wife to whom he was maried before his conuerſion, for the Apoſtle anſwereth here to the firſt queſtion of the Corinthians, which was not, whether it were lawfull to marry, but whether they were not bound vpon their conuerſion, to abſtaine from the company of their wiues married before in their infidelity as ſome did perſwade them that they ought to do. Hierom. lib. 1, cont. Ionin. c. 4. Chriſoſt. in hunc locum. hom. 19.

CARTVV. 2. [2 His own wife.] It is falſe, that the Corinthians queſtion moued to the Apoſtle was reſtrained to thoſe onely that had married in infidelity, which is evidently confuted in the firſt verſe, that ſaith, it is good for a man not to touch a woman, which the Papiſts themſelues, and Ierome (whoſe authority they abuſe to coulour this falſehood with) do underſtand of all manner of Chriſtians. And ſeeing the firſt propoſition is generall, the ſecond (which interpreteth the firſt, and ſheweth when and how long, it is good to be without a wife) muſt needs be likewiſe generall. This is alſo manifeſt, by the end of having a wife, which the Apoſtle aſſigneth, as well common to the married as to the unmarried, that fornication may be auoided. It is alſo further confuted by the diuiſion of this generall, afterward into the ſpeciall kinds of unmarried and married folke comprehended under this whole. And beſide the authoriry of the Holy Ghoſt in the Epiſtle unto the Hebrewes that mariage is honourable among all men, and the bed vndefiled. They haue their own Doctor Thomas, and Denys their Monk flat againſt them, whereof the former ſaith, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of perſons unmarried, the other that it may be underſtood either of thoſe that are married, or of thoſe that are not married. As for Ieromes authority they might bluſh to auouch it in this place, who (as hath appeared) denyeth in this booke marriage, not onely in the Miniſters, but in all Chriſtian men, to be a Chriſtian work. Chryſoſtome hath no ſuch thing as they alledge him for. The contrary rather appearh, for both he miſliketh thoſe that would reſtraine the firſt verſe of this chapter to Prieſts, and he aſſigneth the queſtion moued of the Corinthes, not to be (as the Ieſuites ſay) whether they ſhould abſtaine from the wife that they married in infidelity: but ſimply whether they ſhould abſtaine from their wiues.

RHEM. 3. [3. Let the husband render.] Theſe words open the Apoſtles intention and talke to be onely of ſuch as are already married, and to inſtruct them of the bound and obligation that is between the maryed couple for rendring of the dette of carnall copulation one to another: declaring that the maried perſons haue yeelded their bodies ſo one to another, that they cannot without mutuall conſent, neither perpetually, nor for a time, defraud one the other.

CARTVV. 3. [3. Let the husband render.] It is one member of the whole contained in the two former verſes, as hath been ſaid.

Continency in Married folkes for prayer ſake.

RHEM. 4. [5. Giue your ſelfe to prayer.] This time, and the Heretickes doctrine, & high eſtimation of matrimoniall actes, are farre from the purititie of the Apoſtolike and primitiue Church when the Chriſtians to make their prayers and faſtings more acceptable to God, abſtained by mutuall conſent euen from their lawfull wiues, our new Maſters not much abſteining (as it may be thought) from their wiues for any ſuch matter. And yet S. Auguſtine ſaith, the Prelate ſhould paſſe other in this caſe, and thinke that not to be lawfull for him, that may be borne in others, becauſe he muſt daily ſupply Chriſts roome, offer, baptize, and pray for the people. So ſaith he lib. 1 q. ex vtroque teſt. q. 127. in fine. See S. Hierom. lib. 1. c. 19. adu. Ionin. S. Ambr. lib. 1. Offic. c. vlt. But alas for the people, whoſe maried Paſtors are in this point farre worſe then the vulgar folke, neither teaching continencie, nor giuing good example.

CARTVV.

CARTVV. 4. [5. Giue your selfe to praier.] Publicke prayers that the Minister maketh, the priuate man is bound to make with him. There remaineth onely private prayers which are commanded vnto the priuate man as well as to the publicke Minister. And although the prayers of the Minister ought to be both with more knowledge and greater fervencie: yet that they ought to be longer and oftner then the priuate mans, the Iesuites cannot shew out of the word of God. And the necessary labour bestowed in prouiding for the preaching of the word, administring the discipline of the Church, comforting the discomforted, admonishing those that goe astray, and encouraging those that haue set themselues in a good way, together with the honest care of the housholde; will take up that time that a man of most businesse (if he be not ouer busie) will require for the overcomming of his affaires. Wherefore if a perpetuall abstinence from the company of a wife be necessary for the Minister in regard of prayer or other exercises (whereat the common man ought to be present, and to bee partaker as well as the Minister) it must needs follow that the vse of marriage is as vnlawfull for the people as for the Minister. But the blinde Iesuites in seeing will not see, nor giue the glory to God in confession of the truth. For the Apostle speaking not here of all manner of prayer, but of that onely that is ioyned with fasting in time of calamity and affliction, priuate or publicke, as by their owne note in the margent they are constrained to confesse, all the Greeke copies (one onely excepted) ioyning both together. And what time the word commandeth that men should as well abstaine from the company of their wiues as from meate: and their owne Doctor doth understand this of extraordinary prayers; whereupon it is euident, that in this place company with the wife is no longer nor otherwise forbidden, then abstinence from meate. By the same reason therefore that (out of this place) they may barre a Minister from the company of a wife, they may also starue him, and take away all vse of meat from him. And if they will say with the word, that the Minister in such extraordinary prayers ought to abstaine from the company of his wife, it is that which we teach others, and (by the grace of God) practise our selues, howsoeuer they hatefully and slanderously tattle of us. For answer to Ierom and Ambrose looke the places before quoted: although there is further answer to Ambrose here, which speaketh not simply against the marriage of the Ministers, but against their second marriages, as appeareth in the end of that chapter. Augustine also, although hee heere leaned too much to the corruption that was then creeping and stealing into the Church of an excessiue opinion and estimation of a solitary life: yet it hath been shewed in the places before quoted, that both he and other antiquity, especially Greeke, is more equall vnto marriage, and that expressly of the Ministers.

Ioel. 2. 16. Thomas in hunc locum.

Verse. 6 But I say this | by indulgence, not by commandement.

RHEM. 5. [6 By indulgence, not commandement.] Lest some might misconster his former words, as though he had precisely commanded married persons not to abstein perpetually from carnall copulation, or not to giue their consent one to another of continency but for a time onely: hee declareth plainely that hee gaue no rule or precept absolutely therein, but that he spake all the foresaid, condescending to their infirmities onely, insinuating that continencie from carnall copulation is much better, and that himselfe kept it continually. Aug. de bon. coniug. c. 10. Enchirid. c. 78.

Perpetuall continency euen in married folkes, better then carnall copulation.

CARTVV 5. [6. By indulgence not commandement.] Inclining to this iudgement, that this is referred to that which followeth, rather then to the second verse which goeth before, as if the Apostle should say, that which I haue hitherto spoken is by commandement; but that which now followeth is by advice and counsell: we will not striue about it, but leaue it to the readers iudgement. But that it should be referred to the 8. verse, as if the Apostle should preferre perpetuall continency of married persons vnto their lawfull company one with an other at times convenient: it is false, and manifestly against the circumstance and sense of the Apostle: for the Apostle which forbiddeth them the bed for a time, doth carefully prouide that after they should come vnto it again. And that they should not tarry vntill they felt some spice of incontinency in them, but that they should prevent the distemperance, and haue company together before they be ouertaken with any disorder of their affections that way. And in the 10. & 11. verses he expressly commandeth that one married person ought not to be severed from another. Whereupon Peter commandeth that husbands should dwell together with their wiues. Wherby is meant not so much the dwelling in one house, as the company one with another, as appeareth evidently by the place of the Apostle, where the fruit and effect of the dwelling of man and wife together is noted to be the children that are begotten of them: so that the Apostle accounteth them to be severed and separate one from another when they dwell in one house, if they haue not such company one with another, as thereby by course of nature in all good likelihood children may bee begotten, of those whom God hath made fit and able thereunto. Whereunto commeth that this ability of dwelling with knowledge one with another, being called a guift receiued of God, as well as the gift of continency. We are all bidden to walke as we haue receiued the gift at Gods hand. And where they bring Paul as an example of continuall continencie in marriage, they are confuted by their own words, which affirme that Paul had no wife. If Augustine in the former of these places please their taste, let them answer how they like of his streights whereunto his aduersary draue him by this means: namely, that he would haue all men (so that it were in a good conscience) to abstain from companying one with another in lawfull marriage, affirming that so the number of the elect should be much sooner accomplished, whereby either the elect must be fulfilled without the meanes of procreation (which were all one as to looke for fruit without a roote, as Ierom saith) or else must cease to be borne any more. In the other place, (beside that he speaketh not to this point) hee affirmeth that the Apostle permiteth marriage for a remedy against fornication, which otherwise hee giveth pardon unto: for hee feareth not confidently to affirme that the vse of marriage against fornication is sinne, because the Apostle (as he saith) by way of pardon, permitteth it unto men. Where (beside that he wandreth in the signification of the word συγγνωμη, which deceiued him) hee supposeth the Apostle to haue permitted

And if they will not haue us urge them with ſuch vnſavory ſauce as this is, let them not urge us with ſuch vnholſome meate, although it be prepared of him which commonly holdeth a good hand in delivery of that which is found.

Who are bound to liue continently: and that God giveth this gift to all that aske it. See S Auguſtine lib. 2. cap. 19. 20. de Adult. Coniug. to. 6

RHEM. 6. [7. A proper gift.] To ſuch as may lawfully marry, or bee alreadie married, God giueth not alwayes that more high and ſpeciall gift or grace of continency, though euery one of them all that duely aske and labour for it, might haue haue it: but ſuch are not bound to endeuour or ſeeke for it alwayes, and therefore cannot be commanded to abſtaine further then they like, but whenſoeuer a man is bound to abſtaine, either by vow or any other neceſſary occaſion (as if one of the parties be in priſon, warre, baniſhment, ſickneſſe, or abſent perpetually by lawfull diuorce) the other muſt needs in paine of damnation abſteine, and cannot excuſe the want of the gift of chaſtitie, for he is bound to aske it and to ſeeke for it of God by faſting, prayer, and chaſtiſing his body: and ſo laboring duely for it. God will giue the grace of chaſtitie. So had S. Paul it, and ſo had all the holy men that euer liued chaſt. Therefore deteſt the doctrine of the Proteſtants in this point, that when they liſt not faſt nor pray for it, ſay they haue not the gift, And it were a great maruell why ſo few of the new Sectes or rather none now a dayes haue that gift, but that we ſee it is obtained by thoſe meanes which our forefathers vſed, and they vſe not at all. To liue in marriage continently without the breach of coniugall fidelitie, is a gift of God alſo, but men muſt not breake their faith of wedlocke for want of it, but muſt know that God giueth that gift to ſuch as humbly aske it of him. Aug. de grat. & lib. arbitrio c. 4. de continent cap. 1.

CARTVV. 6. A proper gift.] It is true that thoſe which are bound to abſtaine by prayer and faſting, obtaine the continency which is neceſſary for them. But that Votaries or perſons lawfully diuorced haue any ſuch bond: it is that which is in queſtion. Whereof, beſide plaine and impudent begging of that in controverſie, there is nothing eſpecially of votaries, to incline the Readers iudgement. But that every one which begge th continencie by prayer and faſting may obtaine it, is directly contrary to the words of the Apoſtle, who affirmeth that it is a proper gift, which ſhould be common and not proper, if it might be had of all men: For euen thoſe that haue this gift proper to them, haue it and ought to haue it, and vphold it by the meanes that God hath ordained of prayer, and faſting alſo if need be, or that it be not granted by prayer alone. If therefore thoſe to whom it is proper get it not, nor entertaine it but by meanes of prayer and faſting, it muſt needs follow, that thoſe to whom it is not ſo given, cannot by prayer and faſting reach vnto it. And for them it is enough if by prayer and faſting they obtaine this grace at Gods hand, that they may liue chaſtely and with knowledge in the honourable eſtate of matrimony. Auguſtine doth not ſay that euerie one may obtaine this gift by praier and faſting, but beſides thoſe which already haue it, thoſe that by neceſſity of the Law of God are bound to abſtaine. And therefore alledgeth the Math. 19. place of the Goſpell, that all cannot receiue this gift, affirming thoſe only can receiue it to whom the ſecret, yet iuſt, mercy of God giueth it: Whereas if all that ſue for it by prayer and faſting ſhould obtaine it, there were no cauſe why he ſhould ſay, that it is a ſecrett mercy and yet iuſt, for the mercy of God ſhould be manifeſt in that this man, that hath this gift made ſute for it, where the other that hath it not made none. And the diſcourſe in the 90 and 20 chapter is of thoſe which geld themſelues for the Kingdom of heaven. Not (ſaith hee) that they may ſhine brighter in heaven, but that otherwiſe they cannot be in heaven, and ſo ſheweth out of this place of the Apoſtle, that although a man abſtaine willingly, yet doth he it not but by the eſpeciall gift of God. The ſame diſcourſe he hath in the other place. and hath in neither any thing of that which they alledge him for; vnleſſe they will account this to appertaine vnto this place, which is no part thereof, that diuorced perſons may not marry, whereunto it hath beene anſwered before, vpon Math. 19. 9. But for this point, that every man can not haue the gift of continency, Auguſtine is alſo in other places very cleere, where he ſaith, It is impoſſible, or very hard, to know why God giueth to one the gift of continency and not to another: where (by the Ieſuites) it is eaſie to know: namely, for that one prayeth and faſteth, and another doth not, if it were true which the Ieſuits affirme, it muſt needs follow of Auguſtines iudgement that every one is to ſeeke for the gift of continency. For further anſwer vnto this matter looke before vpon Math. 19. 11 12. 14.

The ſecond place which affirmeth that thoſe which haue vowed may not in any lawfulneſſe or expedience marry, either is contrary to the firſt or muſt be vnderſtood by it that the marriage is not vnlawfull, no not of them that haue vowed, but that they may with repentance of their raſh vow marry rather then burne, but it was ſinne to them (as hee thought) to breake their vow whereas indeed the ſinne is rather in that without the promiſe of God, yea and and contrary to the promiſe

RHEM. 8. [9. Better to marry.] It is better to marry for the said persons that bee free, then to be ouerthrowen and fall into fornication, for to burne, or to be burnt, is not to be tempted onely (as the Protestants thinke that picke quarrels easily to marry (but it signifieth * to yeeld to concupiscence either in mind or externall worke. Wee say also, for such as be free, for concerning others lawfully made priests, and such as otherwise haue made vow of chastitie, they cannot mary at all, and therefore there is no comparison in them betwixt marriage and fornication or burning, for their mariage is but pretensed, and is the worst sort of incontinency and fornication or burning. Theodoret in hunc locum.

But as for your iudgement which expound burning to be a yeelding in minde or externall work to concupiscence it is beastly, & argueth a burnt and seared conscience in the feeling of sinne, for where marriage is appointed for a remedie against fornication: you will haue him first to bee a fornicator and then onely to take the remedie against it, for our Sauiour Christ doeth declare that a resolute desire and coueting of a strange woman is the committing of adultery: how much more if he haue bewrayed his lust by externall worke. Math. 5. 28

CARTVV. 9. [11 To remaine vnmarried.] The gathering out of this place that one lawfullie diuorced, can not marrie againe during the life of both the parties, is sottish and quickly scattered, for the Apostle speaketh not here of a lawfull separation, which is by diuorce, but of a causeles separation of one part from another, which the Apostle had forbidden in the verse before. Vnlesse therefore they will say that it is vnlawfull to make a diuorce between parties whereof one hath broken the couenant of the Lord in matrimony: they cannot alleage this place to proue the remarrying of the diuorced persons vnlawfull for by the same reason whereby out of this place they may condemne their marraige they may also condemne their diuorce, for answer to the rest in this note look before. vpon Math. 19.

Verse. 12 For to the rest, I say, not our Lord. If any brother haue a wife an infidell and she consent to dwell with him: let him not put her away.

RHEM. 10. [12. I say not our Lord.] By this we learne, that there were many matters ouer & aboue the things that Christ taught or prescribed, left to the Apostles order & interpretation: wherein they might, as the cause required either command or counsell, and wee bound to obey accordingly. The Apostles precepts.

CARTVV. 10. [12. I say, not our Lord.] Seing the Apostle gaue that which hee receiued of the Lord, and that this doctrine is a peece of the Gospell which he affirmeth to be compriſed in the Scriptures it followeth that hee commanded nothing in this case, but that which the Lord commanded not; any thing which hee had not gathered and drawne from the fountaine of the Law and and the Scriptures. Wherefore when hee saith I say and not the Lord it is euident that he meaneth the Lord in his own person whileſt hee was here vpon earth had made, no expresse and precise mention of this case: albeit hee had otherwise taught and deliuered vnto his disciples the whole body of the truth of the Gospell. This appeareth manifestly by that which the Apostle doth oppose unto this phrase vers. 10. Not I but the Lord command, for as there the meaning is, I command not as gathering it of the words of the Lord, but of his expresse and precise words; so when hee saith here, I say, not the Lord, his meaning must needs be, that he saith not of the expresse and precise words of Christ, but of that which the Lord had generally taught, and he had precisely and expresly applyed unto this case. As therefore in the former place the Lords commandement doth not shut out Pauls commandement, as the commandement of the Minister of Christ; so in the latter place, the commandement of Paul, as the Embassador of Christ, doth not exclude Christs authority whose Embassadour he was to speak that onely which he had in commission from him. This is further manifest in that this commandement of Paul is borne up by good and substantiall reasons drawn from the Scripture: as that their company one with another was holy, because their children begotten in that company were holy; and for that by mutuall cohabitation the faithfull party might gaine the unfaithfull. And seeing not the words of the Scripture onely, but that also which is truely and duely concluded of them binde the conscience of a Christian man: it is euident that the obedience unto the Apostles commandement in this place, stayeth not alone in the person of the Apostle, but in the authority of Christ, and of the holy Scriptures from whence he fetched this commandement. 1. Cor. 11. 23 Rom. 1. 2. Ioh. 4. 25. & 15. 15. & 17. 8.

Verse. 14 For the man an infidell is sanctified by the faithful woman: and the woman an infidel is sanctified by the faithful husband: otherwise your children shoulde bee vncleane: but now they are holy.

RHEM. 11. [14. Sanctified.] When the infidell party is said to bee cleane, or sanctified by the faithfull, or the mariage of their children to bee cleane, wee may not thinke that they be in grace or state of saluation thereby, but onely that the marriage is * an occasion of How the infidel, or infidels child, are sanctified by the Christian.

Fi 10.l.1.c. 5. adverſ. Iouin. ſanctification to the infidell partie and to the children, for S. Auguſtine (lib. 3. de pec. mer. & remiſ. c. 12) concludeth againſt the Pelagians, as we may do againſt the Caluiniſts, holding Chriſtian mens children to be holy from their mothers wombe, and not to need baptiſme, that whatſoeuer ſanctification it be that is here meant, it cannot be enough to ſalvation without faith, Baptiſme, &c.

CART VV. 11. [14 Sanctified.] It is one thing (oftentimes in the Scriptures) to be Sanctified and another to be Holy. As for you, you erre in both, for when it is ſaid the vnbeleeving party is ſanctified by the beleeving, it is not onely meant as you ſay, that the marriage is an occaſion of the ſanctification to the infidell party, but that the vſe of the infidell party in marriage company, is ſanctified or made holy and lawfull vnto the beleeving party, as meate and drinke is ſaid to bee ſanctified
1. Tim. 4. 5 vnto vs by the word and prayer. And as your interpretation heere is ſhort, ſo in the expoſition of the holineſſe of the children, which are begotten in this Matrimony, it is vtterly falſe. And firſt it is to be obſerued, that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the children, doth not (as you do) apply one word of them to both, ſaying that they are ſanctified, but ſaith that they are holy; which is more then he had ſpoken before of the infidell party: for although our meate and drinke be ſanctified vnto vs, and that the vſe of them is holy to thoſe which are holy; yet the meates and drinkes themſelues are not holy. If therefore you were ſhort in the interpretation of ſanctified, you faile much more in giving the ſame expoſition vnto the holineſſe of the children. For if the holineſſe here ſpoken of be not in the children when they are begotten, and borne of the parents, but come vnto them afterward by baptiſme and faith: there groweth no ſufficient comfort vnto the faithfull party to continue in marriage with the infidell, conſidering that occaſion of holineſſe might come otherwiſe then by marriage. For that which is able to vphold the faithfull in comfort and ſtrength to abide in marriage with the Infidell, is the knowledge that the children begotten in that marriage are in the covenant, and are the children of Gods favour and grace, waſhed in Chriſts blood, and ſanctified by his ſpirit. And
Gal. 2. 15. if you will know what this holineſſe of children new borne is: the Apoſtle telleth you that it is (through the covenant) to be a Iew by nature, or birth. And if you will yet further vnderſtand what this holineſſe of children is, the Apoſtle in the ſame place telleth you, that it is, not to be ſinners by nature, as thoſe which are borne of the heathen, foraſmuch as their ſinnes who are in the Covenant, are by Chriſt not reckoned vnto them. And this doctrine of the holineſſe of the children which are borne of the faithfull, if you could not attaine vnto: it is ſo ſenſibly ſet forth vnto you, that vnleſſe, together with the knowledge of the truth you were alſo bereaved of your common ſenſe, you cannot bee
Rom. 11. 26 ignorant of it. For how can you but vnderſtand, that if the root be holy, the branch is holy, and if the firſt fruits be holy, the whole crop is holy. All which priviledges of children new borne, ſometimes heing proper to the Iewes, are now our priviledges as well as theirs: ſithence we are growne
Eph. 2. 15. into one body with them, and (being Burgeſſes of the ſame heavenly Cittie that they are) muſt needs haue the ſame infranchiſement and prerogatiues that they haue. Not that every one which is borne vnder the covenant is holy, but that they are ſo to be taken of the Church vntill the contrary do manifeſtly appeare: Nor yet that thoſe which are indeed holy, need not the vſe of the Sacrament of Baptiſme (as a ſeale of their holineſſe, but not as the cauſe thereof) both which cautions needed not to haue been ſpoken of, but that we haue to doe with thoſe which either muſt quarrell and wrangle, or elſe be ſilent and hold their peace. The ſame place in effect of Auguſtine hath been anſwered vpon Iohn 6. 53. The ſumme of which anſwer is, that as Auguſtine leaueth no place in the kingdom of heaven for infants without baptiſme: ſo doth he not ſuffer them to enter thither without the Supper of the Lord; and if his authority binde not in the one, there is no cauſe why it ſhould binde in the other. And if they ſay (as they doe of Iohn 6. 53.) that he meant by the Sacrament of the Supper, the thing ſignified by the Sacrament: we may as well ſay, that when he affirmeth that the children of the faithful cannot be ſaued without baptiſme, his meaning is, that they cannot be ſaued without that which is ſignified by baptiſme, which is Chriſt. But whatſoeuer his iudgement is of faithfull mens childrens eſtate before baptiſme, in the interpretation of this place of the Apoſtle, he is for vs, manifeſtly againſt you: for where the Apoſtle affirmeth, that the children borne of their faithfull parents are holy, Auguſtine interpreting the word holy, ſaith that they be Chriſtians; ſo that (they being before baptiſme
Aug. lib. 1. de Ser. dom. in mont. Chriſtians by Auguſtines iudgement) they cannot be debarred of Chriſt if they be taken away before they can conueniently come to baptiſme. When the place of Ierom is ſhewed, it ſhall be anſwered: in the meane ſeaſon there appeareth no ſuch place whereupon this cauſe may be concluded.

Verſe. 19 Circumciſion is nothing, and prepuce is nothing: but the obſeruation of the commandements of God.

RHEM. 12. [18. But the obſeruation.] Neither to he Iew nor Gentile, bond or free, married nor ſingle, nor the faith it ſelfe which is proper to Chriſtian men, will ſerue to ſaluation, without good works and keeping the commandements, S. Hierome. adu. Iouin. lib. 1. c. 16.

CART VV. 12. [19. But the obſeruation.] We willingly grant, that no man commeth to ſaluation but by good workes, as by the way that God hath appointed to enter into his kingdom, but not as the cauſe, or any part of the cauſe.

Verſe. 25 And as concerning virgins, a commandement of our Lord I haue not: but I counſel I giue, as hauing obtained mercie of our Lord to be faithfull.

The diffrence of counſels and precepts. RHEM. 13. [25. Counſell I giue.] A counſell is one thing, a commandement is another. To do that which is counſelled, is not neceſſarie, becauſe one may be ſaued notwithſtanding, but he that will doe that which hee is counſelled vnto, ſhall haue a higher degree of glory. Hee that fulfilleth not a commandement, except hee doe penance, cannot eſcape puniſhment. Auguſt. lib. de virg. cap. 13. & 14.

CART VV. 13. [25. Counſell I giue.] What the counſell of God weigheth with him to whom that counſell belongeth, looke before vpon verſ. 12. Albeit the Greeke word importeth more then a counſell: for it ſignifieth a graue and ſound ſentence and iudgement: and the Apoſtle himſelfe following this sentence, commandeth other to follow his example, whose cases shall bee in this behalfe like his. And this is amongst other things which áre graue, honest, amiable, and of good report. Phil. 4. 8.

And if Augustines words be understood of a counsell without limitation of the person to whom, time, and other circumstances which giue direction to whom it belongeth: then the distinction of counsell and commandement standeth well. Touching the virgins higher degree in heaven, the reader may understand Augustines iudgement, that the gift of continencie is giuen, not that they should shine clearer in heaven, but that without it they cannot come to heaven. Which also proueth, that to them it is a counsell of the same weight with a commandement, without obedience whereunto they cannot enter into heaven. For further answer about these degrees, look before upon Math. 13. 8.

Verse. 28 But if thou take a wife, thou hast not sinned. And if a virgin marrie, she hath not sinned, neuertheless tribulation of the flesh shall such haue, but I spare you.

RHEM. 14. [28. If a virgin marry.] He speaketh not of that virgin which had dedicated herselfe to God, (for if any such marry, he shall be damned for breaking her first vow) but onely of yong maides vnmarried in the world. Hieron. aduer. Iouinian. lib. 1. cap. 7. Chrysostome Hom. 20. Theodoret, Photius, and the other Greeke Doctors vpon this place apud Occum. Epiph. haref. 61. A professed virgin may marry.

CARTVV. 14. [28. If a virgin marry.] The Apostles rule is generall of all virgines that they may marry: if there be any exception it should be shewed out of the Apostle. For as for that out of Timothy, touching the breaking of the first faith, besides that it is of widowes not of virgines, it shall appeare in that place that it serueth not for the Popes votaries in any sort. The exceptions drawn from men against a generall rule of God himselfe, can proue no restraint of the generality. Albeit it is untruly fathered of the Fathers that they condemne the marriage of vowed persons if they cannot containe. It is true that Ierom is of this iudgement which is here alledged in this place, but in another place he iudgeth otherwise, For speaking of vowed virgins, he saith, To whom it must be said plainly, that either they marry if they cannot containe, or that they containe if they will not marry. Augustine also is flat against them: for speaking of vowed persons which repent their profession, hee saith, These therefore which will marry, and marry not therefore, because they cannot doe it without punishment, are those which should better marry then burne. And Cyprian expressely applieth the place of the Apostle it is better to marry then to burne, vnto the virgins that haue vowed virginity. Chrysostom is of the same iudgement with Augustine: for speaking the same of the widow which hath promised continence, it is much more to bee understood of virgins. Epiphanius hath the like sentence vnto Chrysostom, saying that he addeth further (speaking of those that cannot containe) it is better to haue but one sinne then to haue moe, it is better that when a man hath fallen from his course openly to take himselfe a wife according to the law. And after repentance done for changing the purpose of virginity and confession of the fault in the Church, he will haue the party to haue the remedy against the darts of concupiscence wherewith it hath been wounded before. And although the Greek Scholiast say that the consecrate virgin is not understood, when the Apostle affirmeth that the virgin sinneth not if shee marry, yet his iudgement is the same with the other: namely, to place the sin in that she vowed that which she performed not; and not in that she being inflamed with lusts, doth take the remedy of marriage against that fire of concupiscence. Hieron. ad Demetriad. Cypr. ad Pomponium Epist. 62.

RHEM. 15. [28. Tribulation of the flesh.] They are marvelously deceiued (saith S. Augustine lib. de virg. c. 13.) that thinke the Apostle counselleth virginitie rather then marriage onely for that marriage hath many miseries and molestations ioyned vnto it which by virginitie shall be auoided and not in respect of the greater reward, for the Apost. prouident counselling to virginity is for the next life, & he alleageth these troubles of marriage in that sense specially as they be a hinderance from the service of God here, & therefore an impediment to vs towards the next life, & the more ample ioyes thereof. Virginitie counselled as more meritorious.

CARTVV. 16. [28. Tribulation of the flesh.] Both marriage and the sole life are the gifts of God, which as they are vsed well or evill, so haue they reward of him: wherefore as we doubt not but there are some godly virgins which bestow themselues more vertuously, and gain more glory to God, then some godly married: so there are some godly married which goe before some godly virgins in the kingdom of heaven, not onely by reason of a godly education of such as are within their house, and franke hospitality to those that are without: but also in that having moe tribulations then virgins, and that by the calling wherein God hath placed them, they patiently goe under them and ouercome them. And it is not denyed of us but that the estate of virginity is helpfull even to the next life; yet in it selfe the one estate is not of any more worthinesse in the sight of God then the other.

Verse. 29 This therefore I say brethren, the time is short, it remaineth that they also which haue wiues, be as though they had not.

RHEM. 16. [29. As though they had not.] He exhorteth that such as haue wiues, should not wholy bestow themselues in the vaine transitorie pleasure and voluptuousnesse of the flesh, but liue in such moderation, that their mariage hinder them as little as may be from spirituall cogitations. Which is best fulfilled of them that by mutuall consent do whole conteine whether they haue had children or none, contemning carnall issue for the ioyes of heauen. And these mariages be more blessed then any other, saith S. Augustine de Ser. Do. in monte. lib. 1. c. 14. The continencie of married folk. Their perpetuall continency best.

CARTVV. 16 [29 As though they had not.] Marriage ought so to be vsed, not onely that it should hinder as little as may be from spirituall cogitations, but that it should not hinder a whit, as the words of the Apostle do declare, which willeth that they should vse it, that it should no more hinder then if they were not maried, so vse it that they abuse it not: Yea it is evident that it is also a furtherance vnto the Kingdom of heaven to such as vse it accordingly. And if perpetuall continency of married persons bee commended and preferred in this place: it followeth also that the Apostle commendeth the stoicall senceleseneſſe and want of feeling, either of Gods benefites by ioy, or of his scourges by sorrow. For as married persons must be as if they were not married, so must those that weep as if they wept not, and those that ioy be as those that ioyed not. And if that the meaning of the Apostle in these latter be, that men should hold a measure and moderation in weeping and ioying; his meaning also in the former must needs be, that they should use their mutuall society and company in mariage in sobriety. And as this sentence maketh nothing to commend the perpetuall continency of married persons; so, if there were any such sense in it: it should be directly contrary to the precepts which the Apostle hath given before in this chapter. For answer to Augustine look before upon verse 6.

Verse. 32 But I would haue you to be without carefulnes. He that is without a wife, is carefull for the things that pertaine to our Lord, how he may please God.

Virginity preferred, and why

Why continency is required in the Clergy.

RHE. 17, [32. Carefull for the things of our Lord] The Protestants might here learne if they list, first that virginitie is not only preferred before marriage, for that it is a more quiet state of life in this world, but for that it is more conuenient for the seruice of God. Secondly, that virginity hath a gratefull purity and sanctity both of body and soule, which marriage hath not. Thirdly, they may learne the cause why the Church of God requireth chastitie in the clergie, and forbiddeth not onely fornication, bur all carnall copulation euen in lawfull wedlocke: Which is not only to the end that Gods Priests be not diuided from him by the cloggs of marriage, but also that they be clean and pure from the fleshly acts of copulation.

CARTVV. 17. [32 Carefull for the things of our Lord.] The Protestants learne heere that a Virgins estate hath fewer occasions, especially in the time of persecution, to withdraw from the worship and service of God then the married haue, and that the Virgins may with more ease, and lesse danger, serue God, then can the married persons. But we are not taught, but that the person called by God to marriage may haue grace so to ouercome all those lets, and so to beare the persecutions as all of them shall turne (through grace) to helpes and furtherances to the Kingdom of God, and to a richer crown of glory in the same then the Virgins come unto; which because they never wrestled with such mighty temptations, cannot weare the like crown of victory that they do. And as for your second collection, that there is a purenes or holines of spirit in Virgins grateful to God which is not in married persons, it is falsely gathered. For this is first no fruite of virginity, but the virginity it selfe, without the which neither he nor she is a virgin to God, howsoeuer they go for virgins with men. Secondly, the lawfull and sober use of marriage being a gift of God as well as virginity, there can be no pollution in it: Whereupon the Writer to the Hebrewes affirmeth, that Mariage is honourable, and the bed or company one with another undefiled. And the Apostle declareth, that in the sober and lawfull use of marriage every one keepeth his vessell, that is to say both body and soule in sanctification and honour. Whereupon it is evident, that your third collection of Priests necessary continencie, which you would haue us learne, is not worth the learning, as that which the Apostle teacheth not, but the deuice of your idle braines: For further answer whereunto look before upon Math. 8.14.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 AND concerning those things that are sacrificed to Idols, we know that we all haue knowledge, ‡ Knowledge puffeth vp: but charitie edifieth.

No meates vncleane.

Giving of scandall reprehended.

RHE. 1 [1. We all haue knowledge] The spiritual & perfectly instructed Christians knew no meats now to be vncleane, neither for signification, as in the Law of Moyses: nor alwayes by nature and creation, as the Manichees thought, nor by any other pollution, as in that they were offered to Idols: and therefore they did eate boldly of such meates as were sacrificed contemning and condemning their Idols as mere nothing, and the worship of them as the honour of things imaginarie, which their fact, for their want of discretion and charitie, and for the vse of that their libertie to the offence and scandall of the weak, the Apostle doth here reprehend.

CARTVV. 1. [1 We all haue knowledge.] S.

Verse. 7 But there is not knowledge in all. For ‡ some vntil this present with a conscience of the Idol, eate as a thing sacrificed to Idols: & their conscience being weake, is polluted.

The heretickes ridiculously apply S. Paules words against the Churches fasts and abstinence.

RHEM. 2. [7. Some with a conscience.] The perfecter mens fault was, that they gaue offence by their eating, to the weaker Christians, who seeing them whom they reputed wise and learned, to eate the meates offered to Idols, conceived that there was some vertue and sanctification in those meates, from the Idoll to which they were offered, and thought that such things were or might bee eaten with the same conscience and deuotion as before their conuersion.

Therefore the case standing thus, and the Apostles discourse of eating or not eating meates being so as is declared (a thing so euident that it admitteth no other interpretation) if the Protestant apply any of this admonition against our fastes in the Catholike Church, they be too too rediculous.

CARTVV 2. [7 Some with conscience.] They themselues are too ridiculous, which against a generall rule that maketh the use of all meates lawfull to all, and at all times, can bring no instance but that is in question, whereof look before vpon Math. 15. 9. and Rom. 14. 2.

Verse. 10 For if a man see him that hath knowledge, sit at table ‡ in the Idols temple: shall not his conscience, being weake, be edifed, to eate things sacrificed to Idols;

RHEM. 3. [10. In the Idols temple.] Like as now, some Catholikes haue said, they know that Calvins communion it but as other bread and wine. But the ignorant seing such go to the Communion, thinke that it is a good act of Religion. Yea whatsoeuer they pretend, it must needs seeme an honour to Calvins Communion, when they are seen in the Idols temple solemnly sitting or communicating at the abominable table. Going to the communion what a sinne in Catholisks

CARTVV. 3. MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 5 HAue we not power to lead about ‖ a woman a sister, as also the rest of the Apostles, & our Lords brethren, and ‡ Cephas?

RHEM. 1. [5. Cephas:] He nameth Cephas (that is Peter) to proue his purpose by the example of the chiefe and Prince of the Apostles. S. Ambr. S. Chrys. Oecum vpon this place.

CRATVV. 2. [5 Cephas.] It is confessed that Peter is called of ancient Writers the first or fore-man of the Apostles? but it is denied that he had dominion or authority over them more then they over him, which none of these testimonies make against.

ersc. 13 Know you not * that they which worke in the holy place, eate the things that are of the holy place: and they that serue the altar, participate with the altar; τῶ θυσιαςηρίω

RHEM. 2 [13. The altar] The English Bible (1562) here & in the next chapter, saith thrise, for altar temple: most falsely and heretically, against holy alters, which about the time of that translation were digged downe in England.

CARTVV. 2. [13 The Altar,] If any English Bible haue translated Temple for Altar, yet is your sentence of heresie against it too bloody and Dragonlike: And it is but your blockishnesse to esteeme that it was in hatred and despite of Altars so translated, seeing that it had both before and after not balked the name of Altars, seeing also we (reteyning Churches or places for the holy Assemblies to meete in) do thinke that the use of Temples is vanished with Altars: there was no vantage sought by this translation in favour of any thing which we hold against you. Howbeit the Apostle in opposing the ministerie of the Gospell to the service at the Altar and in the Temple, digged up the very foundations both of the one and of the other, or ever England cast down so much as a stone of the Altars.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 Am I not free? Am I not an Apostle? Haue I not seene Christ Iesus our Lord? Are not you ‖ my worke in our Lord?

RHEM. 3. RHEM. 4. [5. A woman a sister.] The heretickes peruersely (as they do all other places for the advantage of their Sect) expound this of the Apostles wiues, & for woman, translate, wife, all bels sounding wedding to them. Where the Apostle meaneth plainly the deuout women that after the manner of Iewrie *did serue the preacher of necessaries, of which sort many followed Christ, and sustained him and his of their substance. So doth S. Chrysostome, Theodorete, and all the Greeke (Oecum. in collect. super. hunc lo. take it. So doth S. Augustine De op. Monach. c. 4. and S. Hierome lib. 1. *adu. CARTVV. 4. [5 A woman, a sister.] This exposition of interpreting the word which the Apostle useth, a woman and not a wife, is directly against the words and meaning of the Text: For albeit that the word signifieth sometime a woman, yet it being placed here after the word sister, it cannot but signifie a wife: Vnlesse we will imagine that the Holy Ghost, which teacheth others to speake with grace, spake otherwise himselfe. For to say that she is a woman, after he had said shee was a sister, were an unfit and unproper speach, which the Rhemists well understanding, haue contrary to all the Greek copies, to the Syrian Paraphrast, and to their own vulgar (whom they professe to follow to a haire breadth, and do it in many places very childiſhly) changed the order of the words: and for that their vulgar hath a ſiſter a woman, they ſay a woman a ſiſter, wherein by their treacherous dealing they cover part of this deformity, tranſlating the word of the Apoſtle to be a woman, yet doe they not hide all the ſhame of it; conſidering that woman here remaineth idle, and hath no more ſignification then if the Apoſtle had onely ſaid Siſter: whereas in the interpretation and ſenſe that we follow, both the words haue an important and weighty ſignification: for if hee had ſaid ſiſter onely, and not ioyned wife withall, there would haue beene matter for the adverſary to haue cavilled with the Apoſtles, as walking ſuſpitiouſly, whilſt every one of them were accompanied with a woman which was not their wife: And if he had ſaid a wife and not a ſiſter, that is to ſay of the ſame profeſſion of the Goſpell, it had alſo beene a great blemiſh in their Miniſtery, which might haue cauſed that proverbe to be caſt in their teeth, Phyſitian heale thy ſelfe. Againe, the word of leading about doth argue plainely a husband-like authority, which is true in the wife, and cannot be applyed to a ſtranger which goeth of her own will. Now that the Ieſuites ſenſe is directly againſt the diſcourſe and diſputation of the Apoſtle it is evident: for (to proue that the faithfull having power to eate of meates ought notwithſtading for the good of others to abſtaine from eating) hee bringeth in himſelfe, which having power to charge them (in as much as he took charge of them) and to eate of their coſt, for as much as they were ſpiritually fed by his labour, did not uſe that power and liberty of his: Wherefore, to make the argument of the Apoſtle ſutable to his diſcourſe, it muſt follow that by this word woman, ought to be underſtood a wife, which ſhould haue beene of further charge unto the Church then himſelfe alone, and not a woman, that bearing both his and her own charges ſhould not haue beene burdenſome to the Church a whit. And where they ſay that the circumſtance ſerveth for them, for that there was no cauſe why Paul being ſingle ſhould ſpeake of charging the Church with a wife, they ſpeake contrary to their own experience and practiſe, who having nothing ſo fit to deceiue the ſimple people with as their pretence, that they are not burdenſome to the Church with wife and children, as the Proteſtants be, who notwithſtanding weigh not the twentieth part ſo heavy upon the Church and Common-wealth, as their Concubines and Baſtards (as it were unſatiable horſe-leaches) did: Yet we ſuppoſe that they would not haue men conclude of this ſpeech of theirs that they therefore haue wiues and children. Wherefore it agreeth well with the purpoſe of the Apoſtle, to alledge his ſingle life, which (no doubt) he therefore embraced, to the end that he might make the Preaching of the Goſpell of leſſe charge. The compariſon of theſe women heere with thoſe which followed our Saviour Chriſt is anſwered upon Luk.8.3. Whereunto adde further, that the company of many women following our Saviour Chriſt and his Diſciples, was not ſubiect to the like ſuſpicion, as when one woman followed one Apoſtle. Neither were they in ſuch danger of ſuſpicion when they followed Chriſt in their own Country where they might be commonly known, as when they followed the Apoſtles into all Nations and Countries of the world, whether the knowledge of their chaſte behaviour and converſation could not reach. This bell therefore of the Apoſtles owne ringing can haue no other ſound in this place then of wedding, in their eares that know what mettall of words and circumſtances it is made of: And it is as it were the ſoule-bell of your Prieſtly and un-virginly virginity. Neither can theſe authorities heere quoted prevaile againſt ſo apparant and manifeſt, both words and circumſtance. And (beſide that it is certaine, by Aug. words that there were divers in his time & before, that expounded the word as we do) it is very like that one being deceived, the reſt followed him in the ſame miſconſtruing of the place. Laſt of all, we haue Ignatius, Clemens Alexandrinus, Paphnutius and Athanaſius, which affirme that the Apoſtles had the uſe of matrimony in company with their wiues after they were called to the Apoſtleſhip: amd therefore by their iudgement this word here is to be expouuded wiues, and not women.

RHEM.5. [7, Who playeth the ſouldier.] He proueth by the Scripture and naturall reaſons that Preachers and Paſtors may chalenge their finding of their flocke, though himſelfe for cauſes had not, nor intended not to vſe his right and libertie therein.

RHEM.6. [16 If I Evangelize.] If I ſhould preach either of compulſion and ſeruile feare, or meere neceſſitie, not hauing otherwiſe to liue and ſuſtaine my ſelfe in this world, I could not looke for reward in heauen, but now doing it, not onely as enioynedmee, but alſo as of loue and charitie, and freely without putting any man to coſt, and that voluntarily and of very deſire to ſaue my hearers, I ſhall haue my reward of God, yea and a reward of Supererogation, which is giuen to them that of aboundant charity do more in the ſeruice of God then they be commmanded, as S. Auguſtine. expoundeth it. De op. Mon. c.5.

CARTVV.6. [16. If I Evangelize.] The Scripture ſaith he ſhall haue a reward that acquiteth himſelfe worthily in his miniſtery; but that he ſhall haue a reward of ſupererrogation is a Popiſh phantaſie without a tittle of warrant out of the word. For Paul ſpeaketh of nothing which hee did, which Peter commandeth not to be done of all the Elders of the Church, namely, that they ſhould feed willingly, and not for filthy lucre, which is when a man will feed no further then hee hath gaine for, howſoever the glory of God and edifying of the Church requireth otherwiſe. Wherefore the oppoſition is not of a worke of ſupererrogation to a worke that is due, but of a dutie that hath a reward, to a worke done ſervilely that hath none. This is manifeſt in that he confeſſeth, that hee ſhould abuſe his power if he should do otherwise. Say therefore (if you dare) that not to abuse power given unto one, is a worke of supererrogation, when as to abuse it cannot be but sinne and want of dutie. And therefore the Apostle (otherwhere) shewing that it was lawfull and in his power, either to eate or not to eate, yet noteth him of murder which eateth with offence of one man, much more of the Church of God. Againe, this surmised work of supererrogation in the Apostle, is plainly confuted by the scope of the disputation, which is to shew, that as he had not used his power in his ministery to the hinderance of the Gospell, so they should not use their liberty to the offence of any weake brother: whereupon he also concludeth this discourse with the exhortation unto all the Church of following him. Last of all, when as they haue expounded the Greek word for wages, and that which a man hath earned at Gods hand, as a hired servant having done his taske doth earne his hire: they by this worke of supererrogation haue made men to deserue more then the Lord can giue contentment and payment for. For when there is nothing promised in the Scripture to well-doing but a reward, or (as they would haue it) a hire, it being one by their saying, that which wee are hired for, or haue covenanted to performe, it must needs follow, that if we doe that which we are not hired for, nor haue covenanted to do, that we are more righteous then God, as those which haue their hands nimbler to doe good then God hath his hands open to requite our good. Augustine is falsified shamefully, which hath nothing of workes of supererrogation: he saith indeed that this was not commanded but permitted, which wee confesse to be true in generality, and before it be applied to particular circumstance of persons, time, and place, which is a cause that that which is generally free, is by that meanes commanded. But that he meant no worke of supererrogation is manifest, for that in chapter 10. he alledgeth the words of the Apostle, that he did it because he would not abuse his power in the Gospell. And (having in two chapters discoursed that this was for the weakes sake with whom those that are strong ought to beare, and haue not the freedom whether they will beare with them yea or no) hee sheweth in the 12, chapter, that Paul tooke of other Churches wherewith he maintained himselfe in the teaching of the Church of Corinth: Whereupon it is manifest, that taking his maintenance of other Churches, if he had also taken it of the Church of Corinth, for the taking of it alone, he should not haue been free from the guilt of filthy lucre.

Verse. 23 And I doe all things for the Gospell, that I may bee made partaker thereof.

RHEM.7.[23. That I may be partaker.] A singular place to conuince the Protestants, that will not haue men worke well in respect of reward, at Gods hand, the Apostle confessing expressly, that all this that he doth either of duety or Supererogation aboue duety (as to preach of free-cost, and to worke with his own hands to get his own meate and his fellowes: and to abstaine from many lawfull things) all is, the rather to attaine the reward of heauen.

Doing well in respect of reward.

CARTVV.7.[23. That I may be partaker.] Yow slander vs, for we deny not but that men may do good works in regard of obteining life euerlasting but we affirme the chiefe respect of of well doing ought to be the loue of God and of his glorie, that men seing our good works should glorifie our father which is in heauen. Howbeit there is good cause that wee should patiently beare your slander which feare not to bely the holy Apostle, whilest you seeme to surmise of him that hee did all to attaine reward in heauen: considering that the Apostle would haue been contented to haue been damned for the saluation of the Iewes. And therefore euen here that which he did to bee partaker of the Gospell he did it rather regarding the glory of God in the good increase of the Church then that he himselfe might be saued. As for that you say that the Apostle did all the rather to obtaine reward. By the word rather you implie that he had some other regard then to the reward: which is that which we teach and you pretending to confute dare not do it in such plain words as the confutation thereof doeth aske.

Verse. 24 Know you not that they that runne in the race, all run indeed, but one receiueth the price. So runne that you may obtein.

RHEM.8.[24. So runne] If such as runne for a price, to make themselues more swift, and to winne the game: abstaine from many meates and pleasures: what should wee doe or suffer to win the crown of glory, purposed and promised to none but such as runne trauell, and endeuour for it.

Running for the game.

CARTVV.8.[24. So runne.]§.

Verse. 27 But I chastise my body, and bring it into seruitude, lest perhaps when I haue preached to others, my selfe become reprobate.

RHEM.9.[27. I chastise.] The goale of euerlasting glorie is not promised nor set foorth for onely faith-men, for such runne at randon: but it is the price of them that chastise and subdue their bodies and fleshly desires by fasting, watching, voluntarie, povertie and other afflictions. Lord, how far is the carnall doctrine of the Sectaries and the manners of these dayes from the Apostles spirit, Wherein euen we that be Catholikes, though we doe not condemne with the Protestants these voluntary afflictions as superfluous (much lesse as superstitious or iniurious to Christs death,) but much commend them, yet we use nothing the zeale and diligence of our first Christian aunceſtors herein, and therefore are like to be more subiect to Gods temporall chastisements, at the least in the next life then they were.

Penance meritorious.

CARTVV.9.[27. I chastise.] We teach and recommend fasting and watching so it be in prayer; but voluntarie povertie and whippings (which may be rather called wilfull then voluntarie) we with the Apostle condemne, alwayes as superstitious, and then as blasphemous vnto the death of Christ when satisfaction for sinne is sought thereby. As for the Apostle he proceedeth here in the similitude of the wrestlers which contended to strike those with whom they were collered upon the face and with the stroke to make a bloudy wound declaring that as they did endeuour the mastering ring of the mates with whom they wreſtled by ſtrokes of the body: ſo he went about in wreſtling to maſter the body of ſin that was within him by beating and wounding it through abſtinence from thoſe things which it naturally deſired. And if they will conclude of this word that Paul ſcourged himſelfe; they may as well conclude that the iniuſt Iudge feared, leaſt the poore widdow that ſought her right at his hand, would haue taken a whip and ſcourged him, if he had not done her right; conſidering that the ſame word is uſed there as well as heere. And if Paul had ſcourged himſelfe in an opinion of Gods ſervice, he would never haue omitted that affliction in that long Catalogue which he maketh of his troubles, where alſo he maketh expreſſe mention of the number of times wherein he was ſcourged by the Iewes. Your rod therefore wherewith you beate your ſelues is of your own making, and not of Paul's.

RHEM. 10. [27. Leaſt perhaps.] Here may we lambs tremble (ſaith a holy father) when the ramme, the guide of the flocke, muſt ſo labour and puniſh himſelfe (beſides all his other miſeries adioyned to the preaching of the Goſpell) leaſt perhaps hee miſſe the marke. A man might thinke S. Paul ſhould bee as ſure and as confident of Gods grace and ſaluation as wee poore wretched caitiues: but the Hererickes vnhappy ſecuritie, preſumption, and faithleſſe perſuaſion of their ſaluation is not fides Apoſtolorum, but fides dæmoniorum, not the faith of the Apoſtles, but the faith of the Diuels.

S. Paul had not the Proteſtants ſecurity of ſalvation.

CARTVV. 10. [27 Leſt perhaps.] The Apoſtle never doubted of his ſalvation, as you pretend: for as he proteſted of his aſſurance before, ſo doth he (ready to lay down his life) confidently affirme that there remained for him a crown of glory. And to help forward this errour of yours, you haue put in perhaps, which is not in the Greeke, nor ought to be put in neither by yours, nor yet by our doctrine: for it is without perhaps, that he which mortifieth not the old man and body of ſinne, is reprobate, conſidering that he is undoutedly a reprobate which never mortifieth it. And therefore as it hindered not the Apoſtles aſſurance that both he and all that was in the ſhip with him ſhould come ſafe to land, becauſe hee ſaid that they could not bee ſaved vnleſſe the lawfull and ordinary meanes were uſed of ſaving them: ſo it hindereth not the confident aſſurance of his everlaſting ſalvation, that hee ſaith hee ſhould bee a caſt-away if he ſhould not chaſtiſe his body and bring it into ſervitude of the ſpirit. For as the Lord giveth aſſurance vnto his children of their ſaluation: ſo hee ordaineth that this aſſurance ſhould bee continued and confirmed unto them by good workes. And we beleeue not ſo much with Auguſtine as with the holy Apoſtle, that we ought to worke our owne ſalvation with trembling and feare. But that we ſhould tremble in our heart, doubting of Gods favour towards us, is indeed the faith not of the Apoſtles but of the Diuels, which notwithſtanding they beleeue, yet (as the Scripture ſaith) do they tremble.

Verſe. 12 THerefore he that thinketh himſelfe to ſtand, let him take heede ‡ leſt he fall.

RHEM. 1. [12. Leſt he fall.] It is profitable to all, or in a manner to all, for to keepe them in humility not to know what they ſhall be: ſaith S. Auguſtine. Which maketh againſt the vaine ſecurity of the Proteſtants.

CARTVV. 1. [12. Leſt he fall.] The Apoſtle doth not ſay, he that ſtandeth, let him take heed that he fall not, but he that ſeemeth to ſtand, noting their vaine confidence in the outward ſervice of God, without regard unto the truth and power thereof. Albeit if he had ſo ſaid, yet hath it beene ſhewed, that carefull and wary walking againſt damnation, hindereth not our aſſurance of ſalvation: your large quotation of Auguſtine within the circuit of ten great volumes, argueth that this teſtimony is too ſtreight to fit the foot of your opinion. And although in many things it is profitable that wee ſhou'd not know what we ſhould be, thereby to keepe us in humility, yet it followeth not that it is profitable that wee ſhould not know whether we ſhould be ſaved or no.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 2. [3. The ſame.] The red ſea and the cloud, a figure of our Baptiſme: the Manna from heauen and water miraculouſly drawn out of the rocke, a figure of the holy Sacrament of Chriſts body and bloud: our Sacraments containing the things and graces in truth, which theirs onely ſignified. And it is an impudent forgerie of the Caluiniſts to write vpon this place, that the Iewes receiued no leſſe the truth and ſubſtance of Chriſt, and his benefits in their figures or Sacraments, then we do in ours; and that they and we all eat and drinke of the ſelfe ſame meate and drink: the Apoſtle ſaying onely that they among themſelues did all feed of one bread, and drink of one rock: which was a figure of Chriſt, therein eſpecially, that out of Chriſts ſide pearced vpon the Croſſe, guſhed out bloud and water for the matter of our Sacraments.

The old figures of our Sacraments. VVe receiue greater benefites of our Sacraments then the Iewes did by theirs.

CARTVV. 2. [3. The ſame.] Braſſe is too ſoft to ſet forth the hardneſſe of your forehead which charge vs with impudencie in that wherein your ſelues are out of all meaſure impudent, for if the fathers vnder the Law communicated not to the grace and trueth which was ſignified by their ſignes, then is the Apoſt. purpoſe of beating down the vaine confidence of the Corinthes which they had in the vſe and exerciſe of the ſacraments to no purpoſe, for if the Corinthes communicating to the truth of the ſacraments the fathers communicated vnto the bare ſigne: then they might haue excepted againſt the Apoſtle that there was no cauſe that they ſhould feare that the iudgement would break forth vpon them as it did upon the Iſraelites, for as much as their Sacraments offered grace, which the fathers fathers sacraments did not and therefore that they had not such a buckler against the anger of God as they haue. This is also euident by the words of the Apostle, first for that hee saith that they were baptized into Moses, who representing unto them Christ the Mediator, it is as much in effect as if they were baptized into Christ, that is to be one with him, even as the truth of our Baptisme is noted by our baptising into him. Thirdly, it is said as expressly that they drank of Christ, and consequently that they did eate of him, as it is said of us in the Supper of the Lord, that we communicate into the body and bloud of Christ. Fourthly, what meaneth the Apostle to passe in silence the ordinary Sacrament of Circumcision, and of the Passeover, and to take those of Baptisme in the red sea, &c. and of Manna, &c. unlesse his purpose had been to match the Iewes with us: Whereunto it commeth that having the same promises of life that we haue, there is no cause but that they should haue the same substance of the seales that we haue. And seeing the Apostle affirmeth that the true Iew is circumcised in heart (which is the truth of the outward circumcision of the fore-skin) it is evident that together with the signe they received also the truth, and the thing signified: Whereupon it commeth that the names of their Sacraments are communicated with us, which haue in Baptisme put of the old man, Augustine also affirmeth, that whosoever in the Manna understood Christ, they did eate the same spirituall meat that that we do: And yet more directly against you, asking what was the same spirituall meate, he answereth, what but the same we eate: which he hath also expressly in another place. And further, that they in eating Man, they eate both corporall and spirituall, spirituall the same that we, but another corporall then we. The same also he saith of the drink. And againe, that some that beleeved not eate of Man and died everlastingly, which Moses, Aaron and Phinees did not, why? because they understood the visible meat spiritually. The same is the iudgement of Ambrose who affirmeth that in their baptisme their evils were not imputed unto them, that they were thereby prepared to receiue the Law: Wherefore we dare be bold to conclude that truth, which you by your note would lecringly steale away from your Reader: That for so much as the Fathers under the Law eate of the same Christ in Manna that we do in the Sacrament of the Supper, and yet did not, nor could not eate him carnally, who was not then borne, nor had flesh: We also in our Sacrament can haue no such fleshly communication with Christ as you haue forged.

RHEM. 3. [15. As to wise men.] To cause them to leaue the sacrifices and meates or drinks offered to Idols he putteth them in mind of the onely true Sacrifice and meate and drink of Christs body & blood: of which and the sacrifice of Idols also, they might not be in any case partakers. Vsing this terme, vt prudentibus loquor, in the same sense (as it is thought) as the fathers of the primitiue Church did giue a watch word of keeping secret of the Infidels and vnbaptized, the mystery of this diuine Sacrifice by these words. *Norunt fideles, norunt qui initiati sunt. The Apostles and ancient Fathers speak coverily of the B. Sacrament.

CARTWV. 3. [15 As to wise men.] The Iesuites, the easilier to hold the world in ignorance of the truth, make the pure worship of God like unto that filthy service of Venus (whose misteries were concealed, and done in the darke) where the Apostles by writing laid open this, and all other the misteries of the Kingdom of God to all men; And will that we should be ready to maintaine our faith towards all that demand an accompt of the hope that is in us. Whereupon Iustine Martyr in his Apologie setteth forth unto the Heathen the whole manner and forme of the Christians worship, even of the holy Communion, in steed whereof the Papists haue their Masse, which they account the greatest secret in their Religon. And indeed (beside the horrible blasphemy) there are such apish and childish toyes in it, as it is not the least part of their wisedome to conceale it from all such as are not drunken with it, and dote not after it. In the places heere quoted there is no more to proue the secrecy for which they are alleaged, then in the Apostle heere, which is nothing at all: besides that in divers of them there is no step of any such words to be found. Augustine Psalm. 104. saith, That the Paynims see our good workes, but our Sacraments are hidden from them: which is the meaning of the ancient Fathers: but this maketh nothing to proue that the words of Consecration should both by whispering voyce, and strange language, be hidden from the faithfull. Contrariwise it is noted, as a mark of Heathenish Religion, that the mysteries therein were kept in silence & secrecy: their greatest trust of upholding their Religion, being laid upon the ground of the peoples ignorance: Even as your Church shameth not to teach, that Ignorance is the Mother of deuotion: so that in speaking to the people of your Church, you must not say with Paul, We speake not as to wise, but as to fooles Now you cannot say as in the elder Churches, The faithfull know, but the faithfull know not. And as the Scripture teacheth that in the Church all must be read decently, and treatably, & to all mens understanding: so the Emperour ordained that both to stir to repentance & to Gods glory, the Ministers should minister the oblation, Sacrament of baptisme and prayers, with a loud voice. And that in the Supper there is no such nature of a sacrifice (as they imagine) it is evident, for that immediately after the blessing and consecration, followeth the communication by eating and drinking: whereas the condition of a sacrifice is, that it should be first offered unto God, or ever it be distributed unto the sacrificers. Againe, it is never seene in sacrifice that the whole goeth to the use of them that sacrifice; whereas in the Supper the Communicants haue the whole. Last of all, in that he requireth wisedom to the understanding of this Mysterie, and not faith, it proveth that there is no such Transubstantiation, as you imagine, where a man had need to renounce all wisedom, and to haue more faith then will remoue a Mountaine.

The Apoſtls blęſed the chalice, and ſo conſecrated Calix cui benedicemus.

RHEM. 4. [16. VVhich we bleſſe.] That is to ſay, the Chalice of Conſecrat on which wee Apoſtles & Preſts by Chriſts commiſſion do conſecrate, by which ſpeech as well the Caluiniſts (that vſe no conſecration of the cuppe at all, blaſphemouſly calling it magicall murmuration, and peruerſly referring the benediction to thankeſgiuing to God) as alſo the Lutherans bee refuted, who affirme Chriſts body and blood to be made preſent by receiuing and in the receiuing onely. For the Apoſtle expreſly referreth the benediction to the chalice, and not to God, making the holy blood and the communicating thereof the effect of the benediction.

CARTVV. 4. [16 Which we bleſſe.] If to bleſſe the cup be not to giue thankes to God, much leſſe is it to change one creature into another, and leaſt of all to change the creature into the Creator, in neither of which ſenſes it ſhall ever be found in the Scripture: where it is often taken for thanke giving. Although we deny not, but as when the Table is bleſſed, there is not onely thankes given to God for that proviſion, but petition made that it may be nouriſhable to our bodies; ſo alſo our Saviour in conſecrating the elements, did not onely giue thankes to God, for that it had pleaſed him to giue his Sonne for the redemption of the world, but alſo requeſted that hee would bleſſe theſe creatures, and make them effectuall to thoſe ends and purpoſes whereunto they were ordained: which thing when we do in the Supper of the Lord, and further expound and open the vſe of the elements: you imprudently ſlander us in ſaying that we haue no conſecration, whereas in calling yours a magicall murmuration we do you no wrong: conſidering that by the vtterance of fiue words, you ſurmiſe the bread to be turned into the body of Chriſt viſible in heaven, and with lineaments, and heere vpon the Altar inviſibly and without lineaments; there incorruptible, and heere ſubiect to be mouſe-eaten. But of this whole matter look before, vpon Math. 26. & Mark. 8. 7. Vpon which forme of prayer it appeareth, that then onely it is a Sacrament, and fit to ſerue for a meane to feed our ſoules by, when it is receiued For we pray that it may be a Sacrament effectuall to feed our ſoules in taking of it: for as our daily meate, is not otherwiſe food and nouriſhment in this life but onely when it is taken, otherwiſe it is onely bread, fleſh, or beere: So the proviſion of the Lords Table, unleſſe after the conſecration it be receiued, it is bread and wine onely, and not Sacramentall bread and wine. And this is expreſly ſet forth heere of the Apoſtle, when as the cup of bleſſing, or bleſſed cup is defined to be the communication of the bloud of Chriſt. Wherefore before we receiue it there is no promiſe of the Lords bleſſing, unleſſe you will haue the thing defined or deſcribed in time to go before the definition or deſcription thereof.

Our vniting to Chriſt by the B. Sacrament.

RHEM. 5. [16. The participation of the body.] The holy Sacrament and Sacrifice of Chriſts body and bloud being receiued of vs, ioyneth vs in ſoule and body and engraffeth vs into Chriſt himſelfe, making vs partakers and as a peece of his body and bloud. For not by loue or ſpirit onely (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) but in very deed we are vnited in his fleſh, made one body with him, members of his fleſh and bones. Chryſ. hom. 45. in Io. ſub finem. And S. Cyrill, Such is the force of myſticall benediction that it maketh Chriſt corporally by communicating of his fleſh to dwell in vs. Cyril, lib. 10. in Io. c 13.

Verſe. 17. For being many we are | one bread, one body, all that participate of one bread.

Our vnion among our ſelues by the B. Sacrament

RHEM. 6 [17. One bread and body.] As wee bee firſt made one with Chriſt by eating his body & drinking his bloud, ſo ſecondly are we conioyned by this one bread which is his body, & cup which is his bloud, in the perfect vnion and fellowſhip of all Catholike men, in one Church which is his body myſticall. Which name of body myſtical is ſpecially attributed & appropriated to this one common wealth and Societie of faithfull men, by reaſon that all the true perſons and true members of the ſame, bee marueloufly knit together by Chriſts own one body, and by the ſelfeſame blood in this diuine Sacrament. See S. Auguſt. lib. 21. cap. 25. de ciuit. Dei. Hilar. lib. 8. de Trin. circa med.

CRATVV 5. 6. [16. The participation, &c.] and [17. One bread and one body.] If the meaning of this they ſay touching our vnion with Chriſt and his Church in one body, were as ſincere as the words are true, there is nothing in theſe two notes but wee can willingly yeeld vnto. Howbeit they ought to vnderſtand that this union of us with Chriſt is not begun in the participation of Chriſt in the Supper, but being begun by faith which is wrought by the miniſtery of the word, is ſtrengthened in this Sacrament wherewith alſo it is ſealed, as it is by baptiſme. Beſide that, you (that conclude that the bread is turned into Chriſts body, becauſe the bread is called his body) muſt needs alſo conclude, that the Church alſo is turned into that bread which you ſay is the body of Chriſt, becauſe it is ſaid, that the Church is one bread and one body. But here (if the God of this world had not vtterly blinded your eyes that they ſhould not behold the moſt cleare and bright beames of the truth) you might haue learned the kinde of coniunction and vnitie which we haue with Chriſt in the Supper. For ſeeing the Apoſtle concludeth vpon this our ſacramentall coniunction with Chriſt in the 16. verſe, as an effect of the cauſe: it is evident that our ſacramentall conjunction with the Church being by the Spirit of Chriſt alone, and not in that one of our bodies or ſoules, is eſſentially in the body or ſoule of another, the other ſacramentall coniunction with Chriſt is onely in that we haue the Spirit of Chriſt, whereby we are made one with him, and not that he is eſſentially in us. For as all thoſe are members of me, and one with me, that liue by my ſpirit and ſoule: ſo are all thoſe one with Chriſt that are quickned by his ſpitit. And therefore as the ſpirit of Chriſt doth make one of us one with another, although in bodies we be removed and ſeparate by ſea and land, ſo it maketh us one with Chriſt, although we be removed and ſevered by the whole diſtance of the higheſt heaven and nethermoſt earth. And of the contrary part, if our communion with Chriſt be fleſhly and ſtanding in this that his fleſh is in ours, it muſt needs follow, that one member of the Church cannot communicate with another in the unitie that the Sacrament doth ſeale up, unleſſe it eate his fellow member. Againſt this neither Chryſoſtom nor Cyril haue any thing: who ſpeake of the true unity that wee haue with Chriſt, whereby we are made bone of his bone, as appeareth by the words following: For when he would declare his loue towards us by his body, he mingled himſelfe, and brought himſelfe into one with us, that the body body might be united vnto the head. And that he meaneth no carnall unitie that is made by the mouth and stomack, it is yet more manifest in that he affirmeth that the truth of the body of Christ (of the name whereof the bread through the Priests consecration is made worthy) so retaineth and keepeth the knowledge of the proprieties of the incorrupt nature thereof, as the very nature and substance of the bread doth remaine. Cyril also is true, (in that sence which he meaneth) which is that we are ioyned vnto Christ not onely in regard of his diuinity, but also of his body, which he proueth by the vse of the Sacrament, whereby as by an apt instrument we communicate to his very body, because we be made members of Christ, which is not by carnall eating of the mouth, but because we are one spirit. And for this vnity with Christs flesh he affirmeth, that Christ will raise vs vp at the last day to life, whereas if he should raise vs vp for the carnall vnity that is made by the mouth, he should raise vp the wicked to eternall life as well as the godly. This is also evident, in that this vnity which we haue with Christ, he compareth vnto the vnity of the vine with the branches, which are of one nature. And yet more evidently in another place. It behoueth vs to be partakers of his nature, and to be transformed into a new life, which cannot be otherwise then by the participation of his spirit. And againe he sheweth, that they shall haue saluation, not by his bodily flesh, but by the power of his god-head. Last of all, as Cyril saith, that Christ is corporally in vs: so he saith, that we are corporally in Christ. Now wee suppose you will not say, that our body and soule entreth into him by his mouth, and even as Hill. saith, that Christ is naturally in vs: so he saith we are naturally in him. And therefore when mingling of vs with Christ is properly and naturally meant, it is true which Cyprian saith, that our coniunction with Christ doth neither mingle persons nor vnite substances, but coupleth affections and leagueth the wils together.

Verse. 18 Behold Israel according to the flesh: ¶ they that eate the hosts, are they not partakers of the altar;

RHEM. 7. [18. They that eate the hostes.] It is plaine also by the example of the Iews in their Sacrifices, that he that eateth any of the host immolated is partaker of the Sacrifice, and ioyned by office and obligation to God, of whose sacrifice he eateth.

CARTVV. 7. [18. They that eate of the hostes.] He speaketh not onely of the participation which the Priests had in the offerings, but of the people, which offering peace offerings were themselues partakers of them. Neither doth he speake of the lawfull sacrifices which ioyned them to God, made vnder the Law, but of the vnlawfull which the Iewes continued after the ascension of our Saviour Christ, in which respect he calleth them Israel according to the flesh.

Verse. 20 But the things that the heathen doe immolate, to deuils they doe immolate, and not to God: And ¶ I will not haue you become fellowes of deuils.

RHEM. 8. [20. I will not haue you.] I conclude then (saith the Apostle) thus: that as the Christian which eateth and drinketh of the Sacrifice or Sacrament of the altar, by his eating is participant of Christs body, and is ioyned in fellowship to all Christian people that eate and drinke of the same, being the host of the new Law: and as all that did eate of the hostes of the sacrifices of Moses Law, where belonging and associated to that state and to God: to whom the Sacrifice was done: euen so whosoeuer eateth of the meates offered to Idols, he sheweth and professeth himselfe to bee of the Communion and Societie of the same Idols.

Participation in Sacrament or Sacrifice, sheweth of what society wee are.

CARTVV. 8. [20. I will not haue you.] Here againe it is evident what kinde of communion it is which we haue with Christ in the Supper. For as to be partaker of the Altar is not to eate the Altar, or to be made one substance with it, but to be incorporate into that religion and worship which is vsed and exercised at the Altar. And as to be partaker of the Divels, is not to eate the Divels, or to haue the substance of the Divels in our bodies, but to haue the spirit of the Divels, and to be moved by them: even so to be partakers of the body of Christ, is not to eate him and his substance, but to be one spirit with him, by the which wee liue, and haue our moving to life. And therefore Ierom vpon these words, The bread is it not the participation of the body of Christ? saith, euen so also is the idolatrous bread shewed to be the participation of the Divels. And vpon these words, Wee all partake one bread and one cup, he saith: If we eate of one bread with the Idolaters, we are made one body with them.

Verse. 21 You cannot drinke the chalice of our Lord and the chalice of deuiles: you cannot be ¶ partakers of the table of our Lord, and of the table of deuiles.

RHEM. 9. [21. You cannot drinke.] Vpon the premisses he warneth them plainely, that they must either forsake the sacrifice and fellowship of the Idols and Idolaters, or els refuse the sacrifice of Christs body and bloud in the Church. In all which discourse wee may obserue that our bread and chalice, our table and altar, the participation of our host and obligation, hee compared or resembled point by point, in all effects, conditions and proprieties, to the altars, hostes, sacrifices and immolations of the Iewes and Gentiles. Which the Apostles would nor, nor could not haue done in this Sacrament of the Altar, rather then in other Sacraments or seruice of our religion, if it onely had not been a Sacrifice and the proper worship of God among the Christians, as the other were among the Iewes and Heathen. And so doe all the Fathers acknowledge calling it onely and continually almost by such termes as they do no other Sacrament or ceremony of Christs religion: The lambe of God laid vpon the table. Conc. Nic. The vnbloudy seruice of the Sacrifice. In Conc. Ephes. ep. ad Nestor. pag. 605. The sacrifice of sacrifices Dionys. Eccl. dreadfull Sacrifice, the Sacrifice of thankesgiuing or Eucharisticall: and the Sacrifice of Melchisedech. Which Melchisedek by his oblation in bread and wine, did properly and most singularly prefigurate this office of Christs eternall Priesthood, and sacrificing himselfe vnder the formes of bread and wine, which shall continue in the Church throughout all Christian Nations in the stead of all the offerings of Aarons Priesthood, as the *Prophet Malachie did foretell, as S. Cyprian, S. Iustine, S. Irenæus and others the most ancient Doctors and Martyrs do testifie Cypr. ep. 63. nu. 2. Iustin. Dial. cum Trypho. post med. Irenæus lib. 4. cap. 32. And S. *Augustine lib. 17. cap. 20. de Ciu. CAR TVV 9 [12. You cannot drinke.] The Apostle sheweth that those that communicate to the Idols feast are so partakers of the Idols worship and of the Deuils which are worshipped in them, as they are partakers of Christs body which partake bread of the Lords table, not making any manner mention of any sacrifice either in the one or in the other, which the Iesuites fully confessed in the beginning of this note if to the Apostles words of the communion of the body of Christ, they had not added the words sacrifice saying the communion of the sacrifice of the body of Christ which the Apostle hath not. And it deceiueth them foully that they see not that the Apostle here compareth not the Lords table with the sacrifice of the Idolaters) but with the table of Idolaters namely with that feast which the Idolaters made of part of the meate which was offered in sacrifice to their Idols, whereunto commeth that there is mention made of the cuppe in both, which was never offered in sacrifice. Neither doth he compare the Lords supper with the offering of the sacrifices by the Israelites, but with the feast of the sacrifices that were offered, for the Corinthians were not present where the sacrifices were offered, but they were present onely when the feast was made of the offerings. And how carefully the Apostle wrote that men should not once dreame of a sacrifice here it appeareth for that hee saith the cup not which wee offer but which wee blesse, neither saith hee the bread which wee beaue to and fro (as the sacrifices were by the priests and the popish Idoll by the sacrificers thereof) but the bread which we breake that it might bee distributed to the Church. Neither doeth he say the communion of the sacrifice of the body of Christ, as the Iesuites say, but the communion of the body of Christ. And whereas other seruices of the people of God, (as the giuing vp and resignation of our selues, the making of our prayers and thankesgiuings) are called sacrifices. And therefore the people themselues called priests yet are neither the sacraments, nor the ministers which administer them once in the whole new Testament called either sacrifice, or sacrificers: for that the Scripture foreseing the abomination that would be in that behalf was carefull to giue no occasion thereof. But all this question is so euidently decided by the Apostle in the chapter going before that he must needs be esteemed a contentious brabler that moueth any further strife therein. For the Apostle prouing that ministers in the new Testament haue good right to liue and to bee maintained of their ministerie useth an argument of comparison, the former part whereof is that if those which serue the altar liue of the altar. The latter part whereof if the Iesuits may be suffered to add, euen so they that shall say masse, or they that sacrifice Christ must liue of massing and sacrificing. And in deed if in any place that might bee said; this was the place where the Apostle should haue so spoken. But he speaketh far otherwise saying: so the Lord hath ordeined that they that preach the Gospell should liue of the Gospell, Wherefore to preach the Gospel hath the same place in the ministery of the new Testament which the offering of sacrifices had in the ministery of the old Testament: for euen as to offer Sacrifices was the principall office of the Priest (by reason of Christ whom the sacrifices figured) euen so is it the chiefest dutie of the ministers of the Gospell to preach the Gospell, In which regard they are said to offer vp vnto God (not Christ as the papists affirme,) but people slaine by the spirituall sword of preaching the Gospell. And this chiefe time of preheminence of the ministeriall duty vnder the Gospell appeareth also in other places. Now when they can not find so much as one sillable in the Scripture either of sacrifice, or of altar, or priesthood, to nourish this monster which their couetousnesse hath begotten, they would put it out to nourcing vnto the ancient fathers. And with them they find somewhat more then they can find in the Scripture howbeit the milke which they giue it is (in deed) nothing but wind, for although they seeme to fauour it in an outward shew of words yet in truth they doe not onely not foster it but also thrust it cleane through. Therefore for a generall answer to all these authorities; let the reader vnderstand that in these titles and properties that the ancient writers vse there is a trope or vnproper speach, wherein the name is giuen to the signe, which is proper to the thing signified. Because therefore the supper of the Lord is a liuely image of the euerlasting propitiatory wonderfull quickning sacrifice, with praise and thankesgiuing applying it, and stirring vp the power of faith more liuely to applie it, therefore it is said to be the thing it selfe as we say ordinarily of the image of a king that it is the king. And this appeareth manifestly by the doctrine of the fathers in that behalfe. For Theodoret asking why the priests of the new Testament celebrate the mysticall liturgie or sacrifice when as Christ which is a priest after the order of Melchisedech offering sacrifice brought to passe that other sacrifices should bee vnnecessary answereth that it is cleere to those that haue skill in diuinitie that we offer no other, but celebrate the memory of that sauing sacrifice, &c. that by beholding the signe wee might remember the suffering which hee tooke vpon him for vs. And after, this respect therefore and name of sacrifice, is not in the subsistence or being or offering of the body and blood of Christ vnder the bread and wine but in the memorie and remembrance of these things which is wrought in an vnderstanding consideration of the figures that is to say of the signes and types. Eusebius Emissenus saith that because he was not to carry away his body, which he had taken from our eyes into heauen it was necessary that bee should consecrate in the day of the supper the sacrament of the body and blond that it might be alwayes by a mysterie remembred which was once offered for a price. Augustine saith, that the flesh and bloud of the sacrifice were promised before the comming of Christ, in the oblation of the slaine beasts, which was indeed and truth performed in the passion of Christ: but now that after the ascension of Christ there is celebrated the sacrament of a remembrance, namely, whilest the sacrifice of bread and wine is offered throughout the whole world of the holy Catholicke Church, in which there is a thankesgiving and remembrance of the flesh of Christ which he offered for us, and of his blond which he shed for us. And in another place, Therfore the oblation of the bread and cup is a remembrance of his death, and a setting forth of it which is done not so much in words as in the mysticall things whereby that precious death might be the deeper and stronger commended unto our mindes. For what is the remembrance of his death, but the commendation of his lone, wherfore ready to go to his passion, and to depart the world by the glory of his resurrection and ascension, he gane this last sacrament unto his Disciples, that hee might more neerely settle in their mindes the remembrance of his so great lone by which alone we are saved. Iustinus Martyr, For my part (saith he) I account only for perfect and acceptable to God, the prayers and thankesgivings, if they bee made by worthy men. For Christians do take in hand to celebrate these sacred things alone, that by the nourishment which is wet and dry they might be admonished of it, which God the sonne of God is declared to have suffered for them. It were an infinite labour to set downe the places which are found in them for confirmation of this meaning of theirs in the matter of the Supper: these therefore may be sufficient to speake in the name of all the rest. Secondly, this is manifest by the nature of this sacrifice, which must be sanctified by prayer, and for which we pray that it may be accepted: whereas this cannot be spoken of Christ, which is manifest by the words of their own Masse, whereby they pray that God would amiably regard, and vouchsafe to take for good or acceptable this host, as he vouchsafed to take in good part the gifts of his servant Abell, which if they will interpret them according to the sense of the Fathers, utterly overthroweth their massing sacrifice. Irenæus saith, that the Churches oblation is then reputed with God a pure sacrifice, if the gift of him which offereth be accepted. And of the sacrifice of Abell he saith, God regarded Abels gifts, because hee offered in simplicity and justice. And in the same chapter a little after, more plainly: Therefore the sacrifices do not sanctifie the man, for God hath no need of sacrifice, but his cõscience which offereth being pure sanctifieth the sacrifice. In the Liturgie ascribed unto Clement this prayer is recited in more generall words, yet in the same sense and meaning: Wee beseech thee that thou wouldst vouchsafe to look mercifully upon these gifts that are set out in thy presence, which needest none O God, and that thou wouldst take pleasure in them in the honour of thy Christ. And Ambrose bringing in the Priests words saith, Therefore remembring his glorious passion, resurrection from the dead, and ascension into heaven, wee offer unto thee this immaculate host, as a reasonable host, unbloudy host, even this holy bread and cup of eternall life, and desire that thou wouldst receive this oblation into thy high altar by the hands of thy Angels, as thou vouchsafest to receive the gifts of thy servant Abel the just, and the sacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham, and that which the high Priest Melchisedec offered unto thee. Seeing therefore our Saviour Christ cannot be sanctified by us or our prayer, (who is sanctitie it selfe) and seeing it is blasphemy that we should desire that he should be no otherwise accepted of his father then was the sacrifice of Abel: and finally, for so much as request is made, that our gift in the Sacrament of the Supper should be accepted for Christs sacrifice, it is evident that the Fathers meant no such sacrifice as the Papists haue forged. And the truth of these generall answers will appeare in the answer to the particulars. And first the Councell of Nice is directly against you, for when it saith, Let us not basely attend the bread and cup set before us, it declareth, that that which is Sacramentall is yet bread and wine. Secondly, when it saith, But let us understand by faith the Lamb to be set on the Table, and unbloudly sacrificed; it is manifest that this presence at the Table is spirituall to our faith, not carnall to our mouth: otherwise properly (being without dimension, as they must grant) how can he be said to be situate upon the Table. Thirdly, when it saith, Truely taking his own precious body and bloud, we beleeue these to be the Mysticall tokens of our Redemption: there being a plaine opposition between the precious body and bloud truely received, but not bodily, and the bread and wine (the tokens) truely and bodily; it followeth that he is not there bodily.

Againe that which it addeth as a reason is most manifest, for thu cause we take not much but little that we may know that we take not to fill vs but for holinesse. For how can much or little bee spoken of the body of Christ which is wholy taken and without quantitie? how can wee in their own iudgement take him to fill vs or not to fill vs, if there be no bread there that should fill vs? Lastly seeing Christ is taken being holinesse it selfe without consideration of much or little how can wee take a little for holinesse? The second place is to be understoood according to the first generall answer, in that they say announcing the death of the onely begotten sonne and confessing his resurrection and ascention wee celebrate the unblouddie sernice of the sacrifice, where is declared that it is a seruice which doth preach the death of Christ. And calling it an unbloudy sernice, it proueth that there is no bloud ministred by that seruice & therefore it is not your sacrifice of Christs body and blood. The third testimony of Denys hath this sense that of all the sortes of seruices which hee calleth hostes or sacrifices, this is the chiefe; which is euident by the profe or declaration following. And first let vs consider this sacredly for that which is common to other principall holy rites is expresly beside the rest reckoned vnto this and is singularly affirmed to be a communion or consociation, and this is all one with that which he calleth the host of hosts. The place of Cyrill is to be vnderstood according to the former generall answer which is euident in that hee calleth it in the same place the vertue of the sacrament, the vertue of the mysterie, where if hee should meane as they do he should set down a flat contradiction vnto himselfe, in the declaration of the tenth Anatheme, where he saith that with one oblation he hath made perfect for euer those which are sanctified. Tertullian in lib. de corona milit. hath no such title of propitiatory sacrifice. Neither is it found in any of the places alledged out of Chrysostome or in the 66. epistle of Cyprian, onely he saith that the Cleark that shall take vpon him a gardianship shall haue no offering for him nor sacrifice when hee sleepeth. The meaning whereof the reason following doth sufficiently declare for (saith he) hee deserueth not to be named in the priests prayer at the altar, which would turn away the priest and ministers from their ministery. In the other place it is called a sacrifice or medecine to heale iniquities becauſe it applieth to euery one of vs liuelily the ſacrifice of Chriſt. But where he calleth it, after that it is a ſacrament, ſubſtantiall bread, and ſay ng that before the bleſſing it ſerued onely to the nouriſhment of the body, thereby ſignifying that being a ſacrament it nouriſheth the body ſtill although it be ordeined for the nouriſhment of the ſoule, and thirdly for that he calleth it ſanctified bread it is euident that he meaneth not the body of Chriſt, who cannot be ſaid either ſubſtantiall bread, or to nouriſh the body, or yet to bee the ſanctified bread of the prieſt which is holineſſe it ſelfe. And this is yet more in words in the ſame booke where he ſaith that Chriſt gaue vs the cup whoſe blond was offered for vs on the croſſe, and whom that ſingular ſacrifice paſſing all ſacrifices did reconcile to God. Where is made a plaine oppoſition between Chriſt (a ſingular and one ſacrifice which was offered vpon the Croſſe) to this cup which he giueth vs here. Auguſtine by the ſacrifice of the Mediatour, muſt needs meane the remembrance of that ſacrifice in the ſacrament vnleſſe they will haue the Prieſt a Mediator of reconciliation contrary to their own diſtinction. And as for his opinion in that place of the profit that it bringeth to the dead, they may well be aſhamed of it, conſidering that he draweth out the profit thereof euen to the reprobate and damned in hell, to a mitigation of their damnation. The next being the ſame in words hath the ſame anſwer. In the next there is no ſuch thing as they ſpeake of nor in the laſt. Cyprian alſo hath nothing in that which maketh for them but onely ſheweth the groſſeneſſe of them that imagined of the fleſh of Chriſt, that it ſhould be parted. And his reaſon againſt them is as ſtrong againſt the Papiſts for if (ſaith he) it had been parted it would not haue ſuffered all much leſſe when one eateth vp the whole body can there remaine any thing to ſuffice all the reſt, where if they anſwer that although reaſon cannot comprehend how one eating all, yet there ſhould remaine the ſame for other, the ſame alſo might bee anſwered to Cyprians reaſon againſt the partition of Chriſts fleſh. And yet further in the ſame place he affirmeth that we ſhall eate the ſame bread without ſacrament, more manifeſtly in heauen which we eate here in ſacrament. Now if they will not affirme that we ſhall eat Chriſt with our mouth in heauen, it is euident that we eate him not here with the mouth in the ſacrament. And when he ſaith that here the actions are repeated often but there it ſhall remaine perpetuall, it is plaine that the ſacrament is confined, in which regard the action of the ſupper is repeated, although that ſignified by the ſacrament which he calleth the thing of the ſacrament is euerlaſting.

Chryſoſtome is directly againſt them, for noting out the difference of the legall, and Chriſts ſacrifice, he ſaith: See what great difference is between once and often, between ſtrange blond and his own, hee is the ſacrifice, the Prieſt, and the hoſt. And after upon the next words, having convinced the imperfection of thoſe in that they were repeated, and the perfection of Chriſts ſacrifice in that it was but once; and cleered that matter by ſimilitudes of medicines, hee maketh this obiection: what then do we every day, Do wee not offer? we offer indeed, but we make a remembrance of his death: Where he declareth evidently, that that which we offer is nothing but a memoriall of the death of Chriſt, and therefore after having ſaid that they offer the ſame ſacrifice, hee correcteth himſelfe and ſaith, that rather we celebrate the remembrance, and ſo goeth on, ſhewing that there is not many ſacrifices but one, and becauſe there is but one, that therefore this is but a type of that. The next place of Cyprian doth proue at large that there muſt be wine in the Sacrament, becauſe Melchiſedec, which figured out this memoratiue ſacrifice, brought forth bread and wine. And the proofe of one drop of wine in the Sacrament, is water enough to drown your ſacrifice in.

The place of Iuſtine, beſide that it quaileth your ſacrifice (whilſt it maketh all Chriſtians to offer up unto God, and affirmeth it to be the Euchariſt of the bread and cup) the words immediately following thoſe which are before recited, do utterly bewray your falſhood. The place of Irænæus is to the ſame effect: for he affirmeth that it is Gods counſell that his diſciples ſhould offer the firſt fruites to him of his creatures, not as having need of them, but that they ſhould not be vnfruitfull nor vnthankfull: where the matter of offering is marked out to be of the creatures, and the end is noted to be thankſgiving. And ſo having applyed the ſame to the place of Malachy he ſaith, In euery place a ſacrifice (and that pure) ſhall be offered to him, which what it is, hee declareth, namely, that his name ſhall bee magnified among the Gentiles, as the next chapter doth euidently declare, ſaying, becauſe the name of the Sonne is the proper relatiue of the Father, or belongeth vnto him, and that the Church doth make her offering to the omnipotent God by Ieſus Chriſt, he ſaith well in both regards that in euery place incenſe ſhall bee offered to my name, and a pure ſacrifice: And as for the incenſe, Iohn in his Apocalipſe calleth it the prayers of the Saints. So that heere alſo as before, all the Saints are made Prieſts to offer this ſacrifice that the Prophet ſpeaketh of. And yet more plainly in the next chapter where he ſheweth that this ſacrifice is not accepted but by imputation, as hath beene alſo before out of him alledged in that it doth not ſanctifie.

The place of Auguſtine is alſo againſt them, for hee affirmeth that God prepareth his Table in bread and wine And upon a place of Eccleſiaſtes, or book of the Preacher, There is no good, but that a man eateth and drinketh: he ſaith, What may be more credibly vnderſtood that hee ſaith, then that which pertaineth to the partaking of this Table, the which the Prieſt himſelfe Mediator of the new Teſtament doth exhibite according to the order of Melchiſedec of his body and blond: Where that his body and blond (whereof hee ſpeaketh) are not to be received with the mouth, but that by faith we are incorporate vnto him, it appeareth manifeſtly by the words going a little before, where he ſaith, that to partake with this Table is to beginne to haue life. Vnleſſe therefore they will (contrary vnto that which they haue profeſſed) haue Auguſtine of this minde, that no life is begunne in a man before he receiue the Supper; it is euident that this cannot be vnderſtood of the eating of Chriſts body by the mouth.

The other place of Auguſtine cont. adverſ. leg. lib 1. cap. 18. hath nothing againſt us, but againſt you, where (having ſpoken of the aboliſhing of the old ſacrifices) hee ſheweth what ſacrifice remaineth daily in the Church, ſaying out of the Pſalme, The ſacrifice of praiſe ſhall honour me. And after, What is a more ſacred ſacrifice of praiſe, then that in thankeſgiuing. And for what ſhould greater thankes be giuen to God, then for his grace by Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. All which the faithfull know in the ſacrifice of the Church, whereof were ſhadowes all the former kindes of ſacrifice. And yet more plainly in the 20. Chapter where hee expoundeth (with Iohn in the Apocalypſe) the incence which Malachy ſpeaketh of, to bee the prayers of the the Saints. What Leo thought herein we make small account. That the communion was called the Masse, it came in some hundred yeares after Christ: before which time it is not shewed in any ancient writers workes, which is confessed to be the authours owne, and not bastarded. And seeing that your owne Gregory doth say, that it was so called by the name of Masse, for that those which were yet in catechising, were sent forth by the Deane of the Church, as those that partaked not of the sacrifice or holy communion: helpeth not you in any sort, but hurteth you manifestly: in so much as it proveth a communion by all the people that were grounded in the principles of Christian religion. And thus it is evident, that the doctrine of the holy Supper which we maintain, is the doctrine of the Apostles and ancient fathers, which when our adversaries shall finde mercy, they cannot but see, being so evident and so visible a truth.

Greg. Epist. 93.

RHEM. 10. [21. Partakers of the table.] Though the faithfull people bee many wayes knowen to bee Gods peculiar, and be ioyned both to him and amongst themselues, and also seuered and distinguished from all others that pertaine not to him, as well Iewes and Pagans, as Heretickes and Schismatickes, by sundry other externall signes or Sacraments, doctrine and gouernement: yet the most proper and substantiall vnion or difference consisteth in the Sacrifice and Altar: by which God so specially bindeth his Church vnto him, and himselfe vnto his Church, that he acknowledgeth none to be his, that is not partaker of his one onely Table and Sacrifice in his Church: and acquitteth himselfe of all such as ioyne in fellowship with any of the Heathen at their Idolatry, or with the Iewes at their Sacrifices, or with Heretickes and Schismatickes at their prophane and detestable table. Which because it is the proper badge of their separation from Christ and his Church, & altar purposely erected, against Christs Altar, Priesthood, and Sacrifice, is indeed a very sacrifice, or (as the Apostle here speaketh) a table and cup of Diuels, that is to say, wherein the Diuell is purposly serued, and Christs honor (no lesse then *by the altars of Iroboam or any prophane or superstitious rites of Gentility) defiled. And therefore all Catholike men, if they looke to haue fellowship with Christ and his members in his body and bloud, must deeme of it, as of Idolatry or sacrilegious superstition, and abstaine from it and from all societie of the same, as good Iobie did from all Iroboams calues, and the altars in Dan and Bethel: and as the good faithful did from the Excelse, & from the temple & sacrifices of Samaria. Now in the Christian times we haue no other Idols, but heresies, nor Idolathytes, but their false seruices shifted into our Churches in steed of Gods true and onely worship. Cypr. de vnit. Ec. nu. 2. Hier. in 11. Oseæ & 8. Amos & in 2. Habac. Aug. in psal. 10. de Ciu. Dei lib. 18. c. 51.

The distinction of Christian catholikes from the rest, is by not communicating with them, specially in their sacrifices, and at the communion table.

The heretikes communion is the very table and cup of Diuels.

3. Reg. 12. Tob. 1. 3. Reg. 12.

CARTVV. 10. [21. Partakers of the Table.] If you had trusted any thing to your former proofes and testimonies, you would (likely) haue spared this note of reviling and railing words. But your conscience not suffering you to be ignorant of open violence and wresting of the Apostle and ancient fathers; you thought it pollicie to supply the want of proofes with store of reproaches. And (to omit the truth of our cause) the world will witnesse with us, that the charge of Idolatry which you giue upon us, hath no branch of our religion to sit upon, as there is no part of yours wherein it may not nestle.

Verse. 22 Or do we emulate our Lord? Why, are we stronger then he; | All things are lawfull for me, but all things are not expedient.

RHEM. 11. [22. All things are lawfull.] Hitherto the Apostles argument and examples whereby he would auert them from the meates offered to Idols, seeme plainely to condemne their fact as Idololatricall, or as participant or accessary to Idolatry, and not onely as of scandall giuen to the weake brethren, and so no doubt it was in that they went into the very temple of the Idols, and did with the rest that serued the Idols, eate and drinke of the flesh and libaments directly offered to the Idoll, yea and feasted together in the same bankets made to the honour of the same Idols: which could not but defile them and entangle them with Idolatrie: not for that the meate it selfe was iustly belonging to any other but to God, or could be defiled, made noisome or vnawfull to be eaten, but for and in respect of the abuse of the same and detestable dedicating of that to the deuell, which belonged not to him, but to God alone. Of which sacrilegious act they ought not to be partakers, as needes they must, entering and eating with them in their solemnitie, to this end hath S. Paul hitherto admonished the Corinthians. Now he declareth that otherwise in prophane feasts it is lawfull to eate without curious doubting or asking whether this or that were offered meates, and in markets to buy whatsoeuer is there sold, without scruple and without taking knowledge whether t.bee of the Idolothytes or no, with this exception first, that if one should inuite him to eate, or buy this or that as sacred and offered meates, that then he should not eate, lest hee should seeme to approue the offering of it to the Idoll, or to like it the better for the same. Secondly, when the weake brother may take offence by the same. For though it be lawfull in it selfe to eate any of these meats without care of the Idoll: yet all lawfull things be not in euery time and place expedient to be done.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 23 ‡ For I receiued of our Lord that which also | I haue deliuered vnto you, ‡ that our Lord IESVS | in the night that he was betraied, tooke bread:

RHEM. 1. [23. That our Lord.] The Apostles drift in all that he saith here of the Sacrament, is against vnworthy receiuing as (S. Augustine also noteth Ep. 118. c. 3.) and not to set out the whole order of ministration, as the Heretickes do ignorantly imagine.

CARTW.

CARTVV. 1. [23. That our Lord.] Vnleſſe there be more in the ſacrament then our Saviour Chriſt delivered vnto the Apoſtle: this is the whole inſtitution of the ſacrament. For here is whatſoever he received of the Lord. And we haue heard Ambroſe before, who calleth this the forme that was given by our Saviour Chriſt. Againſt which, that alledged of Auguſtine epiſt. 118. (who ſaith that it appeareth in the whole place to the Corinthes, that not to diſcerne it from other meates with reverence is to receiue it vnworthily) is too childiſh, conſidering that whoſoever receiveth it not according to the inſtitution, receiveth it vnworthily and vnreverently.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 2 And I praiſe you brethren, that in al things you be mindeful of me: and as I haue deliuered vnto you, you keepe | my precepts.

RHEM. 2. [2. My precepts.] Our Paſtors and Prelats haue authoritie to command, and we are bound to obey. And the Gouernours of the Church may take order and preſcribe that which is is comely in euery ſtate, as time and place require, though the things bee not of the ſubſtance of our religion.

CARTVV. 2. [2. My precepts.] The Gouernours of the Church making lawes in things indifferent ought to do nothing without this compaſſe and rule of Scripture, that they ſerue to edifying.

Verſe. 5 But | euery women praing or prophecying with her head not covered, diſhoneſteth her head: for it is all one as if ſhe were made bald.

RHEM. 5. [5. Euery woman.] What gifts of God ſo euer women haue, though ſupernaturall, as ſome had in the Primitiue Church, yet they may not forget their womanly ſhamefaſtneſſe, but ſhew themſelues ſubiect and modeſt, and couer their heads with a veile.

CARTVV. 5. [5. Every woman.] This womanhood and ſhamefaſtneſſe, Ioane the Popeſſe, or the Pope, did ſmally regard.

Verſe. 16 But if any man ſeeme to be contentious, we haue no ſuch cuſtome nor the | CHVRCH of God.

RHEM. 4. [16. Cuſtome.] If women or other, to defend their diſorder & malipertneſſe, diſpute or alleage Scriptures & reaſons, or require cauſes of their preachers why and by what authoritie they ſhold be thus reſtrained in things indifferent, make no other anſwer but this. This is the cuſtome of the Church, this is our cuſtome. Which is a goodly rule to repreſſe the ſaucineſſe of contentious ianglers, which being out of all modeſtie & reaſon neuer want words and replies againſt the Church. Which Church if it could then by preſcription of twenty or thirty yeeres, and by the authority of one or two of their firſt Preachers, ſtop the mouth of the ſeditious: what ſhould not the cuſtome of fifteen hundred yeeres, and the decrees of many hundred Paſtors, gaine of reaſonable, modeſt, and humble men?

The cuſtome of the Church is a good anſwer againſt all wranglers.

CARTVV. 4. [16. Cuſtome.] When the Church cuſtome is guarded with the law of God, as this cuſtome of not being contentious, and thoſe caſes whereof this is inferred: then no doubt it is to be reverenced: but whatſoever ſauoureth againſt the truth is hereſie, euen old cuſtome. Your compariſon alſo of the authoritie of the primitiue Church, when ſhe was in her flower, with the Churches now that haue many wrinkles in their faces that the Churches in the Apoſtles times had not; likewiſe of the authority of all the Paſtors that haue beene this 1500. yeares, with one or two of the firſt Paſtors, is altogether vnequall not (as you ſay, which feare not to preferre the latter Churches to the firſt, and the latter Paſtors to the firſt Preachers, which were the Apoſtles:) but in that they are far ſurmounted and ſurpaſſed by both Churches and Paſtors, that were in the firſt twenty yeares of the Goſpell. For the Churches were never better either taught or governed, or yet indowed, then in that time. And between the Apoſtles (yea one onely Apoſtles authority) compared with all the Paſtors that haue been this 1500. yeares, there is as great difference as there is in their callings.

Tertul. de vland. virg.

Verſe. 19. For | there muſt bee hereſies alſo: that they alſo which are approved, may be made manifeſt among you.

RHEM. 5. [19. There muſt be hereſies.] When the Apoſtle ſaith, Hereſies muſt be: Hee ſheweth the euent, and not that God hath directly ſo appointed it as neceſſary, for, that they be, it commeth of mans malice and freewill; but that they bee conuerted to the manifeſtation of the good and conſtant in faith and the Churches vnitie, that is Gods ſpecial work of prouidence that worketh good of euill. And for that there ſhould fall Hereſies and Schiſmes, ſpecially concerning the Article and vſe of the B. Sacrament of the Altar, whereof hee now beginneth to treat, it may make vs maruell the leſſe, to ſee ſo great diſſenſions, Hereſies, and Schiſmes of the wicked and weake in faith concerning the ſame. Such things then will be, but woe to him by whom ſcandals or Sects do come. Let vs vſe Heretickes, ſaith S. Auguſtine not to that end to approue their errors, but that by defending the Catholike doctrine againſt their deceites, wee may bee more watchfull and warie: becauſe it is moſt truely written. There muſt be hereſies that the tried and approued may be manifeſted and diſcouered from the hollow harts among you. Let vs vſe this benefite of Gods prouidence. for Heretickes be made of ſuch as would erre or be naught, though they were in the Church: but being out, they profite vs exceedingly, not by teaching the truth which they know not, but by ſtirring vp the carnall in the Church to ſeeke truth, and the ſpirituall Catholikes, to cleare the truth, for there be innumerable holy approued men in the Church, but they bee not diſcerned from other among vs, nor manifeſt, ſo long as wee had rather ſleepe in darkeneſſe of ignorance, then behold the light of truth, therefore many are raiſed out of their ſleepe by Heretickes to ſee the day of God, and are glad thereof. Auguſt. c. 8. de vera relig.

That hereſies ſhall come, and wherefore.

VVhat commodity wee may make of hereſies.

CARTVV. 5. [19. There muſt be hereſies.] Your gloſſe of event and not of neceſſitie by Gods appointment, is here directly contrary vnto the text: for when the Apoſtle ſaith, that there muſt be hereſies, this muſt muſt needs ſignifie either muſt in dutie, or muſt in neceſſity of Gods decree. The former is abſurd: therefore the latter muſt needs be true. And the iuſtice of God in this decree is ſufficiently maintained by the Apoſtle, when he ſheweth ſo noble an end of this decree, that they

they which are approued may be made manifest, and knowne from others. And Iude would haue taught you, that divers are of old appointed to such a iudgement, that they should mis-lead men by changing the grace of our God into wantonnesse. Can there be a more unworthy fact then the betraying and putting to death of the Sonne of God? the determination and decree of both which the Scripture precisely ascribeth unto the Lord. And look whatsoever is detracted in such cases from the counsell and decree of God, the same is taken away from the glory of his wisedom, in his mercy towards the elect, and iustice upon the reprobate, for the which causes he taketh these counsels and maketh these decrees. Iude 4. vers. Luk 22.22 Act. 4.28.

Verse. 20 When you com therefore together in one, it is not now to eat our Lords supper.

RHEM. 6. [20. Our Lords supper.] The Christians at or about the time of the Churches onely Sacrifice and their communicating thereof, kept great feasts: which continued long, for that the relieue of the poore vpon the common charges of the richer sort, and the charitie and vnitie of all sorts were much preserued thereby, for which cause they were called ἀγάπαι, that is, Charities, of the ancient Fathers, and were kept commonly in Church houses or porches adioyning, or in the body of the Church (whereof see Tertullian Apolog. c. 39. Clemens Alexand. S. Iustine, S. Augustine cont. Faust. lib. 20. c. 20.) after the Sacrifice and communion was ended, as S. Chrysostome hom. 27. in 1. Cor. in initio iudgeth. Those feasts S. Paull here calleth, Cœnas Dominicas, because they were made in the Churches, which then were called Dominicæ, that is, Our Lords houses. The disorders therefore kept among the Corinthians in these Church feastes of Charitie, the Apostle seeketh here to redresse, from the foule abuses expressed here in the text. And as S. Ambrose in hunc locum, and most good authors now thinke, this which he calleth Dominicam cœnam, is not meant of the B. Sacrament, as the circumstances also of the text do giue, namely, the reiecting of the poore, the rich mens priuate deuouring of all, not expecting one an other, gluttony, and drunkennesse in the same, which can not agree to the holy Sacrament, And therefore the Heretickes haue small reason, vpon this place to name the said holy Sacrament, rather, the Supper of the Lord, then after the manner of the Primitiue Church, the Eucharist, MASSE, or Liturgie. But by like they would bring it to the supper againe or Euening seruice, when men be not fasting, the rather, to take away the old estimation of the holinesse thereof. Agapæ or supper of charity. Conc. Gangr. can. 11. Conc. Laod. can. 27. 28. Whether the Apostle mean by our Lords Supper, the B. Sacrament.

CARTVV. 6. [20 Our Lords Supper.] You which cannot deny but that the Lords Table, in the tenth chapter, signifieth the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, are very impudent to deny that the Lords Supper in the 11 chapter, is not that holy Sacrament, but rather a feast and filling of the belly, for nourishment of loue one with another: It being evident that the Lords Table, and the Lords Supper be all one. We grant that there were such feasts used in times past, but they were called by the name of ἀγάπαι or Loue-feasts, not by the name of the Lords Supper: Neither could one, without sacriledge, giue so holy a name to a common feast, which never had ground out of the Word, and which after, for iust causes, was thrust out by the word of God: Neither yet could this disorder in their meeting, be well called, by so foule and heynous a name, as is a schisme, if the disorder had beene onely remaining in the common, and not in the holy and sacred feast; in the feast prepared for the filling of the body, and not in the feast prepared for the nourishment of the soule. And the argument of this chapter, contained in the 2 and 17 verses, touching the Churches obseruation of that which he gaue them to keep, proueth, that he reproueth the breach of that which he had commanded them to obserue: which could not be feasting in the place where the Church met for the seruice of God, as that which he condemneth, sending them home unto their private houses for all such feedings as serued for their bodily nourishment. And it is further evident, for that unto this Lords Supper (which they had somewhat wrinched and wrested from the first forme delivered unto them) hee opposeth verse 23, the institution of the holy Sacrament, as hee received it of the Lord. Of which opposition of the Lords institution (thereby to correct and reforme that which was amisse in the Sacrament) there is no place: unlesse in the words before he had noted out the deformities and abuses that had crept into the Sacrament. Moreover, when hee opposeth that which he calleth the Lords Supper, not onely unto a mans private supper, but also to eating and drinking; it is evident, that thereby cannot be understood the Loue-feasts, in which, because there was eating and drinking for the filling of the body, it cannot be noted under the title of the Lords Supper, wherein the Apostle will haue no such eating or drinking. Last of all; when verse 33, hee willeth that they should tary one for another, in the receiving of the holy Sacrament: it is evident that verse 21. by taking every one his supper aforehand, hee marketh out the deformity that had crept into the holy Sacrament, of sorting and severing themselues (as in their common Table, whereat they fed for nourishing of their bodies, so) in the holy Table, which was received for the refreshing of their soules: For there was a double abuse amongst them, one in their Loue-feasts, whilst that which should haue served for the knitting of the knot of loue, was used to cut the cords thereof, in that every one (as him best liked) made choice of such as he would haue to sit at table with him (the other, either not tarried for, or thrust out when they came, especially the poore.) The other abuse (pulled in by the former) was, for that those which were companions at one Table in the common feast, communicated also in the sacred, with the same separation and severalty from the rest of the Church (and the poore especially) which was in their former banquet. Whereby it is evident how childishly the Iesuites argue, that there is no mention made here of the Sacrament of the Lords Body, and Bloud, because there are certaine things spoken of, that agree not unto it: As if they ought not haue known, that the Corinthians are therefore reproued of the Apostle, because they did certaine things in the Sacrament which are not agreeable unto the dignity and simplicity thereof: or that they themselues (confessing that in the Church were holden both the holy and common feast) should haue been so blockish, as to esteeme that the speaking of the one must needs shut forth all mention Verse. 18.

of the other. And where they would beare the Reader in hand, that this title of the Lords Supper embaseth the dignity of the holy Sacrament, they may say the same of the title of the Lords Table vsed in the former chapter. And how frivolous this is, may appeare, not onely in that the Lord (of purpose) taketh the names of the holy things, from those that are in the common vse of men: but also in that he termeth the whole fruite which we receiue by Christ (either in the Sacrament, or out of the Sacrament) in one place by the name of a Supper, and in another by the name of a Dinner: yea the Table of the everlasting felicitie of the children of God which they shall enioy in the Kingdom of heaven (in no respect either of holinesse or dignity, inferiour to the holy Table of this Sacrament) is (without any disgrace) called a Supper. Vnlesse the Iesuites will say, Iohns penne was not sanctified or was too blunt in so naming it. And indeed the name of the Lords supper, causeth the holy Sacrament to haue a very sweet and comfortable taste, to all those that are duely partakers thereof; assuring them, that as in the supper of a noble man there is both plentifull and delectable prouision for the vpholding of this life; so, whosoeuer communicateth by faith vnto the Sonne of God, and is united vnto him, shall be sure to haue him for a staffe of all manner of spirituall nourishment vnto eternall life. Whereas of the other side, the name of Masse (in the Popes own exposition) hath no more tast in it then a little Mosse, ministring no instruction nor comfort towards our spirituall feeding.

Apoc. 3. 20. & 19. 9.

The places quoted to proue that there were Loue-feasts, are idlely quoted; there being no controuersie in that point. But the place of Ambrose (quoted to proue that by these words, the Lords Supper, is meant the Loue feasts) is directly against them: For shewing how (for want of other Gouernours besides the Ministers) there were that brought nothing, whereof rose diuisions, hee addeth: Therefore if (saith he) you come together thus, that euery man taketh his own, those things ought to be done at home, and not in the Church, where men meete for vnities sake, and for the Mysterie, and not for dissention, and for the bellies sake: let the gift that is offered be of the whole people, because in one bread all are signified: For in as much as we are all one, wee ought all to eate of one bread: Where calling it the mysterie, and noting it by one bread, which the Apostle ascribeth vnto the holy Sacrament, it is euident that he vnderstandeth the Eucharist. And after vpon these wordes: What shall I say, it is euident that (hauing perceiued and reproued the errour, to the end that from henceforth they might be corrected and know the truth which they had first learned) he repeateth to them the forme that was giuen by our Sauiour in that case. And Chrysostom, and (after him) the Greek Scholiast, affirme that by these words of the Lords Supper, is vnderstood the Lords Mysterie, and that we are sent of Christ to that night wherein he gaue the wonderfull mysteries. Cyprian also entitleth his Treatise of this Sacrament, Of the Lords Supper Last of all, your own Master Monk and Doctor, do plainely affirme, that by the Lords Supper the Apostle meaneth the Eucharist and Sacrament. And therefore those most good Authors, which you say thinke otherwise, are (by all likelihood) a sort of peaking Iesuites, that glorifie and esteeme more of themselues then all the world doth beside.

RHEM. 7 [23. I haue deliuered] As all other parts of religion were first deliuered by preaching and word of mouth to euery Nation conuerted, so this holy order & vse of the B. Sacrament was by S. Paul first giuen vnto the Corinthians by tradition. Vnto which as receiued of our Lord he reuoketh them by this Epistle, not putting in writing particularly all things perteining to the order, vse and institution, as he afterward saith: but repeating the summe and substance thereof and leauing the residue to his returne. But his words and narration here written we will particularly prosecute, because the Heretickes make profession to follow the same in their pretended reformation of the Masse.

Tradition without Writing.

CARTVV. 7. [23 I haue deliuered.] Look the answer before vpon Rom. 6. 17. Although even this place doth teach, that the things expressed, not contained onely, are contained under the word Tradition, and the ancient Fathers doubt not to call the mysterie of the Trinity, a Tradition.

Concil. Constant. 6. Act. 4. Basil. de spirit. sanct.

RHEM. 8. [23. In the night.] First the aduersaries may be here conuinced that all the circumstances of time, person and place which in Christs action are noted, need not to bee imitated. As, that the Sacrament should bee ministred at night, to men onely, to onely twelue, after, or at supper and such like: because (as S. Cyprian ep. 63. nn. 7. and S. Augustine 118. c. 6. note) there were causes of those accidents in Christ that are not now to be alleaged for vs. He instituted then this holy act: we do not, he made his Apostles Priests, that is to say, gaue them commission to do and minister the same, we do not, he would haue this the last act of his life and within the bounds of his passion: it is not so with vs, he would eate and make an end of the Paschall to accomplish the old law: that can not be in our action, therefore he must needs do it after the supper and at night, wee may not do so he excluded all women, all the rest of his Disciples, all lay men: we inuite all faithfull, men and women. In many circumstances then, neither we may imitate Christs first action, nor the Heretickes as yet do: though they seeme to encline by abandoning other mens, sauing this (calling it Supper) to haue it at night and after meate, though (as is before noted) they haue no iust cause to call it so vpon Christs fact, seing the Euangelists do plainely shew *that the Sacrament was instituted after Supper as the Apostle himselfe here recordeth of the latter part in expresse speach. And most men thinke, a long sermon and the washing of the Apostles feete came between, yea and that the supper was quite finished, and grace said. But in all these and such like things, the Catholike Church onely, by Christs Spirit can tell, which things are imitable, which not, in all his actions.

All circumstances in our Sauiours action about the B. Sacrament, need not to bee imitated. Iohn. 13. 2.

CARTVV. 8. [23. In the night.] It seemeth that the Iesuites haue learned, that it is better to be idlely occupied then to do nothing. For it is a very shamefull abusing of the reader, to stand trifling about that which they know we agree in, who teach that the circumstance of time, of the number, sexe, and calling of the persons is not precisely to be followed of us. The discretion whereof is not in the ~~Churches iudgement~~ (as they say) but dependeth vpon certaine grounds out of the word of God, which themselues (at vnawares) doe confesse, whilest they assigne things (done in the Lords Supper) some impossible to be done of us, some inconvenient to be done in our Sacrament, which were necessarily done in that action of our Saviour Christ. And dare they say that the Scripture ture doth not cut off from the holy Sacrament that which is either impossible, or not convenient to be done? The reason (that the Eucharist is not the Supper of the Lord, because it was instituted after Supper) they should haue written in the dust, where (being quickly put out) their shame might haue died with the writing. For who knoweth not but that a spirituall supper may follow immediately a carnall supper; a heauenly banket, the earthly repast, a feast for the conscience, the feast for the belly. And it is of purpose so spoken, both of the Euangelists and the Apostle, to shew that forsomuch as they had supped before, therefore that that bread and wine was ordained (not for the feeding of the body which was already satisfied with the ordinary and daily supper, but) for the nourishment of the soule, contrary to the corruption which had crept in amongst the Corinthes, who (when they met together in the holy assemblies) met not so much for the nourishment of their soules, as for the pampering of their bodies. That the Apostles were not ordained Priests to offer sacrifice by any words of this institution, looke before upon Matth. 26. 26.

RHEM. 0. [23. Tooke.] Christ tooke bread into his hands, applying this ceremonie, action and benedection to it, and did blesse the very element, vsed power and actiue word vpon it, *as he did ouer the bread and fishes which he multiplied: and so doth the Church of God, and so doe not the Protestants, if they follow their own booke and doctrine, but they let the bread and cup stand a loose, and occupy Christs words by way of report and narration, applying them not at all to the matter proposed to be occupied: and therefore howsoeuer the simple people bee deluded by the rehearsall of the same words which Christ vsed, yet consecration, benediction, or sanctification of bread and wine they professe they make none at all. At the first alteration, there was a figure of the Crosse at this word, He blessed: and at the word, He tooke, there was a glosse or rubrike that appointed the Minister to imitate Christs action, and to take the bread into his hands: afterward that was reformed and Christs action abolished, and his blessing of bread turned to thankes giuing to God.

Luc. 9. 16. The Protestants imitate not Christ in blessing the bread and wine.

CARTVV. 9. [23. Tooke.] It is true of these men, which the Apostle speaketh of such as itched after the title and account of Doctors of the Law, which know not what or whereof they affirme. For (to passe by the wandring and doubtfull iudgement of the Papists, which know not how to set a foot fast in this matter of consecration, some saying that the consecration was made by word, some without word, some by the words of the Euangelist, some by the Canon of the Masse; some before the distribution of the bread and cup, some after: and some affirming that it cannot be knowen how our Saviour Christ consecrated) if a man should aske them what they meant by vse of power, and actiue word, in the consecration of the elements, these buyers would lay such hold of them, as no sleight of their tongue should bee able to loose them. And (if they will haue it so, as appeareth in their note upon the 24. verse, that by the touch of the bread and words, the bread is turned into the body of Christ, which imagined Transubstantiation is as their Helena, for which all these vp-rores are made, and railing speeches against us) let them tell us what buckler they haue to hold out against them, that will thus charge them that they bring in a body of Christ without bloud, considering that (the blessing being not then pronounced over the cup) the wine is not turned into bloud. How we retaine the naturall and true consecration of Christ (they having nothing but a magicall inchantment) and how cleare and without all difficulty the consecration is understood, looke before upon 1. Cor. 10. 16. &c. this charge being often, and almost in the same words Cuckow-like repeated.

1. Tim. 1. 7.

RHEM. 10. [23. Bread.] Christ made the holy Sacrament of vnleauened bread, and all the Latine Church imitateth him in the same, as a thing much more agreeable to signification in it selfe and in our liues then the leauen. Yet our Aduersaries neither follow Christ, S. Paul, nor the west Church, in the same: but rather purposely make choise of that kind that is in it selfe more vnseemely, and to the first institution lesse agreeable. In the other part of the Sacrament they contemne Christ and his Church much more impudently and damnably. For Christ and all the Apostles and all Catholike Churches in the world haue euer mixed their wine with water, for great mysterie and signification, specially for that water gushed together with bloud out of our Lords side. This our Lord did (saith S. Cyprian Ep. 63. ad Cæcilium num. 4. 7.) and none rightly offereth that followeth not him therein. Thus Irenæus (lib. 5. c. 1.) Iustine (Apol. 2. in fine) and all the Fathers testifie the Primitiue Church did and in this sort it is done in all the Masses, of the Greekes. S. Iames, S. Basils, S. Chrysostomes: and yet our Protestants pretending to reduce all to Christ, will not do as he did and all the Apostles and Churches that euer were.

They imitate him not in vnleauened bread and mingling water with wine.

CARTVV. 10. [23. Bread.] So that your tastlesse and unsauoury waters (which haue almost no analogy nor correspondence with the most sauoury nourishment of the body and bloud of Christ) be removed: whether it be leauened or unleauened bread, we will not striue, but take that which the Church shall according to the circumstance of the times and persons ordaine. Howbeit this we dare boldly say, that in the vse of leauened bread we come neerer to the imitation of Christs action then those which take unleauened. For our Saviour Christ tooke the bread that then was vsuall and at hand, there being onely unleauened bread at the feast of the passeouer, and no other to bee gotten: Wee therefore taking the bread which is in ordinary vse, and causing no extraordinary bread to bee made for the nonce, are found to tread more neerely in the steppes of our Saviour Christ. And therefore (unlesse you will renew the Iewish Passeouer of banishing all leauen at the time of the holy communion) your precise imitation of unleauened bread is but apish. Hereof we haue testimony of stories, which testifie the vse of leauened bread: of Councels, which forbid to take unleauened bread of the Iewes: we haue also the assistance of the Greeke Churches (from all antiquity) in this point, which we make more account of, then of the ruines or dead carkesse of the Church of Rome. And those Churches which vsed unleauened bread, vsed no such butterflies as you doe: but had a great Cake which was sufficient for the whole congregation to communicate in, as your own Doctor teacheth. But where you charge us with impudencie for not mingling water with wine in the cup of the Lords table: we returne the charge upon your owne heads, whose damnable boldnesse is such that (as if you had that power over the word of God which the potter hath over his clay) you chop & change, mingle and meddle, make and marre, put to and take fro whatsoever liketh your brainsick heades best. They that brought strange fire into the Tabernacle, were by fire from heaven horribly destroyed, and shall you escape the iudgement of hell, which dare bring in strange water into the Church, and table of the Lord? We say it is strange, because there is not onely no mention of it in the word of God, but that (the drinke then used being called the fruit of the vine) it is evident that there was no mixture of water. For then it had not been the fruit of the vine, but another drinke compounded of water and wine. And therefore that our Saviour Christ and his Apostles ever mingled water with wine in the sacramentall cup, cannot be shewed by any testimony out of the word of God. And (the case of necessity excepted, where the communicants cannot beare the headinesse and strength of the wine) we see not why there may not for simple, be taken as well spiced bread, or pasty crust in the one element, as water mingled with the other. For if mixture be inconvenient in the one, it is also in the other. As for the reason of water gushing forth with the blood of our Saviour Christ, it is frivolous: for thereby the Evangelist onely noteth the place wherein our Saviour Christ was pierced of the Launce man, namely about the heart, where there is a bladder of water to allay the heate which is in the heart. And the Rhemists ought to learne that the cup (or the wine in the cup) is not a sacrament of the bloud of Christ which was shed after that he was slain (with which blood this water came forth) but of that bloud which he shed before his death. As for the custome of the Churches (wherewith as with a tyrant the Rhemists would oppresse us) we nothing doubt, but the beginning of it was lawfull; namely, for that there were in the Church that could not beare the strength of the wines, especially in the East and South Countries, where the wines being strong, are without some allay incommodious to drinke, especially the heate of the countrey, making the heate of the wine lesse sufferable: as there are nôw found in other Churches, which are not able to beare the smaller wine about us, unlesse the Lords cup bee delayed with some water. After, that which was first taken upon occasion, began to be made ceremonial, and in the end esteemed necessary, and significations & mysteries were invented of the people incorporate with Christ, as the water with the wine, idle fansies without any ground of the word of God. And although Cyprian mention the mixture of our Saviour Christs cup, yet he doth it to proue that there ought to be wine in the cup. And the testimonies which hee citeth (and wherein hee placeth a figure of the Lords cup) are such for the most part, as propound pure wine without mention of any mixture. Neither is there in any of the testimonies here remembred, any thing that testifieth of the Apostles mixing water with wine. And whereas you say, that the Greeke Churches use water, not your Master onely, but Pope Iulius (as your master reporteth) say no who further saith, that it may bee gathered of Cyprian, that the Greek Church did not approue this mixture of water. Yea it may be apparantly gathered out of Cyprian, that the Bishops of Rome, and other Italian Bishops about that territory, in Cornelius time, and before, brought in a new institution, and ministred the cup in water onely. Peradventure therefore in the emulation that they had against the Greeke Church, they would minister the cup in water onely, because the Creeke Church did it in wine onely. And therefore we marvell not if Rome now mingle her wine with water, sithence her ancestors (upon whose hands these Romanists are not worthy to poure water) turned their wine into water, or rather the Lords wine into their water.

Verse. 24 And giuing thankes brake, and said: Take ye and eate | THIS IS | MY BODY WHICH SHAL BE DELIVERED FOR YOV: | this do ye for the commemoration of me.

The wordes of consecratiō to be said ouer the bread & wine, the which the Protestants do not.

RHEM. 11. [24. This is.] These words being set down, not in the person of the Euangelists or Apostles, but expressed as in Christs own person, to be said ouer the bread, and the like ouer the wine, are the formes of the Sacrament and words of consecration; neither is it a Sacrament but (as S. Augustine saith) when the words come, that is to say, actiuely and presently bee applied to the elements of the same. Therefore the Protestants neuer applying these words more then the whole narration of the institution, nor reciting the whole (as is said) otherwise then in historicall manner, (as if one would minister Baptisme and neuer apply the word of the Sacrament to the childe, but onely read Christs speaches of the same) make no Sacraments at all. And that these proper words bee the onely forme of the Sacrament, and so to bee spoken ouer or vpon the bread and wine, S. Ambrose plainely, and precisely writeth, recording how far the Euangelists narratiue words do go, and where Christs own peculiar mysticall words of consecration begin: and so the rest of the fathers. *Ambrose lib 4. de Sacram. c 4. & c 9. de init. CARTVW. 11. [24. This is.] First it is false that the consecration of the bread standeth in these words, This is my body. For hee had given thankes or blessed the bread before hee spake these words. And it is one of your Fathers that saith, that Christ could not haue truely said these words, This is my body unlesse that he had first made it his body or ever he spake these words. And as you are here against the truth, so are you against your selues, who haue (upon 1. Cor. 10. 16.) assigned the consecration in the blessing of the cup, in certain words directed to the cup. Augustine saith, that the word comming to the element, maketh the sacrament, but how the word must be actiuely applied, here is no mention. Ambrose also saith, that before the Priest commeth to the consecration, hee useth not his own words, but useth the words of Christ, or of the Scripture, and doth not (as the Iesuits falsly pretend) oppose the words of the Euangelist unto the proper words of Christ: Neither doth hee speake any thing of actiuely or not actiuely. And if the consecration should not bee before these words, both he should giue, and they should take bare bread onely, and not sacramentall bread. Ambrose therefore doth not here determine in what spirituall words the consecration standeth, but that it is (generally) by the words of Christ. Yea he should be utterly contrary unto himselfe (in the second quotation) if he should place the consecration in these words, This is my body, where hee saith,

The

The Lord Iesus himselfe crieth out, This is my body. Before the blessing of the heavenly words it is named another kinde after the consecration the body of Christ is signified. Seeing therefore the body of Christ is not signified by the bread, but after consecration: it is evident by Ambrose that the consecration must needes goe before these words, This is my body. Cyprians meaning is, that by the institution the change is made. For when he saith, before those words it is common meate, referring those words to this is my body, his meaning is to referre it to the whole worke of consecration, as appeareth in the words following. But after it is said of the Lord, Do this in remembrance of me, this is my flesh, and this is my blood. As oftentimes as the matter shall be handled in these words, and in this faith, that substantiall bread and cup consecrated by blessing, profiteth to life and health of the whole man, where it is evident, that he referreth also these words, Doe this in remembrance of me, to the consecration of the sacrament.

The next place of Augustine placeth the consecration in the words or institution of Christ generally, and not in these words, This is my body. In Tertullian there is no such thing, neither in Chrysostom. In the quoting of whom they are so much the more impudent, as their own Cardinall (untruely fathering this opinion of the Latine Fathers) is constreyned to confesse that the Greek Church doth not place the consecration in these words, This is my Body, but in the prayer of the Priest. As for their charge, that we haue no consecration but a bare recitall of the storie repeated unto loathsomnes, it hath been shewed how false it is: for we haue the exposition of the words of the institution, and special prayer to God applyed unto the present matter of the Sacrament. And that this was the consecration which the Churches of God used when they remained in the simplicity of the Gospell, let the Reader understand of Iustin Martyr, who (writing the defence of the Churches of Christ in his time) saith thus. Bread, and a cup of wine and water mingled are brought to him that is the chiefe of the brethren, who (receiving them) prayeth God, and giveth thankes a good space, that done, the whole people confirmeth his prayer, saying Amen. After they that amongst us are called Deacons, give unto every of them that is present a part of the bread, and likewise of the wine and water that are consecrate with thankes-giving: Where (beside that hee assigneth the consecration to be in the thankesgiving, contrary to that which the Iesuites alledge him for) he neither mentioneth that the Minister did lay hand of the bread or wine, nor yet direct his words either to the bread or cup, or mutter words after them, but contrariwise that (immediately after the Minister had prayed, and the people had said Amen to his prayer) distribution was made of the Sacrament. It would be tedious to shew the doubtfull opinions of the Papists touching the time and meanes of consecrating, whether before the delivery of the Sacrament, or after, or whether by the words of Christ, or some other words: which notwithstanding these upstarts (as falsly as rashly) undertake to decide.

RHEM. 12. [24. My body.] When the words of Consecration be by the said impietie of the Protestants, thus removed from the element: no maruell if Christs holy body & blood be not there, or that it is now no more a Sacrament, but common bread and wine. So they that vniustly charge the Catholike Church with the defrauding the people of one peece of the Sacrament, haue in very deed left no part nor spice of Sacrament, neither following Christ, as they pretend, nor S. Paul, nor any Euangelist, but their own detestable Sect, hauing boldly defaced the whole institution, not in any accidentall indifferent circumstances, but in the very substance and all. The right name is gone, the due elements both gone, no blessing or consecration, or action ouer them, the formes bee gonne: and consequently the body and blood, the Sacrament and the Sacrifice.

The Protestants haue taken away the B Sacrament altogether.

CARTVV. 12. [24 My Bodie.] You travell sore, but you bring forth nothing but winde, you make a great paper crack in the eares of your Reader by stur and boysterous words, but there is no bullet of reason good or bad. Notwithstanding if we had no consecration, as you say, (and say onely) think you therefore that you are quit of the horrible sacrilegde which you commit in turning away the cup of the Lord from his people? or was it not impudency enough in you, to passe by this place of Paul (which teacheth the communion and participation of both parts of the Sacrament to the whole Church of men and women) without confession of your robbery; unlesse you falsly charge us to haue no part of the Sacrament, to the end that your sinne might seeme lesse which make proper of one part, which indeed haue none at all.

RHEM. 13. [24. This do.] By these words, auctoritie and power is giuen to the Apostles, and by the like in the Sacrament of Orders, to all lawfull Priests onely. No maruell then that the new hereticall Ministers being lay men, giue the people nothing but bare bread and wine, prophane, naked, and naturall elements voide of Sacrament and all grace. See the Annotations vpon S. Luke chap. 22. 19.

The power to consecrate giuen to priestes onely.

CARTVV. 13. [24 Do this.] This is spoken as well to the Church, as to the Ministers thereof, for as the Ministers are bidden to minister this Sacrament, so are the people commanded to take it at their hands; for further answer look before upon Math. 26. 26.

RHEM. 14. [24. Take and eate.] This pertaineth to the receiuing of those things which by consecration are present and sacrificed before: as when the people or Priests in the old Law did eate the hostes offered or part thereof, they were made partakers of the sacrifice done to God before. And this not the substance, or being, or making of the Sacrament or Sacrifice of Christs body and blood: but it is the vse and application to the receiuer, of the things which were made and offered to God before. There is a difference betwixt the making of a medecine of the substance and ingredience of it, and the taking of it. Now the receiuing being but a consequence or one of the ends why the Sacraments was made, and the meane to apply it vnto vs: the Aduersaries vnleamedly make it all and some, and therefore improperly name the whole Sacrament and ministration thereof, by calling it the Communion. Which name they giue also rather then any other, to make the ignorant beleeue that many must communicate together: as though it were so called for that it is common to many. By which collusion they take away the receiuing of the Priest alone, of the sick alone, of reseruing the consecrated Host and the whole Sacrament. Against which deceite, know that this part of the Masse is not called Communion, for that many should concurre together alwayes in the exter-nall Sacrament: but for that we do communicate or ioyne in vnitie and perfect fellowſhip of one body, with all Chriſtian men in the world, with all (we ſay) that eate it through the whole Church, and not with them onely which eate with vs at one time. And this fellowſhip riſeth of that, that wee be, euery time we receiue either alone or with company, partakers of that one body, which is receiued throughout all the world. It is called Communion (ſaith S. Damaſcene) and ſo indeed it is, for that by it wee communicate with Chriſt, and be partakers of his fleſh and diuinitie, and by it do communicate and are vnited one with another, onely let vs take heed that we do not participate with Heretickes. And when the Apoſtle ſaith, that all be one bread and one body that are partakers of one Bread, hee meaneth not of them onely that communicate at one time and place: but that all bee ſo, that communicate in vnitie through the whole Church. Then the name Communion is as ignorantly vſed of them, as the name of Supper.

Lib. 4. c. 14 de orthod. fide.

CARTVV. 14. [24 Take and eate.] Here we are accuſed of vnlearnednesſe, why ſo? becauſe forſooth, we do not diſtinguiſh beeween the ſacrifice of the bread, and between the application of it by receiuing: We confeſſe frankly thatwe haue attained to no ſuch learning as to diſtinguiſh that which is not at all. And ſay further, that you are too groſſe diſputers, who preſuming a ſacrifice in the bread, which we flatly deny, ſo make your concluſions againſt vs. Howbeit wee confeſſe that our Sacrament is the ſpirituall feaſt or banquet of a ſacrifice offered for us, but that ſacrifice was made npon the Croſſe once for all, and upon that Altar onely. And the Apoſtle, as hath been ſhewed, doth evidently oppoſe the Supper of the Lord (not unto the ſacrifice of the carnall Iſraelites, or of the filthy Idolaters, but) to the banquet or feaſt, that was after the ſacrifices were offered. And where you ſay, that this receiving is not of the ſubſtance, you haue Paul for your adverſary, who (affirming that the bread which wee break is the communion of the body of Chriſt) declareth that the receving is of the ſubſtance and eſſence of the Sacrament: for thereby is evident that there muſt be a communication of one bread, to note out the ſpirituall communication with Chriſt. If therefore the receiving of Chriſt be eſſentiall in the inward matter of the Sacrament, the receiving of the bread muſt needs be eſſentiall in the outward matter thereof. And if we ſhould accord you a ſacrifice, yet the ſimilitude which you bring of making of a medicine, and the receiving of it, is fooliſh: For we make not the receiving of bread eſſentiall uuto bread, but unto Sacramentall bread, which is not bread alone, but the bleſſing, breaking, giving, &c. After this, they quarrell with us, for that we call this holy Sacrament commonly the Communion: But if we are to bee charged for commonly calling it the name of Communion (which title the Apoſtle himſelfe giveth unto it) how deeply are they to be charged which call it commonly by the name of Maſſe, whereof neither Law nor Prophet, neither Evangeliſt nor Apoſtle ever made mention. But herein ſtandeth our great fault, that by the common uſe of this title we would make men beleeue that many muſt communicate together: It is true, that we would haue them ſo beleeue; and unleſſe the Apoſtle would haue them beleeue the ſame, let them hardly not beleeue us. And firſt of all this is evident, in that the Apoſtle ſheweth that our communion is ſealed in that wee are all partakers of one bread, which ſtriketh down both your fooliſh ſhiftes whereby you ſay that it is called a communion, becauſe we communicate all with Chriſt, and becauſe we communicate with other that partake the Sacrament in other Churches of the world. For although all the faithfull (even thoſe that never received the Sacrament) by faith comunicate with Chriſts body; yet do they alone communicate Sacramentally, which haue their communion ſealed by the outward action of eating of one Sacramentall bread. And that the Apoſtle meaneth the communinn of thoſe, that in one Congregation or Church eate together, and not of the communion of us, with thoſe that receiue the Sacrament in another Church, it is evident, for that he placeth the ſeale of this communion in eating all of one bread and of one Table: Where, as they that communicate in another Congregation or Church, communicate not of one Table or Bread with them that are ſo removed, no more then they that celebrated the Paſſeover in divers houſes, were partakers of one Lambe or kid; For notwithſtanding that Chriſt (who is the Lamb and the Bread) be but one, yet the outward matter of the Sacrament cannot be one but many, according to the number of places wherein the Sacrament is miniſtred. Secondly, he commandeth that they ſhould tarry one for another when they aſſemble themſelues to celebrate the holy Supper, it being therefore a commandement, that they ſhould tarry one for another, it muſt needs follow that many muſt receiue together. Thirdly, the Apoſtle oppoſeth the private houſe (for their private meates) to the Church for the communion. Againe, the inſtitution as it is recorded of the three Evangeliſts and the Apoſtle, doth require that where it is miniſtred, there ſhould be both one that ſhould giue the Sacrament, and others to receiue it: And that the Miniſter ſhould not onely take the Sacrament himſelfe, but that he ſhould be able to ſay, Take it unto others, which cannot be done in your lurching Maſſe, where the Prieſt eateth up all, and cannot ſay to any other but in mockery, Take eate. Laſt of all, ſeeing you will haue it a ſacrifice, and of that kind, that they for whom it is offered ſhould be partakers thereof, it muſt follow, that this being offered (as you ſay) for the people, they ought to be partakers of it by eating: for in thoſe ſacrifices whereof the people might partake, it was not at their pleaſure and choiſe, whether they would partake or no, but they were bound to take their part of them. Heereof there is an evident teſtimony in Dioniſius Areopagita (as he is called by you) who affirmeth, that the diſtribution of one bread and one cup Preacheth unto them a heavenly unity, as to men that are fed together. And the Greek Scholiaſt upon him, asking, wherefore it is called communion? anſwereth, for that all thoſe which are worthy do communicate the holy Myſteries. Chryſoſtome alſo (reproving certaine that came not to the holy Sacrament with the reſt) ſaith, But thou doſt not communicate unto that which is common. And in another place, asking wey he doth not ſay participation but communication: he anſwereth, That communication is more then participation, for as that body is united unto Chriſt, ſo we by this bread are united one with another. And in another place he affirmeth, that the ſtanders by which communicate not do a notable iniury unto Chriſt. The Greek Scholiaſt ſaith, Hee gaue in common to all, but thou entreſt thy ſelfe off from the poore, and from the body of the Church. And againe, that you diſgrace that which is the Lords by making it yours private, and dishonour the Church wherein you meete to celebrate the Lords Supper. Anacletus the Bishop of Rome (as it is said of him) ordained that whosoeuer did not communicate after consecration he should not be suffered to come into the Churches bounds. And against this Damascene hath not a word who speaketh onely of the Communion that we haue one with another, not determining the Communion either with those in other Churches, or with those in one and the same Church. *Tom. 1. Verse. For as often as you shall eate this bread, and drinke the chalice, ‖ you shall shew the death of our Lord vntill he come.

RHEM. 15. [26. You shall shew.] Vpon this word the Heretickes fondly ground their false supposition, that this sacrament cannot rightly be ministred or made without a sermon of the death of Christ: and that this and other sacraments in the Church, be not profitable, when they be ministred in a strange language. As though the grace, force, operation, and actiuitie together, with the instruction and representation of the things which they signifie, were not in the very substance, matter, forme, vse, and worke it selfe of euery of the sacraments: and as though preaching were not one way to shew Christs passion, and the Sacraments another way: namely the Sacraments, containing in the very kinds of the elements and the action, a most liuely representation of Christs death. As wisely might they say, that neither Abels sacrifice nor the Paschall lambe could signifie Christs death without a sermon. How Christs death is shewed by the B. sacrament it selfe, without sermon or otherwise.

CARTVV. 15. [26. You shall shew.] Of Iohn and the Apostles it is expressly mentioned, that they administred the Sacraments with preaching before they ministred. And the Iesuites confesse, (in their note upon vers. 21.) that it is the iudgement of the most, that Christ had a long Sermon before the administration of the Supper. Wherefore in urging a Sermon before the Communion, we are not fond, vnlesse it be fondnesse to follow the example of Christ, and the perpetuall practise of the Apostles, and Apostolicall Churches. And albeit wee hold it a thing most conuenient that there should be alwayes a Sermon before the administration of the Sacraments (especially of the Lords Supper, where all the receivers are teachable) and that in such sort, as the want thereof is a deformity in the Church; yet we hold it not so necessary, that the Sermon should alwayes immediatly go before, as that without it the Sacrament ought not to bee ministred. And the reason of the Iesuites, that the elements and action containe in them a liuely representation of the death of Christ, is indeed very fond: for although they so doe, yet they do it not but when the Analogie between Christs body and bloud with the bread and wine, and the proportion between the breaking of bread and powring forth of the wine with the breaking of the body of Christ, and the powring forth of his blood, is understood of the receivers: which because it cannot bee knowen without the preaching of the word, nor by the teaching of it in a strange tongue, it is manifest that of these wordes, preach or shew forth the Lords death, it is truely concluded, that preaching both must be before the Sacrament of the Supper. and must not be in a strange tongue. And your owne Monke expounding these words of shewing forth the Lords death, doth say it must be done by remembring, by preaching, and representing, and not onely by representing, as you would haue it. And even so say wee of Abels sacrifice, and the Paschall Lambe, whereupon not the Priests onely, but even the Fathers are bidden to teach their children what was the meaning of the Passeover. *Math. 3. 1. 5. 6. Verse. 27 Therefore whosoeuer shall eate this bread, or drinke the chalice of our Lord vnworthily, he shall be ‖ guilty of the body & of the bloud of our Lord.

RHEM. 16. [27. Guilty of the body.] First hereupon marke well, that ill men receiue the body and bloud of Christ, be they infidels or ill liuers. For in this case they could not be guilty of that which they receiue not. Secondly, that it could not be so heinous an offence to any man to receiue a peece of bread or a cup of wine, though they were a true Sacrament. For it is a deadly sin to receiue any Sacrament with will and intention continue in sin, or without repentance of former sins: but yet by the vnworthy receiuing of no other Sacrament is man guilty of Christs body and blood, but here, where the vnworthy (as S. Chrysostome saith) doth vilanie to Christs own person, as the Iewes or Gentiles did, that crucified it, Chrys. ho. de non contemn. Ec. &c. hom. 60. & 61. ad po. Antioch, Which inuincibly proueth against the heretikes that Christ is really present. The wicked receiue the body & blood. The reall presence is proued by the heinous offence of vnworthy receiuing.

CARTVV. 16. [27. Guiltie of the body.] Whosoeuer eateth the flesh of Christ, and drinketh his bloud (whether in or without the Sacrament) hath life euerlasting: the wicked therefore having no life in them, cannot haue Christ in them. Againe, whosoeuer haue Christ, the same haue the Spirit of Christ: the wicked therefore having not the Spirit of Christ, it followeth that they haue not Christ. Wherefore this opinion of the wicked eating the body of Christ, is a horrible rending of Christ from life, and from his spirit, whereunto he is vnseparably united. And whereas they alledge, that a man is guilty of the body of Christ in vnworthy receiving this Sacrament, to proue the wicked partakers of the body and bloud of Christ; first, they are beside the meaning of the Apostle, which by these vnworthy receivers specially meaneth the faithfull: for they (although beleeving in the sonne of God, they were indeed partakers of the body and bloud of Christ in the Sacrament: yet) for that they came vnreverently vnto the Lords Table (for so much as they made little difference between their comming to the common repast, and to this spirituall banket, passing immediatly from the former to the latter, without due preparation and examination of themselues) they were guiltie of the Lords body, and ate and drunke to themselues iudgement. Howbeit, although they had deserved condemnation, yet the Lord did not condemne them therefore, but chastised them with sickenesse and untimely death, to this end, that they should not be condemned for the vnworthy receiving of the Lords body. And that he meaneth this speech of the faithfull especially, it is evident in that hee opposeth them to the world, that is to say, to the wicked in the world. Wherefore it is from the purpose of the Apostle vpon these words to conclude, that the wicked receiue the body of Christ and his blood, seeing by them he noteth especially the faithfull. Ioh. 6. 54.

Secondly

Secondly, if these words should be applied unto the wicked, yet doe they not argue any participation of them with Christs body; for they both may be, and are guilty of his body and bloud, not for that they receiue them vnworthily, but for that they refuse them vnworthily, being offered vnto them in that they beleeue not in the Son of God. So the guilt of the Iewes is assigned in that Christ offering himselfe vnto them in the preaching of the Gospell, they vnworthily reiected him. And this is the guilt of the vnworthy receivers of the Sacrament of baptisme, not that they put on Christ vnreverently, but that they vnreverently refuse to put him on. As therefore in the preaching of the Gospell and administration of baptisme the guilt is, that Christ kindly offering himselfe, hee is vnkindly refused: so is it in the Supper of the Lord. And hereof Augustines testimony is manifest, who saith of the wicked, outwardly they haue the sacrament of the body of Christ, but the thing it selfe they haue not within, whereof that is a sacrament: and therefore they haue eat and drunke iudgement against themselues. Againe, that Iudas did eate the bread of the Lord, when the other Disciples did eate the bread of the Lord. And yet further, that the Lords table is receiued of some to life, and of other some to death: but the thing it selfe whereof it is a sacrament is received of all to life, and of none to destruction. Also, that they are not to bee said to eate the body of Christ that are not in his body.

De ciuitat. Li. 21. c. 25

Their second reason, that it could not be a heynous or deadly sinne if they should receiue sacramentall bread and wine onely, is blockish and full of ignorance. For (beside that it hath been shewed vpon Math. 5. 23. & 6. 12. that euery sinne is deadly considered in the owne nature, and in the wages that is due vnto it) it must needes be a thicke mist that suffereth them not to see, that as it is a heynous, and (as they speake) a deadlie sinne to receiue the sacramentall water vnworthily, which is not the bloud of Christ, but the Sacrament of his blood: so it is a heynous sinne to receiue the sacramentall bread of the body of Christ vnworthily, although the body of Christ be not received. Yea the most heynous sinne of all which can be committed in the vse either of the Word or Sacraments, is not placed in the vnworthy receiving of Christ, but in the most vnworthy reiecting of him: not in the receiving of him vnreverently into the mouth, but in vnreverently treading him vndemeath the feet. The top therefore and height of all sin being, not in receiving but in reiecting of the Sonne of God, not in taking him vnreverently into the mouth, but in vnreverent treading him vnder our feet: it followeth, that as every one doth more or lesse receiue him, or more or lesse despise him, and tread him vnder feet, whether in the Sacrament or out of it, so he doth more heynously and deadly sinne against the sonne of God. Whereupon it is evident how childishly they conclude out of Chrysostoms words, that because the vnworthy receivers sinne as grievously as those which crucified Christ, therefore they must eate the very naturall body of Christ with their mouth: where yet Chrysostom maketh plain against them, and sheweth that he meant the sacramentall bread onely, for he compareth the eating of the sacrament which the wicked receiue, with a garment, saying that he which polluteth a kings purple robe, faulteth as greatly as if he should cut it a peeces, comparing the Sacrament onely with the Kings robe, and not with the Kings flesh, which he should haue done to haue given any colour of advantage vnto you. And the same Chrysostome otherwhere saith, that he which dishonoureth the Image of the Emperour, he is iniurious vnto the maiesty of the Emperours person whereof that is the Image. Wherefore by Chrysostoms iudgement the outrage or violence done vnto the Sacrament (which is onely a representation of Christ, and a heauenly and holy Image of him) is able to attaint one of high treason against the person of Christ himselfe. Wherefore it appeareth that the invincible hold of the carnall presence in the Sacrament, is found to be so weake, as the very blinde, and lame are able easily to batter it, and beat it downe to peeces.

Confession before the receiving of the B. Sacrament.

RHEM. 17. [28. Let him proue.] A man must examine his life diligently, whether hee be in a mortall sinne, and must confesse himselfe of euery offence which he knoweth or feareth to be deadly, before he presume to come to the holy Sacrament. For so the Apostles doctrine here, with the continuall custome of the Catholike Church and the Fathers example bind him to do. Cypr. de lapsi. num. 7. Aug. Eccles. dog. cap. 53.

CARTVV. 17. [28. Let him proue.] Wee confesse that confession of sinnes is necessary: but if you would hereof conclude auricular confession, you are wonderful husbandmen, that can force that ground of Scripture to beare it, which bringeth forth the bane thereof. For when the Apostle requireth onely that a man should proue himselfe, to the fitting and preparing of him for the worthy receiving of the sacrament: it is evident that his triall and probation by another (so farre as hee is able to sound and try himselfe) is not commanded. Neither haue these Fathers any thing to proue this confession of all sinnes in the Priests eare: whereof looke more at large before vpon Matthew 3. & Actes 19. 18.

Thus do wee Catholikes and the Church of God discerne the holy body and blood by S. Pauls rule, not onely from your prophane bread and wine (which not by any secret abuse of your Curats or Clearks, but by the very order of your booke, the Minister, if any remaine after your Communion, may take home with him to his own vse, and therefore is no more holy by your own iudgement then the rest of his meates) but from all other either vulgar or sanctified meates, *the Cathechuments bread, and our vsuall holy-bread. CARTVV. 18. [29 Not discerning the body.] We must discerne the bread of the Sacrament which is called the body of the Lord, therefore we must adore and worship it, is an Argument that must lye without the dores, vnlesse the Iesuites can build another place or house for it, then the cunningest Logicians haue ever been able to do: For although whosoever adoreth a thing doth discerne it, yet it followeth not that whosoeuer discerneth it, doth by and by adore it. The children of Israel (under the Law) discerned between one day and another, between one place and another, one meate and another, between Man a Sacrament and common bread; between the Lambs flesh in the Passe-ouer, and other at the common table, between the vsuall vessels in the house, and those that were consecrated unto the service of God: Wee also discerne and put great difference between the water in Baptisme, and between other water how precious soever it be by confection and distillation; yet neither they nor we (by the Papists own iudgement) either were, or yet are to worship and adore any of these. And if the Sacrament of the Lords Bodie were to be adored (as it is not) yet in your Schooles (which teach the adoration and worship of the Image and Reliques of Christ, and divers other base and contemptible things) it will proue no reall presence of the flesh of Christ. For if an image of Christs body (of your own deuising without any warrant of the word) be to be worshipped, much more is that image of Christs Body that he himselfe hath erected and set up in the Church, to be worshipped and adored: so that if your adoration of the Sacrament were religious (as it is filthy and idolatrous) yet by your own iudgement it should not gaine the Prize that you run for, which is to proue a carnall presence in the Supper. And as in your Schooles, adoration proveth no bodily presence in the Sacrament, so by your doctrine, the bodily presence proveth no adoration: For unlesse you are able to remoue the accidents of bread (whitenesse, thickenesse, roundnesse, plainenesse) whosoever shall worship the Bodie in the Sacrament, the same shall worship accidents; and such accidents as are not personally united unto the Divinity. Now when the body of Christ it selfe is not worshipped, but for the personall union with the God-head of Christ, it is evident, that whosoever worshippeth the Sacrament committeth Idolatry, because he worshippeth that which is not personally united unto the God-head of Christ. And now that you can bring in your Idolatrous adoration, at no dore of the Scripture, you assay if you can get it in at some window of the ancient Writers, which notwithstanding are all shut fast against it.

In the first place of Augustine Epist. 118. there should haue beene nothing requiring answer. were it not that you deale falsly in thrusting in your own word Adoration, where he saith onely that the Sacrament is to bee discerned from other meates by singular veneration, making your simple Reader beleeue that Veneration and Adoration are all one, where Veneration is nothing else but a reuerend approach unto it, whereof your usuall speech of Bede is witnesse, whom you call venerable: your meaning is not (as we iudge) to adore or worship him, but to haue him in good reverence: and therefore this word of Veneration Augustine otherwhere ascribeth to Baptisme as well as heere to the Sacrament of the Lords Table, saying, We reverence Baptisme where ever it is.

In the next place upon Psal. 98. your treachery is notable, for Augustine (obiecting how the Lords foote-stoole which is the earth, should be adored when as God onely ought to be adored) findeth no better answer then this, that Christ which came of the earth is the foot-stoole, saying. Thus wauering up and down I turne me unto Christ because I seek him heere, and finde out without impiety the earth may be adored. And after, his flesh is of earth, which flesh he gaue to be eaten of us unto saluation: where, that by eating of the flesh of Christ, he meaneth the spirituall eating by faith, and not the eating by the mouth, let the Reader look before upon the sixth of Iohn. Whereupon also followeth that this adoration is of the naturall flesh of Christ, which is united unto the Divinity, for whose cause it is adored, as Augustine teacheth in the same place. Where also it is evident, that it is not meant of any flesh of Christ under the Sacramentall bread, for he saith, that no man eateth that flesh but he that first adoreth it, the wicked therefore, not adoring the flesh of Christ cannot eate his flesh, which notwithstanding they should eat (as well as the faithfull) if it were under the forme of bread in the Sacrament. Ambrose lib. 1. cap. 12. de Spiritu Sanct. receiveth the same answer with August, as one that useth the like words, upon the same place, and the same occasion. And hee saith not we adore the mysteries, but we adore Christ in the Mysteries: And saying Mysteries and not Mysterie, hee noteth, that we adore Christ as well in the Preaching of the Gospell, and Sacrament of Baptisme, as in the Sacrament of the Supper. Chrysostom Hom. 24. 1. Cor. is falsified. For there are no such words in him, Wee adore him on the Altar, as the Sages in the Manger. But he concludeth onely that we should come in feare and trembling unto Christ, when we come unto the Sacrament. His words whereupon they would build are these. But thou seest it not in the Manger but on the Altar, not a woman which holdeth him in her armes, but the Priest present, and the Spirit abundantly powred upon the sacrifice that is there set out. Neither doest thou behold his body simply as they did, but knowest his power and his whole administration. As therefore his spirit is seene to be powred from heaven, so was his body seene, and so was his adoration to be directed. But the powring of the spirit was not seene otherwise then by faith, therefore was also not the body of Christ otherwise seene then by faith. And when he saith that the Spirit is powred down abundantly upon the sacrifice, it cannot bee understood of the person of Christ, who after his ascension receiveth no increase or addition of the Spirit, having already received it without measure, and in that fulnesse that his humanity can receiue it in: Wherefore the Sacrifice that receiveth this powring of the Spirit cannot be Christ, bodily present: but must needs be in the bread and wine, in the use whereof, according to the institution of Christ, God doth shed forth his graces plentifully into their hearts that communicate of it. And when he changeth the word of Seeing and Beholding into the word of Knowing: it is manifest that the word seeing and beholding is a borrowed speech from the sight of the bodily eyes vnto the inward sight of the minde, and therefore Chrysost. in Marc. homil. 14. teacheth us to adore the body of Christ in Baptisme. In Nazianzens words in Epitaphio Gregorie, you help your selues, first with a false translation which translate, upon the Altar, for, at the Altar, Secondly (admitting that translation, yet) the testimony hath nothing for your cause, for there is none denieth but that Christ is worshipped upon the Altar, by the administration of the holy Sacrament celebrated in the honour and worship of Christ, but thereof followeth not, that we ought to worship the Sacrament of the Altar. But the words of Nazianzene are flat against you for he saith of his sister, If her hand had laid up any where any part of the figures of the precious body or blond, that she mingled with her teares. Here Nazianzene calleth the parts of the Sacrament not the body and bloud of Christ, but the figures or representations of the body and blond of Christ: neither doth he say that she worshipped that which she carried home, but that she mingled it with her teares. And if it were granted you that the Sacrament is called upon, yet in your schooles, which teach a calling upon the Crosse, saying, O crosse our onely hope in this time of the Passion give increase of righteousnesse unto the godly, &c. It will not follow that the Sacrament is Christ, because it is called upon.

The words of Theodorete dialogue the 2. in Conf. are manifest against you, for saith he after the consecration the mysticall elements depart not from their proper nature, but abide in their former substance, shape, and kind, and are seen and touched as before. Vnlesse therefore you will haue bread and wine, in their substance, shape, kind, and qualities, to be worshipped; it is euident that the sacrament (which Theodorete maintaineth) can not be worshipped, when therefore hee addeth after that they are vnderstood, beleeued and worshipped, as being the things which are beleeued, it must needs be referred either vnto the spirituall things signified by these elements (whereof the elements and outward sacraments beare the name) or else by the word of worship must be vnderstood that reuerence which ought to bee vsed in the communication of those elements set apart to so holy an vse. Denys Hierarch. cap. 3. hath no such thing as is the praying to the sacrament, but hee prayeth vnto Christ that hee would open vnto him the misteries he had in hand, in the which he opposeth Christ whom he calleth most diuine vnto the holy rites. And how far he is from transubstantiation, and consequently from adoration of the sacrament it appeareth in the end of that chapter where hee saith that the priest doth by these sensible things bring Christ (who is inuisible) to bee seene. so farre as that may bee done by image or similitude. As the sacrament of the supper is discerned by celebration of it in the Church or publicke place, so ought the sacrament of baptisme, and the preaching of the word. But of the sacred vestiments there is no manner of mention in the word of God. But it is evident that our Sauiour Christ (who is worthiest to bee followed) celebrated it in his common and ordinary garments, for, where you will haue the washing of the disciples feete to go immediately before the administration of the sacrament, it is euident that the same garment which Christ put of when hee went to wash their feete, the same he put on when he sate down again to celebrate the sacrament with his disciples. And if the sacrament had been celebrated, before the washing of the feete, yet the same proofe is apparant, that for so much as hee put on the same garments after the washing, that hee had when hee rose from the celebration of the supper, that his apparell wherein he ministred the sacrament was ordinary and common. And therefore in this point you haue not onely no colour from the institution of Christ, but the manifest example of Christ against you, Ierome ad Nepot. maketh mention of a coate which one vsed in the myniştery of Christ, but that proveth no consecration of a coate (much lesse a consecration to the speciall celebration of the sacrament of the body of Christ) when as that coate which he speaketh of, was vsed in the whole myniştery of Christ, which is as well in the preaching and administring of baptisme, as in the administration of the supper. The other place of Ierome adu. Pelarg. lib. 2. c. 9. doth not appeare.

Ioh. 13. 4. 12.

If Iohn the Deacon by the peece of coate of Iohn the Euangelists, meane that leafe or plate, which Eusebius saith he ware vpon his head; it is against you, for as much as hee ware that ordinarily whersoeuer he went, if he mean any other relike it is but a beggarly patch, as that which hath no testimony of old and ancient story. And if there were any such relique yet his collection thereof, that Iohn had some priestly apparell which he vsed in the holy mysteries, is so ridiculous that if Pope Gregorie himselfe (in Whose life he writeth this) should make that conclusion we durst tell him that the theeues would haue taken away his treasures, if he had not made his coffers faster then his conclusion. The testimony of Pope Celestinus is clearer then these weake and sicklie testimonies, who declareth that the people are not to be mocked with apparell but taught with doctrine.

The next note of the discerning the Lords body is by hallowing of Corporaces and Chalices, which which chargeth the sonne of God with indiscretion, who contented himselfe with the blessing of the bread and wine without hallowing of cup, table or whatsoeuer beside which serued for the vse of the Lords supper. And for so much as the sanctification of the vessels vnder the Law was a figure of our sanctification in the bloud of Christ: it is manifest that whosoever now bringeth in such consecration of vessels into the Church, defaceth the power and vertue of Christs death, by which the heauenly things haue the truth of that sanctification, which the earthly things had the figure and shadow of. Finally, it is a shamefull profanation of the holy name of God, in applying of it by prayer to such things, for which neither prayer is commanded, nor promise of grace is given when it is sued for. The fathers alledged, proue a separation or dedication of things to the proper service of the holy mysteries, which we approue: but of hallowing or consecrating by such mockeries or dalliances as you vse, they speake nothing. And yet if the hallowing of your Fontes doth not hinder you from discerning between the holy water of Baptisme, and the naturall bloud of Christ, wee see not why your hallowing of the cup should daub up your eyes that you should not discerne between the holy wine of the Lords Supper, and the naturall blood of Christ. 2. Tim. 2. 21.

The next note to discerne the Lords body, is, the remouing of prophane tables to consecrate holy Altars. Altars vnder the Law were Holy, because they were builded vpon the foundation of Gods institution. Now they are prophane, not onely because they haue no institution of God whereupon a stone may be layd, but because they are contrary to the institution which propoundeth a table, and (in the matter of the Eucharist) neuer mentioneth Altar: which is confirmed further, in that this Sacrament is called in the Scripture the Supper of the Lord (whereunto a table doth well agree) and is neuer tearmed a sacrifice, for which an Altar is fit. That it is said, they sate downe, a thing vsed at a table, and strange at an Altar, whereat they sate not, but stood: That they did eate and drinke, which was neuer vsed at an Altar, and is vsuall at a table. For although they did eate of that which came from the Altar, yet they neuer did eate at it. And if your Masonrie of Altars came from the Lords ordination vnder the Law, why should our table be prophane, or your altar holy: considering that euen vnder the Law, there was as well a holy table, as an holy Altar. And (setting apart the example of Christ) by so much the table is fitter now then the Altar: as the Shew-bread standing vpon the table hath a neerer Analogie with the bread of the Sacrament then had the flesh of slaine beasts which was laid vpon the altar. Now your hill-altars (being failed of the holy Scriptures) goe to beg grace of the ancient Fathers: where notwithstanding that they finde some better entertainement then in the word of God, yet is your building of Altars by their hands, like vnto Peters chappell at Rome, which is alwayes building and neuer built. If they present you with some rough stones to the setting of it vp, yet bring they no morter to hold them from falling vpon heapes. For oftentimes they helpe you with the name of an altar, when the thing they signifie thereby is a Communion table, assigning it the Deacons dutie to remoue the Altar, and that the Altar stood in the middest of the Church, and not at the end of the Quire: euen as they terme the Lords Supper a sacrifice vnproperly (because it is a signe of the true sacrifice) when in truth they will onely recommend vnto vs a sacrament. Other some times, euen the naked and bare name of Altar they take away from you, calling that whereupon the * holy things are set (as it is) a table, as also the holy things themselues, they call by their proper names, of signes and Sacraments, and not by the improper and borrowed speech of Sacrifice or Host, yea and if altars were lawfull, yet could they argue no reall presence of the body of Christ vpon them, vnlesse (as they do the bread) so they will transubstantiate the dead bodies of beasts into the body of Christ, not then borne, when those things were laid vpon the altar. Neither hath Augustines Serm. de tempo. 115. any thing thereof: it hath of the keeping of the feast of hallowing of altars, which we suppose your selues do not obserue, whereby it may well bee doubted (as of divers other of those Sermons) whether it bee Augustines or no; especially seeing it giveth so high a commendation to Nebuchadnezzars testimonie of Christ the sonne of God. Last of all, let the good reader vnderstand, that herein the Papists ioyne with the ‡ heathen, which quarrelled with the primitiue Churches that they had no Images, Altars nor Temples. Whereunto agreeth that Sixtus Bishop of Rome was the first that erected altars. Also that Gerson affirmeth, that Siluester Bishop of Rome, was the first that caused Altars to be erected of stone: whereupon it is also by another called a novelty to haue altars builded. Vid. The next note to discerne the Lords body is, that the Priests bee honourable, chaste, sacred: which honour, chastitie, and sacredneſse, is not onely in the single but in the married estate of the Ministers, marriage being both honourable, chaste, and sacred. In the first place of Ierom (epist. ad Heliodorum, cap. 7.) there is no such thing as that wherefore it is alledged. Onely shewing by occasion the preheminence of the Priest vnto the Monke, because hee maketh the body of Christ with his mouth, excommunicateth, &c. he repeateth the words of the Apostle, that he must be the husband of one wife, further he saith not. In the other place (aduersus Iouin. cap. 19.) there is nothing of this matter. But cap. 18. (out of the place of 1. Cor. 7.) hee asketh what manner of good marriage is that which forbiddeth to pray, which suffereth not that a man may receiue the Lords body, where he addeth, as long as he doth the duty of a husband, he cannot doe the dutie of a Christian. And (out of Peter) he interpreteth the honour that husbands are exhorted to giue vnto their wiues, to be abstinence from their company; vpon which false ground he concludeth, that to keepe them company is to despite them, or to doe villany vnto them. If therefore the Rhemists will haue the one, let them take the other. Ambrose 1. Tim. 3. hath nothing to aduance the dignitie of your Sacrament. For the single life that hee desireth in the ministerie, is as well in regard of preaching the word, administration of Baptisme, and other duties of the Minister, as in regard of the administration of the Lords Supper. And hee is flat against you, in that he accounteth marriage in the Bishop amongst lawfull things: although (otherwise), he would not haue him vse his liberty therein. Last of all, this note of discretion of the body of Christ, argueth your Sacrament rather to be an Idoll, then the very body of Christ: seeing it is manifest, that the Idols service of the heathen hath more sought after virgin Priests then ever did the lawfull service Heb. 13. 4. Tit. 2. 5. 1. Thess. 4. 4.

of the true and everliving God.

The next note of discerning the Lords body, is the forbidding of the people to touch it with common hands. The time was (under the Law) when the taste of the faithfull was tied with an honorable bond, of forbearing diuers meates. This being by our Saviour Christ set at a godly freedom, is by you (in your Popish abstinence from certaine meates) set in the stockes againe. And was it not enough for you to bring men into that superstition of not tasting, but you must also forge a new manacle to binde the hand that it should not touch. But this is but a small thing with you, to
Col. 2. 21. carry the marke of the superstition of the weake Iewes, mentioned by the Apostle, unlesse you carry also the brand of the proud Pharisees, the sworne enemies of our Saviour Christ. For (their dotage excepted) where ever read you that the hands of all the people are common, or (which is all one)
Mar. 7. 2. Ioh. 13. 10. uncleane. Haue you not read, that those whom Christ hath once washed, are wholly and altogether cleane? And if they be cleane in the whole, how can their hands be vncleane? What Niter also and sope hath the Priest gotten to scoure his hands with, that his hands should be cleane, and all the Churches foule? And if the hand be not cleane to receiue it, how is the mouth, which receiueth the same pollution from the heart that it doth. And should there be more unreverence in receiving the holy Sacrament in an unsavoury sheepes or dogges skin, then in that hand that was bought with the pretious bloud of the sonne of God?

But as in other things your religion is nothing else, but a chanell house of all dead rotten and superstitious ceremonies, and errours of all times; euen so it appeareth that here also that which the Church of God threw out from her as a carion ceremony which might greatly annoy her; they haue taken vp for an ornament in their popish synagogue, for it appeareth that in times past, men would not take the sacrament with their bare hands: but with an instrument of siluer or gould, as the Ita-Constantinop 6. cap. 101. lians now take their meate with a forker. But the Councell doth manifestly forbid this, and condemneth it, for that thereby a thing that hath no life is preferred to the image of God; and it appointeth for penaltie separation from the holy sacrament as well to the giuer as to the taker. Nazianzene (oratione ad Arianos) reckoning vp certen wicked things committed of the Arrians, hee bringeth this as one, that the furniture which was dedicated to the ministerie of holy things was not to bee handled of prophane and wicked hands, whereby is manifest that by prophane hands hee meant vngodly hands; as doth also the example of Balthasar (following) euidently declare, wherefore by this saying no Christian hands are counted prophane. And if you could raise from the graue, that ceremony of the Iewes, of not touching of things for the holy uses whereunto they were applied, yet that could not proue any reall presence of the Lords body in the bread of the supper: seeing things then not lawfull to bee touched with the hands of any but of the priest, perished with the vse. Howbeit (if you will needs pull out the olde Sinagogue out of her graue again) you are not altogether destitute of reason, to forbid that the people should touch your sacrifice as that which (being vncleane and abominable) will make them such likewise that haue any thing to doe with it.

Another note to discerne the Lords body by, is the care which is taken that no part of either kinde fall to the ground; an euident argument against your fabulous vntruth of carnall presence, for where as the glorious body Christ, which once died, and was broken that it should
Rom. 6. 9. 19. neuer die or bee broken more, by you it is laid so vpon the racke and vnioynted, that one part will not cleaue vnto another, but mouldreth and crumbleth away like some mellow and rotten clot, for it is impossible for the accidents of whitenesse, breadth &c. without a subiect to fall to the ground. And if they should fall, yet for so much as (in your iudgement) they are not part of the body of Christ (but the sacrament thereof) the care and curiositie to saue them from falling maketh no difference nor discretion of the Lords body. As for the authoritie alleaged herein, thus far it may haue a reasonable vnderstanding, that men cõming to so holy a table, & precious banquet, should nor negligently or careleslie either suffer the bread to fal or the wine to be spilt Howbeit when your author affirmeth that it is as great a sin to neglect or to let fall the word of God, as the body of Christ: it is euident that he vnderstandeth by the body of Christ not his naturall but his sacramentall body, for we suppose, you wil not say, that it is as great a fault to let a word of the doctrine preached (by negligence) to go into the aire, as to let a part of the natural body of Christ go to the ground, your conclusion that you draw from this that therefore if any part of the sacrament remain it should be reserued is frivolous, and rather concludeth the contrary. That for so much as a reuerent regard is
Exo. 12. 10. & 23. 18. & 29. 34. Leu. 7. 15. Leu. 7. 16. to be had in the eating and drinking of them; therefore if any thing were remaining, it should not be kept, as we read to haue been commanded by the Lord in the holy things, whereof some (of higher degree in ceremoniall holinesse) might not be kept unto the next morrow, some other might be reserued vnto the next day onely. In the stelth (or sacrilege rather) of the cup, you cast many ridiculous doubts, and aduentures: and why are you not in some iealousie of the mouse, the moulding or leesing of it, (which is hazarded by the reseruation) seeing the Councell of Arles doth so seuerely reuenge that matter. And herein is your mealy God, far inferiour vnto the Man in the wildernes, which being reserued at Gods commandement, was free from moulding, and other putrefaction, as yours no doubt would be, if it had the like preseruatiue, and brine of the Lords commandement thereunto, Whereby is also euident, that reseruation (if any ought to be) is no true note to discern the naturall body of Christ, from other creatures. Origine (one of your fathers out of whom you Orig. hom. 5 in Leu. Clemens 2. epist. ad Iacob. frat. Euagr. lib. 4 cap. 36. would deduce this conclusion) is apparantly against you, saying. The bread which our Lord gaue vnto the Disciples and said to them take it and eate it he deserred or reserued not, nor commanded it to be reserued vntill the next day. Your Clement will not haue that the remnants of the sacraments should be reserued, vntill the morrow, it appeareth also, that the Church in times past, vsed to giue the remainder of bread and wine, after the sacrament vnto yong children and schollers: which it would neuer haue done, if it had esteemed those elements out of the publick vse of the Lords supper to haue bin the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, much lesse the naturall body and blood it selfe: considering that they were not able to haue examined themselues, thereby to be prepared to the worthy receiuing of them.

And

And therefore your clamorous outcries (a little after) against the communion booke (which licenseth the minister to take the remainder home to his priuate vse) is but a fit of your popish franzie. Here therefore let the reader obserue that for the prose of the manifold honours, wherewith they honour their sacrament, they haue not brought so much as one testimony of the holy scripture, for warrant of any of them, whereupon let him bee assured that (for so much as the honour and religious worship of their sacrament hath no ground in the word) their sacrament also hath nothing therein to stay it self vpon, for if the Lord had ordained his sacrament to haue been God: he would (doubtlesse) haue appointed and laid forth an honor & worship answerable thereunto. Wherfore the honor therof being from the Deuill and Antechrist because it is not of God nor of Christ: it followeth also that their sacrament is come from the bottomlesse pit of hell.

Examination of our consciences with publike and generall confession of our sinnes we agree to be requisite before, and at the approach unto the Lords table. But (considering that the same must be done by Infidels conuerted unto the truth, when they are admitted to the Sacrament of Baptisme) it can be no certaine note of discerning the Lords body. Continence we wish at that time, for that (being more free from earthly things) we may hold our mindes in greater attention, and deeper meditation of the heavenly mysteries. But because we haue no warrant, we dare make no law in that poynt, not know any that you haue made in that behalfe. To come fasting in peaceable times wee also like wel of, and practise it where weakenesse and feebleneſse of the body doth not call for some staffe of bread to stay upon. And Augustine 118. Epist. must be understood necessarily to admit these (and such like) exceptions. For himselfe doth (even there) declare, that the Church (for a more liuely memoriall of the example of Christ) once in the yeare celebrates the Sacrament after the common supper. As for that he calleth the Sacrament the Lords body, it is apparant that therein he giveth the name of the thing signed unto the signe, which is the bread, as his owne words doe declare, wherein hee opposeth the common meates unto this meat set apart for another use.

His next place (lib. 2. cap. 26, de peccat. merit.) albeit it put a difference of the Sacramentall bread from the common bread, and the bread of those that were not yet sufficiently catechised in the grounds of their Religion: yet how little it maketh to nourish your monster of carnall presence, it is evident, in that he saith of those meates, that entring in at the mouth they go into the belly, and from thence passe into the privy. And here let your own Scotus, Occam. Biel. Durand. with divers other Schoole men (who affirme that the doctrine of Transubstantion cannot be proved neither by Scriptures nor Fathers) put you in remembrance of your impudency which go about to proue it out of both. And if you will not be admonished, yet the indifferent Reader may easily iudge what likelyhood there is of your faithful dealing in the delivering of the places of Scripture and the Fathers (as you pretend) from the bondage whereunto the heretickes tie them, seeing the learnedst and stoutest pillars of Popery, confesse of them that they carry no sent of Transubstantiation. And if upon the yong Novices bread you will ground your holy bread: first, it cannot be divine that is baked in an humane furnace, heate with no fire of the sanctuary which commeth from heaven. Secondly your boldnesse to erect up an other Table in the Church (beside that which Christ hath set) hath a dangerous consequence of cutting Christ and his Church in two, of whose unity, one bread and one Table is the seale. If therefore there be in the Church (beside the Sacramentall bread) another holy bread, it followeth, that there are two Christs, and not one, two Churches and not one. Last of all, if this novices bread taste you so well, how commeth it that you haue translated it to the oldest schollers (truands we should haue said) of your Popish Synagogue, and that it is not now the bread of them that are to be fed with milk, but even theirs also whom you giue your soundest and strongest meat unto. 1. Cor. 10. 17.

You think your selues pounded when you are holden within the rayles of the holy Scriptures: If therefore for disputations sake we inlarge you, and suffer you (for establishment of your religion) to range over all the fields and woods of mens writings, it is notwithstanding out of all reason, that you will not abide in their iudgement, but turkesse and translate things at your own pleasure; yet so far well and considerately, as that thereby you giue testimony that there is not one in all your Churches, apt to receiue the sound food of the holy Sacrament of the Lords Supper, but hath need to be pampered with this pap of your holy bread, with which bread they were so cloyed, that they did not so much as desire to come to the Lords Table, but once onely in a yeare: whereby (by the Councels iudgement) they are unworthy to be counted Christians, the Councels determining that they ought not to come into the account of Christians or Catholickes, which receiue not the Sacrament thrice a yeare: Vnlesse peradventure you meane thus to honor, and discern the Lords body, by visiting of it once onely in the yeare. Seeing therefore (in stead of the holy Sacrament of the Lords Supper) you haue brought in an abhominable Idoll of your own: seeing as your God is an Alien, so his worship is strange, neither acknowledged of any Scripture, nor shaken by the hand of any antiquity, nor so much as saluted or bidden God saue it, by any practise of Churches, remaining in any tollerable state of Gods people: be you assured, that as the Lord hath already rebuked you and blessed his Church, so he will utterly confound you, and establish his Church to all eternity. Concil Elibert. ex Grat. Concil. Agath. cap. 28

Verse. 30 Therefore are there among you many weake and feble, and many sleepe, RHEM. 19. [30. Many sleepe.] We see here by this, it is a fearefull case and crime to defile by sinne (as much as in vs lieth) the body of Christ in the Sacrament; seeing God strooke many to death for it in the Primitiue Church, and punished others by greeuous sicknes. No marueil that so many strange diseases and deaths fall vpon vs now in the world. Vnworthy receiuing.

CARTVV. 19. [30 Many sleepe.] If you would gather heereof that the body of Christ is in the Sacrament, you are far short: seeing even the unworthy looking onely into the Arke (which was a Sacrament of Christ. and not Christ himselfe) cost many thousand liues. 1 Sam. 6. 19

Verse. 31 But if we did | iudge our selues: we should not be iudged.

Penance and satisfaction.

RHEM. 20. [31. Iudge your selues.] We may note here that it is enough onely, to sinne no more, or to repent lightly of that which is past: but that wee should punish our selues according to the weight of the faults past and forgiuen: and also that God will punish vs by temporall scourges in this life or the next, if wee do not make our selues very cleane before wee come to receiue his holy sacrament, whose heauie hands wee may escape by punishing our selues by fasting and other penance.

Διακρίνειν.

CARTVV. 20. [31 Iudge your selues.] Heere is an equivocation, or divers signification of the word in our tongue, which is not in the Greek, signifying to discerne (as themselues haue translated it vers. 29.) and to avoid this Popish Sophistry it had beene good it should haue beene so translated here, whereby the Apostle meaneth the examination and triall of our selues, whether we be in faith and true repentance, such as he had exhorted unto, ver. 28. and therefore is a preparation to come worthily unto the Supper of the Lord, and not any punishment that we should take of our selues for the unworthy receiving of the Lords Supper: which appeareth also heerein, in that afflicting of our selues for the unworthy receiving of the Lords Supper, cannot alwaies turne away the Lords correction (as it appeareth in the example of David) whereas this discerning, or examining of themselues should haue undoubtedly preserved them from the chastisements that were sent for the abuse of the Sacrament. And (in a doubtfull taking of the English word) you ought to haue proved this signification by some circumstance of the Text, if you will take advantage of it, which to do, in steed of discerning the Lords body, you should say, punish the Lords body. Howbeit (granting you the sense you follow) yet can you not carry this affliction further then the Scripture doth, which is to afflict the soule by fasting and griefe of minde. For as your whipping of your selues, it is a part of the will worship which the Apostle whippeth in the Colossians, But the satisfaction you adde, is yet more blasphemous against Christ, and impudently thrust in against the Text; which doth plainely argue that the iudgement that was exercised of the Lord was not to punish the sin that was committed in not discerning themselues, much lesse to take satisfaction for it, but onely to correct and chastise them, as it is expressly noted of the Apostle, who saith, that when wee are iudged of the Lord we are chastised.

2. Sam. 12. 10. 11. 14.

Col. 2. 23.

Verse. 33 Therefore my brethren, when you come together to eate, I expect one another.

RHEM. 21. [33. Expect one another.] Returning now to their former fault and disorder for the which he tooke this occasion to talke of the holy Sacrament, and how great a fault it is to come vnworthily to it: hee exhorteth them to keepe their said suppers or feasts in vnitie, peace and sobriety the rich expecting the pore, &c.

CARTVV. 21. [33 Expect one another.] The casuall particle (concluding of the words immediately going before) doth evidently shew that this is referred to the attendance of another in the receiving of the Sacrament, and not in the Loue-feast, as you would make the Reader beleeue, thereby to shift the deadly stroke which your private Masse receiveth hereby. And thus doth Ambrose and Icrome both expound it.

Verse. 34 If any man be an hungred, let him eate at home; that you come not together vnto iudgment. And the rest I will dispose, when I come.

The Masse is agreeable to the Apostles vse and tradition, the Communion is not.

Aug. ep. 118. c. 6. Aug. tract. 84. in Io & Chryso ho. 21. in Act.

RHEM. 22. [34. I will dispose.] Many particular orders & decrees, more then be here, or in any other book of the new Testament expressly written, did the Apostles as we see here, & namely S. Paul to the Corinth. set down by tradition, which our whole ministration of Masse, is agreeable vnto, as the substance of the sacrifice and Sacrament is by the premisses proued to be most consonant: Caluins supper and communion in all points wholy repugnant to the same. And that it agreeth not to these other not written traditions, they easily confesse. The* Apostles deliuered vnto the Church to take it onely fasting: they care not for it. The Apostles taught the Church to consecrate by the words and signes of the Crosse, without which (saith S. Augustine tract. in Io. 118. Ser. 55. in append. Chrys. ho. 55. in 16. Mat.) no Sacrament is rightly perfited: the Protestants haue taken it away. The Apostles taught the Church to keepe a Memory or inuocation of Saincts in this Sacrifice: the Caluinists haue none. The Apostles decreed that in this sacrifice there should be speciall prayers for the dead. Chrys. hom. 3. in ep. ad Philip. Aug. de cur. pro mort. c. 1. they haue none. Likewise that water should bee mixed with the wine, and so forth, See Annot. in c. 11. v. 23. Bread. Therefore if Caluin had made his new administration according to all the Apostles written words, yet not knowing how many things beside, the Apostle had to prescribe in these words, Cetera cum venero disponam (the rest I will dispose when I come) he could not haue satisfied any wise man in his new change. But now seeing they are fallen to so palpable blindnesse that their doing is directly opposite to the very Scripture also, which they pretend to follow onely, and haue quite destroyed both the name, substance, and all good accidents of Christs principall Sacrament we trust all the world will see their folly and impudency,

Act. 20. 27

1. Cor. 11. 23.

CARTVV. 22. [34 I will dispose.] The Church of Corinth being inferiour to no other Church in the world (in abundance of all manner of blessings of the Gospell) it followeth that it had received the whole body of the doctrine and discipline of the Church, in the observation whereof it might come to the perfect stature of Christ. And seeing that tarrying at Ephesus lesse while then he did at Corinth, he notwithstanding delivered them the whole will of God, and was not debter unto them for any part thereof, much more he is to be iudged to haue performed the same unto this Church. And as touching the holy Sacrament of the Supper (whereunto they would sow a patch under the colour of these words) the Apostle both plainely professeth that he had delivered that unto them which he received of the Lord, and also heere in this place he sets it down againe: And therefore if hee had any thing behind touching the Supper of the Lord. it was of those things whereof he had received no precise commandement of the Lord, bnt onely were matters of circumstance cumstance variable by time and place. And this iudgement hold the ancient Fathers, that both in this case and all others, the determination of all controuersies should not be by traditions, but by the holy Scriptures. So saith Tertullian, Let Hermogenes shew it written; and if it be not written, let him feare that woe which is appointed to them that put to or take from. And another, let the holy and diuinely inspired scriptures suffice to the discerning of truth. Therefore it is untrue that no sacrament is well consecrate without the signe of the Crosse. And it were absurd, that the Apostle (declaring the fearefull danger wherein they stood by reason of the unworthy cōmunicating unto the holy Sacrament) should not further teach the Corinthes those necessary pointes, whereby after they might avoid that guilt. And how vaine it is that the Apostles used the signe of the Crosse, or recommended it unto the Churches, it may appeare, in that the principall argument wherewith it is maintained (drawne of Constantines signe of it in the aire) maketh so little for it. For Eusebius declareth, that the signe that Constantine saw, had the forme of the Greek letters χ and ρ, whereby the name of Christ (beginning with those two letters) was signified, and that it was called the signe of the crosse, onely for that it had some resemblance of the crosse. Neither did he carry the signe of the crosse in his helmet, but these two letters, thereby (in all likelihood) to signifie that he looked for victory in no other name then in Christs. So that the Bishops that drew that to the signe of the crosse, were rather driven by the practise of the Church in their dayes wherein the use of crossing had prevailed) then led with any direction of the vision which Constantine had seene. Wherefore this must needes be a crosse opinion of the crosse of Christ; the originall cause of the excessiue estimation whereof in the primitiue Chutch (cleane contrary to the estate of the Church now) hath been before declared. Athanas. in Iorem.

Touching Inuocation of Saints in this sacrifice, Augustine hath nothing in the place quoted, (Chrysostom homil. Acts 21.) is wrested from his meaning: for he doth not say they were called upon, but that they were called for; his words are, what seemeth you that offering is made for the Martyrs, that they are called for: that this is the meaning of the word inuocantur he sheweth by and by, saying, It is a great honour to be named when God is present. And that the Greeke word is so used, it appeareth by the place in Genesi, where it is said, that Iosephs two sons should be called by Iacobs name, and accounted the sonnes of Iacob, as well as those Patriarkes which were immediatly descended of him. This sence of Chrysostome is confirmed by Augustine, who affirmeth, that in the Supper of the Lord, the Saints were named by the Priest, but in no sort called upon by him. Let them also look to this, how well it agreeth, that those which we offer or pray for, should be prayed unto by us. Beside that, it is false that Chrysostome doth make that (whatsoever it is) Apostolicall. And Epiphanius doubteth not (by the Apostles owne words) to charge them with the guilt of the doctsine of Divels, which pray unto the dead. So far is it that the Apostles should giue any such commandement. And if that the authority of Epiphanius should not be enough to beare downe the invocation of Saints, yet the Prophet (saying that he hath none in earth, nor any in heaven, but God to haue his recourse unto in his neede) is flat against all such invocation: and so is Ambrose also, shewing that to sue to the king wee haue need of some under officer, but to God we need no spokesman. For the other poynt of praying for the dead, it is not denyed but that it was used of the old Churches, but farre otherwise then it is used in Popery. For because the Eucharist is a sacrament of thankesgiving, they tooke occasion thereof to praise God for the happy life and death of the faithfull departed, and (so far forth as they tooke the Sacrament to be a pledge of the resurrection of the dead) they also prayed for their resurrection, wherein their ioy begunne should be perfected, which is nothing else but that the Lord would hasten his comming, wherein all his enemies, and death the last enemy, might be put under his feet. Hereof it commeth, that they pray not for indifferent men (which are neither in heaven for their wealth in godlinesse, nor in hell for their hoord and treasure of ungodlinesse, but in Purgatory) but they pray for the most blessed Saints, Patriarkes, Prophets, Apostles, Preachers, Euangelists, Martyrs, Confessors, Virgins, and amongst them for the holy virgin Mary, of all which (we hope) you will not say, that they haue need to bee released of their sinnes, or of some place of little ease, where they are in durance for their sinnes. Wherefore this kinde of prayer (being no bellowes to blow the fire of purgatory with) fighteth faintly for you; which when you haue well thought on, you will easily dismisse it. And in these two kindes of prayer which are before recited, it is not dangerous that wee confesse prayer for the dead to be ancient. Howbeit, considering that the mystery of iniquity (begun under the ground in the Apostles times) was at these times much advanced, we will not undertake the defence of whatsoever the Fathers haue in this poynt. Albeit Augustine (de cura pro mortuis, one of those two that are heere quoted to proue it Apostolicall) placeth more strength in the custome and use of this kind of prayer, then in any thing else. And seeing Augustine goeth about there to proue, as well as he can, that this prayer for the dead hath ground of the Scriptures, his testimony is foolishly and unadvisedly alledged of you to proue it in the number of Apostolicall unwritten verities. The same also may be said of the mixture of water with the wine, which is otherwhere avouched as a thing grounded of the Scriptures, but here is affirmed to haue a strength of Apostolicall tradition by word without writing: So deserue they to haue their tongues confounded which build Babell. Wherefore it is manifest, that M. Calvin, which setteth nothing upon the Lords table but that which the Scripture furnisheth him of, hath satisfied all men which are godly and wise to sobriety. Gen. 48.16 *Aug. de Ciu. MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 8 TO one certes by the spirit is giuen ‡ the word of wisedome: and to another, the word of knowledge according to the same Spirit.

RHEM.

RHEM. 1. [8. The word of wisdom.] All these gifts be those which the learned call Gratias gratis datas: which hee bestowed often, euen vpon ill liuers, which haue not the other graces of God whereby their persons should be gratefull, iust and holy in his sight.

CARTVV. 1. [8. The word of wisedom.] They are Sophisters, and not truely learned, which make the title of Grace freely giuen, proper to certaine gifts of the Spirit which is common to all, yet are we not ignorant that by a trope of the whole for the part, the learned (after Paul) call the extraordinary gifts χαρίσματα.

Verse. 29 ‡ Are all miracles? haue all the grace of doing cures; doe all speake with tongues; doe all interpret.

RHEM. 2. [29, Are all miracles?] S. Augustine ep. 137. giueth the same reason, why miracles and cures be done at the memories or bodies of some Saincts more then at others: and by the same Saincts in one place of their memories rather at other places.

CARTVV. 2. [28. Are all miracles?] If (because some haue the gift of working miracles, other not) it followeth that in some places miracles are done at the memories of Saints and in some not: it followeth also that some of the Saints departed should haue the discretion of spirits, and some not, that some should be teaching Saints, and some mute Saints; yea thereof it followeth, that even the wicked should worke miracles after their death as well as the Saints, seeing in their life time they had the gift of working miracles as well as the godly. But seeing the Apostle declareth (under the gift of tongues) that all extraordinary gifts shall cease, yea and ordinary also, onely loue excepted; it must needs follow, that after this life there are no miracles wrought by any Saint whatsoever. Neither doth Augustine, Epist. 137. make one of these the cause of another, but compareth them onely together, and saith, that (as some had the gift of miracles, and some not, so) miracles were wrought in Millaine and not in Asnick.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 9 To another ‡, faith in the same spirit: to another, the grace of doing cures in one Spirit.

Zealous faith

RHEM. 3. [9. Faith in the same.] This faith is not another in substance then the common faith in Christ, but is of another accidentall quality onely, that it is of more feruor, deuotion, zeale, and confident trust, specially for doing of miracles.

CARTVV. 3. [9. Faith in the same.] The faith here spoken of, is the same both in substance and qualitie with the common faith of Gods children, and is no wayes extraordinary, as you make it. This is evident for that the Apostle maketh here a division of the gifts of the spirit, which is, that either they are ordinary or extraordinary. Then he setteth forth certaine kinds of the ordinary gifts, whereof some are proper to the teachers (as knowledge to the Doctor, and wisedom to the Pastor) other generall to the whole Church, as faith in beleeving that which is taught. And that hee can not meane here the miraculous faith it is cleare, for that the faith whereby miracles are wrought, being contained in another member of this division, cannot be confounded with faith here. And if it were divers from the common faith, yet could it not differ from it in the quality of confident trust, considering that confidence is incident to the common faith.

Verse 15 If the foote should say, because I am not the hand, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body?

Vnitie.

RHEM. 4. [15, If the foote.] The Church is of exceeding great distinction of members, gifts orders, and offices: yet of great concord, concurrence, mutuall communion and participation in all actions of her members among themselues, and with Christ the head of the body.

CARTVV. 4. [15. If the foot.] S.

Verse. 24. That there might be no schisme ‡ in the body, but the members together might be carefull one for another.

Schisme.

RHEM. 4. [25. Schisme in the body.] As Charity and vnity of the spirit, is the proper bond, and weale of the common Body: so is diuision or Schisme, which is the interruption of peace and mutuall Society between the parts of the same, the speciall plague of the Church, and as odious to God as rebellion to the temporall Soueraigne.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 2 AND if I should haue prophesie, and knew all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I should ‡ haue all faith so that I could remoue Mountaines, and haue not charity, I am nothing.

Charitie.

RHEM. 1. [2. Haue all faith.] This proueth that faith is nothing worth to saluation without works, and that there may be true faith without chairty.

Gal. 5. 6.

CARTVV. 1. [2 Haue all faith.] If by true faith you meane iustifying faith, it cannot be without charitie by which it worketh: neither can it be gathered of this place, considering that it is a compounded proposition, whereof the former part (which is, that if I had all faith and haue no charitie) affirmeth nothing. Secondly, it appeareth that the faith heere spoken of (as appeareth by the application) is that perswasion whereby the parties endued therewith were able to work myracles. And the word all, noteth manifestly the highest degree of doing miracles. That whereas some had faith to do some miracles, and not othersome: the Apostle sheweth that if hee had such a miraculous faith, that he could do all miracles, and haue no loue, it were nothing, as it is manifest by the example of moving mountaines, which our Saviour Christ noteth as a maister miracle amongst all other. Now that the fullest and perfectest faith of doing miracles may be without charity, it hurteth not us, which hold that iustifying faith cannot be sundred from charity. Mat. 17. & 19. Math. 17. 20.

Verse. 10 But ‡ when that shall come that is perfect that shall be made voide that, is in part.

RHEM. 2. [10. When that shall come.] By this text S. Augustine lib. 22. Ciuit. cap. 29. proueth that the Saincts in heauen haue more perfect knowledge of our affaires heere, then they had when they lived here.

CARTVV. 2. [10 When that shall come.] The Apostle sheweth that this fulnesse of knowledge shall be when Prophesie ceaseth, which (for that it shall not be untill the end of the world) it is evident that he cannot understand (by this perfection of knowledge) the Saints privity to the affaires which the Church doth upon earth. Secondly, it appeareth by the 12 verse that this knowledge, (whereof the Apostle speaketh) is referred unto the knowledge of God, and therefore is guilefully carried to the knowledge of earthly affaires. And therefore Augustine (lib. 22. Civi. cap. 29.) is evidently falsified; which speaketh not of the knowledge which the Saints departed haue of matters done in earth, but of the knowledge which they shall haue of God. And so is the title of his discourse, Of the manner of the sight wherewith the Saints shall see God in the glasse to come.

Verse 13 And now there remaine, faith, hope, charitie, these three. But the ‡ greater of these is charitie.

RHEM. 3. [13. Greater of these.] Charitie is of all the three the greatest: How then doth onely faith, being inferiour to it, saue and iustifie, and not Charitie?

CARTVV. 3. [13 Greater of these.] It is a plaine Sophisme to conclude that charity is simply the greatest, because it is in some one point the greatest: for the Apostle manifestly restraineth this greatnesse of charity unto the durablesse thereof, in comparison of the other two vertues, which cause of greatnesse Augustine expressly noteth. As if the Apostle would say. These three vertues are more stable and permanent then the gift of Prophesie and tongues (as those which abide all the time that we are in this life) where the gifts of Prophesie and tongues, neither remaine alwaies in the Church, as experience doth manifestly declare; neither yet in the persons that are once endued with them, as appeareth in the seventy Elders, Eldad, Medad, and Saul: And yet amongst these three charity is more durable. Now it is easie to understand, that some thing may excell another in one property, and yet notwithstanding be far inferiour to that same thing, which it so excelleth. For a horse in swiftnesse, and a fish in swimming, go farre beyond a man, and yet it followeth not, that either of them apart, or both of them together, be better then a man. But whom should wee better call to witnesse against you, then your own selues, which (euen in your former note) make faith to endure after charity is departed, and yet will not therefore grant that faith is more excellent then charity. Last of all, although charity were acknowledged to be more excellent then faith, yet it followeth not thereof that it doth iustifie, no more then it followeth, that because the heart or the head, are the principall parts of a mans body, therefore they are instruments to handle or lay hold of a thing by: For Iustification is not giuen unto faith (for any merite or vertue that is in faith) but for that it hath propertie of apprehending Christ (the righteousnesse of God) to salvation, which neither hope nor charity hath any hability for. Aug. Tom. 10. p. 492. Numb. 11. 25. 26. 1. Sam. 10. 11.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1 If I speake with the tongues of men and of Angels, and haue not charitie: I am become as sounding brasse, or a tinkling cymbal.

RHEM. 4. [1. Not Charity.] Without Charitie, both toward euerie particular person, and specially toward the common body of the Church, none of all the gifts and graces of God bee profitable, Charity.

CARTVV. 4. [1 Not charity.] S.

Verse. 3 And if I should destribute all my goods to be meat for the poore, and if I should deliuer my body so that I burne, and haue not charitie, it doth profite me nothing.

RHEM. 5. [2. Deliuer my body.] Beleeue (saith S. Augustine) assuredly and hold for certaine, that no Hereticke and Schismaticke, that vniteth not himselfe to the Catholike Church againe, how great almes so euer hee giue, yea or shed his blood for Christs name, can possibly be saued. For, many Heretickes by the cloake of Christs cause deceiuing the simple, suffer much. But where true faith is not, there is no iustice, because the iust liueth by by faith. So it is also of Schismatickes, because where charitie is not, iustice can there be none: which if they had, they would neuer pluck in peeces the body of Christ which is the Church. Aug. seu. Fulg. de fid. ad Pet. c. 39. So saith S. Augustine in diuers places, not onely of Heretickes that died directly for defence of their hereresies as the Anabaptists and Caluinists now a dayes doe (for that is more damnable:) but of some Heretickes and Schismatickes that may die among the Heathen or Turkes for defence of truth or some Article of Christs religion. Aug. de verb. Do. ser. 50. c. 2. & in 3. Psal. 34. conc. 2. prope finem. Cypr. de vnit. & num. 8. False Martyrs.

CARTVV. 5. [3 Deliuer my body.] We agree with Augustine, that the death maketh not the Martyr, but the cause: But the wresting of it (to deface the glorious martyrdome of our brethren whose bloud you haue butcherly shed) is not Augustines but yours: Whereunto adde, that although Ezek. 9. an hereticke in his obſtinacy may ſuffer death, yet neither is that ſo commonly and ordinarily ſeene; and the difference of the patience, and cheerefulneſſe with abundant ioy and comfort of the Holy Ghoſt in the Saints of God, is as it were a marke in their fore-head whereby that bleſſed company may be (for the moſt part) eaſily ſundred from the rout of Papiſts, and other Heretickes, whoſe deſeit is in this life to burne at a ſtake, and after (without repentance) to haue their portion in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone for evermore.

The 3. vertues Theologicall. RHEM. 6. [13. Theſe three.] Theſe are the three vertues Theologicall, each one by nature and definition diſtinct from another, and faith is by nature the firſt, and may be and often is before and without Charitie: and truely remaineth in diuers after they haue by deadly ſinne loſt Charitie. Beware therefore of the Heretickes opinion, which is, that by euery mortall ſinne faith is loſt no leſſe then charity.

Church is loſt by mortal ſinnes, not faith, Act. 15. 9. Gal. 5. 6. 1. Tim. 1. 5 Phil. 1. 6. Luk. 22. 32 Ioh. 4. 14. 1. Theſ. 5. 19. 1. Ioh. 5. 14 CART VV. 6. [13 Theſe three.] Neither can charity be ſevered from a iuſtifying faith: neither can faith and charity as the Scripture ſpeaketh of them together, or faith or charity as they are ſpoken of apart, be ſevered in this life from the perſon that once is ſeazed and ſeaſoned with them. They may indeed be cooled, but they cannot be quenched: Againſt which it is ſo far that the commandement of the Apoſtle (Quench not the ſpirit) maketh, that it maketh alſo for it: for every commandement of prayer, having (in the faithfull) a promiſe of grace annexed unto it, it cannot be that true faith which calleth for that promiſe, ſhould miſſe of the obtaining: it being in the number of thoſe petitions which are agreeable unto the will of God. Therefore your Beware of the heretickes is a falſe alarum againſt us, your ſelues are rather to be taken heed of, which overthrow the Apoſtle. For where as he affirmeth charity to be more durable then faith, you affirme cleane contrary, that faith abideth when charity is gone. And again where he ſaith that faith, hope and charitie remaine here in ſuch ſort that he is no Chriſtian which hath not theſe, you ſay they remaine not, but may be loſt.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1 FOllow Charitie, earneſtly purſue ſpirituall things: but I rather that you may prophecie.

A paraphraſticall expoſition of this Chapter concerning vnknowen tongue. REHM. [1. Rather prophecy.] The gift of prophecying, that is, of expounding the hard points of our religion, is better then the gift of ſtrange tongues, though both be good.

CART VV. 1. [1 Rather Propheſie.] S.

Verſe. 2 For he that ſpeaketh with tongue, ſpeaketh not to men, but to God: for no man heareth. But in ſpirit he ſpeaketh myſteries.

REHM. 2. [2. Not to men.] To talke in a ſtrange language, vnknowen alſo to himſelfe, profiteth not the hearers, though in reſpect of God who vnderſtandeth all tongues and things, and for the myſteries which he vttereth in his ſpirit, and for his own edification in ſpirit and affection, there be no difference: but the Prophet or Expoſitor treating of the ſame matters to the vnderſtanding of the whole aſſembly, edifieth not himſelfe alone but all his hearers.

CART VV. 2. [2 Not to men.] What a ſhameleſſe mouth is this which affirmeth, that thoſe which in the Primitiue Church ſpake with tongues, did not know themſelues what they ſpake: Was that gift (to the zealous purſuite whereof the Holy Ghoſt exhorteth) a rapping out of words without underſtanding? Is this the great bountifulneſſe and larges of Chriſt towards his (ſo highly commended of the Prophet) to inable them like a Popingay to prattle, or like Balaams Aſſe, to tumble out words without any knowledge? Finally, where ever was it read (either in prophane or Holy Writer) that man ſhall bee ſaid to haue the gift of that tongue, the ſillables whereof his mouth can ſpeake, when his minde knoweth no ſignification of them? But this tongue that ſatan hath hired, and let looſe againſt the Lords tongues, is tyed up of the Apoſtle, who verſ. 4. affirmeth, that every one of thoſe that ſpake with tongues edefied himſelfe, and that in ſuch ſort, as the Church is edified by him that ſpeaketh unto it, in a tongue which it underſtandeth. And verſ. 28. it is ſaid that he which ſpeaketh with tongues, ſpeaketh unto God and to himſelfe: Seeing therefore hee ſo ſpeaketh unto himſelfe, as hee ſpeaketh unto God, to deny that he underſtandeth himſelfe when he ſpeaketh with tongues, is to deny that God doth underſtand him which ſpeaketh with tongues And how ſottiſh it is, that a man that underſtandeth not himſelfe, ſhould edifie himſelfe in ſpirit and affection, when the affection is dead without knowledge, neither can a man deſire or affect that which he underſtandeth not. And if ſpeaking in a tongue which he underſtandeth not, he can edifie himſelfe in ſpirit and affection, why may he not alſo edifie the Church in ſpirit and affection which heareth the ſound of the words as well as hee. But the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Church heareth not him, that is, receiveth no more fruite by that ſpeaker in a tongue which it underſtandeth not, then if it had not heard him at all. And thus Tully ſpeaketh, that thoſe that underſtand not that which they heare, are deafe. In which regard he is (afterward) ſaid of the Apoſtle to ſpeak in the Aire: wherefore it followeth, that he which ſpeaketh in a language which he underſtandeth not is nothing profited, heareth not himſelfe ſpeake, and ſpeaketh in the aire, for any good that he receiveth thereby.

Tuſcul. Queſti.

Verſe. 6 But now brethren if I come to you ſpeaking with tongues: what ſhall I profite you, vnleſſe I ſpeak to you either in reuelation, or in knowledge, or in prophecie, or in doctrine.

REHM. 3. [6. If I come.] That is, if I your Apoſtle and Doctor ſhould preach to you in an unknown vnknown tongue, and neuer vse any kind of exposition, interpretation or explication of my strange words, what profite could you take thereby.

CARTVV. 3. [6. If I come.] If their Doctor could profit them nothing in speaking in an vnknowne tongue without interpretation, how could he profit them in conceiving prayers for them in an vnknowne tongue without interpretation, especially seeing the Apostle verf. 15. requireth vnderstanding as well in the prayers and singing of Psalmes, as in the Preaching? Wherefore (as Clement saith, that the sons are seldome so good as their fathers, so) this litter of Popish Mastifes is much more impudent then were their forefathers. For their great Doctor affirming that a strange tongue is not now inconvenient, yet affirmeth that it had been madnesse in the Primitiue Church, if any had spoken any thing in it that others had not vnderstood, where these new up-starts blush not to affirme, that even in the primitiue Church there was a profitable use of tongues which the assembly vnderstood not. Of the same iudgement is Lyra also. Thomas Aquinas upon this place, Lect. 5. Lyra upon this place.

Verse. 8 For if the trumpet giue an vncertaine voice, who shall prepare himselfe to battell?

RHEM. 4. [8. If the trumpet.] As the Trumpetter cannot giue warning to or from the fight, vnlesse hee vse a distinct and intelligible sound or stroke known to the souldiers: euen so the preacher that exhorteth to good life, or dehorteth from sinne, except hee doe it in a speech which his hearers vnderstand, can not attaine to his purpose, nor do the people any good.

CARTVV. 4. [8. If the trumpet] Seeing therefore to pray is to fight in the spirituall battell, it followeth of your owne words, that the Minister being the Trumpeter, giving no distinct nor intelligible sound by speech which his hearers understand, can doe the people no good. Rom. 15. 30 Ephes. 6. 13. 18.

Verse. 13 And therefore he that speaketh with the tongue, let him pray that he may interpret.

RHEM. 5. [13. Let him pray that.] Hee that hath onely the gift of strange tongues, let him pray to God for the gift of interpretation: that the one may bee more profitable by the other: for to exhort or preach in a strange tongue was not vnlawfull nor vnprofitable, but glorious to God, so that the speech had beene either by himselfe or by another, afterward expounded.

CARTVV. 5. [13. Let him pray that] If the Apostle would haue him pray that hee may interpret who speaketh in a tongue which the Church vnderstandeth not, what woe is due vnto you that forbid a man to speake vnto the Church in that language which it onely vnderstandeth? And if a man, having no such language as the Church vnderstandeth, ought to pray for it, having it already, ought he not to vse it? We grant it was then lawfull and profitable to speake strange tongues in the Church (so that interpretation were annexed) but that thereof it followeth, that it is profitable now, may not be yeelded vnto. For first, it was then glorious vnto God, as your selues confesse: And wherein did that glory consist? did it not stand in this, when one man did speake with the tongues hee never learned nor laboured for? For so indeed God commended the glorious riches of his grace.

Now therefore the shew of the tongues that are gotten by mens trauaile, and promptnesse of wit, seeing they would not so much set forth the glory of God as the praise of the diligence and dexterity of him that can speak them; it is manifest that there is not the same reason of the use of them now, that there was then. Secondly, the shew (and as it were the muster) of those gifts of tongues, was a seale vnto the Church of the truth of the Gospell which it professed. Whereupon it came, that by how much the tongues and languages abounded, by so much was the truth of the Gospell more plentifully testified. Seeing then the knowledge of the diversity of tongues obtained by study, travell, and exercise, are not any more sure seales to establish the Church in the truth which it professeth; it followeth, that there is not the same regard of the use of the tongues in the Church now, that then was. Howbeit this striketh your Latine service starke dead: for if the Apostle would not haue any tongue spoken in the Church without interpretation, not even then, when Gods glory and the confirmation of the Church, might haue been reaped and wrought by the use thereof: how much lesse will hee now (when there is no such glory to God and confirmation to his Church) suffer any strange tongue to sound in it without an interpretation annexed therunto. And if you will bring in the use of tongues into the Church now upon this ground, that then they were permitted, so that they were expounded, it followeth also, that you must not allow one to speake a tongue in the Church which himselfe cannot expound without an interpreter or Truchman standing by.

Verse. 14 For if I pray with the tongue, I my spirit praieth, but my vnderstanding is without fruit.

RHEM. 6. [14. My spirit prayeth.] Also when a man prayeth in a strange tongue which himselfe vnderstandeth not, it is not so fruitfull for instruction to him, as if hee knew particularly what he prayed. Neuertheless the Apostle forbiddeth not such praying neither, confessing that his spirit, heart, and affection prayeth well towards God, though his mind and vnderstanding be not profited to instruction, as otherwise it might haue been if he vnderstood the word. Neither yet doth he appoint such an one to get his strange prayers translated into his vulgar tongue, to obteine thereby the foresaid instruction See the declaration following of this Chapter.

CARTVV. 6. [14. My spirit prayeth.] It hath been partly set out before, how absurd it is to imagine the gift of tongues to be severed from his understanding, that by the gift of the spirit did speake them. Here it commeth further to be tried, upon occasion of this violent wrest of the Iesuites, which would haue the words of the Apostle, my understanding is unfruitfull to be referred unto him that speaketh, where the Apostle referreth it to those which are spoken unto in an unknown tongue. This doth first appeare by the adiunct of unfruitfulnesse, which is annexed unto understanding. For whereas it is a borrowed speech, and similitude taken from trees, which are called unfruitfull, not in regard that they bring not forth fruit unto themselues, but in regard that they are barren and fruitleſſe vnto others, it is evident, that when the Apoſtle ſaith my vnderſtanding is fruitleſſe, he meaneth in regard (not of a ſpeaker with a tongue, but in regard) of thoſe which heard him. Secondly, this is evident by the 16. verſ. where he ſaith, that if thou praiſe God in the ſpirit, an Idiot cannot ſay Amen vnto thy thankeſgiving, becauſe he knoweth not what thou ſayeſt: hee ſaith not, that thou canſt not ſay Amen vnto thy thankeſgiving, or knoweſt not what thou ſpeakeſt, which he ought to haue ſaid if your interpretation had been true. Thirdly, in the 17. verſe he ſaith of him that ſpeaketh in the ſpirit, Thou verily giveſt thankes, but another is not edified. And moſt evidently in the 19. verſ. where (ſaying that in the Church he would rather ſpeake fiue words with his vnderſtanding then ten thouſand with the tongue) he noteth the effect of ſpeaking with his vnderſtanding, namely that hee might inſtruct others. If therefore (in the Apoſtles language) ſpeaking with a mans vnderſtanding be to inſtruct others, and not himſelfe, it followeth, that to ſpeake without his vnderſtanding, is to ſpeake to others with vnderſtanding and profit to himſelfe, and without inſtruction and profit vnto others. Laſt of all, both Ierom and Baſil, and the Greeke Scholiaſt do ſo interpret it, no ancient writer dreaming of this forced ſence of the Ieſuites. Baſil ſaith, when he that heareth vnderſtandeth not, the vnderſtanding is without fruit, becauſe no profit commeth to him that prayeth. This he explaineth more manifeſtly by the contrary, for hee addeth, but when they that are preſent vnderſtand the prayer which may bee profitable to the hearers, then hee that prayeth hath fruit, namely, the edifying of them which are helped thereby. Ierom alſo expounding theſe words, ſaith, his mind is not fruitleſſe to himſelfe, but to the hearers. Secondly, they abuſe the ſimple reader, with a falſe interpretation of ſpeaking or praying in ſpirit, which they expound the affection of him which ſpeaketh or prayeth, without all proofe, either of reaſon or example, where the Apoſtle meaneth thereby, the ſtrange tongue or language which is ſpoken: which (by a trope of the cauſe for the effect) he calleth ſpirit; becauſe that thoſe which ſpake it, ſpake by the miraculous gift of the ſpirit, and ſo are thoſe extraordinary gifts, called verſ. 12. ſpirits. And ſo alſo (by another trope of one part put for the whole) they are called (verſe 1.) ſpirituall. So that to ſpeake, or to pray in or by the ſpirit, is the ſame which Luke ſaith of them which had received the holy Ghoſt at Pentecoſt, that they ſpake with ſtrange tongues, even as the ſpirit gaue vnto them to vtter. This expoſition alſo the Scholiaſt ſetteth forth. And, that it cannot bee vnderſtood of the affection or devotion of the ſoule, it is evident by the 16. verſe, where he affirmeth that an vnlearned man cannot ſay Amen vnto the thankeſgiving that is made in or by the ſpirit, yet we know that the affection or devotion hindereth not the vnderſtanding of the rude and vnlearned, but the vttering of things in ſuch language as he vnderſtandeth not. Hereunto agreeth the expoſition of the Councell which ſaith, that the vnderſtanding of them which ſing Pſalmes muſt accord with the voyce, that the ſaying of the Apoſtle may be fulfilled, I will ſing Pſalmes with the ſpirit, I will ſing Pſalmes with the vnderſtanding: where (by the ſpirit) it is evident, that the Councell vnderſtandeth the voyce or ſpeech which is vttered. The ſame is the iudgement of Baſil, and of Chryſoſtom alſo, who affirmeth, that hee that ſpeaketh with tongues could not edifie himſelfe, vnleſſe he knew what he ſpake.

Thirdly, if the prayer which is made by the affection, ſundred and divorced from the vnderſtanding, be profitable, why may it not profite the hearers of it, as well as him that vttereth the prayer? conſidering that their devotions and affections may be as well carried and lifted vp vnto God, by the hearing of an vnknown language, as the devotion of him that prayeth, by ſpeaking that which he vnderſtandeth not. The ſpeakers affection is not moved but generally and confuſedly, and ſo may the hearers, knowing (both by the place where he prayeth, and by the lifting of his hands and eyes, with other geſtures of the body) that he directeth his ſpeech vnto God. But the Apoſtle ſaith, that the hearers are not edifyed, or profited, in any ſort: it followeth therefore, that the ſpeaker is as litle. And ſeeing the Scripture requireth, that all that is within a man ſhould praiſe the Lord: It followeth, that as he committeth ſacrilege, that withdraweth and ſtealeth away his affection from the exerciſe of of prayer, ſo doth he alſo, which hath not his vnderſtanding attending vpon his prayer. And ſo much more, the latter then the former, as the vnderſtanding may be perfect and full, without the affection and devotion, whereas the affection roveth and wandereth vncertainely, when it hath not the light of vnderſtanding carried before it.

Verſe. 22 Therefore languages are for ! a ſigne not to the faithfull, but to infidels: but prophecies, not to infidels, but to the faithfull.

RHEM. 7. [22. A ſigne.] The extraordinary gift of tongues was a miraculous ſigne in the Primitiue Church, to be vſed ſpecially in the Nations of the heathen for their conuerſion.

Verſe. 23 If therefore the whole Church come together in one, and all ſpeake with tongues, and there enter in vulgar perſons or ! infidels, will they not ſay that you be madde?

RHEM 8. [23. Infidels.] In the Primitiue Church, when Infidels dwelt neere or among Chriſtians, and oftentimes came vnto their publike preaching and exerciſes of exhortation and expoſition of Scriptures and the like: it was both vnprofitable and ridiculous to heare a number talking, teaching, ſinging Pſalmes and the like, one in this language, and another in that, all at once like a blacke ſaunts, and one often not vnderſtood of another, ſometime not to themſelues, and to ſtrangers or the ſimple ſtanders by, not at all. Where otherwiſe if they had ſpoken either in known tongues or had done it in order, hauing an expoſitor or interpreter withall, the Infidels might haue been conuinced.

Verse. 27 Whether a man speake with tongue, by two, or at the most by three, and in course, and let one interpret.

RHEM. 10. [27. In course.] All these things they did with out order, of pride and contention they preached, they prophecied, they prayed, they blessed, without any seemely respect one of another, or observing of turnes and entercourse of vttering their Gifts. Yea women without couer or veile, and without regard of their sexe or the Angels, or Priests, or their own husbands, malapertly spake tongues, taught, or prophecied with the rest. This was then the disorder among the Corinthians, which the Apostle in this whole Chapter, reprehendeth and sought to redresse, by forbidding women vtterly that publike exercise, and teaching men, in what order and course as well for speaking in tongues, as interpreting, and prophecying it should be kept. The disorders in the same.

A MORE AMPLE DECLARATION OF THE sense of this 14. Chapter.

RHEM. 11. This then being the scope and direct and drift of the Apostle, as is most cleere by his whole discourse, and by the record of all antiquitie: let the godly, graue, and discrete Reader take a tast in this one point, of the Protestants deceitfull dealing, abusing the simplicitie of the popular, by peruerse application of Gods holy word, vpon some small similitude and equiuocation of certaine termes, against the approued godly vse and truth of the vniuersall Church, for the seruice in the Latine or Greeke tongue: which they ignorantly, or rather wilfully, pretend to bee against this discourse of S. Paul touching strange tongues. Know therefore, first, that here is no word written or meant of any other tongues but such as men spake in the Primitiue Church by miracle, and that nothing is meant of those tongues which were the common languages of the world or of the faithfull, vnderstood of the learned and ciuill people in euery great city, and in which the Scriptures of the Olde and new Testament were written, as, the Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, for though these also, might be giuen by miracle and without study, yet being known to the Iewes, Romanes, or Greekes in euery place, they bee not counted among the differences of barbarous and strange tongues here spoken of, which could not bee interpreted commonly, but by the miraculous gift also of interpretation. And therefore this Apostle (as the Euangelists also and other did their bookes) wrote his Epistles in the Greeke to the Romanes and to all other Churches. Which when he wrote though he penned them not in the vulgar language peculiar to euery people, yet he wrote them not in Tongue, that is, in any strange tongue not intelligible without the gift of interpretation, whereof hee speaketh heere: but in a notable known and learned speach interpretable of thousands in euery countrey. No more did S. Augustine our Apostle, speaking in Latine, and bringing in the Scriptures and Seruice in Latine, preach and pray in Tongues according to the Apostles meaning here, for the Latine was not, nor is not, in any part of the West, either miraculous or strange, though it bee not the Nationall tongue of any one countrie this day. And therefore S. Bede saith, (li. 1. hist. Angl. c. 1.) there being then foure diuers vulgar languages in our country, the Latine was made common to them all. And in deed of the two (though in truth neither sort bee forbidden by this passage of S. Paul) the barbarous languages of euery seuerall prouince in respect of the whole Church of Christ, are rather the strange Tongues here spoken of, then the common Latine tongues, which is vniuersally of all the West Church more or lesse learned, and pertaineth much more to vnity and orderly coniunction of all Nations in one faith, Seruice, and worship of God, then if it were in the sundry barbarous speaches of euery Prouince. Wherein all Christians that trauell about this part of the world or the Indies either, whersoeuer they come, shall find the selfe same Masse, Mattins, and Seruice as they had at home. Where now, if we go to Germany, or the Germans, or Genevians come to us, each others Service shal be thought strange and barbarous. Yea and the seruice of our own language within a few hundred years (or rather euery age) shal wholy become barbarous and vnknown to our selues, our tongue (as all vulgar) doth so often change. That S. Paul's place maketh nothing against the seruice in the latine tongue. By strange tongues the Apostle meaneth not the Latin, Greeke, or Hebrew. S. Augstine our Apostle brought in the Latin tongue. The Latine service one and the same in all countries, and strange to none. The service in vulgar tong strange and barbarous to euery Stranger.

RHEM. 12. And for edification, that is, for increase of faith, true knowledge, and good life, the experience of a few yeares hath giuen all the world a full demonstration whether our forefathers were not as wise, as faithfull, as deuout, as fearefull to breake Gods lawes, and as likely to be saued, as we are in all our tongues, translations, and English prayers. Much vanitie, curiolitie, contempt of superiours, disputes, emulations, contentions, Schismes, horrible errors, profanation and diuulgation of the secret Mysteries of the dreadfull Sacraments, which of purpose were hidden from the vulgar as S. Denys Eccl. Hier c. 1. and S. Basil de Sp. San. c. 27. testifie) are fallen by the same, but vertue or sound knowledge none at all. Whether the service in vulgar tong do more edifie. See Annot. 1 Cor. 10. 15

RHEM. 13. Wherein this also is a grosse illusion and vntruth, that the force and efficacie of the Sacraments, Sacrifice, and common prayer, dependeth vpon the peoples vnderstanding, hearing, or knowledge: the principall efficacie of such things and of the whole ministery of the Church, consisting specially of the very vertue of the worke, and the publicke office of the Priests, who bee appointed in Christs behalfe to dispose these Mysteries to our most good: the infant, innocent, idiote and vnlearned taking no lesse fruite of Baptisme and all other diuine offices, meete for euery ones condition, then the learnedst Clerke in the Realme: and more, if they be more humble, charitable, deuout and obedient, then the other, hauing lesse of these qualities and more learning. The vertue of the sacraments and service consisteth not in the peoples understanding

RHEM. 14. Which we say not as though it were inconuenient for the people to be well instructed in the meaning of the Sacraments and holy ceremonies and Seruice of the Church (for, that to their comfort and necessarie knowledge both by preaching, Cathechizing, and reading of good Catholike bookes, Christian people do learne in all Nations much more in those countries where the Seruice The people is to be taught the meaning of Sacraments is in Latine, then in our nation, God knoweth:) But wee say that there bee other wayes to instruct them, and the same lesse subiect to danger and disorder, then to turne it into vulgar tongues, We say the simple people and many one that thinke themselues some body, vnderstand as little of the sense of diuers Psalmes, Lessons, & Oraisons in the vulgar tongue, as if they were in Latine: yea and often take them in a wrong, peruerse and pernitious sense, which lightly they could not haue done in Latine. We say, that such as would learne in deuotion & humilitie, may and must rather with diligence learne the tongues that such Diuine things be written in, or vse other diligence in hearing sermons and instruction: then for a few mens not necessary knowledge, the holy vniuersall order of Gods Church should be altered. For if in the kingdom of England onely, it be not conuenient, necessary nor almost possible, to accommodate their Seruice book to euery prouince & people of diuers tongues how much lesse should the whole Church so do, consisting of so many differences? Neither doth the Apostle in all this chapter appoint any such things to be done, but admonisheth them to pray and labour for the grace of vnderstanding and interpretation, or to get others to interprete or expound vnto them, And that much more we may do concerning the Seruice in Latine, which is no strange nor miraculously gotten or vnderstood tongue, but common to the most and cheefe Churches of the world, and hath been since the Apostles times daily with all diligence throughout all these parts of Christendome, expounded in euery house, schoole, Church, and pulpit, and is so well known for euerie necessary part of the diuine Seruice, that by the diligence of parents, Maisters, and Curates, euery Catholike of age almost, can tell the sense of euery ceremony of the Masse, what to answer, when to say Amen at the Priests benediction, when to confesse, when to adore, when to stand, when to kneele, when to receiue, what to receiue, when to come, when to depart, and all other dueties of praying, and seruing sufficient to saluation. And thus it is euident that S. Paul speaketh not of the common tongues of the Churches Seruice.

Catholike people in euery Country, vnderstandeth euery ceremonie, and can behaue themselues accordingly.

RHEM. Secondly, it is as certaine, that he meaneth not, nor writeth any word in this place of of the Churches publike Seruice, prayer, or ministration of the holy Sacrament, wherein the office of the Church specially consisteth: but onely of a certaine exercise of mutuall conference, wherein one did open to another and to the assembly, miraculous gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, and such Canticles, Psalmes, secret Mysteries, sorts of Languages, and other Reuelations, as it pleased God to giue vnto certaine both men and women in that first beginning of his Church, In doing of this, the Corinthians committed many disorders turning Gods gift to pride and vanitie, and namely that gift of tongues: which being indeed the least of all gifts, yet most puffed vp the hauers, and now also doth commonly puffe vp the professors of such knowledge, according as S. Augustine writeth thereof. This exercise and the disorder thereof was not in the Church (for any thing wee can reade in antiquitie) these foureteen hundred yeeres: and therefore neither the vse nor abuse, nor S. Pauls reprehension or redressing thereof, can concerne any whit the Seruice of the Church. Furthermore this is euident, that the Corinthians had their Seruice in Greeke at this same time, and it was not done in these miraculous tongues. Nothing is meant then of the Church Seruice. Againe the publike Seruice had but one language: in this exercise they spake in many tongues. In the publike Seruice euery man hath not his own speciall tongue, his speciall Interpretation, speciall Reuelation, proper Psalmes: but in this they had. Againe, the publike Seruice had in it the ministration of the holy Sacrament principally: which was not done in this time of conference. For into this exercise were admitted Catechumens and Infidels and whosoeuer would: in this women before S. Pauls order, did speake and prophecie: so did they neuer in the Ministration of the Sacrament, with many other plaine differences, that by no meanes the Apostles words can bee rightly and truely applied to the Corinthians Seruice then, or ours now. Therefore it is either great ignorance of the Protestants, or great guilefulnesse, so untruely and peruersly to apply them.

Aug. doct. Chr. lib. 2. c. 15.

That he speaketh not of the Churches seruice, is proued by inuincible arguments.

RHEM. 16. Neither is here any thing meant of the priuate prayers which deuoute persons of all sorts and sexes haue euer vsed, specially in Latine, as well vpon their Primars as Beades. For, the priuate prayers here spoken of, were Psalmes or Hymnes and Sonnets newly inspired to them by God, and in this conference or prophecying, vttered to one anothers comfort, or to themselues and God onely. But the prayers, Psalmes, and holy words of the Christian people vsed priuatly, are not composed by them, nor diuersly inspired to themselues, nor now to be approued or examined in the assemblies: but they are such as were giuen and written by the Holy Ghost, and prescribed by Christ and his Church for the faithfull to vse, namely the Pater noster, the Aue Maria, and the Creed, our Ladies Mattins, the Litanies, and the like. Therefore the Apostle prescribeth nothing here thereof, condemneth nothing therein, toucheth the same nothing at all. But the deuoute people in their ancient right may and ought still vse their Latine Primars, Beades and Prayers, as euer before. Which the wisdom of the Church for great causes haue better liked and allowed of, then that they should bee in vulgar tongues, though she wholy forbiddeth not but sometimes granteth to haue them translated, and would gladly haue all faithfull people in order and humilitie learne, as they may, the contents of their prayers: and hath commanded also in some Councels, that such as cannot learne distinctly in Latine (specially the Pater noster and the Creede) should be taught them in the vulgar tongue. And therefore as we doubt not but it is acceptable to God, and auaileable in all necessities, and more agreeable to the vse of all Christian people euer since their conuersion, to pray in Latine, then in the vulgar, though euery one in particular vnderstand not what hee saith: so it is plaine that such pray with as great consolation of spirit, with as little tediousnesse, with as great deuotion and affection, and oftentimes more then the other: and alwayes more then any Schismaticke or Hereticke in his known language.

The apostle speaketh not of the peoples priuate prayers in Latine, as vpon primars beades, or otherwise.

Latine prayers translated, or the people taught the contents thereof.

The peoples deuotion nathing the lesse, for praying in Latine.

RHEM. 17. Such holy Oraisons bee in manner consecrated and sanctified in and by the holy Ghost that first inspired them, and there is a reuerence and Maiesty in the Churches tongue dedicated in our Sauiours Crosse, and giueth more force and valure to the mssaid in the Churches obedience, then to others. The children cried * Hosanna to our Sauiour, and were allowed though they knew not what they said. It is well neere a thousand yeeres that * our people which could nothing else but barbarum frendere, did sing, Alleluia, and not, Praise ye the Lord, and longer agoe since the poore husbandmen sang the same at the plough in other Countries. Hieron. tom. 1. Epist. 58. And Sursum corda, and Kyrieleison, and the Psalmes of Dauid sung in Latine in the seruice of the Primitiue Church, haue the ancient and flat testimonies of S. Cyprian, S. Augustine S. Hierome and other fathers. Greg. lib. 7. ep. 63. Cypr. exp. orat. Dom. num. 13. Aug. c. 13. & de dono perseuer. de bono vid. c. 16. and ep. 178. Hier. praefat. in Psal. ad Sophron. Aug. de Catechiz. rud. c. 9. de Doct. Chrys. lib. 2. c. 13. See ep. 10. Aug. of S. Hieromes Latine translation read in the Churches of Africa. Prayers are not made to teach, make learned, or increase knowledge, though by occasion they sometimes instruct vs, but their speciall vse is to offer our hearts, desires and wants to God, and to shew that wee hang of him in all things: and this euery Catholike doeth for his condition, whether hee vnderstandeth the words of his prayer or not. The simple sort can not vnderstand all Psalmes, nor scarse the learned, no though they bee translated or read in known tongues: men must not cease to vse them for all that, when they are known to containe Gods holy praises. The simple people when they desire any thing specially at Gods hand, are not bound to know, neither can they tell, to what petition or part of the Pater noster their demand pertaineth, though it bee in English neuer so much, they can not tell no more what is Thy Kingdom come, then Adueniat regnum tuum, nor whether their petition for their sicke children or any other necessities pertaine to this part, or to Fiat voluntas tua, or Ne nos inducas, or to what other part else. It is enough that they can tell, this holy Oraison to be appointed to vs, to call vpon God in all our desires, more then this is not necessary. And the translation of such holy things often breedeth manifold danger and irreuerence in the vulgar (as to thinke God is an author of sinne, when they read, Leade vs not into tentation) and seldome any edification at all. For, though when the prayers bee turned and read in English, the people knoweth the words, yet they are not edified to the instruction of their mind and vnderstanding, except they knew the sense of the words also and meaning of the Holy Ghost. For if any man thinke that S. Paul speaking of edification of mans minde or vnderstanding, meaneth the vnderstanding of the words onely, he is foully deceiued, for, what is a childe of fiue or sixe yeeres old edified or increased in knowledge by his Pater noster in English? It is the sense therefore, which euery man cannot haue, neither in English nor Latine, the knowledge whereof properly and rightly edifieth to instruction, and the knowledge of the words onely, often edifieth neuer a whit, and sometimes buildeth to errour and destruction: as it is plaine in all Hereticks and many curious persons besides, finally both the one and the other without charitie and humilitie maketh the Hereticks and Schismatickes withall their English, and what other tongues and intelligence soeuer, to be as Sonans & Cymbalum tinniens, sounding brasse and a tinkling cymball.

RHEM. 18. To conclude, for praying either publikely or priuately in Latine which is the common sacred tongue of the greatest part of the Christian world, this is thought by the wisest and godliest to be most expedient, and is certainely seene to be nothing repugnant to S. Paul. If any yet will be contentious in the matter, wee must answer them with the same Apostle. The Church of God hath no such custome, and with this notable saying of S. Augustine ep. 118. c. 5. Any thing doth the whole Church practise and obserue throughout the world, to dispute thereof as though it were not to bee done, is most insolent madnesse.

1. Cor. 11. 16.

A notable rule of S. August.

CARTVV. 7. [22 A signe.] The Prophet Esay (shewing that the Iewes were as babish, in learning the truth of the doctrine taught by the Prophets, as infants which vnderstand not what is said) threatneth them, that forsomuch as they would not vnderstand their Prophets speaking plainely, vnto them in their mother tongue, they should be constrained to heare the language of their enemies, whose tongues they vnderstood not. Now the Apostle applyeth this vnto the present estate of the Corinthians, exhorting them that they should not be like babes, in not vnderstanding that which was spoken in the Church. And he confirmeth this by the punishment inflicted vpon the Iewes which was to heare a strange language in their own Country. So that as it was a plague vnto them, and a token of their vnfaithfulnesse, that they had strange languages which they vnderstood not: so it was a token also of Gods anger against the Corinthes, that such an abuse was crept in amongst them, whereby they were liker vnto the Iewes in their vnfaithfulnesse, then in that they were the people of God. As for this interpretation of the words, that Tongues are a signe to the vnfaithfull and not to the faithfull, and that they serued to the conversion of the heathen, it is without all warrant from the word of God: For first the gift of Tongues serued (and that especially) for seales and signes to confirme those which beleeved the Gospell. Secondly, it is plaine (by the words of the Apostle, vers. 24.) that the speaking of tongues, when they are not vnderstood of the hearers, not onely profiteth not the vnfaithfull to their conuersion, but estrangeth them further from the truth, in that they, hearing strange tongues will esteem the speakers of them out of their wits: where (of the contrary part) if they be spoken vnto in their own language, they fall vpon their faces and worship God. This is therefore another reason against the vse of strange tongues in the Church of God, that it (profiting neither faithfull nor faithlesse) is vtterly to be reiected, as prophecy (which is a declaration of the truth to the vnderstanding of the hearers) is onely to be retained, for that it profiteth both the beleeuers and vnbeleeuers. Last of all, who hath blinded you, that you cannot see, that by this exposition of yours you condemne all your Churches as miscreants and vnbeleeuers, as those to whom the strange tongues do serue, and will suffer them to haue no lot nor portion with the beleeuers, to whom strange tongues (by your exposition) serue not.

Mark. 16. 17.

Acts 19. 6.

In the three next notes there is nothing which either requireth answer or hath not been answered before. That which they entitle, A more ample declaration of the sense of this 14. Chapter, is nothing else but a beggarly cloake, to couer the shame of their former expositions, set downe against the maine streame both of the words, and of the drift of the Apostles, if happily they might fall vpon some partiall or vnadvised reader, to whom all is fish that cometh to the net. Let us therefore bring them to the shore of examination, whereby they may be be sorted and suted, that it may bee seene, that in this travailsome fishing they haue not caught so much as a sinne. And first in the first Section whereas they affirme that the sense which they haue followed, is supported by the record of all antiquitie, they are found impudent liers; there being no one of antiquity that affirmeth that the Apostle speaketh of tongues not understood of them that speake them, which is the principall point betweene us. The evidence whereof the reader may easily see, in that the Iesuites (ambitiously hunting after the shew of antiquity) are here so forsaken that they durst not (so much as by naming of them) pretend them or any of them. Yea as they are forsaken of all antiquitie, so haue they (through hardnesse of their forehead, and desperate attempt against the truth) forsaken their owne captaines the arch-builders of Popery: for Thomas affirmeth, that he which giveth thankes in a tongue doth giue thankes well, in as much as he understanderh, and that the other, which heareth and understandeth not is not edified, forasmuch as he hath no speciall understanding (he yet defending the service in an unnkowne tongue:) and further confesseth, that in the Primitive Church it had been a madnesse to haue had the Church service so. Secondly, they say that the Apostle speaketh not of the Latine, Greeke and Hebrew tongues, as those which were the common languages of the world, vnderstood (of the learned and ciuill people) in every great Cittie, and not given by miracle. This they say, and say onely; where it (being a pillar of their cause in this point) ought to haue had some stay of reason, or authority to leane upon. But now having nothing to beare it up, it hath much to beat it downe. For first, the Apostle speaketh of all kindes of tongues, as appeareth vers. 10. Secondly, it is manifest (vers. 24.) that he doth not reprehend them onely, which spake not to the understanding of the learned and ciuill people of great Cittes, but condemneth those also that spake not to the capacitie of the rude and vnlearned idiots. Seeing therfore (by your own confession) the ruder sort did not understand these learned tongues, it followeth, that those also which spake them in the Church without the light of interpretation, are likewise condemned. Thirdly, it is very untrue, that these three tongues were so generally knowen throughout all the world, as you suppose: for (touching the Hebrew tongue) the knowledge of the old Testament onely excepted, when it was so worne out of use amongst the Hebrewes themselues, that our Saviour Christ and his Apostles (to be understood of them, were faine to preach in the Syrian language, and not in the Hebrew; all men may easily understand how rare birds they were in the rest of the nations which were able to record the notes of that tongue. Touching the Greeke tongue, seeing in Tullies time (when it was ordinarily so much rifer then in the time of the Apostles as it approched neerer unto the translation of the Greeke Empire, wherein that tongue had the largest extent that ever it had) it was learned of the Councellors and Senators themselues: it followeth, that in the Apostles times it was much more fallen from the knowledge of many civill people in great Cities. Notwithstanding we confesse frankly, that even then also, the Greeke tongue could by no endevour of the Romane Governours who laboured it for the better spreading abroad of their owne language) be tied up so short, but that the sound thereof was heard further off, and in more places, then was their Latine tongue: whereof Tully is a plentifull witnesse, who testifieth that in his time the Greeke tongue was used in all nations, but that the Latine was holden in strait bounds. And this undoubtedly was the cause why the Apostles, and other sacred writers, chose the Greeke tongue rather then any other to deliver the mysteries of the kingdome of God in. Otherwise, they bare not the Latine tongue so evill will, but that they would haue written in it, if it had beene able to haue gone as farre of their message as the Greeke tongue was. Now when the Greeke tongue (which was then of all other tongues most currant and communicable) was not knowen of many civill people in great Citties, it is manifest that the Latin tongue (being in greater streites and narrower bounds then the Greeke) was much lesse knowen to all the civill people in great Citties, where (by the way) you haue let fall a manifest untruth, that the Latine Tongue is one of those three languages Wherein the Scriptures of the old and new Testament were written. For what one booke either of the old or new Testament was written in the Latine tongue? If you say, that the Scriptures were translated into it, your speech is first deceitfull, that coupleth by this one word written, things so divers and different, as are the writing them by the pen and prenotories of the Lord, and translating them by the hand and registrie of men. Then it is foolish, as that which giveth no priviledge unto the Latine tongue (which thus you would magnifie) considering that the old Testament was drawen from the lees and mother of the naturall tongue into the Greeke, before it was into the Latine. And the new Testament also found lodging as soone in other tongues as it did in the Latine; and so much sooner in all likelihood, by how much the knowledge thereof was first conveyed into the Easterne parts, then into the Westerne, and visited them, or ever it saluted these. Howbeit (leaving this discourse, as that which having more likelihood of truth then yours, hath not certain and undoubted reasons to rest upon) let us grant that these three were then the common languages of the world, understood of all the learned and civill people of great Cities. And (to deale more bountifully with you) grant, that they were common to all learned and unlearned, civill and countrey people: yet is your cause so beggarly, that all this largis will make it never the richer: for the reasons of the Apostle are not against certaine tongues that were not understood, but against all whatsoever, as that other are not edified: hee speaketh in the aire, the unbeleever or rude cannot say Amen. Vnlesse therefore you will haue the doctrine of the Apostle like Summer fruit, which lasted onely the age wherein they lived; it must needs follow, that howsoever the Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine tongue, might be then used in all Churches, because they were understood of all; yet now they cannot be so, when scarce one in a thousand persons doth understand them. And therefore (not to enquire any further into the knowledge which our Countrey men had in the Latine tongue, when Augustine the Monke preached and prayed here, or at any time before or after yet) forasmuch as that knowledge now (fallen away from the people of our nation) remaineth locked up in the skill of a few: it must needs follow, that the tongue that then was lawfull: because it edified other; because it was not spoken in the aire: because the rude and unbeleever could not say Amen unto it; is now unlawful, because it is removed from those effects, which then it had, and for which it is lawfull.

that

Another

Another reason (for prose of the Latine seruice) is, for that it pertaineth more to vnitie, and orderly coniunction of all nations in one faith. Indeed, vnitie in errour, and ignorance of God hath good maintenance hereby, whilest all nations (ignorant of the Latine tongue) should by the onely vse of it in their seruice and manner of Gods worship, walk in the dark, and not know how to set one foot before another. But the vnitie of faith (as it cannot be grounded and rooted in the heart of all nations, but by preaching in diuers languages, so it cannot grow, and waxe to the perfect stature thereof, without prayers, and other Church exercises in the same varietie of language, for as when God speaketh vnto vs, all the powers of our soule (both in vnderstanding and affection) ought to stand vp, to receiue that which is spoken, so when wee speake vnto him, there is no facultie of the soule, which may withdraw it selfe, from the attendance vpon the seruice and gift that wee present vnto him. And therefore the Law, in the whole worship of God, requireth that it be done, with all the heart, with all the soule, and with all the vnderstanding; which if you (as you pretend) bee able to performe, your sinne is so much the greater, as you not onely do it not, but make lawes to weaken mens hands that they should not be able to do it, for vs (as wee confesse our selues vnable to attaine the top and perfection of that dutie: so) we stretch out our selues, and presse to come, to the marke which is set vp vnto vs, as (by the measure of grace the Lord bestoweth vpon vs) wee may approch. If the Church were (as in times past) of one lip, and that there were a language, which all the whole Church vnderstood, wee would not deny, but that the uniformity of one language in all places, might haue some weight to preserue vnitie. But seing that is not, so far it is, from keeping of the vnitie of the spirit in the bond of peace, that it vtterly ouerthroweth the communion of saints, for in the vse of one tongue (known to some and vnknown to other some) a great separation riseth in the Church, whilest those which vnderstand the mysteries and holy things spoken in it haue better meanes to come vnto saluation, then those which vnderstand them not. Thus God is charged with partiality, and acceptation of the persons of men; in that he is made to offer greater grace vnto the learned, then vnto the vnlearned, to those which can speake the Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine tongue, then to those which speake otherwise. Thus is also the seed of contention cast into the Church, whilest the children of one father (which haue one table and diet appointed them) are sundred in their nourishments, some being well fed, other some (as we say) hauing nothing but emptie platters; and (as the Papists them selues confesse) rising from the bourd (at the least) more hungrie then their fellowes, for euen their own Doctor confesseth. That it is certen, that hee gaineth more, which both prayeth and vnderstandeth, then he which prayeth with the tongue onely: for he which vnderstandeth, is refreshed both in regard of his vnderstanding, and in regard of his affection, but the minde of him which vnderstandeth not is without fruite of refection, whereas (on the contrary part) the varietie of tongues in the Church seruice, doth cause no more diuision in the Church, then diuers colours in one garment, are the cause of any rent or breach in the same, which similitude Augustine doth vse, to shew that the diuision and varietie of tongues, deuideth not the faith of Christians, but rather is an ornament vnto them, and a token that they be the kings children: for as rich mens, and princes children, vsed to goe in garments of diuers colours, so the Church the daughter of the prince of princes (being clad with one garment through the vnitie of faith) maketh profession thereof in all the tongues and languages of the earth, as it were in the varietie of most excellent colours, shewing her selfe to bee the daughter of the most high. And if the diuersitie of ceremonies in the Churches of diuers countries, breake not the vnitie and conformitie of faith; why should the varietie of tongues cause any rent or breach therein? If the diuersitie of things, and doings, make no square, why should the diuersitie of voices and speaches procure any falling out? Wherefore it is a blockish conceite that we going to the Germanes or the Germanes or Genevians comming to vs, each others seruice shall be thought strange and barbarous. As if the seldome comming of a few strangers, should be the rule of the publick prayers of a whole countrey. Or as if it were not better, that the seruice should bee barbarous, vnto a a man when hee trauaileth into strange countries onely, then when hee is both at home, and abrode also, for the Latine speach, being vnknown to him as well at home as abroad, it followeth, that euen at home and in his own countrey, he is as much a stranger vnto the Church seruice, as when he is in the Turkes or Sophies countrie, here therefore commeth to be examined the malicious blindnesse of the Iesuits, which vnderstand not what is to be barbarous, for they affirme all languages to be barbarous sauing onely the Hebrew, Greeke and Latine. Where the Apostle saith, that whosoeuer knoweth not the power or signification of the voice which is vttered, hee is barbarous unto the speaker, and the speaker vnto him. Wherefore, whersoeuer any of these three tongues, are spoken to them which vnderstand not, both the speaker and hearer, are barbarous each to other.

And the Monk himselfe is of opinion, that the Apostle spake here of all manner (and namely of the Hebrew Greek and Latine) tongues. Yea the Iesuites (in saying, that if we go to Germanie, or the Germanes and Genevians come to us, each other seruice shall bee thought strange and barbarous) at unawares confesse, that barbarousnesse in tongues is defined by the not understanding of them when they are spoken: And withall they imply necessarily, that wee in our own Country (nor the Germanes and Genevians in their proper territories) are not barbarous unto our Ministers, that speake to us in our natiue tongues, nor our Ministers barbarous unto us. We will not presse the Emperours authority, who affirmeth the Latine tongue to be barbarous and Scithicall. Let it be one of the civill and learned tongues, yet we alke with Augustine, what will a golden key profite us, when it cannot open that unto us which we would haue? or is not a wodden key better then it, if it will open that which is shut from us? Even so, if the Latine tongue be a golden key, yet because it suffereth not our people to enter into the sanctuary of the Lord, but keepeth them a loofe of, we rather choose the wodden key of our mother tongue, as that, which layeth open the mysteries of the kingdom of God unto us, which the Latine shutteth up against us. And if our own language in a few hundreth yeares become barbarous unto our selues, what is that to the purpose? As long as we are not speechlesse, but haue a language into the which we may translate, the holy and ſacred things of our Religion, the change of our ſpeech bringeth no alteſation of our faith: And if it did, yet by the ſame reaſon the unity of faith may be hurt by the uſe of theſe three tongues, Hebrew, Greek and Latine: And they haue done fooliſhly, which haue licenſed the Church ſervice in theſe Languages, which haue more diverſity one from another then twenty other of the common tongues frequented in the Chriſtian Churches at this day.

In the ſecond Section (where experience is ſaid to haue taught the world, that our fathers were as wiſe, faithfull, devout fearefull to breake Gods lawes, and as likely to be ſaved as we with all our tongues, tranſlations and Engliſh prayers) let the Reader look the anſwer before, in the anſwer to the Preface, Sect. 17. Your reaſon (of the divulgation of the ſecret myſteries and dreadfull Sacraments by a known language) deſerveth not ſo courteous handling, as to be called Iewiſh (amongſt whom there was nothing ſo ſecret, which, for the knowledge of it, was not communicable with the baſeſt of the people) but deſerveth rather to be termed Egyptian, where the Prieſts, under the cloud of their Hieroglyphikes and darke pictures, hid the higheſt Myſteries of their Religion from the common people. Vnleſſe (peradventure) the depthes of Satan which Iohn ſpeaketh of, do better fit theſe ſecret myſteries and dreadfull Sacraments of yours. For otherwiſe, we know that the Apoſtle will haue none of Gods people ignorant, or children in underſtanding of the myſteries of their ſalvation. Dionyſ. Eccl. ſiaſt. Hierarch. cap. 1. ſpeaketh not of the ordinary Liturgie of the Church, but of the Myſteries of the Hierarchy, which both Prieſt and people might well haue beene ignorant of. And it hath appeared before, that Dionyſ ſetteth forth the communicating of the people with the Miniſter in the holy Sacrament of the Supper. The patched place of Baſil de ſpirit. Sanct. 27. hath been laid open before, as both unſutable to his writing, and contradicting the true Baſil.

In the anſwer to the poſitions next following the preface.

In the third Section they ſay, that it is a groſſe illuſion that the efficacie of the Sacraments and common prayer dependeth upon the peoples underſtanding hearing or knowledge, it conſiſting in the vertue of the worke and publicke office of the Prieſt: But this is the power of darkeneſſe upon you, and the giddineſſe of your ſpirit, to demand that which is in queſtion, as you do alſo, when you adde, that the Prieſts muſt diſpoſe of theſe myſteries to our moſt good, it being the queſtion, whether it be for our greater good, when the myſteries are delivered in a known, or unknown language, yet are you manifeſtly convinced by the Apoſtle, who ſaith that he is not edified, which underſtandeth not, and (for want of underſtanding) cannot ſay Amen to the prayers. But we think, you will beſhrew your ſelues, in that, as you ſay, the efficacy of the Sacraments and prayers dependeth not upon the underſtanding of the people: ſo you ſay alſo that it dependeth not upon their hearing. For by your ſaying, he that tarryeth at home and heareth not, hath as much profite by your Maſſe and Mattens, as he that commeth to the Church and heareth them. They are ſtrange potions that will cure them that never take them, as well as thoſe that drink them; and marvellous plaiſters that will heale the ſoares to the which they were never laid, as well as if they had been applyed unto them. David knew none of this Divinity, when hee fell into ſuch deep ſorrowes as had almoſt ſwallowed him up, for that being perſecuted of Saul he could not come to the Temple of the Lord with the reſt of Gods people. Although you ſay truer then you are ware of, if you meane of your own ſervice, as good unheard as heard. And indeed ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of him that underſtandeth not, that he heareth not, becauſe he is no more profited then if he heard not. We grant that Baptiſme is as effectuall to the Infant borne within the covenant, as if he had underſtanding of the myſterie. But that it is not by vertue of the worke (wherein ſome kinde of errour hindereth not a whit the efficacie of the Sacrament) but by the grace of God, which he wonderfully applyeth by his ſpirit in the heart of the infant. But, to haue ſaid ſomewhat to the queſtion, you ſhould haue ſaid, that baptiſme miniſtred to one of yeares of diſcretion, is as effectuall to him (underſtanding nothing of the nature of Baptiſme) as if he had found knowledge thereof: But this you durſt not ſay, becauſe the continuall practiſe of the elder Churches in inſtructing ſuch, before the adminiſtration of Baptiſme, ſtood in your way. Neither durſt you ſay, that the receiving of the Lords Supper, without knowledge and underſtanding of the Myſterie, is as effectuall as when it hath knowledge ioyned with it: For then the practiſe alſo of the Churches under the Law, where both the Levites prepared their brethren, and they themſelues to the receiving of the Paſſeover: and under the Goſpell, where triall and examination is required before the receiving of the Sacrament of the Supper, would haue confounded you.

That which they adde in the fourth Section (to ſalue this withall) will not cleaue. For if the prayers and Sacraments be as effectuall to thoſe that underſtand them, then your indevour to inſtruct the people of the meaning of the Sacraments and Church ſervice, is vaine and fruitleſſe: Where you ſay they may be inſtructed in the Myſteries by other meanes, do you not ſee that you beg that which is in queſtion, when you take for granted, that ſome thing may bee ſpoken in the Church without the peoples underſtanding; ſo that ſomething be uttered to their capacity? Againe, why ſhould their underſtanding bee procured by Sermons (which amongſt you in Countrey Townes, are none or ſeldome, or by private Treatiſes, in their mother tongue, to the reading wherof you bind them not) rather then by the Church ſervice which they daily heare and are bound unto? Who ſeeth not therefore the ſmall care that you haue whether the people haue any inſtruction or no, in the meaning of your prayers, ſacrifice, Sacraments and ceremonies? wherein if you were as faithfull as you are politicke, we could greatly commend you: For you, knowing partly the miſhape and deformity of your Miſteries, and that as foule women they ſhew fairer a far of, then when one commeth nigh them, and haue more grace in the night then in the day, by candle light then by ſunſhine, are well content that your people ſhould not come neere them, or haue any full or through ſight of them. If our people haue no true ſenſe of the Pſalmes and leſſons which are in their own tongue, yours haue much leſſe, who haue them in a ſtrange language? Howbeit Auguſtine confeſſeth himſelfe to haue been profited by the reading of the Scriptures which hee hee did not throughly understand. If they take them sometimes in a wrong and perverse sense (which is after repeated in the next Section) that is their fault, and not the tongues, whereof let the Reader see further answer before, in the answer to the Preface.

That it is almost impossible to accommodate the Service-booke to the people of one province in England, is a manifest untruth, refuted by daily experience; and if it were true, yet by your own counsell, for the preservation of the unity of faith, it is meet that in one Dioceſſe or Cittie, much more province, the Church service should bee in divers tongues. That the Apostle doth not appoynt any such thing, it is most false. For even in one and the same (not Province, Dioceſſe, or Cittie onely, but) congregation, and particular assembly, he will haue that divers tongues shall be spoken rather, then any thing for want of interpretation should not be understood. To these two manifest falshoods (as though lies coupled together made a triple cord and strengthened one another) you adde a third, that the Latine tongue hath been common to the most and chiefest Churches in the world: unleſſe you meane the latter yeares, wherein Sathan being let loose, hath had his throne set up in the West parts. That also which followeth this, that the Latine tongue hath been since the Apostles times throughout all these parts of Christendome expounded in every house, schoole and Pulpit, is (of the same stampe with his fellowes that went before) manifestly false, as appeareth by the former discourse: then it is also contrary to your selues. For if it were expounded, it was not understood, but by some other tongue interpreting it. And if your slip bee in the mistaking of the word expounded, for used or received, or some such like, yet is the untruth of your speech manifest by daily experience. For although it were used in every Schoole and Church, yet that it was used in every House and Pulpit, hath as many witnesses against it, as there are eares in all these parts of Christendom. Last of all, in this Section (not a hiue of wisedome, as he saith, but a swarme of follies) they affirme that every Catholicke of age almost, can tel the sense of the ceremonie of the Masse, what to answer, when to say Amen, when to confesse, when to adore, when to stand, when to kneele, with many other such Apish toyes, and pretty feates. We should doe them too much honour, to compare the knowledge of the Priests with the perceverance that the Elephant, so noble a beast, hath of his keepers behaviour towards him. The horse also (that by often frequenting one way, hath such a print of it, that sometimes in his turnings and windings hee will correct his master) hath a sounder knowledge in his way, then they haue in their owne service. Therefore, (saving the honour that is due unto them in that they are men) the dogs knowledge which is trained up to turne the spit, doth not giue place to theirs. For as soone as ever hee seeth the rost laid to the fire, he stealeth away, knowing that then he should enter the wheele. And as soone as ever hee seeth it taken from the fire, he giveth a whippet from his wheele, knowing when to come, and when to depart. And although they haue no hands to hold up, yet such is often the diligence of their masters, that they will at a beck hold up their feet, an adoration good enough for your god of the Altar. You know also that the Camels are easily taught to kneele. The summe is, that most of your Catholickes know in a manner nothing in the secret of the Masse, which unreasonable beasts may not by their skilfull masters attaine unto. Sure we are, that as Paul meaneth, they cannot say Amen, that is to say, in a full perswasion of heart affirme that all those petitions, or desires, are aright which they haue heard. Not onely because they often misconceiue of the Masse-booke, which sometime in steed of a benediction which they looke for, rendreth a malediction; but also for that they understand not the words of the blessing. Wherein, if you well bethinke you, you will thinke your selues beholden unto us, which thus hold you in with your selues although you be out with the truth. For to what end doe you defend this paradox against all Scripture, Antiquity, common sense and reason, that the Church service may be in a tongue not knowne nor understood of the people: if all your Catholickes of age doe understand the Latine service, why will you cast away the golden crowne of your credit into the bottome of the seas, for a thing which standeth you, as you pretend, in no steed at all? How is it also, that here you forget your selues, which erewhile placed a great discretion in your Church, not to devulgate your secret mysteries and dreadfull sacraments. For if they know all the ceremonies of your Masse, the Mistresse of all your mysteries: what leaue yon hidden and concealed from them?

In the 5. Section they say, that the Apostle writeth not in this place of the Churches publicke service but onely of a certaine exercise of a mutuall conference of miraculous giftes expired more then 1400 yeares agoe: wherein take your choyce, whether of the reproches of great ignorance or great guilefulnesse, which you cast at us, shall bee returned home upon your heads. From one of them you cannot shift. For notwithstanding that the Apostle spake not of the Churches publicke service, but of a severall exercise from it, yet his reasons are generall, and drawne, not from the expedience of that which ought to be done in that exercise, but from that which ought to bee done in the Church: so that if the Church service, Prayers and Sacraments bee done in the Church and publicke Assembly of the faithfull; it is evident, that they ought also to be framed by this rule of the Apostle, that they must be done to edifying, and therfore in a language understood of the whole Church. And if you will further see the sottishnesse of your answer, looke to other rules which the Apostle giueth, for the good & profitable direction of this exercise: for (to overthrow the disorder crept into it) he commandeth that all things should be done orderly and comely, and that no woman should speak in that exercise; will your Logick conclude thereof, that in the Church service, Prayers, and Sacraments, there needeth no order, no comelines, no restraint of women for to speak in them? If this be your Logick it is as repugnant and irregular from true Logick, as you are from true Christianity, by profession of your Iesuitisme. And notwithstanding that the use of extraordinary gifts in tongues & revelation of things to come, be ceased, yet the exercise of conference of their gifts, whom God hath bestowed such knowledge of, as may serue to edifying, exhortation and comfort of the Church, remaineth still. For (seeing these gifts remaine yet whereby these ends may be atchieved, whereunto this exercise was appoynted) there Vers. 3. is no cause why the exercise it selfe should not remaine: unleſſe you thinke that you may take away some of those meanes from the Church, whereby it may haue edifying, exhortation, and consolation, and haue them abundantly. For albeit the Church hath all these, in the other ordinary Liturgie of the Church, yet can they not come so flowingly to her by some, as by all the pipes of the Churches exercises, which the Lord hath appointed to convey them by. In the 31. and 32. verses having commanded that they should speake one by one, and not many at once, and that those that speake should goe under the censure of the rest endued with like gifts unto them, hee bringeth verse 33. two reasons of those commandements, whereof one is, that God will haue all things orderly done, the other is, that he so ordained in all Churches. This exercise therefore being setled in all Churches, it followeth, that it is perpetuall and ordinary. For the Iesuites are not able to shew any one thing (performable of the Churches) which is universally commanded of the Apostle vnto them all, that is not

1. Thes. 5. 20. 21. of all times and ages. Hereof it commeth that the Apostle commandeth the Church of Thessalonica that it should not despise Prophesies: where (speaking in the plurall, and not in the singular, as Rom. 12. where he specifieth the ordinary ministers) he seemeth to include their exercise also, which beeing iudged fit to handle the word, were admitted to speake although they had otherwise no publicke function in the Church.

Hither also belongeth, that Iudas and Sylas (being of the Church at Ierusalem) are called prophets;
Act. 15. 22. 32. as those which (amongst others) hauing there been trained vp for the ministerie of the Church, were able to exhort and strengthen the brethren, which were at Antioch. The perpetuitie of this exercise, may further be shewed in that the Apostles (in the establishment of the Churches vnder the Gospell forsaking whatsoeuer was Iewish and for a time) did notwithstanding retaine this exercise of prophecie as a part of the ordinarie diet, that the Lord had prouided for the more plentifull nourishment of the faithfull in all times, for that this exercise was in the Churches vnder the Law, it
1. Sam. 19. 20. may appeare (not onely by the exercises of the schollers of the prophets, whereof Samuell in his time and Elias & Eliseus in theirs were the ouerseers, but) by the practise of the Iewish Churches in the time
2. Reg. 4. 38. & 6. 1. 2. 3. of the Apostles, for when Paul and Barnabas came to Antioch in Pisidia and sate down amongst the rest: the Gouernours of the Synagogue sent to require them, that if they had any word of exhortation to the people vpon the Law and the prophets (which had been red) they would speake it, now
Act. 13. 15. considering that they did this vnto them, whom they knew not, nor could (for Pauls person) know that they were Leuites or Priests, ordeined for the puplique Ministerie of the Church: it appeareth that they made this offer vnto them, as vnto men whom although they esteemed priuate, yet iudged that they might haue some good gift, of opening the Scriptures to the instruction of the assembly, it appeareth also, that this exercise was vpon the Sabboth day; and therefore (if not at the same time yet) at the same meeting, or day at the least, when other the publique Ministers of the Church vers. 15. executed their office of making prayers and administring the Sacraments of Circumcision (in the Iewes Synagogue) and of Baptisme and the holy Supper, in the Christian Church. Ambrose also is so far from thinking it to bee abrogated, that he esteemeth that this exercise may bee done of some of the people, so it be with order and comelines.

In the 6. section, they haue made a confused mash of many things, first they say that here is nothing meant of priuate prayers, where there is no truth, for (notwithstanding the disputation of the Apostle be principally of the publik seruice of the Church yet) diuers of the reasons he vseth reach also to priuate prayer, as shall appeare afterward. In the mean season they vse for that these were newly inspired of God, first is false (for then they had not been subiect to censure, as it is euident Vers. 32. 1 Thes. 5. 21. they were) Secondly it is not only strengthles to proue that wherfore it is brought but maketh against it for what better direction can wee haue to frame our prayers by, then to our vttermost to conform them to those which the Holy Ghost inspired. And thereunto that their distinction between these prayers, and the prayers of the Church, that the one were newly inspired of God, and the other written by the Holy Ghost, is sottish and vnlearned. considering, that those things which are written
2. Tim. 3. 16. by the holy Ghost, were also inspired vnto them whom hee chose for his pen-men: and that (if not with more yet) with as much newnes or readinesse, and as little meditation, as these, wee grant that
2. Pet. 1. 21. Psal. 45. 2. the Lords prayer (which you call the Pater noster) was giuen and written by the holy Ghost, likewise the Salutation of the Angell vnto the holy virgin, (which you call the Aue Maria) but that this vpon Luk. 1 later, is no prayer nor so to be vsed; hath been before declared. The articles of the Christian faith (which you call the Creed) are no prayers, but a profession of the principal points of doctrine in the Christian religion, neither were they giuen and written by the H. Ghost, but gathered by godly men
In the end of the answer vpon the Acts out of the doctrine of the Apostles as hath been shewed As for your Lady Mattins, letany and such like (as nettles among roses, chaffe amongst pure wheat) wee tread vnderneath our feet. And herein, as in our iudgement you are blasphemous, which couer such beggerly trash with the glorious title of giuen and written by the Holy Ghost; so we think that your own Masters will mislike your madnesse in this behalfe. As for that which they say that all sorts and sexes haue vsed specially in Latine their Primars and Beades and that it is more agreeable to the vse of all Christian people euer since their conuersion to pray in Latine then in the vulgar, although euery one in particular vnderstand not what he saith, is both false (as hath and shall further appeare) and set down nakedly with out so much as a rag to couer the shame thereof. So is it also as false, and an impudent begging of that in quæstion, that they pray with as great consolation, deuotion, and affection which vnderstand not their prayers as those which vnderstand them, for neither can any affect that which he knoweth not, and the Apostle in assigning the cause of comfort to be, for that, that which Vers. 3 is comfortably spoken is vnderstood, declareth, that there can be no comfort, where vnderstanding is separate from that which is uttered, which is manifest also by Ezechias Embassadors vnto Rab-
2. Reg. 18. 26. shake who (because they would not haue their people discomforted) desired Rabshake to speake the language that the people vnderstood not: if therefore men can not bee discomforted, by vncomfortable words when they vnderstand them not, it followeth also, that comfortable words will not comfort them, when they are seuered from the vnderstanding of those which heare them. And as this is directly contrary to the Scripture, and to the sense of all that haue a sparke of reason, contrary also to their great master, who affirmeth that the people is better brought to God, and answereth Amen more

deuoutly when they vnderstand the Priests prayer: so is it directly contrary to that themselues haue set down before in the 11. section, where you say, that such as would learne in deuotion and humilitie may and must with diligence learne the thing in which such diuine things are written, for to what end, should you driue the people to such hard and impossible conditions, of learning the latine tongue, if they may as comfortably, as deuoutly and with as great affection, pray without as with the vnderstanding thereof, especially if to this sentence be annexed that which is said in the 10. Section that the idiot & vnlearned take no lesse fruit of all diuine offices meete for euery ones condition then the learnedst Clearke in the Realme. As for that you say they pray with as little tediousnesse, we think it partly true, for if they vnderstood oftentimes the things which they say, they would loth and irke them, for the abomination and filth that is in them.

Where they adde that there is a greater maiesty in the Churches tongue dedicated in our S. Crosse. First, if they had added, who dedicated the tongue in our S. Crosse, they might haue been ashamed to haue alledged it for the maiesty and reuerence of the Latine tongue, considering that it was not the Holy Ghost that did it, by any of his Secretaries: but the Divell which did it by Pilat his instrument: which is manifest if the end wherefore he caused the title of Iesus of Nazareth, the King of the Iewes, to be written upon his Crosse, be looked unto: namely, that the glory of Christs kingdom might bee laid open to the scorne and mockery of all, whilest in steed of sitting in a royall throne, he hung upon the gallowes: And it was as much as if he had said, behold this is the goodly King of the Iewes. It is truth, that as God had before by a secret providence guided the murderous mouth of Caiphas in a most wicked sentence to speak the words of truth, Ioh. 11. 50. & 18. 14. so did hee by the like providence, direct Pilates bloudy pen to write some truth of the Kingdom of Christ: In regard whereof the Iewes would haue had him altered the title: Howbeit, as that truth of Caiphas freed not him from being a false Priest in so speaking: so this title delivereth not Pilate from being a false Iudge in so writing. We are not ignorant, but that Ierome somewhere hath such a speech of the dedication of the three tongues, Hebrew, Greek and Latine, in the Crosse. But neither is his authority able to carry it away, neither doth he ever use it to any such purpose as the Iesuites apply it, as one who would haue the prayers of the Church understood of all, as shall appeare: But (granting that Pilate herein was led by the spirit of God, as Balaam sometime was to blesse the people of God, yet notwithstanding) so far it is from making any thing for you that it maketh manifestly against you: for seeing Pilate wrote the title of the Crosse in those three tongues to the end that all the Iewes and Proselites, that were assembled from all Coasts to the feast of the Passeover, might best understand that which was written: it followeth, that whatsoever is spoken of Christ ought to be delivered in such tongues as they that heare it may best understand it. Againe, if all people ought to haue the divine Service in the Latin tongue, although they understand it not, because the Crosse of our Saviour was dedicated in it, how much more ought they to haue it in the Hebrew and Greek tongues, in the which not the Crosse onely, but the nativity, resurrection and ascension of our Saviour Christ, and briefly the whole mysterie of our salvation was dedicated of God.

Wherefore if any one tongue for reverence and maiesty should bee chosen for the shutting up of divine service in a tongue which all understand not, the Greeke and the Hebrew tongues must haue the preheminence, and the Latine must wait her turne, untill they be buried. Not to speake of the Syrian tongue, which was one of the three tongues wherein the title of the crosse was written (called Hebrew of the name of her mother of whom she was begotten, & whom she resembled) which as it is so evident that it needs no prose: so if the Iesuits forehead will serue them to deny it, yet can they not so escape, considering that themselues confesse (upon Math. 16. 18. that our Saviour Christ preached the Gospell in the Syrian tongue: whereby more reverence and maiesty groweth unto that tongue, then they are able with their tongue and teeth both to purchase unto the Latine tongue. The other reason of the allowance of the childrens crying of Hosanna although they understood it not, is answered before upon Math. 21. 9. Whereunto adde this of the Apostle, that if they did not understand that which they said (as indeed they did) yet that wee must not bee children in understanding as they were. 1. Cor. 14. 20.

The testimony of Gregorie is not to bee found lib. 27. moral. cap. 6. neither doth it make any thing for you, for if the Brittans sounded Alleluia an Hebrew word and not praise the Lord, what maketh that to proue, that they had their Seruice in the Latine tongue; it proueth rather, that they had it in Hebrew: Although in truth it proueth neither the one nor the other, for as Alleluia and Amen &c. (Hebrew words) are kept by the Apostles in writing Greeke: so others in following them, haue for the most part kept the same in translating the Scriptures into their seuerall languages which they could not haue been ignorant of, if they had remembred, that Augustine is of that iudgement that Amen and Alleluia, ought not to be translated into any other tongue, wherefore seeing Alleluia is no more proper to the Latine tongue then to the English or Brittish: it followeth that the singing of Alleluia doth no more argue the diuine seruice in the Latine tongue: then in any other tongue, much lesse then in the English tongue, and so Ierome also is answered, 1. Tom. Epist. 58. alleaged to the same purpose. Secondly Gregorie maketh flatly against you: for if the Brittans could not but (vntill neere a thousand yeares) gnash barbarously: it followeth necessarily, that for the space of well neere 600 yeares, they could not sound any word of Latine in their diuine seruice, vnlesse peraduenture you will grant, that to speake the Latine tongue, was to gnash barbarously now (for so much as it is known and proued by euident stories, that England had receiued the Christian faith before that time) it must needes follow by their own testimony, that hauing the true religion amongst them, yet had they not (all that while) any vse of the Latine tongue in their diuine seruice. And thereof it must also needs follow, that when England received the Gospell, of Ioseph of Aramathia, or of whomsoever in the Apostles time, it received it not in the Latine tongue. The rest of the places make nothing at all for them: for there is neuer a one of them, that maketh mention of any use of the Latine tongue in the service of any Country which understood it not. And it is evident that in the Country of Africke, which onely is heere named and cited out of August. Epist. 10. there Aug. lib. retract. 1. cap. 20. & de verb. Apost. Serm. 25.

there were divers places, wherein the rudeſt people vnderſtood and ſpake the Latine tongue better then the proper tongue of the Country. And as there is not a word for them, ſo the place which they quote out of Cyprian. expl. orat. dom. num. 13. is directly againſt them: for when he condemneth him, which in prayer hath one thing in his heart and another in his voyce, he condemneth the Popiſh prayers, whoſe heart waiteth not vpon that which they ſpeak, but vpon that which they ſue for at Gods hand, whether they be contained in the petition and words which they vtter, yea or no. The place of Ierome is about his tranſlation, and maketh nothing to this cauſe, ſaving that it maketh rather againſt them, in that he affirmeth that he had tranſlated the Scriptures into the Sclavone tongue. Auguſtine is alſo manifeſtly againſt them, who, in his book de Catechiz. rudib. 89. de doctr. Chriſt. lib. 2. cap. 13. & Epiſt. 10. declareth that he would haue certaine barbariſmes, ſolæciſmes, and vndiſtinct reading, corrected, that the people might ſay Amen, to that which they plainly vnderſtand. The next place is to the ſame effect: where alſo it is to be noted, that as he would haue certaine Barbariſmes borne with if they hurt not, nor hinder the vnderſtanding, ſo he would haue them corrected where they are doubtfull, and bring any impediment vnto the vnderſtanding, or right vnderſtanding of the hearer.

Auguſt. de Catechiz. rud. c. 9.

Thus it appeareth, how (not onely they haue not ſo much as one word, of either ancient father, or ſtory, to relieue their cauſe with, but) that even thoſe places which they haue choſen to nouriſh this ſtarueling with, are for the moſt part ſuch, as giue it (as it is in the Proverbe) pappe with a hatchet. After they ſay, that prayers are not made ſpecially to encreaſe knowledge, but to offer up our hearts and wants vnto God: whereof that they conclude, vnderſtanding not to bee neceſſary in prayers, hath ſuch a crack in it that no Logick is able to ſoder. And as well may they ſay, that becauſe the principall end of building of a houſe, is not to encreaſe the cunning of the builder, therefore a man may build a houſe although he haue no skill in building: or becauſe the principall end why the Miniſter either exhorteth or rebuketh, is not to encreaſe his knowledge, therefore he may exhort and rebuke without knowledge. As if they were ignorant, that to the commendable performance of ſome one thing it may be needfull to propound divers ends, whereof ſome of them ſhould be more principall then the other. And if to offer our hearts by words, it be not neceſſary that we vnderſtand what we ſay, it were better to ſpeak with the heart onely, without words: For the naked ſpeaking of the words take up ſome attention and power of the minde, which forasmuch as not vnderſtood, it can neither direct, nor allure and draw on the affection to follow, it muſt needs be, that the prayer that is made with the heart alone without any vſe of the tongue and lippes, is more profitable then that which is the exerciſe of them, when the words are not vnderſtood: ſeeing that the former hath leſſe idle diſtraction of the powers of the minde then the latter hath.

After, they repeate their coleworts, that the ſimple people (ſcarce the learned) can vnderſtand all Pſalmes in their own tongue: if they vnderſtand one Pſalm in reading all, or if they vnderſtand one verſe in every Pſalme, who ſeeth not the folly of this reaſon, which vnderſtandeth the common proverbe, that it is better to haue halfe a loafe then no bread, and that it is good for them to gleane heere and there an eare, that cannot gather by whole arme-fuls. They adde, that the ſimple people are not bound to know, nor can tell to what petition of the pater noſter their demand pertaineth, which is falſe: for to offer up the ſacrifice of themſelues, both body and ſoule, and to performe a reaſonable ſervice vnto God, it is required that they ſhould try what is the acceptable and perfect will of God: Neither is there any ſo ſenſeleſſe, that when he prayeth in his own tongue, that the will of God may be done, that he may haue his daily bread, and forgiueneſſe of his treſpaſſes, vnderſtandeth not ſomewhat of that which is proper vnto thoſe Petitions. If they vnderſtand not all, they may be the eaſilier borne with, ſeeing that the Ieſuites (ſaying that the people know not whether the petition for their ſick children be referred vnto the ſecond, third, or ſixt petition) declare themſelues to be ignorant to what head of the Lords prayer that petition belongeth: For thereby they plainely inſinuate, that it belongeth to one of theſe three, which indeed pertaineth vnto the fourth petition of our daily bread.

Rom. 12. 1. 2. 3.

Albeit the principall vſe of hauing the prayers, Pſalmes &c. in their own tongue, is not that they of themſelues, ſhould come to ripe vnderſtanding of them, but that (in the experience of the difficultie of that which they vnderſtand not) they might take the better heed vnto it, when it is opened by the Miniſtery of the Church, in ſermons, Catechiſmes, or other Church exerciſes whatſoeuer. And ſo it cometh to paſſe, that when they either pray, or read, the things which they haue had expounded, they vnderſtand (according to the gift of diligence and memory which God hath beſtowed vpon them) not onely what things are to be asked, (as it were what gift is to be offered) but in what words and what petition, as it were in what veſſell, or diſh, they ſhould giue vp their preſent in, whereas praying a ſtrange tongue, they haue no manner of diſcretion of that which they pray for, when their voyce intreateth for Gods glory, their hart prayeth for their own happines, when their voyce prayeth for a manſion in heauen, their hart maketh requeſt for a tabernacle in earth. Here of alſo it muſt needs come, that when (according to the difference of things which they pray for) the heart and affections ſhall crie, and be lifted vp higher, for the obtaining of greater and weightier petitions, the voice ſhall crie and be lifted vp higher, for the obtaining of ſmaller matters, and of the other ſide when the heart ſhall be more remiſſe, (and ſtrike as it were a lower ſtring) for the obtaining of ſmaller requeſts, the voice ſhall bee fainter and more dead in making requeſt for the chiefeſt things. And finally when the heart ſhall relie, and dwell vpon, ſome point moſt neceſſary to be ſtood vpon, the voice (hauing ſcarce tripped vpon it) ſhall run away, and leaue the heart behind it. Thus through a perpetual ſquare and iar, of the voice and of the heart, there can be no muſique melidious and ſweet in the eares of the Lord. And which is more, they haue no certen perſuaſion and aſſurance in their hearts, whether with their voice they bleſſe God, or curſe him to his face; but therein goe onely vpon the truſt and credit of their teachers, wherein how miſerably they haue been deceiued, the reformation formation of the portis by Pope Pius the fifth (who put out certen blasphemous prayers, which haue been vsed some ages in their Church) doth euidently declare. Another reason is, that although they know the words that hauing the seruice in their mother tongue: yet they vnderstand not the sense without the which the knowledge of the words profit not; as if any were so blockish as to bee ignorant, that a man may sooner come to the knowledge of the sense, when he hath the knowledge of the words, then when he hath no vnderstanding, in the nature and power of the words. Or as if he which hath the key to open a doore (although he know not which way to turne it) were not neerer the opening of it then he that hath neither key, nor knowledge how to vse it. Last of all (to shut vp their long treatise) they say that if any man bee contentious in this matter they answer him with the Apostle 1. Cor 11.16. that the Church of God hath no such custome. A worthy rule, but not so wisely applied, for notwithstanding that there be a perpetuall comelinesse of nature, in that attire of the womans head, whereof the Apostle speaketh: yet for so much as it neither toucheth the worship of God & is amongst the duties of the second table, rather a whit low in the naile, then a wound in the head of them, the Apostle esteemeth, that (after men haue been sufficiently conuinced by the word of their duties in such points) they are no further to bee delt with by multiplication of many replies. But this is an essentiall point of Gods seruice, where wee haue the manifest commandement of the Apostle, who shutteth vp this treatise with another weight of sentence, then he concluded that disputation, saying that if any man be spirituall let him know that these are the commandements of God. Not further to enquire into Augustines saying that it is madnesse to dispute whether it shou'd be done which the whole Church doth obserue: it is heere sufficient to tell you, (that which the whole treatise hereof hath proued) that the whole Church did neuer receiue their seruice in the Latine tongue. Now that wee haue answered (not so much the reasons for the most part as the bare and naked sayings of the aduersary, who propound these things rather as teaching vpon their stoole, & setting sosse before their whelps which will eat, whatsoeuer they giue, then as disputing them in the schooles, with an aduersary whose stomach loatheth them: we will (as briefly as we may) set down the reasons, which the Apostle ministreth vnto vs in this chapter, for the ouerthrow of the barbarous seruice of the popish Synagogue in a strange speech, (vsed in all places where this cancre hath preuailed) and consequently for confirmation of all our Churches exercises in a knowen tongue. Vers. 37.

The Church service ought not to be uttered so, as the hearers are no more profited then if they heard not at all. But so it is when it is uttered in the Latine tongue which is not understood of the hearers. Therefore, &c. The Proposition is manifest: the Assumption is proved by vers. 2. where it is said, that no man heareth him which speaketh in a tongue, that is, in a language that is not understood of the hearers.

The Church service ought so to be spoken as it may edifie the hearers; but spoken in the Latine tongue (not understood of the hearers) it edifieth them not. Therfore &c. The Proposition is manifest, and hath proofe of the 26. verse: the Assumption is proved out of the 4. verse, where he that speaketh in a tongue is said to edifie himselfe, meaning only, as appeareth by the opposition of him that prophesieth, which edifieth both himselfe and the Church too, which were no opposition at all, if he that spake in a strange tongue should also edifie the Church.

The Church service ought so to be spoken as not onely a sound be heard, but such a one as shall certainly direct the people to their severall duties, what, when, and how to do. But so it is not when it is spoken in the Latine tongue, not understood of the hearers. Therefore, &c. The Proposition is proved by comparison of instruments of musick, and of the Trumpet, in which it is not sufficient that they giue a noyse, unlesse that they be tempered to the understanding of the hearers, and direct them either to mourning or ioy; to draw the sword, or to put it up; to march on forward, or to retire backward, vers. 7. 8. 9. The Assumption is manifest, and hath been shewed in the fourth Section.

That Church service is barbarous, and spoken in the aire, where the hearers know not the power and signification of the words which are uttered. But in the Church service uttered in the Latine tongue, the power and signification of the words is unknowne to the hearers. Therefore, &c. The Proposition is proved by comparison of instruments of musick, and of the Trumpet, in which it is not sufficient that they giue a noyse, unlesse that they be tempered to the understanding of the hearers, and direct them either to mourning or ioy; to draw the sword, or to put it up; to march on forward, or to retire backward, vers. 7. 8. 9. The Assumption is manifest, and hath been shewed in the fourth Section.

That Church service is barbarous, and spoken in the aire, where the hearers know not the power and signification of the words which are uttered. But in the Church service uttered in the Latine tongue, the power and signification of the words is unknowne to the hearers. Therefore, &c. The Proposition is proved by verse 11. where the Apostle saith in his owne person, that every one shall be barbarous, and receiue the voyce as spoken in the aire, which understandeth not the power and signification of it. The Assumption is confessed by the aduersaries

The Church service which maketh the hearers like to children in understanding, is condemned of the Apostle. But the service in the Latine tongue amongst those that understand it not, maketh men like children in understanding. Therefore, &c. The Proposition is proved by vers. 20. The Assumption is confessed.

That Church service ought not to be used, whereby the Church should carry the signe and brand of Infidels and miscreants: But it is a note of unfaithfull people to bee constrained to heare a tongue which they understand not. Therefore, &c. The Proposition is manifest. The Assumption is proved by vers. 21. where the Apostle applieth the constraint of the people of Israel in hearing a strange tongue, to this hearing of an unknown language in the Church, arguing it by comparison of the lesse. That it to heare a strange language in the affaires and matters pertaining to this life, be a token of Gods anger against a people, much more to heare an unknowne tongue in thing, that belong to the kingdom of heaven.

If a language unknowne may not be used without interpretation in the Church, although it bee miraculous and extraordinary, (whereby the glory of God doth singularly appeare) much lesse may an unknowne language, which is not myraculous, but gotten by ordinary travell, wherein Gods glory doth not so much appeare, bee so used. But the former is true, and proued by the discourse of the whole chapter: therefore the latter.

If a language may not be used in the Church service which is not understood of the hearer, and yet well vnderſtood of the ſpeaker: much leſſe ought it to be vſed, when it is vnderſtood neither of the ſpeaker, nor of the hearer. But the former is true, as hath been already proved: therefore alſo the latter. Whereupon inſueth, that if the Popiſh ſervice were lawfull, where the hearers onely vnderſtand it not: yet ſhould it not be lawfull in moſt of their meetings, where the Prieſt himſelfe which vttereth it, vnderſtandeth it not.

And thus much for the Arguments againſt the whole Church ſervice vttered in a ſtrange tongue.

Againſt the common prayers in an vnknowne tongue particularly, the Apoſtle reaſoneth thus: All prayers to the which the hearers cannot ſay Amen, ought to be chaſed out of the Church. But vnto prayers vttered in a language which the hearer vnderſtandeth not, the hearer cannot ſay Amen. Therefore, &c. The Propoſition the Apoſtle taketh for granted. The aſſumption he proveth by the 16. verſe, becauſe hee knoweth not what hee ſaith which prayeth. Which generall reaſon, with the ſame ſtroke, wipeth away all private prayers, wherein a man knoweth not what hee ſaith. For thereof it followeth, that not being able to vnderſtand what hee ſaith, hee is not able to ſay Amen to his owne prayer. So alſo may (almoſt) all the reaſons vſed before generally againſt all the Church ſervice ſaid in a language not vnderſtood, be applied vnto him, that prayeth privatly in an vnknowne tongue, as that he heareth not himſelfe: that he is barbarous vnto himſelfe, ſpeaketh in the aire, not vnderſtanding himſelfe, is more then childiſh, not onely in not vnderſtanding what others ſay, but not what he himſelfe ſaith: hath the marke of Gods wrath vpon him, in that in things belonging to his ſalvation, he heareth a language which he vnderſtandeth not. And ſo much the more is it vnlawfull for one to pray in an vnknowne tongue privately, then the Church publickly, as the bleſſing of God is greater, and the preſence of Chriſt more effectually felt, in common then in private prayers. If therefore this bleſſing of God doth not make the common prayers in an vnknowne tongue fruitfull and edifiable to the Church, much leſſe will it make private prayers of any profit vnto one man, when they are vttered in an vnknowne language. Vnto theſe reaſons (common to both publicke and private prayers) that is alſo peculiar and ſpeciall vnto private prayers, which is drawn out of verſe 28. where (in prayers that a man hath privately with himſelfe) the Apoſtle requireth, that he ſhould ſpeake as well to himſelfe, as vnto God. But in private prayers vttered in an vnknowne tongue, he ſpeaketh vnto God onely, becauſe he onely vnderſtandeth him, not vnto himſelfe becauſe he vnderſtandeth not what himſelfe ſaith: wherefore the private prayers which are vttered in an vnknowne tongue, are not anſwerable vnto the rule of the Apoſtle.

To theſe arguments of the Apoſtle, we will adde the teſtimony of Antiquitie, not ſo much to adde more weight and ſtrength vnto the cauſe, as that thereby the reader may vnderſtand how impudently the Ieſuites doe abuſe the names of the Fathers to avouch that which they openly deny.

Ieroms ſaith, that the voyces and letters of all nations doe ſound out the paſſion and reſurrection of Chriſt. And againe, the voyce is different, but the religion is one. There bee in a manner ſo many companies of thoſe that ſing, as there be diverſities of nations.

AEneas Silvius (who after was made Pope) writeth that (when ſute was made, that the Slavones, newly converted to the faith, might haue their Church ſervice in their mother tongue, and that there was ſome ſtay thereof made at Rome) there was heard a voyce from heaven, that every ſpirit ſhould praiſe the Lord, and every tongue ſhould confeſſe vnto him.

2. Tim. 2. 16. 17.

Here alſo it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſet down the iudgement of the elder Papiſts themſelues, that by compariſon of their iudgements, with the Popiſh Divinity that is now, it may be known how true it is that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of hereſie, that it eateth like a cancre, and that the hereticks go from evill to worſe, vntill their madneſſe be known to all men. In the Lateran Councell it is thus decreed, Becauſe in divers parts within one Citie and Dioceſſe, people of divers tongues are mixed, which haue vnder one faith divers rites and manners: we ſtraitely command, that the Biſhops of ſuch Cities or Dioceſes, provide meete men, which according to the diverſity of their rites and tongues may ſay the divine ſervice vnto them, and miniſter the Church Sacraments, inſtructing them both in word and example alſo. This Councell thought the vnity of faith beſt preſerved, when as (in one Dioceſe, yea one onely Citie) there was vſe of divers tongues in the Church ſervice, according to the diverſity of languages of the inhabitants in the ſame: yet the Ieſuites thinke that the vnity of faith is ſtricken at when in every Country there is a ſeverall language wherein the Church exerciſes are ſet out. In latter times it was decreed that the ten Commandements, and the articles of the faith ſhould onely be read in the mother tongue. Howbeit another Councell after that (decreeing that for the dignity of the Latine tongue, the Sacraments ſhould be miniſtred in it) commandeth, that where (in certaine places) they were miniſtred in the Germane tongue, there it ſhould not be altered.

RHEM. 19. [34. Let women hold their peace.] There be, or were, certaine Hereticks in our Countrie (for ſuch euer take the Scriptures diverſly for the aduantage of the time) that denied women to hold lawfully any Kingdom or temporall Soueraintie; but that is falſe and againſt both reaſon and the Scriptures. This onely in that ſexe is true, that it is not capable of holy orders, ſpirituall Regiment or Cure of ſoules: and therefore cannot doe any function proper to Prieſts and Biſhops: not ſpeake in the Church, and ſo not preach, nor diſpute, nor haue or giue voyce either deliberatiue or definitiue in Councels or publike Aſſemblies, concerning matters of Religion, nor make Ecclesiasticall lawes concerning the same, nor binde, nor loose, nor excommunicate, nor suspende, nor degrade, nor absolue, nor minister Sacraments, other then Baptisme in the case of meere necessity, when neither Priest nor other man can be had: much lesse prescribe any thing to the Clergie, how to minister them, or giue any man right to rule, preach, or execute any spirituall function as vnder and by her authoritie: nor creature being able to impart that whereof it selfe is incapable both by nature and Scriptures. This regiment is expresly giuen to the Apostles, Bishops, and Prelates: they onely haue authoritie to bind and loose, *Matth.*18. they onely are set by the Holy Ghost to gouerne the Church. *Act.*20. they onely haue cure of our soules directly, and must make acount to God for the same, Heb,13.

Eccleſiaſticall

CARTVV.19. [34 Let women hold their peace.] We acknowledge and confesse, the lawfull and gracious governement of our Soveraigne Lady, sealed with many testimonies of Gods favour toward her, and toward us in her, and namely in scattering of the manifold treacheries and treasons that your heresie hath practised against her. And that (as a mother in Israel) God by her hath delivered us from the Iron yoke of the Popish servitude: To whom, although wee giue no power properly belonging unto Ecclesiasticall persons; yet we are able to shew that if any Ecclesiasticall person (under her obedience) do not the duety of ministery committed unto him, that it belongeth unto her to correct him, or cut him of. And where the defection from the truth, is generall in the whole Ministery of the Land, that there she may, and ought, to displace the usurpers, and appoint other in their places, according to the order which God hath prescribed in his holy Word. Where of the other side, you say women may not medle with Ecclesiasticall functions, it is true, but is ill observed of you. For (even directly against that you say, they may not absolue) one of your great Clearkes saith, that the Virgin Mary absolved a Priest, whom his Bishop had suspended. As for the case of meere necessity, whereby you would colour the Baptism which is ministred by women, it hath been shewed upon Math-3.11. that no necessity can be such, as ought to inforce an inconvenient (much lesse an utterly unlawfull and unable) person to Baptise.

CHAP. XV.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 3 FOr ‡I deliuered vnto you first of all which I also receiued: that Christ died for our sinnes * according to the Scriptures:

RHEM.1.[3, I deliuered vnto you.] This deliuerie in the Latine, and Greeke importeth tradition, so by Tradition did the Apostles plant the Church in all truth, before they wrote any thing.

CARTVV.1. [3 I delivered unto you.] By this place you are manifestly convinced that Tradition is not (as you would make men beleeue) that which is not contained in the Scriptures, but by word onely from the Apostles passeth from hand to hand. Neither did the Apostles by tradition (as you understand Tradition) plant the Churches in all truth before they wrote any thing: For the Apostle precisely noteth that these Traditions which he gaue them he delivered them out of the Scriptures.

Verse 10 But by the grace of God I am that which I am: and his grace in me hath not been‡ voide, but I haue laboured more abundantly then all they: yet not I, but the grace of God ‖ with me.

RHEM 2.[10. Void, but I.] In him Gods grace is not void, that worketh by his free will according to the motion and direction of the same grace.

CARTVV.2. [10 Voide, but I,] If whatsoever Paul was in goodnesse (for so he meaneth) he was by the grace of God: it followeth that he had no freewill to do any good of himselfe: for he that giveth all good to the grace of God in Christ, he taketh all good away from himselfe in nature, Verse. 15 And we are found also ‡ false witnesses of God: because we haue giuen testimonie against God, that he hath raised vp Christ, whom he hath not raised vp, if the dead rise not again.

RHEM.3.[15. False witnesses of God.] So may wee say, If the Catholike faith in all points be not true, then our first Apostles were false witnesses, then hath our Countrie beleeued in vaine all this while, then are all our fathers dead in their sinnes and perished, which (presupposing Christ to be God) were the greatest absurditie in the world

CARTVV.3. [13 False witnesses of God.] The Catholike faith may be in all points true, although your corner Romish faith, be (in the most of the chiefe, and principall points of salvation) false, And it is no marvell though your Apostle Augustine the Monk and his company were false witnesses, and you be yet in your sinnes, and all your fore-fathers which are dead in your faith haue perished in theirs, seeing that albeit you beleeue that Christ is risen, yet is hee risen in vaine unto you, who cannot beleeue that hee rose for your iustification. as long as you place your righteousnesse in your selues and your own merites. Yet in the middest and thickest of your darknesse, we know that it was not hard for the Lord to haue reserved his 7000 which did not once bow their knee to Baal, though the same were hidden from mens eyes, yours especially, whose sight is so short.

*Rom.*11.4.

Verse. 14 And if Christ be not risen again, then vaine is our preaching, vain also is your faith.

RHEM. 4. [41. Starre differeth.] The glory of the bodies of Saincts ſhall not be all alike but different in heauen according to mens merits.

CARTVV. 4. [41 Starre differeth.] Change according to merite (which the whole Bible will not furniſh you of) into Grace, which the Apoſtle divers times mentioneth in this one chapter. It is true, that the bodies of Saints ſhall be different in glory: But yet not truely gathered out of this place, where the Apoſtle ſheweth the difference of our bodies before they ſhall riſe, and after they ſhall be raiſed, and not the difference of one glorious body from another; as appeareth both by the queſtion ver. 35, and by the concluſion, verſ. 42. 43. 44. The middle proofe whereof is, that as many differences as there are in the creatures both in heaven and earth, whereby both the earthly differ, and are diſcerned from the heavenly in glory, and either of them in their ſeverall kinds, and formes, differ and are diſcerned one of them from another, ſo many arguments there are of the power of God in making our bodies after their upriſing from the dead, paſſingly to ſurmount the eſtate wherein they were before.

Verſe. 44 It is ſowen a natural body: it ſhall riſe a ſpiritual body. if there be a natural body, there is alſo a ſpirituall, RHEM. 5. [44. Spirituall body.] As to become ſpirituall doth not take away the ſubſtance of the body glorified: no more when Chriſts body is ſaid to be in ſpirituall ſort in the Sacrament, doth it import the abſence of his true body, and ſubſtance.

CARTVV. 5. [44 Spirituall bodies.] It is true that the ſpiritualneſſe of the bodie doth not take away the ſubſtance of the bodie glorified: but that thereof it followeth, that the ſpirituall preſence of Chriſts body in the Sacrament doth not import the abſence of his true body and ſubſtance, if by true body you meane his naturall body, is a meere ſophiſm of æquivocation: for a ſpirituall body here, is as much as an immortall, glorious, ſtrong, and a heavenly body, oppoſed unto a mortall, weak, bruiſed, and decayed body, as the Apoſtle exponndeth himſelfe: But ſpirituall preſence in the Sacrament is a preſence to faith, and a preſence by the wonderfull work of the ſpirit of God, which maketh us one with the naturall and true body of Chriſt, yea with Chriſt himſelfe God and man, by the ſame omnipotent power whereby it ioyneth things which in place are furtheſt removed: oppoſed unto that preſence of Chriſts body which is ioyned with the naturall and eſſentiall properties of having one member diſtinct from another, of length, bredth and ſpace. And therefore this place doth vtterly overthrow you: For as the ſpiritualneſſe of our bodies doth not take away their natuall and eſſentiall properties, wherby we ſhould not haue diſtinction of one part of the body from another, length, bredth and ſpace for our bodies, according to the ſtature and lineaments: even the body of Chriſt now glorified, if it were in the Sacrament, ſhould haue the naturall and eſſentiall properties of a body, as the diſtinction of one member from another, the lenghth, bredth, height, and place which belongeth thereto, and which it enioyeth in the heavens.

ANNOTATIONS.

Freewil with grace. Heret. tranſlation.

RHEM. 6. [10. With me.] God vſeth not man as a brute beaſt, or a blocke, but ſo worketh in him and by him that free will may concurre in euery action with his grace, which is alwayes, the principall. The Heretickes to auoid this concurrence in working and labouring, tranſlate, which is with me, where the Apoſtle rather ſaith, which laboureth with me.

CARTVV. 6. [10. With me.] Free will doth concurre in every good action: but that which the Lord (reſeruing the ſame naturall faculty) hath altered the quality of, making it free to doe well which was by nature bound and ſold to ſinne. This to avoyd theſe heretickes haue left out the relatiue which, contrary to the Greeke Copies, to the Syrian, Arabian, and their owne interlineall. And (not content to corrupt the text by tranſlation) they alſo ſhut up their eyes againſt the plaine words of the Apoſtle, who (notwithſtanding that he both had and might ſay, that he laboured more then all, becauſe ſo the Lord uſed him as an inſtrument, that he did that he did willingly: yet) leſt any thing ſhould be aſcribed unto him, as proceeding from any naturall inclination in him to doe good, hee correcteth himſelfe, ſaying, Yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me. And albeit the particle of the verbe ſubſtantiue is commonly to be underſtood in theſe Eccliſies or defects: yet it maketh neither hot nor cold unto us, whether it be turned which is with me, or laboureth with me: ſo that the words with me, be the ſame with thoſe which are in the ſame verſe before, the grace of God which is given to me, or as you haue turned it, the grace of God in me. So therefore that you interpret (with me) by (in me) (which the Apoſtle uſeth in one and the ſame ſignification) chuſe you (hardly) whether of theſe you will underſtand (is) which we like; or (laboured) which liketh you better.

Faſting is meritorious.

RHEM. 7 [32. Let vs eate and drink.] S. Ambroſe applieth theſe words to our Chriſtian Epicurians that take away faſting and deny the merits thereof. How can we be ſaued (ſaith he) *if we waſh not away our ſins by faſting, ſeeing the Scriptures ſay, faſting and almes deliuer from ſin? CARTVV. 7. [32. Let us eate and drinke.] It hath been ſhewed (upon Math. 4) that your faſts may well be kept in Epicurus gardens, whereas we uſe the faſts, as they are delivered us by the Scripture. And as for the word of merit, which Ambroſe aſcribeth to faſt: it hath alſo been ſhewed, that the word of merit (uſed ſometime of the Fathers) maketh nothing for due deſert of worke. And that Ambroſe doth ſo uſe it, appeareth by that other, where he oppoſeth debt to merit, ſaying, that the peace of Chriſt is not of debt, but of merit. And that he meant by the merit of faſting, nothing elſe but a good account thereof, it appeareth in that he speaketh against them which deny that the worke of it selfe doth merit.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 8 BVT I will tary at Ephesus vntill Pentecost.

RHEM. 1. [8. Pentecost.] The Heretickes and other new fangled striue among themselues, whether Pentecost signifie here the terme of fifty dayes, or else the Iewes holy day so called. But it commeth not to their mindes that it is most like to be the feast of Whitsontide kept and instituted euen then by the Apostles, as appeareth by the Fathers. See S. Aug. ep 119. c 15. & 16. Amb. in c. 17. Luc.

CART VV. 1. [8. Pentecost.] That by Pentecost here must be meant the Iewes feast, and not any feast kept and instituted by the Apostles, hath been euidently proued before vpon Acts 20. 16. And that there were no such feasts instituted by the Apostles, it is euident by the Ecclesiasticall Stories. For Eusebius declareth, that Iohn kept the Passeover according to the manner of the Iewes. And as he therein conformed himselfe in the manner of feasts vnto the weakenesse of the Iewes: so no doubt, did the rest of the Apostles when they came amongst them. But this is out of all controuersie, that if the Apostles had instituted the feasts of our Easter, Whitsontide, &c. Iohn would never haue broken their institution, which (if any had been) he knew shou'd haue been the institution of God. This is yet more plaine by the testimony of Socrates, who affirmeth that neither our Saviour Christ, nor his Apostles, did decree or institute any holy dayes, or lay any yoke of bondage vpon their necks, that came to the preaching, and addeth further, that they did first vse to obserue holy dayes by custome, and that as euery one was disposed at home. And herein Augustine (epist. 119. c. 15. one of the Iesuites witnesses to speake for them) is flat against them, saying that these feasts kept vnto the honour of the Lord, were added by the Councels of the Fathers. Ambrose in c. 17. Luc. is of your iudgement: but hath no such weight of authority as is able to stand against such manifest reasons (as haue been before alledged vpon Acts 20. 16.) and authorities as are here cited out of the Church Stories especially, whose proper worke it was to trace the steppes of antiquity. And Ambrose in saying that the Apostles knew that there was a difference of times (cleane contrary to the Apostle himselfe, that feared least all his labour should bee lost vpon them which obserued dayes, moneths, and yeares) deserueth to haue the lesse credit in this behalfe.

CART VV. Anathema and Maranatha, (which is as much as that hee is accursed vntill our Lord come) was the most fearefull and dreadfull sentence of the Church which it vsed against those which (having been of it) did vtterly fall from it, in such sort as the Church might discerne that they sinned the sinne against the Holy Ghost, that sinne vnto death: which was, when it might be knowne by their voluntary and vnconstrained blasphemies against Christ, and persecution of the Church his body) that they had not so much as a sparke of the loue of Christ in them. And therefore this curse cannot be applied vnto all that either loue not, or beleeue not in Christ, as vnto Iewes and Turkes, who (being without the Church) are without the reach of all Church iudgements and censures whatsoeuer.

RHEMIST.

1. Cor. 11. 2. Gal. 2. 14.

FOR the time when this Epistle was written, looke the Argument of the epistle to the Romanes: to wit, about the eighteenth yeere after his conuersion, and our Lords passion, because in the 11. Chapter he maketh mention of 14. yeeres, not onely after his Conuersion, as to the Galathians, but also after his rapte, which seemeth to haue been when hee was at Hierusalem Act. 9. 26. foure yeeres after his Conuersion (Gal. 1. 18.) in a trance or excesse of minde, as hee calleth it; Act. 22. 17. It was written at Troas (it is thought) and sent by Titus as wee reade Chap. 8.

It is for the most part against those false Apostles, whom in the first part of the first to the Corinthians, he noted, or rather spared, but now is constrained to deale openly against them, and to defend both his own person which they sought to bring into contempt, making way thereby to the correption of the Corinthians, and withall to maintaine the excellency of the Ministery and Ministers of the new Testament, aboue which they did magnifie the Ministery of the old Testament; bearing themselues very high because they were Iewes.

Against these therefore S. Paul auoucheth the preeminent power of his Ministerie, by which power also hee giueth a pardon to the incestuous fornicator whom he excommunicated in the last Epistle, seeing now his penance, and againe threatneth to come and excommunicate those that had greeuously sinned and remained impenitent. Two chapters also he interposeth of the contributions to the Church of Hierusalem, mentioned in his last, exhorting them to do liberally, and also to haue all in a readinesse against his comming.

CAR TVV. To this Argument S.] Saying that (as the Apostle excommunicated not the incestuous person alone without the Church: so) he receiueth him not into the Church againe without the Churches consent. 2. Cor. 2. 7. 8. 9. 10.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAVL TO THE CO-RINTHIANS.

CHAP. I.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 5. FOR as the ! passions of Christ abound in vs: so also by Christ doth our comfort abound.

All our afflictions be Christs afflictions, for the coniunction betwixt the head and the body. Merit and satisfaction.

RHEM. 1. [5. Passions of Christ.] All the afflictions of the faithfull bee called Christs own passions, not onely because they be suffered for him, but for that there is so straite coniunction and communion betwixt him being the head, and euery of the liuing members of his body, which is the Church that whatsoeuer is suffered by any of the same, is counted as a peece of his own passion. As likewise whatsoeuer good works bee done to any of them or by any of them, bee accepted as done to or by Christ himselfe. Which thing if the Protestants well weighed, they would not maruell that the Catholike Church attributeth such force of merite and satisfaction to the worke of holy men.

CAR. TVV. 1. [5. Passions of Christ.] Though wee weigh well that the afflictions of the faithfull faithfull are called the passions of Christ, because they suffer them for his sake, and for that they are ioyned unto him with a most straight coniunction, yet ceasse we not to marvell at the blockishnesse of the Papists, which attribute force of merit and satisfaction unto them. And we are perswaded that themselues would marvell at this their blindesse, if they considered that which followeth. First, that these Passions of Christ are not suffered of him as in the head, and in his owne person, but in his members onely. Secondly, if they weighed that whatsoever they suffer (even to the cruellest death, yet) suffer they it as a iust chastisement and correction for their owne sinnes, how uniustly soever it be inflicted upon them by tyrants of the world. Thirdly, if they had considered that the Apostle addeth in the next verse, that his afflictions should not profit them unto salvation, unlesse they suffered as he did: whereas he placeth the fruit of his passions in setting them an example how they should carry themselues in the like case. Fourthly, if they had considered, that the salvation of others is wrought as well in the ioy and consolation of those that haue endured afflictions, verse 6. 7. Wherefore if they be ashamed to say, that the comforts that God doth freely bestow upon those that suffer for him, do deserue that they should satisfie for others: they ought also to cover their faces, for saying, that the merite of their passions for Christ doth saue others: considering that the salvation of the faithfull is (according to the Apostle) wrought alike; as well in the comforts, as in the sufferings of the Saints. Fifthly, if they had laid to their hearts (of the one side that the passions of Christ were not able to satisfie for our sinnes, unlesse they had been after a sort the passions of God, and not of man onely how pure soever; and of the other side, that the sufferings of the Martyrs are but of bare and naked men, and the same defiled and stained, in regard whereof the passions of Christ in them must needs carry some note of their defilement) they should not onely marvell but be astonished, that the deuill hath so bewitched them, that they cannot perceiue the horrible sacriledge that they commit against the Sonne of God in thus prophaning and treading his precious bloud under their feete. And heere let the Reader obserue a blasphemous contradiction of the Iesuites who make mens sufferings and good workes to merite, not onely for themselues but for others, because they are counted as a peece of Christs own passion, and be accepted as done by him: and yet deny that Christs righteousnesse imputed to men will so much as saue the persons themselues to whom it is imputed. And withall their stone blindnesse ought to be remembred, which see not how the imputation of the sufferings of Christ, being profitable unto us therefore, because by faith we are one with him, and he with us, hee dwelleth in us, and wee in him: The passions and sufferings of our brethren cannot be so, because, although we be one with them and they with us, yet neither dwell they in us nor we in them: neither can we any more receiue nourishment from them to life, then one branch can receiue from another, although they all receiue from the roote.

Mich. 7.9. Lam. 3. 39. 42.

Verse. 6. et 7

Act. 20.28

RHEM. 2. [5. The comfort abound.] Wordly men that see onely the exterior miseries and afflictions that Catholikes do suffer being persecuted by the Heathen or Hereticks, deeme them exceeding miserable, but if they felt or could conceiue the abundance of consolation which Christ euer giueth according to the measure of their affliction, they would neuer wonder at the voluntary toleration of what tormens soeuer for Christs sake, but would wish rather themselues to bee in any dungeon in England with the comfort that such haue from God, then to liue out of the Church in all the wealth of the world.

Worldly men feele not the comfort of afflicted Catholickes.

CARTVV. 2. [5. The comfort abound.] When you speake of your abundance of consolation in the suffering for your religion: the prouerb of Salomon is fulfilled in you, that there is one which boasteth of riches when he is poore. And this wee know (not onely because that there is no peace vnto the wicked which as wrought seas continually cast out durt and filth: but) because your selues teach that you are not sure of the fauour of God, in the knowledge whereof the foundation is laid of all sound comfort.

Pro. 13. 7.

Verse. 11 You helping with all in praier for vs, that by many mens persons, thankes for that gift which is in vs, may be giuen by many in our behalfe.

RHEM. 3. [11. You helping in prayer.] S. Paul knew that the helpe of other mens prayers was nothing derogatory to the office of Christs mediation & intercession for him, nor to the hope that he had in God: and therfore he craueth the Corinthians aid herein as a support and succour for himselfe in the sight of God. With what reason or Scripture then, can the Protestants say that the prayers of Saincts be iniurious to Christ, or not to stand with the confidence we haue in him? As though it were more dishonour to God that wee should vse the aide of Saincts in heauen, then of sinners in earth: *or that the intercessions of these our fellowes beneath, were more auailable then the prayers of those that be in the glorious sight of God aboue.

Intercession of Saints or holy men for us, no derogation to Christ Hiero. contra Vigil.

CARTVV. 3. [11. You helping in prayer.] This is your reason we may pray one for another, therefore we may pray one vnto another, which is too brutish, for although wee may ioyne other with vs in the same supplication, and diuers of vs may preferre, one sute or petition vnto God, yet it followeth not therof, that we may make each other an Atturney, for our Saiuour Christ is alone authorized of his father, to be the Attourney, to present our sutes in the high Court of requests: and therefore it is an vnfit speach, to call those that pray for vs here by the title of Intercessors; which is the proper title and priestly prerogatiue, of our Saiuour Christ, and of those that haue been types of him. The next argument (that we may desire one another here vpon earth to pray for vs, therefore we may much more desire those to pray for vs which are in heauen) hath asmuch cõsequence as the other, for so far is it that we may much, that we may not so much more, considering that those vpon earth may both alwayes heare, and often see our wants, where the Saints in heauen can do neither the one nor the other, whereof it is euident, that howsoeuer the Saints departed haue diuers preferments aboue those that remain vpon earth, yet are they in abilitie and fitnesse to receiue our petitions, far inferior unto the faithfull vpon earth, for as one able to plead a cause at the barre in West-minſter can not therefore come to it becauſe hee is able, vnleſſe yebe by the Court authoriſed: euen ſo although the Saincts departed were privie vnto your wants (wich is vntrue) yet ſhould not men therefore giue vp requeſts into their hands, conſidering they haue by no word of God any calling to take them of vs, nor are in any place recommended as the Lords Remembrancers for vs. And if they were: yet thereof followeth not, that we ſhould pray vnto them, conſidering that wee haue neither commandement (to keepe us from raſh and proud preſumption) nor promiſe to preſerue vs from fruitleſſe and idle talking, and ſpending of our breath to them. And therefore if Ieromes teſtimony againſt Vigilantius were true of the Saints departed that they pray for us: yet the queſtion (which is whether we ſhould pray to them or no) is untouched. But it is no marvell although you eſteeme the meditation of Saints neceſſary for us, when your canon in the Maſſe (whereby you deſire the Father to accept his Sonne) maketh Chriſt himſelfe to ſtand in need of the Prieſts prayer for favourable acceptation of him before his father.

Rom. 8. 34.

Look Durand. lib. 4.

Publike prayers and faſts.

RHEM. 4. [11. By many mens.] Hee meaneth that as the prayers of many ioyned together for him, ſhall bee rather heard, then of any alone: ſo their common thankes giuing to God for granting their requeſt, ſhall be more acceptable and glorious to God, then any one mans thankes alone. Which thing doth much commend the holy Churches publicke prayers, proceſſions, ſtations, and pilgrimages, where ſo many ineete and vniformely ioyne their prayers and laudes together vnto God.

CARTVV. 4. [11 By many mens prayers.] Publique prayers (for their ſpirituall fruit ouer and aboue private) haue teſtimony of the Apoſtle: your Proceſſions, Stations and Pilgrimages, haue your voyce alone, which (becauſe it commeth from beneath) we tread it under feet.

Verſe. 14 As alſo you haue knowen vs in part, that we are your glory, as you alſo ours in the day of our Lord IESVS Chriſt.

Their glory in heaven that conuert others.

RHEM. 5. [14. Your glory.] The Apoſtles, teachers and preachers that conuert countries or particular perſons to Chriſt, and the peoples or parties by them conuerted, ſhall in the day of Iudgement haue much mutuall ioy and glorie of and for each other, one giuing to the other great matter of merite in this life, and of reward in the next. See 1. Theſſ. 2. v. 19.

CARTVV. 5. [14 Your glory.] Of the mutuall ioy and glory that the teachers and learners ſhall haue each of other in the latter day, we are agreed: but that it commeth by merite from one, or other, is your own gloſſe, without ſo much as the leaſt colour to diſguiſe it. The contrary is plainly inſinuated, for if they glory they muſt glory in God, and not in themſelues: and verſ. 15. of this chapter, it is ſaid preciſely, that their advancement in the Goſpell (by the Apoſtles comming againe unto them) ſhould be a ſecond grace.

Verſe. 18 But God is faithfull, becauſe our preaching which was to you, there is not in it, It is, and It is not.

The Proteſtants inconſtancy in changing their writings, tranſlations, ſeruice-books &c.

RHEM. 6. [18. It is, it is not] As he diſchargeth himſelfe of all other leuitie touching his promiſe or purpoſe of comming to them, ſo much more of all inconſtancie in preaching Chriſts doctrine and faith. Wherein, one day to affirme, another day to deny, to diſſent from his fellowes or from himſelfe, to change euery yeere or in euery epiſtle the forme of his former teaching, to come daily with new deuiſes repugnant to his own rules, were not agreeable to an Apoſtle and true teacher of Chriſt, but proper to falſe prophets and Heretickes. Whereof wee haue notorious examples in the Proteſtants: who being deſtitute of the ſpirit of peace, concord, conſtancy, unitie and veritie, as they vary from their own writings which they retract, reforme or deforme continually, ſo both in their preachings and forme of Seruice, they are ſo reſtles, changeable, and repugnant to themſelues, that if they were not kept in awe with much a doe, by temporall lawes, or by the ſhame and rebuke of the world they would coyne vs euerie yeare or euery Parliament, new communions, new faiths, and new Chriſts, as you ſee by the manifold endeuours of the Puritanes. And this to be the proper note of falſe Apoſtles and Hereuickes. See in S. Irenæum lib. 1. cap. 18. & Tertul. de preſcript. S. Baſil. epiſt. 82.

CARTVV. 6 [18. It is, it is not] Seing our mouth muſt make profeſſion of that which our heart knoweth: it followeth that as our heart groweth in knowledge. So our tongue ſhould ſpeake more learnedly, which (if it bee neceſſary in the priuate worſhip at home) much more ought it to bee performed in the publike ſeruice in the Church. And although the godly Miniſters, are not ſhaken like a reed in the wildernes, yet is not their yea, yea, and their no, no, as the Apoſtles was, who both ſudden y was filled with the knowledge of all truth, and was ſteddily directed, that he could nor teach or do any thing in the miniſtery of the Church, but that which hath neceſſary allowance without all contradiction, neither whereof, falling vnto any of our age: it is euident that your vaunt of conſtancy and agreement with your ſelues, is no more glorious vnto you, then vnto him that ſhould vaunt himſelfe to be no higher at 30. yeares of his age then he was being but two yeare old. And in this vaunt and brag of yours the Churches of God (both vnder the Law and vnder the Goſpell) ſuffer you to go alone, whereof the former vnder Danid, Salomon and Eſdras altered by diuers either additions, or exchanges of the place or of the manner of worſhip and ſeruice of God. The other hauing no Deacons at the firſt, had them after. The difference between them and us is, that they brought in their exchanges in the time wherein every one of theſe differences were to bee ſetled in the Church: and wee bring them when God by increaſe of knowledge doth open them unto vs, And albeit the Apoſtles and Prophets neuer affirmed that which they had denied, or denied that which they had affirmed, yet the Churches (both in the one time and the other) oftentimes in the ſeruice of God, were altered from better to worſe. And contrariwiſe in the old Teſtament the examples are manifold. In the new vnder the gouernment of the Apoſtles the Church of Corinth was cleanſed of diuers coruptions ſpecified, 1. Cor. 11. & 1. Cor. 14. which had crept into the publick ſervice and manner of Gods worſhip. Laſt of all, we haue ſhewed that the ſtone of reproch, namely of inconſtancy, and of contending one with

With another, which up, and againſt the hill, you rowle upon us, commeth downe the hill amain upon your own heads.

Verſe. 22 Who alſo † hath ſealed vs, and giuen the pledge of the Spirit in our hearts.

RHEM. 7. [22. Hath ſealed.] The learned Diuines proue by this place, and by the like in the fourth to the Epheſians, that the Sacrament of Baptiſme doth not onely giue grace, but imprinteth and ſealeth the ſoule of the baptized, with a ſpirituall ſigne, marke, badge or token, which can neuer be blotted out, neither by ſinne, hereſie, apoſtaſie, nor other wayes, but remaineth for euer in man for the cogniſance of his Chriſtendome, and for diſtinction from other which were neuer of Chriſts fold. by which alſo he is as it were conſecrated & deputed to God, made capable and partaker of the rights of the Church, and ſubiect to her lawes and diſcipline. See S. Hierome in Epheſ. 4. S. Ambroſe lib. 1. de Spir Sancto, cap. 6. S. Hiero'ol Cathecheſi, 17. at the end, and S. Dyoniſius, Areopag. c. 2. *Eccleſ. See ep. 57, & lib. 6, cont. Donatiſt. c. 1. & lib 2. cont. Parmenianum c. 13. As the like indeleble characters giuen alſo by the Sacrament of Confirmation and orders do make thoſe alſo irreiterable and neuer to be receiued but once. Whereas all other Sacraments ſauing theſe three, may be often receiued of the ſelfeſame perſon? And that holy orders cannot be iterated. See S. Auguſtine lib. cont. 2. Parmen. c. 13. lib. de bono coniug. c. 24. and S. Gregorie lib. 2. Regiſt. ep. 32. The like of Confirmation is decreed in the moſt ancient Councell Tarracon, c. 6. Finally that this character is giuen onely by theſe ſaid three Sacraments, and is the cauſe that none of them can be in any man repeated or reiterated, ſee the decrees of the Councels Florentine and Trent. Which yet is no new deuiſe of them, as the Hereticks falſly affirme, but agreeable (as you ſee) both to the Scriptures, and alſo to the ancient fathers and Councels.

Eph. 4. 30. The indeleble character of baptiſme, Confirmatiõ, Holy Orders.

See Conc. Tarrac. 10. 2. Conc.

CARTVV. 7. [22. Hath ſealed.] Neither here, nor Epheſ. 4. 30. is any mention or meaning of baptiſme: and therefore your indeleble Character in baptiſme commeth from your own forge: for this ſeale is defined to be the work of the Spirit, which is a pledge to all that beleeue, untill their redemption. And ſo it is called here a pledge, or an earneſt: For that as men keepe their pledges and earneſts untill they receiue that, wherefore, or whereof the pledge and earneſt are taken, even ſo this ſpirit of God abideth with us untill we be fully and actually poſſeſſed of the kingdom of heaven, which now we haue in hope. And it deſtroyeth the Apoſtles whole threed, and file of diſputation, to underſtand this ſeale, of ſuch a gift of the ſpirit which is common to Apoſtataes: for the Apoſtle bringeth it to proue, that hee was faithfull and conſtant in his miniſtery, and to avow that his yea was yea, and no, no. Now to proue that, it had been a cold and ſtrengthleſſe argument, to alledge that gift of the ſpirit which Apoſtataes haue. Againe it is cleane contrary to the words of the Apoſtle, who placeth the fruit of this ſeale in eſtabliſhing and confirming a man in the truth. Therefore this ſeale cannot be ſet upon any Apoſtata, or runnagate from the truth, but onely upon the children of God. And it is a difference between the true children of God and the falſe: and not betweene thoſe which are baptiſed, and thoſe which are not baptiſed, as you make it. And this ſenſeleſſe doctrine of yours had been more ridiculous, if you had ſet down any deſcription of the Subiect, whether it be in the eſſence of the ſoule, or in the faculties: and if it be in them, whether it be in the underſtanding, or in the will alſo: what be the effects or adjuncts thereof. For by theſe particularities it might better haue come out of the clouds wherein you hold it, of that grace wherewith the ſoule of every baptiſed is ſealed. For if it bee a ſeale, it is a ſeale of ſomewhat: and if it bee a badge and cogniſance, it is ſet for ſome note of difference. And being ſet (as you ſay) in the ſoule, it can not be ſet there for other men to diſcerne him by, conſidering that no other man can ſee what is in his ſoule. Neither needeth there any cogniſance and badge to be ſet in regard of God, who ſeeth and diſcerneth all things, without any privy marke to helpe his diſcerning by: it followeth therefore that it is a marke and cogniſance for a man to know himſelfe by. But what to know of himſelfe? That he pertaineth unto the kingdom of God? It cannot be, ſeeing an Apoſtata is condemned of his owne conſcience. Neither is there a word in any of the teſtimonies here alledged, which aſcribeth this ſeale of the ſpirit unto Apoſtataes: but cleane contrariwiſe, they make it the ſeale of the faithfull, and of the members of Chriſt: we confeſſe that Auguſtine ſaith, that Baptiſme is a marke, which having once been given, cannot be given againe, no not unto an Apoſtata if he returne againe. But Auguſtine ſaith not that this marke is imprinted upon his ſoule. And you dally too ſhamefully with your reader, that would make him beleeue, that this coyn came from the Fathers Mint, which is a baſe coyne of your idle headed Schoolemen, and that ſo uncunningly ſtamped, and hammered, that one of the principall of them confeſſeth, that this word Character (in the ſence & meaning of the Schoolmen) hath no proof, neither of the Scriptures nor out of the Eccleſaſticall Writers: and that no man is bound to beleeue it. Yea that Lombard hath nothing of it, which may not rather be expounded of the Sacrament of baptiſme, then of any thing which is imprinted upon the ſoule. Wherefore to hang the not repeating of the ſacrament of baptiſme upon ſuch a threed as hath no twiſt, neither out of the Scriptures, nor out of the Church-writers, is nothing elſe but to play with the myſteries of our holy faith.

Verse. 24 Not because we ouer-rule your faith: but, we are helpers of your ioy, for in the faith you stand.

The Caluinists will be subiect to no tribunall in earth, for triall of their religion.

RHEM. 1. [24. Not because we ouerrule.] Caluin & his seditious Sectaries with other like which despise dominion, as S. Iude describeth, such, would by this place deliuer themselues from all yoke of spirituall Magistrates and Rulers: namely, that they be subiect to no man touching their faith, or for the examination and triall of their doctrine, but to God and his word onely. And no maruell that the malefactors and rebels of the Church, would come, to no tribunall but Gods, that so they may remaine vnpunished at least during this life. For though the Scripture, plainely condemne their heresies, yet they could writhe themselues out by false gloses, constructions, corruptions, and denials of the bookes to bee Canonicall, if there were no lawes or iudiciall sentence of men to rule and represse them.

Tyrannicall dominion is forbid in prelates, not Ecclesiasticall Soueraintie for examination of faith or manners.

Notwithstanding then these words of S. Paul, whereby onely tyrannicall, insolent, and proud behauiour and indiscreet rigour of Prelates or Apostles towards their flockes is noted, as also in the first of S. Peter c. 5. (the Greeke words in these places, and in the Gospell. Mat. 20. 25. Mar 10. 42. signifying lordly and insolent dominion: yet he had, and exercised iust rule, preeminence and prelacie ouer them, not onely for their life, but also and principally touching their faith, for hee might and did call them to account for the same, and excommunicated heretickes for forsaking their faith 1. Cor 4. 5. 2. Cor. 10. 4. 18. 10. 1. Tim. 1. 20. Tit. 1. 11. And all Christian men are bound to obey their lawfull Prelates in matters of faith and doctrine specially, and must not vnder that ridiculous pretence of obeying Gods word onely (which is the shift of all other Heretickes, as Anabaptists, Arians, and the like, as well as the Protestans) disobey Gods Church, Councels, and their own Pastors & Bishops, who by the Scriptures haue the regiment of their soules, and may examine and punish as well Iohn Caluin as Simon Magus, for falling from the Catholike faith, for though God alone bee the Lord, author and giuer of faith, yet they are his cooperators and coadiutors by whom the faithfull do beleeue and be preserued in the true faith, and bee defended from wolues, which bee Heretickes to corrupt them in the same. And this same Apostle *chalengeth to be their father as hee that begate and formed them by his preaching in Christ.

CARTVV. 8. [24. Not because we ouer-rule.] You do but confute your own shadow that, is, the slander which your selues do forge of vs, that wee dispise dominion and would exempt our selues from the yoke of spirituall Magistrates and Rulers. For wee acknowledge all honour reuerence and obedience, to bee done vnto them in the Lord, and for the Lord, wee follow them as they follow Christ: onely we say with the Apostle, that they may not bee Masters or Lords ouer our faith, that is to say in matters belonging vnto our saluation, command vs at their pleasure, without any direction of the Scripture, against the which, if an Angell from heauen, should lay any thing vpon vs, wee may bee bould vpon the Apostles word, to hold him accursed. Wherefore our Sauiour Christ declareth that the name of Father or Master (in this respect of rule and authoritie ouer our faith) doth not belong vnto the Apostles, but vnto him and to his father alone. And therefore where Paul calleth himselfe the Corinths father 1. Cor. 4. 15. it is not in regard of an absolute authoritie which he had ouer them, but in regard that (through his ministery) they, by the immortall seed of the word had been conceiued in the wombe of the Church. And the Apostle hath before declared that the spirituall man (so far as he is spirituall) cannot be iudged of any, whereby the Reader may see how idlely they quote 1. Cor 4. 5. 2. Cor. 18. 4. 13. 10. 2. Tim. 1. 20. Tit. 2. 11. which proue nothing that we deny. Here it will not be amisse to set down Pigghius words (who affirmeth that the Apostles wrote certen things, not that they should rule our faith and religion but rather that they should be subiect) that the reader may know how detestable popery is, that giueth to their Gouernours rule of faith, which it taketh away from diuers parts of the holy Scriptures. Their reueile of the worthy seruant of God, M. Caluin we will (in assured confidence of a iust reuenge) lay vp with the Lord.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 10 AND whom you haue pardoned any thing, I also. For, my selfe also that which I pardoned, if I pardoned any thing for you in the person of Christ.

RHEM. 1. [10. I pardoned.] Κεχάρισμαι. Though hee did great Penance (saith Theodoret) yet hee calleth his pardoning, χάριν, a grace, because his sinne was greater then his Penance.

CARTVV. This is answered in the Annotation vpon this verse.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 6 To him that is such a one, this rebuke sufficeth that is giuen of many.

The Apostle excommunicateth, enioyneth penance.

RHEM. 2. [6. This rebuke sufficeth.] This Corinthian for incest was excommunicated and put to penance by the Apostle, as appeareth in the former Epist. c. 5. And here order is giuen for his absolution and pardoning. Wherein first we haue a plaine example and proofe of the Apostolike power, there of binding: and here of loosing: there of punishing, and here of pardoning; there of retaining retaining sinnes, here of remission. Secondly we may hereby proue that not onely amendment, ceasing to sin, or repentance in heart and before God alone, is alwayes enough to obtaine full reconcilement, whereas we see here his separation, also from the faithfull, and the Sacraments, and from all company or dealing with other Christian men, besides other bodily affliction: all which called of the Apostle before mortitus carnis, the destruction of the flesh, and named here Rebuke, or (as the *Greeke word also importeth) mulct, penalty, correction, chastisement, were enioyned him by the Apostles commandement in the face of the Church, and by the offender patiently sustained so long. Thirdly, we see that it lyeth in the hands of the Apostles, Bishops, and spirituall Magistrates, to measure the time of such penance and discipline, not onely according to the weight of the offence committed, but also according to the weakenesse of the persons punished, and other respects of time and place, as to their wisdom shall be thought most agreeable to the parties good, and the Churches edification. Lastly by this whole handling of the offenders cause, wee may refute the wicked heresie of the Protestants, that would make the simple beleeue, no punishment of a mans own person for sinnes committed, nor penance enioyned by the Church, nor any paines temporall or satisfaction of our life past to be necessary, but all such things to be superfluous because Christ hath satisfied enough for all. Which Epicurian doctrine is refelled, not onely hereby, but also by the Prophets, Iohn the Baptists, Christs, and the Apostles preaching of penance and condigne works or fruites of repentance, to euery man in his own person, and not in Christs person onely: and by the whole life and most plaine speaches and penitentiall cannons of the holy doctors and Councels prescribing times of penance, commending penance, enioyning penance, and continually vsing the word satisfaction in this case throughout all their works, as our aduersaries themselues can not but confesse.

and afterward pardoneth & absolueth. ἐπιτιμία. 1. cor 3.5. Pardon or remission of penance enioyned. Penance and satisfaction needlessly proued against the Protestants. Ioel. 2. 12. Mat. 3. & 4 Act. 2. & 16

CARTVV. 2. [6. This rebuke sufficeth.] In all this section (of halfe a side) here is nothing but irksome repetitions, that the Iesuites themselves (vnlesse they loued their own vomit too much) might worthely loath and bee ashamed of. To the first we say that) as before it hath been shewed, that the Apostle would banish none out of the Citty of God, without the consent of the Burgesses of the place where the offender is) so hee taketh not vpon him to restore him to the priuiledges and rites thereof without a like consent vers. 6. 7, 8 10. and that as hauing authority thereunto as the word κεχάρισται doth declare, Against which, that which you bring upon verse 9, of the Apostles requiring their obedience, is ridiculous. As if the Church had interest in nothing which it doth in obedience unto God, and their Governours under him, when whatsoever either the Church, or the Apostle himselfe do in such cases, they do in such obedience, as the not doing of it, or doing otherwise, would draw the guilt of disobedience upon them. And it is all one as if they should say, that the Burgesses in the Citie haue no authority to banish a disordered Citizen, or receiue him to his freedome againe, because they are bound by Law, or commanded of the Magistrate to giue their voyces in the one and in the other. And they may aswell say, that the Ministers of the Church of Corinth had no right or authority frō God to Preach, because they were commanded by Paul so to do.

The second note, that there was bodily affliction laid upon him, is false, as hath been shewed. And it may easily be convinced out of this place: First, by the plaine words of the Apostle, who affirmeth, that the rebuke which is by many is sufficient. Secondly, for that it is said vers. 6. that he receiueth release by grace, whereof Paul and the Church were in this behalfe the Ministers; unto which grace and pardon, there were no place at all, if he by bodily correction had satisfied the iustice of God. Thirdly, for that, if the incestuous person had been (as you imagine) plagued by the Apostles putting the devill in possession of his body, then it should follow, that the Apostle being removed a great distance of place from the penitent, should not haue released him of that plague, when both he and the Church had released him of the excommunication: for it is never read, that either Christ or his Apostles did cast out devils, but onely amongst them with whom they were present or conversant; wherby also is wiped away your former assertion of Pauls causing the devill to enter into him. Besides that it was never read, that either Christ or his Apostles, for revenge of sin, in the most wicked and obstinate enemies of the truth, did giue power to the devill to enter into their bodies. And therefore your last note of our heresie for condemning your blasphemous satisfaction, argueth your shamelesse fore-head, who (upon no ground of proofe) lay on such a loade of reproaches. As for repentance by brokennesse of heart within, testified without by amendment of life in the carefull keeping of Gods commandements (which you alledge out of Ioel. 2. Math. 3. Act. 2. 20.) what maketh that to proue, that we must satisfie by bodily affliction, considering that there is not a word of bodily affliction inflicted by the Church, much lesse of satisfaction in any of these places. The testimony of Ioel is against you, for (declaring that the rending of the garments is a token and representation of the breaking of the heart, and not of the rending and tearing of the flesh) it is manifest, that true repentance maketh no whippes to scourge our bodies with. The other testimonies haue been answered in their severall places. And as it is not Epicurean to use the grace of God, and enioy the fruite of Christs passion, so it is not onely proud Pharisisme and untollerable blasphemy, to mingle their bloud with the bloud of Christ, in the matter of satisfaction, but also barbarous and unnaturall, that a man should be his own tormentor. And albeit the ancient Church (in their Councels and Doctors) used the word of satisfaction, yet noted they thereby not any satisfaction unto God for sinne, but onely a giving of proofe of their true repentance whereby the Church was satisfied: And so saith Augustine that the Churches Governours did well appoint times of repentance that the Church might be satisfied: whereas of the satisfaction to God, he professeth that he read it not, saying, I read of teares, but I read not of satisfaction. And Ierome, speaking of the satisfaction commanded by the Church, doth not say, that it was to giue a price for our sinnes, but that it might be manifest to all, that they are truely repentant, which with ready minde undertake whatsoever the Church decreeth. Whereby also your third note is confuted, which leaueth it in the power of the Church Governours to appoint the time of repentance, considering that (upon euident arguments, and tokens of the repentance of the excommunicate) they are bound to unloose the cords which they haue tyed before, unlesse it be in their power to suffer the penitent to bee swallowed up of excesse of What is a pardon or indulgence.

Ioh. 8. 11.

RHEM. 5. [10. I alſo.] The Heretickes and others well founded in the Scriptures and antiquity marueil at the Popes pardons, counting them either fruitleſſe or vnlawfull, or no elder then S. Gregorie. But indeed the authority, power, and right of them is of Chriſts own word and commiſſion principally giuen to Peter, and ſo afterward to all the Apoſtles, and in their perſons to all the cheefe Paſtors of the Church; when it was ſaid, Whatſoeuer you looſe in earth ſhall be looſed in heauen. By which commiſſion the holy Biſhops of old did cut of large peeces of penance enioyned to offenders, and gaue peace, grace, or indulgence, * before they had accompliſhed the meaſure of their appointed or deſerued puniſhment, and that is to giue pardon. And ſo S. Paul here did towards the Corinthian, whom hee aſſoiled of meere grace and mercy, as the word donare or condonare doth ſignifie, when he might longer haue kept him in penance and temporall affliction for his offence. Whereof though he had already before God inwardly repented, yet was hee iuſtly holden vnder this correction for ſome ſatisfaction of his fault paſt, during the Apoſtles pleaſure. To remit the temporall puniſhment or chaſtiſement due to ſinners after the offence it ſelfe and the guilt thereof bee forgiuen of God, is an indulgence or pardon, which the principall Magiſtrates of Gods Church by Chriſts warrant and the Apoſtles example, haue euer done, being no leſſe authoriſed to pardon then to puniſh, and by imitation of our Maiſter (who forgaue* the aduoutereſſe and diuers other offenders, not onely their ſinne:, but alſo often the temporall puniſhment due for the ſame) are as much giuen to mercy as to iuſtice.

CARTVV. 5 [10. I alſo] Your proper pardons are not ſealed with wax either of the Scriptures or of Antiquity. For the Scripture it hath appeared that this grace and pardon giuen to the inceſtuous perſon, was neceſſarily and in duety given, and therefore proueth no arbitrary releaſe aud mitigation of puniſhment, which the Apoſtle might further haue impoſed upon him. Againe, as the Church is bound then to lock and bind the ſinner by excommunication, when he giueth no place to the Churches counſell, moving him to repentance, ſo is it bound then to open and unlooſe him, when it ſhall haue pregnant and preſſing tokens, whereby his repentance may be preſumed: It therefore being evident, that it is not arbitrary to the Church to binde at her pleaſure, it muſt needs bee alſo as cleere that in the looſing and abſolution ſhe hath as little liberty: whereupon the Apoſtle (leaſt it ſhould be eſteemed that this grace and pardon was given by his authority) even in this verſe, according to your own tranſlation, affirmeth, that that which he did, he did in the perſon, or in the authority of Chriſt, even as he ſaid in the former Epiſtle, that he threw him out in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. We grant that the elder Churches had their indulgences and worthily, for conſidering that all of iudgement underſtand, that in their ſeverity towards poore ſinners they were overtaken of Satan, whilſt (through a great hatred againſt ſinne) they eſteemed all chaſtiſement too little: it followeth, that the cutting away of ſome of that which was too much was commendable. But this maketh no more for the Popes pardon then for the pardon of any other Miniſter of the Church. Neither can this pardon granted onely to publique offenders, warrant the large extent of the Popes pardon, which is offered to all without exception. Finally, the Churches pardon (freely given in compaſſion and tender feeling of the penitent) bringeth no credite unto the Popes pardon which is ſold for money, to inrich himſelfe with the marchandiſe of mens ſoules, unleſſe peraduenture you will ſay, hee doth but exchange and make a bartar, becauſe for our gold hee giveth us lead. Finally, this doctrine doth utterly overthrow your ſacrifice of the Maſſe. For if (as you ſay) by it is applyed the whole benefite of the death of Chriſt, then remaineth nothing of the merite of his death to be applyed by pardons and indulgences, as on the contrary part, if the ſacrifice of your Maſſe ſtand, down muſt fall neceſſarily, the diſpenſation of Chriſts merites by pardons and indulgences.

2. Cor. 5. 4.

Indulgences or pardons in the primitiue Church.
Cypr. locis citatis.

RHEM. 6. [10. For you.] Theodoret vpon this place ſaith that the Apoſtle gaue this pardon to the Corinthian as the interceſſion of the bleſſed men Timotheus and Titus. And wee may read in ſundry places, of S. Cyprian namely, that indulgences or remiſſions were giuen in the Primitiue Church by the mediation of holy Confeſſors or Martyrs, by communicating ſatisfactory works of one to another, to which end they gaue their letters to Biſhops in the behalfe of diuers their Chriſtian brethren, a thing moſt agreeable to the mutuall entercourſe that is between the members of Chriſts Chriſts myſticall body, and very anſwerable to Gods iuſtice, *which by ſupply of the one ſort that abounded, ſtandeth entire in reſpect of the other ſort alſo that wanteth. In which kinde the Apoſtle confeſſeth that himſelfe by his ſufferings and tribulations, ſupplieth the wants of ſuch paſſions as Chriſt hath to ſuffer, not in his own perſon, but in his own body, which is his Church. Whereupon we inferre moſt aſſuredly, that the ſatisfactorie and penall works of holy Saincts ſuffered in this life, be communicable and applicable to the vſe of other faithfull men their fellow-members in our Lord and to bee diſpenſed according to euery mans neceſſity and deſeruing by them whom Chriſt hath conſtituted ouer his family, and hath made the diſpenſers of his treaſures. 2. Cor. 8. Col. 1. 24.

CARTVV. 6. [10. For you.] It hath been ſhewed, that the inceſtuous perſon was reſtored (as by the grace and free mercy of God, ſo) by the neceſſary and moſt bounden dutie of the Apoſtle, and of the Church of Corinth. Whether Timothy and Titus, (as is alledged out of Theodoret) or Martyrs and Confeſſors (as you cite out of Cyprian) did mediate between the Church and the excommunicate perſons, is nothing to the purpoſe: for it is meete that they to whom the repentance of the perſons cenſured is firſt knowne, ſhould ſolicite their freedome from their bond of excommunication. But that they were releaſed by communicating their ſatisfactory workes unto the cenſured, is falſe, and hath not a word out of the text, which doth cleane overthrow them, whileſt it expoundeth what it meaneth, when it ſaith, for you, not for their merits, but for their commodity, that they ſhould not be overtaken of Sathan, by being guiltie of the blond of the penitent, if they ſhould haue ſuffered him to haue been ſwallowed up in the gulfe of his ſorrow. Whether hath it any ſtrength out of Theodoret or Cyprian? But the cleane contrary is manifeſt out of the place of Cyprian; where notwithſtanding that there were that would haue violently extorted ſome of the penitents from their cenſure, under the colour of the mediation of ſome Martyrs for them, yet were they partly kept out of the communion of the Church, untill their dying day; and partly were not let goe untill ſuch time as Cyprian knew the Churches conſent therein. So farre is it therefore that they were delivered by their ſatisfactory workes, that they were not delivered by them at all, but by the Church that had bound them. And although it were a ſcarre in the face of the Churches then, that they wiped not away the teares of the penitents by reſtoring their baniſhed upon their knowne repentance: yet were they not not ſo declined from iuſtice, that they would haue holden them ſtill in exerciſe under ſo fearefull (and as it were capitall) iudgement of the Church, if they had imagined (as the Ieſuites doe) that the pains impoſed upon them by the Church, had been ſatisfied by the Martyrs. Their reaſon (that it is agreeable to the intercourſe of the members of Chriſts myſticall body) is falſe. For it is not agreeable to the common intercourſe of the members, that one ſhould endevour to yeeld that helpe to another which it cannot performe, but muſt come from the head alone. Wherefore to haue made this communication profitable, you ſhould haue proved firſt an overplus in the merit of the Martyrs, which they may ſpare unto others, which is the queſtion. Secondly, you ſhould proue them to be the Lords Stewards, appoynted of him to diſpence that almes: whereof as you are able to proue neither, ſo we are able to ſhew the contrary, that this intercourſe between the members tendeth to the deſtruction of the body. For whereas the Martyrs ſuffer nothing, but that they haue a neceſſary calling unto, and that ſo ſtraight, that when they haue done all they can poſſibly, yet they are unprofitable ſervants: it is evident that whatſoeuer herein ſhould be taken from them, to bee transferred to others, ſhould be taken from that obedience, without the which themſelues cannot bee ſaved. Vnleſſe therefore you will make the merit of Martyrs infinite, in ſuch ſort that the ſelfe ſame particular workes ſhall be both the price of their owne, and other mens ſalvation; it is evident that this intercourſe cannot be fit for the common-wealth of Chriſts myſticall body. And it is leſſe anſwerable to Gods iuſtice: for it is againſt his iuſtice to exact a perfect righteouſneſſe, and to ſuffer himſelfe to bee paid with an unperfect: to take ſatisfaction for one from the hand of another, which is not able to pay his owne debt, much leſſe the debt of his fellow. Beſide that, the wiſedom of God is thus reproched, which for ſilver due unto him, contenteth himſelfe with braſſe, and taketh one bankrupt to be ſurety for another. The place of the 2. Cor. 1. is anſwered: that Coloſſ. 1. 24. commeth to be anſwered in the proper place. Here let it be noted, that the Ieſuites haue a double contrariety with themſelues. For in their former note, it is ſaid, that Paul aſſoiled him of meere grace and mercy. And here they ſay, that hee was not let goe but upon the ſatisfactory workes of others. Secondly, they alledge Theodoret, as if for the merit of Timothy and Titus, the inceſtuous had been releaſed, and yet alledge the words of the Apoſtle for you, as if hee were pardoned through the Churches merits. Thus muſt they needs interferre, which are not ſhod with the Goſpell of peace, but with the ſhooes which they haue made them in their owne forge. Beſide that, they falſifie Theodoret, who expreſſely affirmeth, that leaſt the Apoſtle ſhould ſeeme to make the releaſe for Timothy and Titus ſake, he addeth, that he did it in the perſon of Chriſt. Lnk. 17. 10

RHEM. 7. [10. In the perſon of Chriſt.] For that many might of ignorance or pride reproue the practiſe of Gods Church and her officers, or deny the Apoſtles authoritie to be ſo great ouer mens ſoules as to puniſh and to pardon in this ſort, S. Paul doth purpoſely and preciſely tell them that he doth giue pardon as Chriſts Vicar, or as bearing his perſon in this caſe: and therefore that no man may maruell of his power herein, except hee thinke that Chriſts power, authoritie and commiſſion is not ſufficient to releaſe temporall puniſhment due to ſinners. And this to bee the proper meaning of theſe words, In the perſon of Chriſt, and not as the Proteſtants would haue it (the better to auoide the former concluſion of the Apoſtles giuing indulgence) In the face or ſight of Chriſt, you may eaſily vnderſtand by the Apoſtles like inſinuation of Chriſts power, when he committed this offender to Satan, affirming that he gaue that ſentence in the name and with the vertue or power of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. In all caſes which the Proteſtants blindnes is exceeding great, who can not ſee that this is not the way to extoll Chriſts power, to deny it to his Prieſts, ſeeing the Apoſtle chalengeth it by that that Chriſt hath ſuch power, and that himſelfe doth it in his name, vertue, and perſon. So now in this, and in no other name, giue Popes and Biſhops their pardons. Which pertaining taining to releasing onely of temporall punishment due after the sinne and eternall punishment bee forgiuen, is not so great a matter as the remission of the sinne it selfe: which yet the Priests by expresse commission do also remit.

CARTVV. 7. [10. In the person of Christ.] It is knowen that the Greeke word προσωπον signifieth as well the face as the person: and therefore our translation is iustifiable, vnlesse you shew greater weight of reason to pull the scales of your side rather then of ours. Howbeit that we fled from your translation, as hurtfull to our cause, and beneficiall to yours, is false; considering that your translation, as hath been shewed, standeth for us against you: whilest the Apostle pardoning the incestuous man, not of courtesie, but of dutie and commandement, declareth thereby, that it is unlawfull to hold the excommunicate longer in separation from the full and whole communion of the Church, then he hath given perswasible testimony of his true repentance. And where (vpon their authoritie to forgiue sinnes, Ioh. 20.) you conclude authoritie to forgiue temporall punishment, your beggary is too shameless, by presuming a temporall punishment inflicted vpon the excommunicate, which we vtterly deny to be in the Churches power. For if the common-wealth be interressed by his fault, in regard of temporall punishment, he falleth into the hands of the Magistrate, and in default of the Magistrates due correction of him, into the hands of God, as appeareth in Dauids case. And this
2. Sam. 12. 10. 12. Allegation refresheth your cause. as great showers doth the corne in harvest. For first, (considering that the Ministers cannot forgiue sinnes where they list, but where the sinners repent and beleeue) it must needs follow, that if they could forgiue any temporall punishment, yet can they not forgiue it, Looke before vpon Math. 16. but vpon apparant tokens of faith and repentance: contrary to your practise, whose Indulgences are open to all, whose hands are open to giue any thing for them. Secondly, forasmuch as they are bound to forgiue where they finde faith and repentance, the same must needes follow in temporall punishment (if any were) contrary to your assertion, which make it in the power of the Minister to do his pleasure therein. Thirdly (inasmuch as every Minister may forgiue sinnes as well as the Bishop of Rome) it is evident that every Minister may send out his indulgences and pardons as well as he, which your care of the Popes Exchequer will never yeeld vnto.

Verse. 11 That we be not | circumvented of Satan, for we are not ignoraunt of his cogitations.

All binding and loosing must be vsed to the parties saluation. Conc. Nic. Can. 12. Ancyran. can. 2. & 5. The great penance of the primitiue Church. Why more pardons and Indulgence now then in old time. REHEM. 8. [11. Circumvented of Satan.] Wee may see hereby, that the dispensation of such discipline, and the releasing of the same, be put into the power and hands of Gods Ministers, to deale more or lesse rigorously, to pardon sooner or later, punish longer or shorter while, as shall bee thought to their wisdom. for the end of all such correction or pardoning must be the saluation of the parties soule, as the Apostle noted 1. Cor. 5. 5. Which to some, & some certain times may be better procured by rigour of discipline then by indulgence, to some others; by lenity and humane dealing (so pardoning of penance is called in old Councels) rather then by ouermuch chastisement, for consideration whereof, in some ages of the Church, much discipline, great penance and satisfaction was both enioyned and also willingly susteined, and then was the lesse pardoning and fewer indulgences, because in that voluntarie vse and acceptation of punishment, and great zeale and feruour of spirit, euery man fulfilled his penance, and few asked pardon. Now in the fall of deuotion and lothsomnesse that men commonly haue to do great penance, though the sins be far greater then euer before, yet our holy mother the Church knowing with the Apostle the cogitations of Satan, how he would in this delicate time, driue men either to desperation, or to forsake Christ and his Church and all hope of saluation, rather then they would enter into the course of canonicall discipline, enioyneth small penance, and seldome vseth extremitie with offenders as the holy Bishops of the primitiue Church did, but condescending to the weakenesse of her children, pardoneth exceeding often and much, not onely all enioyned penance, but also all or great part of what punishment temporall soeuer due or deserued, either in this world or in the next. As for the Hereticks which neither like the Churches lenitie and pardoning in these dayes, nor the old rigour in the Primitiue Church, they bee like to the Iewes
Mat. 11. 18. that condemned Iohn the Baptist of austeritie, & Christ of too much freedom and liberty: not knowing nor liking indeed either Christs ordinance and commission in binding or loosing, or his prouidence in the gouernment of the Church.

CARTVV. 8. [11. Circumvented of Satan.] This rule of the Apostle, that the excommunicate is to be received sooner or latter, according to his vnfained humiliation, is a rule of steele, remaining one and the same in all ages. And therefore is no leaden square, as you make it, flexible at the Popes pleasure, according to the increase or decay of the zeale and deuotion of ages. Therefore the indulgences which come now as thicke as hailestones, proceed of the Popes wisedome, whereby he is wise to himselfe, and not to the Church. And his liberality in this kinde, is not onely like light clouds, which promise raine and giue none, but like the bushes which in stead of shelter pull away the fleece of the poore sheep that seeketh cover vnder them. Howbeit you doe well to confesse, the delicacie of your Catholikes in these dayes, which we will helpe you to excuse. For no marvell if the children be delicate when the Mother and father both be Epicures; yet surely are not the children so delicate as the father is foolish, who is so farre from correcting of the sinnes of his sonnes, that he giveth pardon of them before they be committed, which is no lenitie, but plaine and notable baudery. Neither feare we the reproch of Christ against the Iewes. Math 11. 18. in misliking the rigor of the elder Churches, and condemning the looseneſse of yours, albeit the fruits bee farre vnlike. For in them we know that it was an easie thing for good men, carried with a perfect hatred of sinne, to overlash in the punishment of it, and to go beyond as it were the 40. stripes, or moderate correction which is fit for amendment. But in you all the world may see, that not the loue of the people, but of their money; not their delicacie, but your owne daintie tooth, is the cause why the Lycurgian severitie of the elder Churches is changed into the vnbridled licence that your old Ancestors Romulus and Rhemus gaue to all malefactors which would make Rome their refuge.

RHEM. 9 [17. Adulterating] The Greek word ſignifieth to make commoditie of the word of God, as vulgar Vintners do of their wine. Whereby is expreſſed the peculiar trade of all Hereticks, & exceeding proper to the Proteſtants, that ſo corrupt ſcripture by mixture of their own fantaſies by falſe tranſlations, gloſſes, colourable and pleaſant commentaries, to deceiue the taſt of the ſimple, as tauerners and tapſters do, to make their wine ſalable by manifold artificiall deceites. The Apoſtle contrawiſe, as all Catholikes, deliuer the Scriptures and vtter the word of God ſincerely and entirely, in the ſame ſenſe and ſort as the fathers left them to the Church, interpreting them by the ſame ſpirit by which they were written or ſpoken. καπηλεύοντες The Heretike corupting of the Scriptures.

And therefore your faces here are more then braſen, which lay that to our charge whereof you being manifoldly and manifeſtly convinced, are not able once to ſtaine us with. The difference onely between theſe minglers and your maſhers, is, that they put not ſo much water into the wine, that it ceaſed to be wine ſtill; whereas yours through the tilt and lees of traditions, dregges of cuſtome, and poyſon of Popiſh decrees, haue cauſed it to be no more the cup of the Lords wine, but the chalice of the Whoore of Babylon, whereof whoſoeuer drinketh, dieth everlaſtingly, unleſſe by the counterpoyſon of the word of God hee vomit it out againe. And as it is blaſphemous, that the interpretation of the Fathers is of the ſame ſpirit that the Scriptures are writtē by: ſo is it utterly falſe, that their interpretations haue (for the moſt part) any agreement with your Gloſſes. The contrary whereof, if it be enough for you barely to affirme it, who haue the eyes and eares of all indifferent witneſſing againſt you, it is much more equall that we (by bare denyall) ſhould reſt in the iudgement of the reader.

CHAP. III.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 3 BEing manifeſted that you are ! the epiſtle of Chriſt, miniſtred by vs, and written not with inke, but with the ſpirit of the liuing God: not in tables of ſtone, but in the tables carnall of the hart.

RHEM. 1. [3. The Epiſtle of Chriſt.] S. Paul and other holy writers of Scriptures did ſet down many things in writing, by pen, inke, and paper, all which bee of the Holy Ghoſt: but the ſpeciall and proper book of Chriſts truth and Goſpel, is not the external writing in thoſe dead creatures, but in the hearts of the faithfull, being the proper ſubiect of theſe truths & graces preached in the new Teſtament, and the habitacle of the H. Ghoſt, In the which booke of the faithfull mens hearts S. Paul wrote diuers things not vttered in any Epiſtle: as ſoundry of the Apoſtles wrote Chriſtian religion in the hearts of their hearers onely, and in other materiall bookes not at all. Whereof S. Irenæus lib. 3. c. 4. ſaith. What and if the Apoſtles alſo hath left no Scriptures, ought we not to follow the order of the tradition, which they delinered vnto them to whom they cōmitted the Churches: to the which ordinance many nations of thoſe barbarous people that haue beleeued in Chriſt, do conſent, without letter or inke, haning ſalnation written in their hearts, and keeping diligently the tradition of the Elders. And S. Hierome (cont. Io. Hieroſ. c 9. ad Pam.) in the Creede of our faith and hope, which being delinered by tradition from the Apoſtles, is not written in paper and inke, but in the tables carnall of the heart. And this is the Churches booke alſo, whereby and wherein ſhe keepeth faithfully all truth written in the hearts of thoſe to whom the Apoſtles did preach, with the like diligence as ſhe keepeth and preſerueth the other book which is of holy Scriptures, from al corruption of Heretickes and other iniuries. The Apoſtles wrote the Goſpel in mens hartes much more then in paper. Scripture written, and Tradition vnwritten.

CARTVV. 1. [3 The Epiſtle of Chriſt.] Your argument, that God by the minſtery of Paul wrote not with incke but with his Spirit, not in paper but in the hearts of the Corinthians, ergo, he wrote ſomething that is not contained in the Scripture, is more then childiſh, as if the written Scriptures themſelues could be profitable to the Churches, unleſſe (beſides the inke and paper wherein they were firſt written) they be alſo written by the Spirit of God. Or as if the oppoſition were made between the Apoſtles Miniſtery by his Epiſtles, and his Miniſtery by his Preaching: which is made onely of his Miniſtery, ioyned with the effectuall working of Gods ſpirit to ſalvation, and that which is not accompanied with the fruitfull operation thereof. So that if this of yours be a good argument, it followeth that no good doctrine is written in the Scriptures, becauſe all good doctrine is written in the hearts of the faithfull. Finally, the writing of lawes by the ſpirit of God in the hearts of the faithfull, was not an impreſſion of it in their underſtanding & memory onely, whereby they might deliuer it from hand to hand, as the Ieſuites would haue it, but an impreſſion of it in their affections, whereby they might be ſaued everlaſtingly, albeit they never delivered it over unto others, eſpecialy having either no opportunity, or calling thereunto. And beſide that they haue not ſo much as any colour out of this place, the Apoſtles own teſtimony (who affirmeth that he taught nothing but contained in the Law and the Prophets, and that the Goſpell whereof he was the Miniſter, was promiſed by the Prophets in the holy Scriptures) doth ſtrike them ſo dumbe in this caſe, that all their contradiction unto it is rather like the broken ſpeeches of men diſtraught of their wits, then of any that haue a graine of ſound wiſedom, to order their words by. And it appeareth manifeſtly, by the diſcourſe of this Epiſtle, how doubtfull and dangerous keepers of the doctrine of the Apoſtles the Corinthes hearts were, which in ſo ſhort a Acts 26. 22 Rom. 1. 2. Rom. 16. 26 time (and that in the life of the Apoſtle, when he was able to controule them) had ſwarved from the rule, which he had given them: whereupon the Apoſtle wrote the ſame things vnto them by Epiſtle, which he had Preached vnto them by word, as appeareth when he ſaith, That he wrote nothing vnto them, but that which they read, where he vſeth the word ἀναγινώσκειν, which the Scholiaſt noteth to ſignifie, a recogniſing, or calling to minde of that, which they had before received, Iræneus lib. 3. c. p. 4. maketh nothing againſt the ſufficiency of the Scripture: For if the Apoſtles had left no Scriptures, we muſt haue bene contented with Tradition: and the Lord would haue given ſuch a bleſſing, as ſometime before the Law he did, that the doctrine ſhould (in ſome hands) haue remained vncorrupt. But now that of further grace (for the more aſſurance or ſafety of thoſe things that were ſpoken by word) he hath committed the ſame things to writing, which are neceſſary for vs to beleeue to ſalvation: it were not onely extreme folly, but greater ingratitude, to flie from the ſafer way to that which hath more danger. And although he affirme, that many nations beleeved in Chriſt without letter or inke, yet he ſpeaketh of nothing at all that they beleeved, but that which is contained in the Scriptures. And eſpecially he ſpeaketh of the Articles of our faith, called the Apoſtles Creed. So that (although their faith was grounded by tradition of that which they heard, and had not read; yet) thoſe that ſetled them in that faith, had their inſtruction from that which was written with inke. And if it be asked, why then he forſooke the Scriptures, and fled to tradition, Iræneus himſelfe giveth anſwer, for that there were hereticks, which when they were reproved out of the Scripture (it is a mervaile if the Ieſuites bluſh not when they reade this ſentence) they accuſe the Scriptures as if they were not true, or as if they had no authority, and that they are vttered doubtfully: and becauſe the truth cannot be found out in them of thoſe that know not the Tradition; He ſaith alſo (in the ſame place which they haue alledged) that there was neither aſſembly nor doctrine amongſt them: Will they therefore ſay, that Preaching, and praying, and Church Aſſemblies, be either no ſufficient meanes to ſalvation, or not greatly neceſſary? But that the Reader may the better underſtand the Ieſuites treacherie in this place of Iræneus, let him attend to that which he writeth otherwhere: For (ſpeaking of the faith of the Churches receiued of the Apoſtles) he ſaith, That which they then preached, after (verily by the will of God) they deliuered vnto vs by the Scriptures, as thoſe which ſhould be the foundation and pillar of our faith. In the ſame place he teſtifieth, that the foure Evangeliſts were the rule, whereby all that which was propounded, concerning the doings and ſayings of our Saviour Chriſt was to be examined. And further noteth the Valentinian hereticks with the ſame coale wherewith the Papiſts haue marked themſelues, namely that they had moe things of Chriſt then thoſe which the Evangeliſt had written. Ierome contr. Ioh. Ieruſal. c. 9. ad Pam. maketh nothing to the purpoſe: vnleſſe they dare ſay that the Creed of our faith and hope deliuered by tradition from the Apoſtles. is not contained in the Scriptures.

RHEM. 2. [5. Of our ſelues.] This maketh firſt againſt the Heretickes called Pelagians, that hold our meritorious actions or cogitations to be of freewill onely, and not of Gods ſpeciall grace. Secondly againſt the Proteſtants, who on the contrary ſide referre all to God, and take away mans freedome and proper motion in his thoughts and doings: the Apoſtle confeſſing our good cogitations to be our own, but not as comming of our ſelues, but of God.

CARTVV. 2. [5. Of our ſelfes.] If the Apoſtles pen wherewith he wrote, had been one of the beames of the Sun, he could not haue written more cleare (to ſhew that we haue no naturall power to do good) then he hath done here, for when he affirmeth, that of our ſelues wee are not able to thinke any good thing (by taking from our nature, power to doe the leaſt good) hee leaueth nothing at all vnto our naturall ſtrength. And therefore the Ieſuits reaſon (that it is ours therefore of our own naturall power) is very ſottiſh; conſidering that that which is freely giuen vs is ours, aſwell as that which groweth out of the rotten roote of our own corrupt nature. Neither can they thus eſcape, out of the tents of the Pelagians; conſidering that they alſo (to auoyd the envie of extolling the naturall power of man againſt the grace of God) confeſſed aſmuch as they do, that in euery good worke a man is helped of the grace of God. Likewiſe that the grace of God doth helpe the good purpoſe of euery one. To let paſſe your falling from the old Interpreter, to whom you haue ſould your ſelues as bound men. For where he ſaith we are not apt to thinke: you to (break this deadly prick, which your freewill receiueth hereby) choſe rather to ſay, that we are not ſufficient to thinke; thereby implying an aptnes, which both the Apoſtle, and your own Interpreter haue ſhut out, yet are you nothing helped, conſidering that our ſufficiency (whatſoeuer it is) is expreſly ſaid to come of God.

Alſo that he was the ſauour of death vnto death in thoſe that periſhed. This is evident of th s place, where it is ſaid, that the Iewes (which were made partakers of this Miniſtery of the new Teſtament) did not yet profit by it, through the vaile of ignorance hanging before their hearts: whereas if grace had come by the worke of the miniſtery, and not by the ſpirit, proceeding (not from Paul, but) from Chriſt, they ſhould haue been converted as well as we: yea, it appeareth alſo verſ. 15. that the miniſtery of the old Teſtament profited them, as oftentimes as they had not the vaile of ignorance over their hearts, in the reading or preaching thereof. Wherefore the preheminence of the miniſters of the new Teſtament, ſtandeth herein, that according to a clearer preaching of the grace of God in Chriſt now, then vnder the Law, the ſpirit of God worketh more powerfully in the hearts of the elect now, then it did then. And if the Miniſters now, ſhould do nothing elſe but preach the Law of commandements, they might ſooner fetch water from the flint, then ſow any ſeed of life in the hearts of the hearers. Or if preaching grace in Chriſt, they ſhould preach it with that vaile of ceremonies hanging before our eyes, as the Prieſts did vnder the Law, it is certaine that their fruit ſhould be as ſparing now, as theirs was then. 1. MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 8 BVT we are bold, and haue a good will to be pilgrimes rather from the body, and ‡ to be preſent with our Lord.

RHEM. 1. [8. To be preſent with our Lord.] This place proueth that the Saincts departed now ſince Chriſt, ſleepe not till the day of iudgement, and that they bee not holden in any ſeuerall place of reſt of the fruition of God till the reſurrection of their bodies, but that that they be preſent with God in their ſoules.

CARTVV. 1. [8. To be preſent with our Lord.] Your note, that the Saints that dye ſince the comming of Chriſt ſleepe not, implieth a ſoule ſleeping in them that died before: which is abſurd and hereticall.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 10 For *we muſt all be manifeſted before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt, that euerie one may receiue † the proper things of the body, according as he hath done, ‡ either good or euill.

The obiection againſt prayers for the dead, anſwered by S. Auguſtine. RHEM. 2. [10. The proper things of his body.] S. Auguſtine (Enchirid. cap. 110) obiecteth this ſpeach of the Apoſtle, as in the perſon of ſuch as deny the prayers, almes, and ſacrifices of the liuing to bee auaileable for the dead, and hee anſwereth as followeth. This practiſe (ſaith he) of Gods Church in the commendation of the dead, is nothing repugnant to the ſentence of the Apoſtle, where hee ſaith, that we ſhall all ſtand before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt, that euery one may receiue according to his deſerts in the body, either good or euill. For, in his life and before death hee deſerued this, that theſe works after his death might bee profitable vnto him, for indeed they are not profitable for all men, and why ſo? but becauſe of the difference and diuerſity of mens liues, whiles they were in the fleſh. The like hee hath in diuers other places. Aug. li. de Prad. Sanct. c. 12. & ad Dulcit. q. 2. And ſo hath S. Denys c. 7. Ec. Hierarch.

CARTVV. 2. [10. The proper things of his body.] The Apoſtles words are cleere, that a man ſhall receiue according to that which hee hath done in his body: which is ſtrengthned by the diſcourſe of the Apoſtle, who profeſſeth that hee was ſharpned and pricked forward the rather, to walke carefully in his vocation, for that he muſt be iudged by that which he ſhould doe here in this life. Which ſpurre they take away that giue hope of having reliefe after death in the things that were
Ioh. 9. 4. Gal. 6. 10. wanting in this life. Neither hath the exhortation (that we ſhould worke while it is day, and while we haue time) any force, if when night is come, and the houre-glaſſe of our life is runne out, we may haue others to procure us the good which we come ſhort of. And when one Scripture ſaith, that the Math. 6. 26 Apoc. 14. 13 good workes they doe, go before the faithfull into heaven, and are laid up there for them, as a treaſure: and another, that they follow them, it is manifeſt, that both theſe ſpeeches ouerthtow Auguſtines ſaying, which ſuppoſeth that the good workes that are done in this life, are made profitable by prayers after death: for ſo ſhould they not go before, but come begging after: neither ſhould they follow the faithfull of their owne accord, but be drawne after them by force of other mens prayers. And therefore it hath a farre better harmony with the place of the Apoſtle, which Auguſtine ſaith, that that there is no other place of correcting then in this life, for every one after it shall haue that he hath purchased to himselfe in it. And againe, In what state every mans last day shall finde him, in the same state shall the last day of the world take him: for that what manner of one every man dyeth, in that day such he shall bee iudged in this. These sentences of Augustine are so like the Apostles, that all men may see that the one begate the other, that he speaketh otherwise (in the places heere quoted) it came of this that he sometime doubting whether there were a purgatory, and sometime denying it vtterly, at other times affirmed, that there was such a place where soules departed might feele the beenefite of the Churches prayers. And that he received of certaine Greek Writers which entred into the schoole of Christ, or ever they had shaken off the Philosophicall dust which they had gathered in Platoes schoole, the first founder of Purgatory. The place of Denis lib. Eccl. Hier. c. 7. maketh nothing for them, where he saith, they praise the dead, and exhort all to follow them, and when he hath comforted all and prayed for all, hee powreth on oyle and layeth vp the bodie with other Saints bodies of like degree: where it is evident, that the prayer for all is referred to the living onely as is the comforting of all.

Aug. de Civ. Dei. l. b. 21. cap. 13. Plato lib. 10 de Rep. & in Gorgia.

RHEM. 3. [10. Either good or euill.] Heauen is as well the reward of good works, as Hell is the stipend of ill works. Neither is faith alone sufficient to procure saluation, nor lacke of faith is the onely cause of damnation: by good deeds men merite the one, and by ill deeds they deserue the other. This is the Apostles doctrine here and in other places, howsoeuer the Aduersaries of good life and works teach otherwise.

Workes meritorious & demeritorious.

CARTVV. 3. [10 Either good or euill.] It hath beene shewed vpon Math. 5. 12. & 6. 4. &c. that reward of workes proueth no merite of them. And therefore your bare and often repetition of it, maketh it no truer then the Cuckowes song by often singing, is sweeter.

Verse. 18 But all of God, who hath reconciled vs to himselfe by Christ: and hath given vs the ministerie of reconciliation:

RHEM. 4. [18. The ministery of reconciliation.] Christ is the chiefe Minister, according to his manhood, of all our reconciliement to God: and for him, as his ministers, the Apostles and their successours the Bishops and Priests of his Church, in whom the word of reconcilement, as well by ministring of the sacrifice and Sacraments for remission of sinnes, as by preaching and gouernment of the world to saluation is placed. And therefore their preaching must be to vs, as if Christ himselfe did preach: their absolution and remission of sinnes, as Christs own pardon: their whole office being nothing else (as we see by this passage) but the Vicarship of Christ.

Bishops and Preists vnder Christ, ministers of our reconciliation.

CARTVV. 4. [18 The ministery of reconciliation.] It hath been shewed vpon Mat. 9. 6. 8. that Christ is the chiefe Minister according to his God-head and Man-hood both, and not as you say, according to his Man hood onely, and such is your impudency, as you dare affirme it, even in the face and presence of that Scripture which manifestly conuinceth you. For it is here expressly said, that God was in Christ reconciling the world vnto himselfe: whereby it is manifest, that the nature of the God-head in Christ Iesus, worketh in the attonement which was made to the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost. The like fore-head you haue in building your Sacrifice out of this place, which razeth it even from the ground: For the Apostle shewing how the benefite of our reconciliation in Christs death is applyed to us, and made effectuall for us, doth not say, that hee hath put a Sacrifice in the hands of his Ministers to offer for their reconciliation, but hath put the word of reconciliation in them, which (least you should draw to your Masse mumbling, and gibberish wherewith you round your hoast in the eare, sometime crying out like a bullock of three yeare old, and sometime speaking softly like a mouse in a cheese) the Apostle expounding himselfe, that this word, is the word of an Embassadour, and not of a Priest, a word of exhortation, and not of incantation; a word of beseeching the people, and not whispering in the eare of the Hoast: a word spoken that all may vnderstand, and not thrown in the eare where it profiteth no man. The rest (of the Vicarship of Christ committed to the Ministers of Christ) wee acknowledge and see not, how you will well accord it, with the vicarship of Christ, ascribed onely to the Pope.

See the Counsel of Trent which so commandeth, Sess. 22. c. 5

Verse. 21 Him that knew no sinne, for vs he made sinne: that wee might be made the iustice of God in him.

RHEM. 5. [21. The iustice of God.] Euen as (saith S. Augustine) when we reade Saluation is our Lords, it is not meant that saluation whereby our Lord is saued, but whereby they are saued whom hee saueth, so when it is said Gods iustice, it is not to be vnderstood wherewith God is iust, but that wherewith men are iust who by his grace he iustifieth, See S. Augustine de Sp. & lit. c. 18. & ep. 120. ad Honorat. and abhorre Caluins wicked and vnlearned glose on this place, that teacheth iustice no otherwise to bee in man, then sinne to be in Christ. Whereus the Scriptures, call man iust, because he doth iustice: but not so call they Christs sinne, because he doth sinne, but because he taketh away sinne, and is a sacrifice for sin, as the Heretickes know very well, that know the vse and signification of the Hebrew word in all the old Testament namely Psal. 39. 8. and in the booke of Leuiticus very often, c. 5. 6. 9. 12. 14. 16. and Num. c. 29.

Gods iustice, wherewith he maketh vs iust.

1. Ioh. 13. 7. תטהרה.

CARTVV. 5. [21 The iustice of God.] The Reader is bidden by them to abhorre Caluins wicked and vnlearned gloss of this place, why so? because Augustine saith thus, and thus. If it were true, yet is it a very vnlearned reason, and directly contrary to many of Augustines own sayings, wherein he giveth all men warning, that they should giue him, nor any other Father, more credite, then they bring warrant for out of the word of God. In the meane season, the Iesuites are heere faine secretly to confesse, that they haue nothing out of this place whereby they may make vp the breach which this Canon of the Apostle hath made into their Pharasaicall pride, of iustification by their workes. And indeed the argument of the comparison which the Apostle vseth, is so evident for the truth in this point, that they see it would cut them, what part soever they touch of it; for hee sheweth that so wee are made righteous by Christ, as Christ was made sinne for vs, but Epist. ad Hieron. 19. contra Donatistas de Baptismo. 2. b. c. 56. contra Cresc. l. 2 cap. 31. 32. &c.

Christ was not made sinne for us, by sinne inhering in him, therefore wee are not made iust by Christ, by righteousnesse inhering in us. And this place is notable to be compared with that to the Romanes, where Christ is called a figure of Adam; because as in the particular sinne that Adam himselfe did, and not we, yet we are condemned: so in the particular iustice of Christ that he did, and not we, we are iustified. And againe, as our sinnes imputed to Christ, were not imaginatiue, but true sinnes indeed, as those which he bare the punishment of hell for; even so his righteousnesse imputed unto us, is not an imaginatiue, but a true righteousnesse, as that for which we shall receiue the reward of heaven. Neither is that of 1. Ioh. 3. 7. that he is iust which doth iustice any thing against us (who grant that the iustified by Christ must necessarily do iust workes, but deny that they are the cause of our iustification, which are the fruits and effects thereof) considering that as the tree must first be good, or ever it can bring forth good fruit: so the man must first be iust or ever hee can bring forth iust workes, although the iustice which is done by us cannot stand nor abide the touch-stone of Gods iudgement.

Rom. 5. 14. 19.

Phil. 1. 3. Mat. 12. 33

Now as touching Augustin. de spirit. & lit. c. 18. & 120. ad Honor. he hath not a word against us, who frankly confesse that the iustice of God is that whereby we are made iust, and that as truely, as if we had fulfilled the Law our selues. But when he saith, it is of grace that God iustifieth, hee breaketh the head of your iustice, which you place in your own merite. And as this which you haue cited maketh against you, so that which followeth doth manifestly confirme our cause. For he saith, that the iustice wherewith, as with a garment we are cloathed that we be not found naked, is the iustice of faith, as we say, and not the iustice of workes, as you affirme. And in the Epistle hee affirmeth, that pride whereby men trust in their own workes is contrary to this iustice of God: Whereunto the testimony of Chrysostome doth notably agreee, who saith, that the Apostle saith not, that we should be iust, but iustice, and the iustice of God: for this is the iustice of God, when it is not of workes, seeing it is necessary that there should be no spot found, that iustification should be of grace. And Theophilact saith, that this is the iustice of God when a man is iustified by grace, that no blemish might be found in him. Let the reader therefore abhorre your wicked and unlearned glosse, whereby (contrary both to the evident words of the Apostle, and the plaine meaning of your own authority) you would beate downe the manifest truth. Your quotation of Psal. 39. 8. Levit. c. 5. 6. 9. 12. 14. 16. &c. Numb. c. 29. to proue that sinne signifieth a sacrifice for sinne, argueth, that your lay on loade when you haue no aduersary.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 10 AS sorowfull, but alwaies reioycing as needie, but enriching many: as ‡ hauing nothing, and possessing all things.

RHEM. 1. [10. Hauing nothing.] S. Augustine (in psal. 113.) gathered hereby, that the Apostles did vow pouerty.

CARTVV. 1. [10. If by these words (as hauing nothing) it be proued that Paul vowed wilfull poverty: then by these words, as vnknowne, and as sorowfull, he vowed to be vnknowne of all, and to be in perpetuall sorrow: considering that as the one is said of him, so is the other. Nay, by the same reason he vowed the possession of all things: seeing that the word (as) must be vnderstood as well here as there. Last of all, the Apostle shewing that it is the part of all Christians to be as if they possessed not, (that is, ready to quit their possessions, as if they were not theirs, as oft as the cause of the Gospell requireth it) it must needs follow (by the Iesuites logicke) that all men are bound to vow wilfull poverty. Augustine hath no such thing upon the Psalme 123. But how he is against them, hath been shewed before, upon Math. 19. 21.

1. Cor. 7. 30

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 And we ‖ helping doe exhort, that you receiue not the grace of God in vaine.

RHEM. 2. [1. Helping.] For that he declared before the Ministers of the new Testament to be Christs deputies, and that when they preach or do any function, God as it were speaketh or doeth it by them, he boldly now saith, Helping therefore: that is to say, ioyning or working together with God, we do exhort.

Gods Ministers are his coadiutors. συνεργοῦντες

CARTVV. 2. [1. Helping.] The note is true of the Ministers working together with God: as for the translation of helping, look before, upon 1. Cor. 3. 9.

RHEM. 3. [1. Grace in vaine.] The grace of God worketh not in man against his will, nor forceth any thing without his acceptation and consent: and therefore it lieth in mans will to frustrate or to follow the motion of God, as this text plainely proueth.

Gods grace forceth no man against his will. John 8. 34. Rom. 6. 20. Iohn 15. 5.

CARTVV. 3. [1. The grace of God in vaine.] They must not receiue the grace of God (that is, the doctrine of the grace of God) in vaine: therefore not against their will, followeth well. But therefore by their own free will, or of themselues (in this corrupt nature which can doe nothing but sinne) is the begging of the question.

Verse. 5 In stripes, in prisons, in seditions, in labours, ‖ in watchings, in fastings, wee may well perceiue theſe works to be wonderfull gratefull to God, and ſpecially needfull in the Clergie.

CARTVV. 4. [5. In watchings.] Watchings in private men, that their houſe be not digged up by the thiefe, and watchings in the Miniſter for the City of God, that it be not betraied, if it be for whole nights, we will like well of.

Verſ. 14 Beare not the yoke with infidels. For what participation hath iuſtice with iniquitie? or what ſocietie is there betweene light and darkenes?

RHEM 5 [14. What ſociety] Generally here is forbidden conuerſation and dealing with all Infidels, and conſequently with Hereticks, but ſpecially in prayers, or meetings to Schiſmaticall Seruice preaching, or other diuine office whatſoeuer. Which the Apoſtle here vttereth in more particular and different termes, that Chriſtian folke may take the better heed of it. No ſociety (ſaith hee) nor fellowſhip, no participation nor agreement, no conſent between light and darkneſſe, Chriſt and Baal, the temple of God and the temple of idols: all Service, as pretended worſhip of God ſet vp by Hereticks or Schiſmatickes, being nothing elſe but Service of Baal and plaine Idolatry, and their conuenticles nothing but conſpirations againſt Chriſt, from ſuch therefore ſpecially wee muſt ſeuer our ſelues alwaies in heart and minde, and touching any act of religion in body alſo, according as the children of Iſraell were commanded by God to ſeparate themſelues from the Schiſmatickes Cora, Dathan, and Abiron, and their tabernacles, by theſe words: Depart from the tabernacles of the impious men, and touch yee not thoſe things which pertaine to them, leſt you bee enwrapped in their ſinnes.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 10 FOR ‡ the ſorow that is according to God worketh penance vnto ſaluation that is ſtable: but the ſorow of the world worketh death.

RHEM. 1. [10. To ſorrow that.] Contrition or ſorrowfull lamenting of our offence, is the cauſe of ſaluation. Not onely faith then ſaueth, as the Hereticks affirme.

CARTVV. 1 [10 The ſorrow that] Here is alſo another poynt, wherein our contrition differeth from the Popiſh. The Ieſuites ſay, that it is the cauſe of ſalvation, and ſay it onely, for proofe they haue none. But we ſay, that it is the fruit or effect of true repentance, and an undoubted token of ſalvation; and proue it, for that the cauſe of our ſalvation is in the free forgiueneſſe of our ſins, through Gods mercy in Chriſt. Secondly, for that the Corinthes were iuſtified and ſaued before this contrition, and therefore did onely declare themſelues to be iuſtified and ſaued by this godly ſorrow. Thirdly, for that the inceſtuous perſon himſelfe (whom they imagine to haue made ſo great ſatisfaction by horrible tortures that the Divell put him unto) was not taken into the lap of the Church againe, but by grace. And if it be of grace, then not of the worke of contrition: for then grace were no grace. And if any will ſee the fathers iudgements againſt this blaſphemous opinion, let him look before vpon Math. 3. and in their owne Canon Law, which hath gathered them. Laſt of all, let it be obſerued, that in both theſe notes of penance and contrition, as they haue no ſtone to build with out of Pauls quarrey: ſo haue they not builded ſo much as vpon their owne ground. For this penance (if they will needs call it ſo) and contrition here mentioned, is not of any criminous or notable malefactors, but of the whole Church. Neither had it any auricular confeſſion going before, or enioyned ſatisfaction following after, which they require in all penance, as eſſenciall parts thereof. Wherefore they are not onely like the foole, that buildeth or ever he had wherewith to furniſh his work: but like vnto him that ſetteth vp a houſe in another mans ground. For hereby they iuſtifie our tranſlation, which turn the word μετανοια repentance, and make it common to every faithfull man that committeth ſin, and condemne their own, which turne it penance reſtrained vnto publicke and Eccleſiaſticall correction, enioyned by the gouernours of the Church.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 9 Now I am glad: not becauſe you are made ſorie, but becauſe you were made ſorie to penance. For you are made ſory according to God, that in nothing you ſhould ſuffer detriment by vs.

RHEM. 3. [9 Sorry to penance.] The ſorrow which a man taketh for wordly loſſes or any temporall aduerſity, is not here commended, but that which is and ought to be in all men for their ſins paſt, which is called here, Sorow towards God and for penance, otherwiſe called Contrition, and is a thing exceedingly requiſite & much praiſed, the fruits whereof are theſe that the Apoſtle reckoneth, working ſaluation. Which doctrine is farre diſtant from Luthers*, and Caluins, and ſuch wicked Libertines, that teach contrition to bee altogether a means to make ſinners either hypocrites, or to put them in deſpaire.

CARTVV. 2. [9. Sorry to penance.] If our profeſſion, practiſe, and writing, do not cleare us from this ſlander of miſliking godly ſorrow for our ſins, with a harty hatred and deteſtation of them: let us hardly be condemned, when we are iudged. But if we commend this ſorrow, and condemne onely the Popiſh contrition, which requireth perfect charitie*, perfection of repentance, and ſufficient breaking of the ſpirit, anſwerable to the proportion of the ſinne committed (which is the maull of Sathan to make an irrepairable breach in the conſcience of the ſinner) then let the Law of Deuteronomie be Verſe. 5 AND not as we hoped, but their owne ſelues they gaue firſt to our Lord, ‡ then to vs by the will of God.

RHEM. 1. [5. Then to vs.] The principall reſpect next after God, is to be had of our maiſters in religion, in all temporall and ſpirituall duties.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 14 Let in this preſent time your | aboundance ſupplie their want: that their aboundance alſo may ſupplie your want, that there be an equalitie,

Temporal benefit: vpon ſpirituall perſons.

RHEM. 2. [14. Aboundance ſupply.] Hee meaneth that ſuch as abound in worldly riches, ſhould communicate for ſupply of other their brethrens neceſſities, whatſoeuer they may: that on the other ſide they whom they helpe in temporals: may impart to them againe ſome of their ſpirituall riches, as prayers, and other holy works and graces which is a happy change and entercourſe for the wealthy men, if they could ſee it. And this place proueth plainly that the faſtings and ſatisfactory deeds of one man, be auaileable to others, yea and that holy Saincts, or other vertuous perſons may in meaſure and proportion of other mens neceſſities and deſeruings, allot vnto them, as well the ſuper-errogation of their ſpiritual works, as theſe that abound in worldly goods, may giue almes of their ſuperfluities, to them which are in neceſſity. Which enterchange and proportion of things the Apoſtle doth euidently ſet down.

One may ſatisfie and ſupererrogate for another.

CART. 2. [14. Abundance ſupply] Theſe Soule-marchants make the Churches of God nothing els but ſhops and ware-houſes. For vpon this, that the Churches (abounding in any commodity) are commanded to giue mutuall ſupply each to other, they conclude ſatiſfactory and ſupererrogatorie workes one to another. The caſe is, that the Churches of Iudea and Ieruſalem were (by often incurſions and pillages of the Romanes, and by perſecution alſo) brought to great poverty: notwithſtanding (both according to the Propheſie, that the Law of God ſhould go out of Syon, and the Word out of Ieruſalem, and by our Saviour Chriſts commandement, whereby the Apoſtles remained there many yeares after his aſcenſion) the Churches there abounded in the knowledge of the Goſpel, and in Apoſtolicall men, which were ſent from them into other Churches. Now forſomuch as other Churches (and namely Rome, Macedonia and Achaia) were able ſomewhat to relieue the poore Churches in Iudea, he exhorteth the Corinthes in Achaia, that as they had received of the aboundance of the Goſpell in Iudea, wherewith their need was furniſhed, ſo they would ſend to them of their aboundance in wealth, wherewith the neceſſity of the Churches in Iury might be releeved. Now what word or ſillable is there, to vphold the Ieſuites drowſie dreame of ſatiſfactory, and ſupererrogatorie workes: Nay this is manifeſtly ouerthrown by the Apoſtles own words, who affirmeth, that both the Churches of Rome, of Achaia and Macedonia, were debters vnto the Churches of Iudea in this office of contribution. And although the dutie of the Churches of Iury was more excellent, by ſending out Miniſters of the Goſpell, then that of a mony ſupply, ſent by the other Churches to them: yet had they as ſtrait an obligation, and bounden dutie to do that, as the other had to performe the leſſe. For although the office of the eye in the body is more noble and excellent then the office of the foot, yet is the eye as neerely bound to yeeld that which it can vnto the foot, as the foot is bound to performe his beſt ſervice vnto the eye. And the Apoſtle (ſeeking all manner of arguments to excite and to quicken the Corinthians to this duety, as that other Churches had provoked them, and others ſhould be provoked by them; that both he and they ſhould not be aſhamed: that God by thankeſgiving and prayer for them might bee glorified: yet) never remembreth this conſideration, that the Ieſuits dreame of. And where they imagine a ſuperabundance of faſtings and ſpirituall workes in the Churches releeved: there is not a word nor a ſteppe of any ſuch thing in the Apoſtle, but the contrary rather, that the Churches of Corinth abounded in all faith, word, knowledge, with care and loue toward the Apoſtle. Neither ſee they heere how fooliſhly they hurt themſelues, where they need not, whileſt they (at vnawares) confeſſe, that the Church of Rome amongſt others, had need of the Satisfactory workes of the Church of Ieruſalem, and make (it) the treaſury of meritorious workes, which they would ſo faine build at Rome. And if there had been any ſuch ouer-flow of ſpirituall workes at Ieruſalem, yet that they were ſatisfactorie, not onely appeareth not, but as hath been ſhewed, they were meere debt.

RHEM. 2. [9. His iuſtice remaineth.] The fruite of almes is the encreaſe of grace in all iuſtice and good works to life euerlaſting: God giuing theſe things for reward and recompence of charitable workes, which therefore hee called the ſeede or meritorious cauſe of theſe ſpirituall fruites.

CARTVV. 2. [9. His iuſtice remaineth.] He calleth almes a ſeed of further graces, to be reaped by the givers: but a meritorious cauſe (as you falſly ſay) he calleth it not. The word of ſeed doth rather make againſt you: for as there is no difference of the corne which tarrieth ſtill in the garner, and that which is buried in the ground, in their owne nature, but the difference riſeth onely by the bleſſing and gracious increaſe of God (in the one more then the other) who at his pleaſure giveth it a body: ſo the almes that is given out, for the refreſhment of others, will be as dead as that which is holden at home for the maintenance of our ſelues, unleſſe it be made fruitfull by the ſweet ſhower of the grace and mercy of God, and not by the filthy ſoulage and dung of mans merit. 1. Cor. 15. 38.

ANNOTATIONS.

Ver. 1. For concerning the miniſterie that is done ‡ toward the ſaincts, it is ſuperfluous for me to write vnto you.

RHEM. 3. [1. Towards the Saincts.] By the Apoſtles earneſt and often calling vpon the Corinthians to giue almes for relieuing the faithfull in diſtreſſe, the Paſtors of Gods Church may learne, that it ſpecially pertaineth to their office to bee proctors for holy men in priſon, pouerty, and all other neceſſities, ſpecially when their want commeth for confeſſion of their faith. Proctors for Catholike priſoners.

CARTVV. 3. [1. Toward the Saints.] S.

Verſe. 5 Therefore I thought it neceſſarie to deſire the brethren that they would come to you and prepare this bleſſing before promiſed, to be ready ſo, as a bleſſing, ‡ not as avarice.

RHEM. 4. [5. Not as avarice.] The couetous man that parteth with his penny painfully and with ſorrow as though he loſt a lim of his body is noted: and cheerefull, ready, voluntary, and large contribution is commended. Cheerefull giving.

CART. 4. [5. Not as avarice.] S

Verſe 6. And this I ſay he that ſoweth ſparingly, ſparingly alſo ſhall reape: and hee that ſoweth in bleſſing, of bleſſings alſo ſhall reape.

RHEM. 5. [6. Soweth ſparingly.] Almes is compared to ſeede, for as the ſeede throwen into the ground, though it ſeeme to be caſt away, yet is not loſt, but is laid vp in certaine hope of great increaſe: ſo that which men giue in almes, though it ſeeme to bee caſt away and to periſh in reſpect of the giuer, yet indeed it is moſt fruitfull, the benefit thereof manifoldly returning to him againe. Whereupon the Apoſtles concluſion is cleere, that according to the meaſure of the almes or ſeeding (which is more or leſſe in reſpect of the will and ability of the giuer) the encreaſe and aboundance of harueſt, that is, of grace and glory ſhall enſue. See S. Auguſtine in Pſal. 49. circa med. & q. 4. ad Dulcitum. The greater almes, the greater merit and reward.

CART. 5. [6. Soweth ſparingly] Silence to the note, and defiance to the ſcrap in the margent, which argueth greater merit of greater reward.

Verſe. 12. Becauſe the miniſtery of this office doth not onely ſupply thoſe things that the Saints want, but aboundeth alſo by many thankeſgiving in our Lord.

RHEM. 6. [12. Doth not onely ſupply.] When almes are giuen, ſpecially to holy men, not onely the giuers obtaine great benefit thereby, and the wants of others bee ſupplied, but God alſo by the receiuers continuall prayers and thankeſgiuing therefore, is exceedingly honoured: ſo that charity beſtowed in this ſort, is an act of Gods worſhip and of religion. Almes redound to Gods honor.

CART. 6. [12. Doth not onely ſupply.] Almes is a token of the true worſhip of God (belonging to the fourth commandement of the ſecond table) and is no act of Gods worſhip, which is onely commanded in the former table. Eph. 4. 28.

CHAP. X.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 4. FOr the ‡ weapons of our warfare are not carnall: but mightie to God unto the deſtruction of munitions, deſtroying counſels.

Punishing of heretiks. Their pride.

RHEM. 1. [4. VVeapons.] Hee meaneth the ample spirituall and Apostolicall power giuen by Christ for the punishment of false Apostles, Hereticks, and rebels to Gods Church, who are here noted specially by pride and insolence (which is the proper marke of such fellowes) to extoll themselues aboue the measure of the science of God, which consisteth in humble obedience to the faith and the preachers of the same.

CARTVV. 1. [4 VVeapons.] The Apostles weapons are longer, and reach to all loftinesse and all vnderstandings that incounter with God. And therefore are vnadvisedly shortned of you which turne the edge of them to Heretickes, with whom the Apostle hath least of all to do in this Epistle.

Vers. 6 And hauing in a readines | to reuenge all disobedience, when your obedience shall be fulfilled,

The spirituall power of Bishops against heretickes. Calvin vpon this place. Heretical Conjurations.

RHEM. 2. [6. To reuenge.] You may see hereby that the spirituall power of Bishops is not onely in preaching the Gospell, and so by perswasion and exhortation onely (as some Heretickes hold) to remit or retaine sinnes, but that it hath authority to punish, iudge, and condemne Heretickes and other like rebels: which power one of the principall rebels of this time being conuinced by the euidence of the place, acknowledgeth to be grounded vpon Christs word. Whatsoeuer you binde in earth, shall be bound in heauen. Mat. 18. 18. applying also the words spoken to Ieremy (c. 1. 10.) Behold I appoint thee ouer Nations and Kingdoms, that thou plant, pluck vp, build and destroy: to confirme and explicate the power Apostolike here alleaged by S. Paul, Mary they would gladly draw this power from the lawfull successours of the Apostles, to themselues their ministers and consistories which are nothing else but the shops and Councels of sedition and all the conspiracies of this time, against the lawfull Princes of the world.

CARTVV. 2. [6 To revenge.] Not onely the worthy servant of God M. Calvin, but the whole aray of all the Churches of the Gospell, acknowledge (not compelledly but frankly) the spirituall power of the Ministers to binde and loose; by preaching and pronouncing, privately and publiquely, the gracious promises to the repentant, and horrible threatnings to the disobedient. They confesse also the spirituall sword of excommunication given into the Churches hand, which they worthily take away from the Pope, as from a mad man, that neither knoweth, nor will learne, how to use it. And if this grieue you, the Law is open, and your complaint shall bee heard in any lawfull assembly. But if you thinke, that the place of Ieremy, concerning planting and rooting out, will serue you to depose Christian Kings and Princes from their royall estate, wee haue no society in that interpretation: Neither haue you any fellowship therein with the Prophet, who upon speciall commandement, and revelation, of God pronounced onely the planting, and rooting out of them, and never medled with any other execution, but permitted that unto God, who fulfilled those Prophecies of rooting out, by the hands of most wicked tyrants: unlesse therefore you will take upon you that which belongeth unto God alone, and think it lawfull for you to arme the Turke and Sophy against Christian Princes, this place cannot maintaine the Ieroboam of Rome, to rise against his lawfull Masters, the Christian Kings and Queenes of the world. Beside that, as you haue heere no agreement with Ieremy the Prophet, so are you (as the Madianites) at variance with your selues: For if you had not forgotten your own voyce, that the Pope hath nothing to do with Heathen Kings, but onely with Christian; you would haue been ashamed to haue holden out the example of Ieremy, whose authoritie to roote out Kings, was as great amongst the Heathen, as amongst the Kings of Iuda.

Verse. 8 For and if I should glorie some what more of our power, which our Lord hath giuen vs | vnto edification and not to your destruction: I shall not be ashamed.

Ecclesiasticall censures, namely excommunication, when & where to bee executed.

RHEM. 3. [8. Vnto edification.] This great power of the Churches censures, specially of Excommunication, as it was giuen for the good and saluation of the people, so it must not be vsed against the innocent: no nor yet vpon Hereticks or other offenders, but where & when it may by likelihood benefit either the parties, or the people, or may be executed without the hurt or perturbation of the whole Church, as oftentimes it cannot be, by reason of the multitude of offenders. Which caused the Apostle here to signifie that hee would not vse his vttermost authoritie against the false Apostles which disturbed them, till themselues were in perfect obedience vnto him, lest by punishing the principall offenders, a greater disturbance and reuolt might fall among the people, if they were not before in perfect obedience.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3 BVT I feare lest, as the serpent seduced Eue by his subtiltie, so your sences may be corrupted, and fall | from the simplicitie that is in Christ,

As Eue by the serpent, so the people are seduced by Heretickes.

RHEM. 1. [3 From the simplicity.] People fall from their first faith, virginitie, and simplicity in Christ, not by soden reuolt, but by little and little, in giuing eare to the subtill perswasion of the Serpent, speaking to them by the sweet mouthes and illurements of Heretickes, of which kind of seduction, he giueth Eue for an example, who was by her greedy desire of knowledge and the Deuils promise of the same, drawn from the natiue simplicity and obedience to God, as at this day, promise and pretense of knowledge driueth many a pore soule from the sure, true, sincere, and onely beleefe of Gods Church.

Verse

Verſe. 6 For although I rude in ſpeach, yet not in knowledge, but in all things we are made manifeſt to you.

RHEM. 2. [6. Rude in ſpeach.] Hereby we ſee that the ſeditious and falſe teachers haue often the gift of eloquence whereby the ſimple be eaſily beguiled. Such were Core and Dathan, as Ioſephus writeth Antiq. lib. 4. c. 2. for the ſame S. Auguſtine (lib. 5. Confeſ. c. 3. & 13.) calleth the Hereticke Fauſtus Manichæus, Magnum laqueum Diaboli, A great ſnare of the Deuill, ſaying that hee paſſed the glorious Doctor S. Ambroſe in ſhew of words, but far inferiour to him (without all compariſon) in ſubſtance and matter. In which ſort the Apoſtle here is glad to compare himſelfe with the falſe Apoſtles, whom the Corinthians did follow and extoll far aboue him by reaſon of their eloquence, graunting to them that gift, but chalenging to himſelfe ſuperioritie in knowledge, which all wiſe men preferre before vaine words. And it is the bane of our pore countrey, that the the people now a dayes giue credit rather to new orators and fooliſh yonkers, for their ſweete ſpeaches: then to the glorious Doctors of Chriſts Church, for their ſingular knowledge and more graue eloquence.

Heretikes ſometime eloquent Knowledge better then gay words. Yong orators among Heretikes preferred before the ancient doctors.

CARTVV. [6 Rude in ſpeech.] Whether our new Orators and yong yonkers (as it pleaſeth you to terme them) haue made your graueſt and moſt gracious Doctors babes, not having a word of anſwer, we had rather other mens lips ſhould ſpeake then our own. And wee can well affoord, that you ſhould ſet your ſelues in the higheſt places, that the Maſter of the houſhold may bid you come down, and giue place unto your fellowes, that are better then you.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 2 I know a man in Chriſt aboue fourteene yeares agoe (whether in the body, I know not: or out of the body, I know not: God doth know) ſuch a one ‡ rapt euen to the third heauen.

RHEM. 1. [2. Rapt euen.] By this we may proue that it is neither impoſſible, incredible, nor vndecent, that is reported by the ancient fathers of ſome that haue been rauiſhed or rapt (whether in body or out of body God knoweth) and brought to ſee the ſtate of the next life, as well of the ſaued as damned.

CARTVV. Look for anſwer in the Annotation upon the firſt verſe.

Verſe. 21 Leſt again when I come, God humble me among you: & I mourne many of them that ſinned before, and ‡ haue not done penance for the vncleannes and fornication and incontinencie that they haue committed.

RHEM. 2. [21. Haue not done.] τῶν μὴ μετανοησάντων, which as S. Auguſtine ſaith (epiſt. 108.) is ſpoken here of doing great penance for heinous ſinnes, as Pœnitentes did in the Primitiue Church. So that it is not onely to repent or to amend their liues, as the Proteſtants tranſlate it.

CARTVV. 2. [21 Haue not done.] Auguſtine 108 Epiſtol. proueth, that thoſe which ſinne after Baptiſme, muſt do repentance or penance, as you will needs call it. But of great repentance, or great penance, he hath not a word. And whether the Apoſtle meane heere of publicke and Eccleſiaſticall, or private repentance, our Tranſlation of repentance is faithfull, as hath been ſhewed, upon Math. 3.

ANNOTATIONS.

Vrſe. 1 If I muſt glory (it is not expedient in deed) but I will come to the ‡ viſions and reuelations of our Lord.

RHEM. 3. [1. Viſions.] S. Cyprian (ep. 69. nu. 4.) complaineth that the Aduerſaries of Gods Church and Prieſts, giue no credit to viſions, but their incredulity is much more in our dayes, that condemne all ſuch reuelations, though they be reported and recorded, for moſt certain, of holy S. Gregory, S. Bede, or who elſe ſo euer. Yea they are ſo wicked in this caſe, that the viſion which the holy author of the booke of Machabees, *calleth fide dignum, worthie of credit is one cauſe why they denie the whole booke to be Canonicall, and as well might they for this viſion denie all S. Paules Epiſtles, and for the like of the Acts of the Apoſtles, Acts 9. 10. 11. 12. 27. and the Goſpell it ſelfe, Matth. 1. 20. 2. 13 19.

Viſions haue no credite with here tikes. 2. Mac. 15. 11.

CARTVV. 3. [1 Viſions. & 2 M.] The viſions in holy Scripture we ſtedfaſtly beleeue, as if we our ſelues had ſeene them: conſidering that (beſide the ſway of authority in the witneſſes that haue written them) they haue ſuch pith of words, ſuch weight of matter, ſuch concord and harmony, with the bodie of the doctrine of the Scriptures, and ſuch aptneſſe for the ſpeciall point & caſe they are ſhewed for, that a man cannot want light enough to ſee, that they are diuine. Whereof when your viſion (2. Mach. 15. 11.) hath nothing, our reiecting it from the Canon of the Scripture is iuſtifiable: We haue cauſes (both enough and weighty) beſide this to refuſe it, and we remember not that it is reiected for this cauſe: yet (becauſe you pull us hither) to omit other thiugs, we aske you how you will excuſe the ignorance of the Author of that ſtory, for confounding a dream and a viſion, by calling that a viſion verſ. 12. which he called a dreame verſ. 11. whereas, not onely Moſes and the Prophets do manifeſtly diſtinguiſh them, as ſeuerall meanes whereby God reuealed himſelfe to his ſeruants, but the continuall practiſe of the Scripture doth declare that dreames were when men were a ſleep, and viſions when they were awake. And albeit we are tyed to the faith of no viſions, but of thoſe in Scripture, and know that the truth being ſufficiently ſealed, the uſe of them now is very ſparing, yet if there be any ſhewed, in whoſe faces do appeare the graces before ſpoken of, in any tollerable meaſure, we are content that they haue a ſecond lodging in our faith, reſerving the priuie chamber thereof vnto the viſion of the Scripture. But vnto S. Bridgets viſions, and ſuch like, fayned for credite of Popiſh doctrine, not onely beſides, but contrarie to the Scriptures, we will giue no credite, nor your ſelues neither, vnleſſe the efficacy of deluſion to beleeue lies, be fallen vpon you.

2. Theſſ. 2. 11.

As for your raviſhed and rapt men, whereby you would, if you durſt, avow S. Francis reuelations, &c. we are ſo much the harder to beleeue them, as their tongues being ſhorter, and their lips more uncircumciſed then Pauls: they find the world much babble of that which they haue ſeeen and heard, where Paul neither ſpeaketh word of that he ſaw, and confeſſeth that he could not vtter the things which he heard.

2. Cor. 12. 4.

Verſe. 11 I am become fooliſh: you haue compelled me. For I ought to haue bene commended of you: for I haue bene nothing leſſe then they that are aboue meaſure Apoſtles: although I am nothing.

The Apoſtles ſome greater then other.

RHEM. 4. [11. Aboue meaſure Apoſtles.] Though all were in that they were Apoſtles, of one and the ſame order, yet wee may ſee that ſome had maruelous great preheminence and priuiledge aboue others in the ſame office: ſpecially S. Peter and S. Iohn, whom S. Paul often calleth great Apoſtles, aboue meaſure or paſſing Apoſtles, the pillers, &c. 2. Cor. 11. 5. 12. 11. Gal. 2. 9.

CARTVV. 4. [11 Aboue meaſure Apoſtles.] It is well that you haue found Iohn to bee Peters fellow in greatneſſe: But what hath Iames offended you that you ſhut him forth from this preheminence and priviledge of greatneſſe, whom Paul taketh into this fellowſhip as well as Peter and Iohn,

Gal. 2. 9.

Verſe. 12 Yet the ſignes of my Apoſtleſhip haue bene done vpon you in all patience, in ſignes and wonders and mightie deeds.

We muſt ſticke to the faith firſt planted by miracles.

RHEM. 5. [12. In ſignes.] Miracles bee neceſſary, and bee great ſignes of truth, when it is firſt newly taught. And therefore let all Catholike men hold faſt that faith which was firſt preached and confirmed by miracles, as in England by S. Auguſtine, and in other nations by other holy Apoſtolike men. And let the Heretickes that preach extraordinarily, newly, and otherwiſe then we receiued at our firſt conuerſion, ſhew their calling and doctrine by miracles, or elſe let them be taken for falſe Apoſtles as they be.

CARTVV. 5. [12 In ſignes.] It is well known by teſtimonies of ſtories, and Fathers, that our Countrie had the true Religion planted in it long before Auguſtine the Monke came amongſt us, and even at the ſame time wherein he kept the ſturre he did. And beſide that, he ſhould do a greater miracle then ever that Auguſtine did, which ſhould proue that he wrought miracles amongſt us: We anſwer, that if it were proued that he did, yet we anſwer you with a far better and ancienter Auguſtine then yours, that which he ſometime anſwered vnto the Maniches, that if he did miracles. yet would we beware euen of the miracles wrought of him, by that inſtruction which the Lord giueth vs. Math. 24.

CHAP. XIII.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 5 TRY your owne ſelues if you be in the faith: proue ye your ſelues. Know you not your ſelues that Chriſt Ieſus is in you, vnleſſe perhaps you be reprobates.

We may know that we haue faith, but not that we are in grace.

RHEM 1. [5. Trie your ſelues.] The Heretickes argue hereupon, that euery man may know himſelfe certainely to be in grace: where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh expreſſly and onely of faith, the act whereof a man may know and feele to be in himſelfe, becauſe it is an act of vnderſtanding, though he cannot be aſſured that he hath his ſinnes remitted, and that he is in all points in ſtate of grace and ſaluation: becauſe euery man that is of the Catholike faith, is not alwayes of good life and agreeable thereunto, nor the acts of our will ſo ſubiect to vnderſtanding, that we can know certainly whether we be good or euill. See S. Auguſt. to. 7. de perf. inſtit. c. 15. Li. de Cor. & grat. c. 13. & S. Thomas 1. 2. q. 112. art. 5.

CARTVV. 1. [5 Try your ſelues.] To elude the plaine teſtimony of the Apoſtle of our certainty of the grace of God by faith, you bring that the act of faith is an act of vnderſtanding which a man may know to be in himſelfe, which is nothing elſe, but a begging of that which is in queſtion: The falſehood whereof is euident, not onely by other places, which teach that there is an act of the will and affection ioyned therewith, as that we are made the ſonnes of God by it, haue free acceſſe and boldneſſe to call him Father, and receiue a ſeale or pledge of our redemption vntill the full time, but manifeſtly by this place alſo. For Paul telling how we ſhould try our faith, calleth us to this triall by the effect of it, which is to haue Chriſt dwell in us. Now if we be able to try whether Chriſt by his Spirit do dwell in us, and we in him, it followeth, that we may know that wee are the children of God, and that no condemnation can come vnto us. Againe, the Apoſtle ſhewing that they are reprobate, or men reproued and miſliked of God, if Chriſt dwell not in them by faith, thereby declareth, that (having Chriſt dwelling in them) they are through faith pleaſing vnto God: Whereby your deteſtable opinion is manifeſt, which aſcribe the dwelling of Chriſt in the hearts of the faithfull, and Gods allowance and liking of his children, vnto a naked faith, deſtitute of good workes, which may be in the devils. Another reaſon of yours is, becauſe that euerie one that beleeueth is not alwayes of good life agreeable thereto: whereby presuming, our holines to be the rule of our certainty of Gods grace, you beg the question the second time: Where wee confesse, that if the certainety of our salvation depended of our righteousnesse we could never be sure of our salvation: And therefore affirme with the Apostle, that it is of grace that the promise may bee certaine, and not of the works of the Law, and that it standeth of the loue of God towards us, and not upon our loue towards him. Augustine de perfect. iusticia c.15. & lib. de correp. & grat. c.13. hath nothing for you: he hath the cleane contrary iudgement, saying, that our hope is certaine, as if the things we hope for were already perfected: for we feare not as long as the truth promiseth, seeing the truth can neither deceiue, nor be deceiued. And againe, presume, or be assured not of thine own work, but of the grace of Christ, for of grace you are saued, as saith the Apostle. Thomas in our Churches, hath as much authority as M. Luther hath in yours.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO THE GALATIANS.

RHEMIST.

THAT this Epistle may seeme to be the first that S. Paul wrote, was declared in the Argument of the Epistle to the Romanes, notwithstanding that in the second chapter it is euident to haue been written foureteen yeeres at the least after his Conuersion, and (as it is said) from Ephesus, belike at that time of his being there, which is mentioned, Act. 18.

The occeasion of it were such false Apostles, as we read of, Act. 15. Et quidam descendentes, &c. And certaine comming down from Iewry, taught the brethren (that is the Christian Gentiles at Antioch) that vnlesse they bee circumcised according to the manner of Moyses, you can not be saued. Such commers also to the Galatians (whom S. Paul had conuerted, Act. 16. as himselfe mentioneth Gal. 1. and 4.) did seduce them saying, that all the other Apostles to whom they should rather harken, then to Paul (who came they knew not from whence) did vse Circumcision: yea and that Paul himselfe, when hee came among them, durst doe no other. And to winne them more easily, they did not lay on them the burden of the whole Law, but of Circumcision onely.

Against these deceiuers, S. Paul declareth, that he receiued his Apostleship and learned the Gospell that he preached of Christ himselfe after his Resurrection: and that the other Apostles (although he learned nothing of them) receiued him into their society, and allowed well of his preaching to the Gentiles, though themselues being Iewes, and liuing among the Iewes, had not yet left the ceremonies of the Law: howbeit they did not put in them any hope of iustification, but in Christ alone without them. He declareth moreouer, that the said false Apostles belied him, in saying that hee also preached Circumcision sometimes. Againe, that they themselues in preaching no more but Circumsion, did against the nature of Circumcision, because it is a profession to obserue the whole Law: finally, whatsoeuer they pretended, that in deed they did it onely to please the Iewes: of whom otherwise they should be persecuted.

So that in this Epistle he handleth the same matter, which in the Epistle to the Romans: but here lesse exactly, and more briefly, because the Galathians were very rude, and the Romans contrariwise, repleti omni scientia (Rom. 15.) replenished with all knowledge.

CARTVV. In this argument there is some untruth: As, that this Epistle seemeth to be written first, which was written after divers, especially those to the Thessalonians, Timothy and Titus. Also, that he wrote more briefly to the Galathians then to the Romans, because of their rudenesse, and the Romans great knowledge: whereas rudenesse requiring ampleneſse in teaching, knowledge is content with short summes. The truth of this shortnesse is, the Galathians decay in few, although principall poynts of religion: and the cause of that length is, that the whole body of the Gospell being summarily shut up in the Epistle to the Romans, might from thence, as from the imperiall Cittie of the world, haue many hands to carry it into all the corners and coasts of the earth. We could alledge also priviledges of this Epistle aboue that unto the Romans: As that which the Apostle himselfe presseth, in that he wrote so long a letter with his own hand: whereas to the Romans, hee wrote by the hand of Tertius. Howbeit these are such things as we will not go to Law for: with you especially, against whom we haue greater suites.

CHAP. I.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 PAVL an Apoſtle not of men, neither by man, but by Ieſus Chriſt, and God the Father that raiſed him from the dead, RHEM. 1. [1. Neither by man.] Though hee were not firſt by mans election, nomination or aſſignement, but by Gods own ſpeciall appointment, choſen to be an Apoſtle: yet by the expreſſe ordinance of God he tooke orders or impoſition of hands of men, as is plaine. Act. 13. Let vs beware then of ſuch falſe Apoſtles, as now a dayes intrude themſelues to the office of Miniſtery and preaching, neither called of God, nor rightly ordered of men.

S. Paul ſent to preach by ordinary impoſition of hands.

CARTVV. 1. [1 Neither by man.] Anſwered before, upon Acts. 13. 2. where they haue the ſame note which they here ſo ſtomly repeate.

Verſe. 8 But although we, or an Angel from heauen, euanglize to you beſide that which we haue euangelized to you, be he anathema.

RHEM. 2 [8. Or an Angell.] Many worthy obſeruations are made in the fathers writings, of the earneſt admonitions of the Apoſtle, and much may we gather of the text it ſelfe, firſt, that the credit of any man or Angell for what learning, eloquence, ſhew of grace or vertue ſoeuer, though he wrought miracles, ſhould not mooue a Chriſtian man from that truth which hee hath once receiued in the Catholike Church: of which point Vincentius Lirinenſis excellently treateth. lib. cont. prophan. hæreſ. Nouitates. Whereby we may ſee that it is great pitty, and ſhame, that ſo many follow Luther and Caluin and ſuch other leud fellowes, into a new Goſpell, which are ſo farre from the Apoſtles and Angels, that they are not any whit comparable with the old Hereticks in gifts of learning or eloquence much leſſe in good liſe.

No ſhew of learning or vertue muſt moue vs from the faith.

RHEM. Secondly, S. Auguſtine noteth vpon the word, Beſide, that not all other teaching, or more preaching then the firſt, is forbidden but ſuch as is contrary and diſagreeing to the rule of faith. The Apoſtle did not ſay, ſaith he, If any man euangelize to you more then you haue receiued, but, beſide that you receiued, for if hee ſhould ſay that, hee ſhould be preiudiciall to himſelfe, who coueted to come to the Theſſalonians that he might ſupply that which was wanting to their faith. Now he that ſupplieth, addeth that which was lacking taketh not away that which was &c By which we ſee how friuouſly and calumniouſly the Hereticks charge the Church with addition of the Scriptures.

Tract. 98. in Ioan. Preaching cõtrary to the faith receiued is forbidden, not other preaching.

RHEM. Thirdly, as well by the word euangelizamus (we euangelize) as the word accepiſtis (you haue receiued) we may note that the firſt truth, againſt which no ſecond Goſpelling or doctrine may be admitted, is not that onely which he wrote to the Galatians, or which is conteined either in his or any other of the Apoſtles or Euangeliſts writings, but that which was by word of mouth alſo preached, taught, or deliuered them firſt, before he wrote to them. Therefore the aduerſaries of the Church that meaſure the word of God or Goſpell by the Scriptures onely, thinking themſelues not to incurre S. Paules curſe, except they teach directly againſt the written word, are fouly beguiled. As therein alſo they ſhamefully erre, when they charge the Catholikes with adding to the Goſpell, when they teach any thing that is not in expreſſe words written by the Apoſtles or Euangeliſts, not marking that the Apoſtle in this Chapter, and elſe where, commonly calleth his and his fellowes whole preaching, the Goſpell, be it written or vnwritten.

The Goſpel is not only in the written word of Scripture, but in vnwritten tradition alſo.

Fourthly by the ſame words wee ſee condemned all after preachings, later doctrines, new ſectes and authors of the ſame: that onely being true, which was firſt by the Apoſtles and Apoſtolike men as the lawfull husbandmen of Chriſts field, ſowed and planted in the Church: and that falſe which was latter and as it were ouerſowen by the enemy. By which rule not onely Tertullian (de præſcript. nn. 6. & 9.) but all other ancient Doctors, and ſpecially S. Ireneus (li. 3. c. 2. 3, 4.) tried truth from falſhood, and condemned old Heretickes, prouing Marcion, Valentine, Cerdon, Menander, and ſuch like, falſe Apoſtles, becauſe they came in with their noueltie long after the Church was ſettled in former truth.

After preaching and ouerſowing of nouelties argueth falſe doctrine.

Fiftly, This curſe or execration pronounced by the Apoſtles, toucheth not onely the Galatians, or thoſe of the Apoſtles time, that preached otherwiſe then they did, but it pertaineth to all times, preachers and teachers, vnto the worlds end, and it concerneth them (as Vincentius Lirinenſis ſaith) that preach a new faith, or change that old faith which they receiued in the vnitie of the Catholike Church. To preach any thing to Christian Catholike men (saith he) besides that which they haue receiued, neuer was it lawfull, neuer is it, nor neuer shall it be lawfull, to say anathema to such it hath been, and is, and shall be alwayes behoofull. So S. Augustine by this place holdeth all accursed, that draw a Christian man from the society of the whole Church, to make the seuerall part of any one sect: that call to the hidden conuenticles of Heretickes, from the open and known Church of Christ: that allure to the priuate, from the common: finally all that draw with chatting curiositie the children of the Catholike Church, by teaching any thing besides that they found in the Church. ep. 48. Psal. 103 Con. 2. * mentioning also that a Donatist feined an Angell to haue admonished him to call his friend out of the Communion of the Catholike Church into his sect, and he saith, that if it had been an Angell indeed, yet should he not haue heard him, Lastly S. Hierome vseth this place, wherein the Apostle giueth the curse or anathema to all false teachers not once but twice, to proue that the zeale of Catholike men ought to be so great toward all Heretickes and their doctrines, that they should giue them the anathema, though they were neuer so deere vnto them. In which case, saith this holy Doctor, I would not spare mine own parents. Ad Pam. c. 3. cont. Io. Hieros. Zeale against heretikes.

The Apoſtles curſe vpon all that teach new doctrine,

CARTVV. 2. 8. Or an Angell.] The first obseruation we grant: the application whereof against M. Luther and Caluin, is with as much ease sent home to you by our bare No, as it is wrested against us by your naked Yea.

In your second obseruation you offer open violence to the words of the Apostle: whilest to open a wicket to your wicked decrees, you expound beside that which you haue receiued, to be, contrary or against that which you haue haue receiued. For albeit in this particular knowledge and Art of Theologie, it is true, that whatsoeuer is not contained in the word preached by the Apostles, the same is contrary vnto it: yet both the nature of the words, and condition of all other Sciences (Diuinitie excepted) make a plaine difference between beside and against, or contrary. Neither is there any Grammar that teacheth, that beside and against are of one signification: nor Rhetoricke, that setteth out any such trope of speech, wherein one thing is so taken for another. And therefore albeit the Apostle by pronouncing a curse vpon him that preacheth any thing against that which hee taught, should haue barred all addition vnto his doctrine: yet when he vseth this speech of besides, he giueth a further aduantage against the additions of men, which the Iesuites would by this violence wring out of the Churches hand. Neither is this a controuersie of words onely, seeing vnder this glosse of expounding beside by against, they would establish doctrines not contained in the word of the Apostle.

Now let it be obserued, how the Iesuites by this vnlearned and shamelesse shift, haue insnared themselues. For vpon this assertion of theirs, that a man may adde more to that which was preached by S. Paul, so it be not contrary to his preaching, according to their minde; it followeth necessarily, not onely that the Scripture is shut vp in narrower bounds then the word preached by the Apostle: but also that the word preached by him is no sufficient rule of faith, but that a man may adde somewhat vnto it which he never taught. Contrary to their owne doctrine, who to giue an entry vnto their vnwritten verities, say, that they be such as the Apostles preached, albeit they haue no place in their writings. As for Augustine in Tract. 98. in Io. who affirmeth that more may be taught, and that a supply may be made of that which is wanting, he is shamefully wrested. For Augustine by more, and by supply of want, meaneth one and the same, both Doctrine and Christ deliuered out of the Scripture, and dispensed sometimes by milke, sometimes by stronger meate, according to the capacitie of the learners, which the example he bringeth doth manifestly proue: where hee calleth the doctrine of the manhood of Christ strong meate: which is yet more plaine, in that hee affirmeth, that euery one may teach another that which he knoweth, when the Holy Ghost by his going forward shall make him more capable. This violent handling of Augustine is yet more manifest, in that he setteth forth this doctrine by a similitude of wayfarers, who fault against the law of cunning and skilfull trauelling, not onely when they take a cleane contrary way, but also when they goe never so little out of the appointed way, either on the right or left hand, saying, that he which goeth beside the rule of Faith, goeth out of the way: which should not be true, if a man might goe beside, and yet not offend against it. 1. Cor. 3. 2.

In the third obseruation, wherein they make the word of God preached to be of a larger extent then the Scriptures and written word, they doe directly against both the generall rule and example of the Apostle. His rule is, that no man should be wise aboue that which is written. So that, as in this place of the Galathians, he would haue nothing receiued beside that which he preached: so to the Corinths, he will haue nothing admitted aboue that, or more then that which is written. It is also against his example, who plainly testifieth of himselfe, that he taught nothing but that which was contained in the Law and the Prophets. And here we haue the testimony of Augustine expresly against them, which applieth this curse vnto any that shall teach any thing beside that which is contained in the Scripture, saying, Whether it be of Christ or his Church, or of any thing whatsoeuer pertaining to our faith and life, I will not say, if we, but if an Angell from heaven shall preach to you beside that which you haue receiued in the Scriptures of the Law and the Gospell, let him be accursed. Where he condemneth the Donatists, for that neither in the bookes of the Prophets nor the Apostles there were any testimonies set downe to proue them to be the Church of Christ. Where he biddeth them also to proue their doctrine by the Testament. But neither could he thus proue that they are heretickes, nor binde them to the Testament to proue their doctrine, if there had been any storehouse of vnwritten verities to make their proofes by. And lest they should here cauill at the word Testament, as they do at the word of God, to make it as well nuncupatory and vnwritten, as written, speaking otherwhere of the auoiding of all strifes that may arise between brethren, whom he exhorteth to repaire to the Fathers Testament: he saith, Open it, let vs read. The like testimony vnto this of Augustine, is another of Basil, exhorting those which are learned in the Scriptures, to try the things which are sayd of their teachers, and to admit things agreeable to them reiecting those that are not: he vseth for proofe, these words of the Apostles curse, for confirmation of his saying. And againe, If all that is not of faith be sinne, and faith commeth of hearing, and hearing of the word of God; whatsoeuer is without the Scripture, giuen by inspiration, because it is not of faith, is sinne. Where it is to ɔe obſerved firſt, that Baſil taketh the word of God, and the Scriptures given by inſpiration, for all one; ſaying as well that it is ſinne, becauſe it is not of the faith of the Scriptures, as that it is not of the faith of the word of God: contrary to the Ieſuites, which make the word of God more Generall then his Scriptures. Secondly, that he taketh being beſide the Scriptures, to be all one with being without the Scriptures: where the Ieſuites expound beſide the Scriptures, to be againſt or contrary to them. Wherefore it is evident, that both Auguſtine & Baſil pronounce the Ieſuits accurſed, which in deciſion of the cauſes of faith and good manners, will not ſuffer themſelues to be holden within the territories and bounds of the Scriptures.

To the two next obſervations we willingly accord, and marvell in the former at their blindneſſe, which ſee not their defection from the old and ancient doctrine of the Primitiue Church: and in the other their ſenſeleſſe aſtoniſhment, which tremble not at this horrible curſe of the Apoſtle, that is with no leſſe force diſcharged againſt them, then when it was firſt ſhot off againſt the ſeducers of the Churches of Galatia.

Verſe. 18 Then after three yeres I came to Hieruſalem | to ſee Peter: and taried with him fiftene daies.

S. Paul doth viſit S. Peter of honour and reuerence toward him. Vocegerus.

RHEM S. [18. To ſee Peter.] In what eſtimation S. Peter was with this Apoſtle it appeareth: ſeeing for reſpect and honour of his perſon, and of duty as Tertullian de præſcript. ſaith (notwithſtanding his great affaires Eccleſiaſticall) he went ſo farre to ſee him not in vulgar maner, but (as S. Chryſoſtome noteth the Greeke word to import) to behold him as men behold a thing or perſon of name, excellency, and Maieſtie, for which cauſe, and to fill himſelfe with the perfect vew of his behauiour, hee abode with him fifteen dayes. See S. Ierome ep. 103. ad Paulinum to. 3. who maketh alſo a myſtery of the number of dayes that hee taried with S. Peter. See S. Ambroſe in Comment. huius loci, and S Chryſoſtome vpon this place, and hom. 87. in Ioan.

CARTVV. 5. [18. To ſee Peter.] Your argument is, That Paul went to ſee Peter, therefore Peter was his head and ruler. The ſhame whereof doth appeare, in that ſuch ſhameleſſe men as you durſt not ſet it together, but leaue it to your readers curteſie, if he peradventure in pitty towards your wofull and pittifull cauſe, would take it for an argument. Let therefore the Reader underſtand (for Gen.45.28 the Ieſuites ſeeme to underſtand it well enough) the vanity hereof by the like. Iacob went into Egypt to ſee Ioſeph his ſonne: therefore Ioſeph the ſonne was head and ruler over Iacob the father. And where this argument, as a meſſenger ſent of the Popes errant, is lame, and hath no legges to goe on, the Ieſuites are carefull to provide it ſtilts, by urging the Greeke word, which is, to ſee, not in vulgar maner, but to behold him as a perſon of name, excellencie and maieſtie. Name and excellencie we grant: but the word of maieſtie is not fit for a poore Miniſter, but for God alone, and Princes which are his vicegerents upon earth. All which titles agreeing well with Ioſeph at that time when his father tooke his iourney to ſee him, yet notwithſtanding cannot proue him to be his fathers head. And if Ioſeph be not a perſon full enough of Maieſty, becauſe he had the King aboue him;
2. King. 10. 1. yet Salomons glory and maieſty, which the Queene of Saba came from a farre country to behold, as the onely wonder of the whole word, is able to encounter with Peters maieſtie: yet haue wee never heard this concluſion gathered thereof, That Salomon was therefore head and ruler of the Queen of Saba.

A ſecond circumſtance they urge out of Tertullian, de præſcript. that he did it of dutie. Wherein they wreſt Tertullian: for he placeth this dutie of Paul, not in regard of any thing due unto Peter, but in reſpect of Pauls own office of preaching, thereby to notifie his agreement with Peter in the doctrine which he preached. Which is evident not onely by his words, but by his diſcourſe, which is to anſwer thoſe that gathered difference of Paul and Peters doctrine, becauſe Paul reproved him. Secondly, if every one which of duty taketh a iourny unto another, ſhould be ſubiect to him, towards whom the iourny is undertaken (to go forward in the ſame example) Iacob the father ſhould be ſubiect to his ſon
Gen.46. 3. Ioſeph. For howſoever Iacobs iourney was voluntary at the firſt, yet after the Lord had willed him to go to Ioſeph, it was a neceſſary duty.

The third circumſtance, that Paul went notwithſtanding his great affairs Eccleſiaſticall, is friuolous: ſeeing that both the doing of this dury, in regard of his preaching, was a ſingular furtherance of his Eccleſiaſticall affaires: and that he might as well execute his miniſtery at Ieruſalem, during Act.20.16. & 21. 17. his abode there, as in any other place of the world. In which regard he went to Ieruſalem when Peter was not there.

The laſt circumſtance is, that he tarried there 15. dayes, which is enforced by Ierom, Epiſt. 103. ad Paulinum, who maketh a myſtery of this number. But to make a myſtery thereof, is to ſeeke a knot in a ruſh. And ſeeing Ierom hath not expounded the myſtery, it is as favourable to proue Peters equality with Paul, as his ſuperiority aboue him. Ambroſe expoundeth this his abode with Peter for the ſpace of fifteene dayes, to haue been a token that he was received to boaſt as a fellow Apoſtle of the ſame minde with him. Chryſoſtom affirmeth, that to ſay no more of Paul (meaning no more in his commendation) he was of equall honour unto Peter; yet that he went unto him as to his greater. And wherein that greatneſſe ſtandeth, he expoundeth in the next word, which ſignifieth that he was elder in yeares: whereas if he had been greater in authoritie, he could not haue been equall in honour. That Ambroſe ſaith, that the care of the Churches was committed unto Peter: and Chryſoſtome, that hee was the mouth of the Apoſtles. And both Ambroſe and Chryſoſtom upon Iohn, hom. 87. that hee was the firſt and the Prince of the Apoſtles, it maketh nothing to proue primacie in authority and power as hath been ſhewed upon *Math.*16.18.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 11 AND when Cephas was come to Antioche, ‖ I resisted him in face, because he was ‖ reprehensible.

RHEM. 1. [11. In face.] That is, presence, before them all, as Beza himselfe expoundeth it. Yet the English Bezites to the more disgracing of S. Peter, translate, to his face, No Test. an. 1580.

Verse. 16 But knowing that * man is not iustified by the workes ‡ of the Law, but by the faith of Iesus Christ: we also beleeue in Christ Iesus, that we may be iustified by the faith of Christ, and not by the workes of the Law, for the which cause, by the works of the Law no flesh shall be iustified.

RHEM. 2. [16. Of the Law.] By this and by the discourse of this whole epistle, you may perceiue, that when iustification is attributed to faith, the works of Charity be not excluded, but the works of Moses law: that is, the ceremonies, sacrifices and sacraments thereof principally, and consequently all workes done meerely by nature and free will, without the faith, grace, spirit, and aide of Christ.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 2 And I went vp according to reuelation: and ‖ conferred with them the Gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but apart with them that seemed to bee something, lest perhaps ‖ in vaine I should run or had run.

RHEM 3. [2. Conferred with.] Though S. Paul were taught his Gospell of God and not of man, and had an extraordinary calling by Christ himselfe, yet by reuelation he was sent to Hierusalem to conferre the said Gospell which he preached, with his elders the ordinarie Apostles and Rulers of the Church, to put both his vocation and doctrine to their triall and approbation, to ioyne in office, teaching, and society or communion with them. For there is no extraordinary or miraculous vocation, that can seuer or separate the person so called, in doctrine or fellowship in Christian life and religion, from the ordinary known society of Gods people and Priests. Therefore whosoeuer he be (vpon what pretence soeuer) that will not haue his calling and doctrine tried by the ordinary Gouernours of God, or disdaineth to goe vp to the principall place our religion, to conferre with Peter and other pillers of the Church, it is euident that he is a false teacher, a Schismatike, and an Heretick. By which rule you may trie all your new teachers of Luthers or Caluins schoole: who neuer did nor neuer durst put their preaching to such conference or triall of holy Councels or Bishops, as they ought to do, and would do, if it were of God, as S. Paules was.

S. Paul conferred with S. Peter, and the rest, for tryall of his doctrine. The heretickes submit their doctrine to no tryall of Bishops or Councels.

CARTVV. 3. [2 Conferred with them.] Paul offered neither his vocation nor doctrine to the tryall of the other Apostles, as you falsly surmise, contrary both to the word of Conference, which as Ierome witnesseth argueth equality, and the whole discourse of the Apostle, which is to shew that his authority was as great, as any the greatest among them: which should not haue been if either his vocation or doctrine had been subiect unto any other tribunall then that of Christ himselfe, of whom he had both his calling and doctrine immediately. And the difference which you make of Paul and the other Apostles, in making his calling extraordinary, and theirs ordinary, is false, the one being as ordinary as the other, though both extraordinary. And if there were difference of authority, yet notwithstanding this example of Pauls going up to Ierusalem, is no warrant for that seruile attendance that your Bishops are bound by oath every yeare, either by themselues, or by their messenger to dance at Rome, unlesse they be dispensed with. For first of all, this was done but once: Secondly, it was done by reuelation from God immediately: Thirdly, upon occasion of a false surmise, that Paul taught contrary to the residue of the Apostles, without which speciall cause there had been no iourney taken. Last of all, if any yearely repaire to the principall place of Religion were necessary by this example, it is due as well to Ierusalem, where Iames is said to haue been Bishop, and to Ephesus, where Iohn had his seate, as to Rome, where Peter is esteemed to haue had his chaire. As for us, we confesse our case to be in this point far unlike Pauls, who are bound to make defence of the hope which is in us, to euery one that shall aske an account of us. And albeit neither we know, nor you can shew why you should not yeeld account unto us, as well as we unto you, yet we refuse not to offer triall of our vocation and doctrine even unto you, so that it might bee with any equall or tollerable conditions. But to take you for Iudges, which are parties, and sworne to the maintenance of those opinions which be between us, and that in such sort, as it is void whatsoeuer Councell shall decree against the authority of the seate of Rome; were a folly, which you would as much deride us for in yeelding unto it, as now you barke at us, because we resist you in it. And yet so little we esteeme the authority of your condemnation in this behalfe, that were it not, that you haue made of your Councell house a slaughter-house, and changed your gate of iudgement into hilles most infamous, by robberies and murders of most worthy and excellent personages, which you partly did, and more would haue done, if you had not been resisted: we would not refuse to plead the cause of our chaste religion at the very gates of the whore of Babylon, nor flie from the iudgement of the Master thiefe of Rome, in the triall of our lawfull possession of the truth whereof we make profession.

RHEM. 4. [2. In vaine.] Though S. Paul doubted not of the truth of the Gospell which he preached, knowing it to be of the holy Ghoſt: yet becauſe other men could not, nor would not acknowledge ſo much, till it were allowed by ſuch as were without all exception known to be Apoſtles and to haue the ſpirit of truth, to diſcerne whether the vocation, ſpirit, and Goſpell of Paul were of God, he knew he ſhould otherwiſe without conference with them, haue loſt his labour, both for the time paſt and to come. He had not had (ſaith S. Hierome) ſecuritie of preaching the Goſpell, if it had not been approued by Peters ſentence and the reſt that were with him. Hierom. ep 89. c. 2. See Tertull. lib. 4. Cont. Marc. in. 8. Therefore by reuelation he went to conferre with the Apoſtles at Hieruſalem, that by them hauing his Apoſtleſhip and Goſpell liked and approued, hee might preach with more fruit. Wherein wee ſee, this holy Apoſtle did not as the ſeditious proud Heretickes doe now a dayes, which refuſing all mans atteſtation or approbation, will be tried by Scriptures onely. As alſo we may learne that it is no ſuch abſurditie, as the aduerſaries would make it, to haue the Scriptures approued by the Churches teſtimony. Seeing the Goſpell which S. Paul preached (being of as much certainty and of the ſame holy Ghoſt that the Scriptures be) was to be put in conference and examination of the Apoſtles, without all derogating of the truth, dignity, or certainty of the ſame. And the cauilling of Heretickes, that we make ſubiect Gods Oracles to mans cenſure, and the Scriptures to haue no more force then the Church is content to graunt vnto them, is vaine and falſe. For, to beare witneſſe or to giue euidence or atteſtation that the preaching or writing of ſuch, is true and of the Holy Ghoſt, is not to make it true: no more then the Gold-ſmith or touch-ſtone that trie and diſceme which is true gold, make it good gold, but they giue euidence to man that ſo it is. And therefore that diſputation alſo, whether the Scripture or the Church bee of greater authoritie, is ſuperfluous either giuing teſtimonie to the other, and both aſſured by the holy Ghoſt from all error; the Church yet being before the Scriptures, the ſpouſe of Chriſt, and proper dwelling temple, or ſubiect of God and his graces, for the which Church the Scriptures were, and not the Church for the Scriptures. In which Church there is iudiciall authoritie by office and iuriſdiction to determine of doubtfull queſtions touching the ſenſe of the Scriptures and other controuerſies in religion, and to puniſh diſobedient perſons. Of which iudiciall power the Scriptures bee not capable, as neither the truths and determination of the ſame can be ſo euident to men, nor ſo agreeable and fit for euery particular reſolution, as diuerſity of times and perſons requireth. Certain is the truth, and great is the authority of both: but in ſuch divers kinds, as they cannot be well compared together. The controuerſie is much like as if a man touching the ruling a caſe in law or giuing ſentence in a matter of queſtion, ſhould aske, whether the iudge, or the euidence or the parties, be of more authoritie or credit, which were as friuoulous a diſpute, as it were a diſordered part for any man to ſay, hee would bee tried by no other iudge but by his own writings or euidences. With ſuch triflers and ſeditious perſons haue wee to doe now a dayes in diuinitie, as were intollerable in any prophane ſcience or faculte in the world.

The approbation of S. Paul's doctrine by Peter & the reſt was very requiſite.

No abſurdity that the ſcriptures be approued by the churches teſtimony.

The Church maketh not Canonicall ſcripture, but declareth that it is ſo.

The Scripture and Church compared togither for antiquitie auctoritie, &c.

CARTVV. 4 [2 In Paine.] That other men neither could nor would acknowledge Pauls doctrine to be of the holy Ghoſt, untill it were allowed by the other Apoſtles, is a manifeſt falſhood, ſeeing in the ſpace of ſeuenteene yeares before he had planted diuers Churches, as appeareth not onely by the ſtorie of the Acts, but by the words of the Apoſtle in this chapter, where he ſaith, That God which had wrought effectually by the Miniſterie of Peter towards the circumciſion, wrought likewiſe by his towards the uncircumciſion. The ſaying of Ierome, Epiſt. 89. that Paul had no ſecuritie of preaching the Goſpell, if it had not beene approued by Peters ſentence, and the reſt with him, may ſeeme contrary to that which your ſelues confeſſe, that Paul doubted not of the truth of the doctrine which he preached: Where if he had no ſecurity of his doctrine, hee muſt needs haue been afraid, either that his doctrine was not true, or that his calling was not good to deliuer it, And it is no marvell although Ieromes building might heere be ſtubble, when his foundation whereupon this is ſet, was of ſtiks: for he bringeth this ſaying for maintenance of his opinion, that Peters diſſimulation at Antioch, was no fault indeed, nor Pauls reproofe of him in good earneſt. Howbeit, if you will interpret Ieromes ſentence of Pauls inſecurity of his doctrine to be in regard of thoſe to whom he preached, and not in regard of himſelfe; and in regard of the authority that he had with the falſe Apoſtles, and not in regard of the authority it ſelfe, we will neither ſtriue with you, nor with Ierome in this behalfe, as that which maketh nothing for Peters ſuperiority aboue Pauls: In which reſpect it is fondly alledged by ſome of your own faction, who may proue by the ſame reaſon, that both Iohn and Iames were ſuperiours unto him as well as Peter. Tertullians words they durſt not ſet downe. But where you condemn us upon this ground of Paul's conference with the reſt of the Apoſtles, becauſe we will be tryed by the Scriptures oncly, the proverbe is fulfilled, that a fooles bolt is ſoone ſhot. For firſt of all, we flatly deny that there was any triall of doctrine. Secondly, if any had beene, yet the ſame, even amongſt the Apoſtles themſelues had been no other then by the iuſt weights and ſtandard meaſure of the holy Scriptures, as appeareth manifeſtly by the handling of the doctrine of iuſtification in the Councell holden by the Apoſtles at Ieruſalem. The approbation of Scriptures by the Churches teſtimonie we allow: and therefore your ſurmiſe of us to the contrary is a leud practiſe, well beſeeming the proctors of ſuch a deſperate cauſe as yours is. Wee denie onely, that the truth of the Scriptures dependeth of the authoritie of the Church, or is ſubiect unto it. Which thing when you deny to be affirmed by you, you are either ſtrangers at home, and in your own writings, or elſe you are out of meaſure ſhameleſſe. For of Pighius it hath been ſhewed, how he ſaith, that the Apoſtle wrote certaine things, not that thoſe writings ſhould beare rule over our faith and Religion, but rather that they ſhould be ſubiect. Alſo, that the authority of the Church is not onely inferiour or equall, but euen ſuperiour unto the authority of the Scriptures. And againe, that in a doubtfull matter the authoritie of the Churches tradition is more fit and more effectuall to make proofe and certainety then the Scriptures. Againe, that no man may lawfully beleeue any thing by the authority of the Scripture, be the ſame in our iudgement never ſo plaine and evident, againſt the cleere and conſenting iudgement of the Catholike Fathers, and common determination of the Church. One of your Cardinals affirmeth, that the Scriptures follow the Church, and not the Church the Scriptures. Another, that the Articles of our faith ſay not, I beleeue the holy Bible, I beleeue the holy Scriptures, but I beleeue the holy Church. The Popes decretall Epiſtles are preferred before the Canonicall Scriptures, and Auguſtine wickedly wreſted thereunto. Not to ſpeake of the Popes Paraſites, his Canoniſts, who gaue him power to diſpenſe with the old and new Teſtament, which notwithſtanding you might heere bee preſſed with, ſeeing the moſt authenticall, and infallible iudgement of the Church is placed of you in his definitiue ſentence. And wee deny that the Church is that to the Scriptures which the touchſtone is to gold: for euen the true Church is often deceiued in the interpretation of them. But we affirme, that as one iron whetteth another, ſo one Scripture is the touchſtone to another, and is tryed by another. And if it be aſked, what ſhall be done when a man giueth no credit to the Scripture: we aske againe, what if he will not beleeue the Church? What if men will not credite either the Goldſmithes or the touchſtone?

Hoſius in confeſſ. Petricomens Diſtinct. 19 c. in canonicis

Before upon Iohn 14. 26 & Acts 15. 28.

You ſay that the diſputation whether the Scripture or the Church be of greater authoritie is ſuperfluous, wherein your uncouering of your fathers nakednes, whereof all in a manner haue beene thus idlely occupyed, might deſerue ſome commendation, were it not that you do it to cover your own filthineſſe: who by inſinuating your miſlike of them which make the Churches authority aboue the Scriptures, hope to finde great favour for their equality in authority, which you ſhall never proue: Albeit your words make ſhew of a miſlike of your fathers deformed birth, in preferring the authority of the Church before that of the Scripture; yet the greateſt part of your reaſons ſeeme to haue beene ſhapen for the nurcing of that blaſphemie.

Your firſt reaſon, that the Church is as free from errours as the Scriptures, is a groſſe begging of that in queſtion, and before confuted.

The ſecond, that the Church was before the Scriptures, is firſt fond, as that whereby Iohn Baptiſt and the Prophets may be proued to be aboue or equall unto our Saviour Chriſt: and it is not unlike the falſe Apoſtles reaſon, wherewith they would haue proued Paul inferiour unto the other Apoſtles in authoritie, becauſe he came to his miniſtery after them. Secondly, it is falſe: for the word of God being before the Church, which is the ſame that is now written, and thereof called Scripture, it followeth, that in the thing it ſelfe, the being and ſubſtance of it was before the Church, although in this circumſtance and manner of being it was after.

The third reaſon, that the Church is the ſpouſe of Chriſt, is flat againſt you: for it is meet that the ſpouſe ſhould be obedient, and under the word and voyce of Chriſt her husband, which voyce is the Scripture.

The fourth, that the Church is the proper temple and ſubiect of God, and his graces, is firſt of all doubtfully and dangerouſly ſpoken. For God dwelleth not in the Church but by his Spirit and graces: ſo that you ſhould haue ſpoken more aptly, if you had ſayd, that the Church is the temple of God by his graces, then, and his graces When you ſay alſo, that the Church is the proper temple of God, you giue ſuſpition of aduancing the Churches credit too much for your aduantage in this queſtion: conſidering that God dwelleth properly onely in the humanity of Chriſt: and in the Church unproperly and by a trope, although truely and effectually to that end for the which he dwelleth in it. Secondly, God dwelleth not in his Church by his Spirit, but by meane of the Scripture: ſo that in this regard of the Spirit dwelling in the Church, there is more due to the Scripture, then to the Church, which without it, and before it ſhould be, and was a den and caue of uncleane ſpirits.

Laſt of all, the Scripture was delivered unto us by the Spirit of God, which is without all mixture of ignorance, or other pollution: whereas the Spirit of God which dwelleth in the Church ſo long as it is upon earth, hath an euill neighbour by reaſon of a remnant of ignorance and euill affection, not onely dwelling by it, but alſo intermedled with it: whereupon it commeth, that the teſtimony of the one is the whole truth, where the witneſſe of the other hath often a wreſt and tacke of her corruption, and is not beleeued in any thing that it ſaith true, further then it borroweth credit of the banquet of the holy Scripture, which needeth no pawne or ſureties hip of any other.

The fifth reaſon, that the Scriptures are for the Church, and not the Church for the Scriptures, is inſufficient: for ſo you may proue the Angels author tie, which is for the Church, and not the Church for them, vnder or equall unto the Churches authority. And if you ſay, that the authoritie of the Church, generally in the whole body, is equall unto the authority of the Angels, yet cannot every ſeuerall member of the Church (to whom the Miniſtery of many Angels is appointed) haue equall authority with the Angels which attend upon them, and miniſter unto them, no nor equall unto the authoritie of one onely Angell, which by your iudgement is aſſigned to the cuſtody of every faithfull man. The Princes and Lawes of Common-weales, are for the people, and not the people for their Princes and Lawes: yet you may not thereof conclude, that the peoples authority is either aboue or equall unto the authority of their Lawes and Princes. And if in the ſmall regard you haue to Princes and their Lawes, you will grant that: yet you will not admit it in your Pope and his decrees, which being for the Church (as you teach) and not the Church for them: be notwithſtanding (by your doctrine) aboue the authoritie of the Church. And in this argument you endeuour to proue the Churches authoritie greater then the authority of the Scriptures, is euident: for your reaſon leaneth upon that rule of Ariſtotle, who affirmeth that the eare is better then that which is referred thereunto. Which rule you ought to haue underſtood to be true, when in other poynts the end and the things reſpecting it are equall. For although the Church be better then the Scriptures in ſome regard, as in that there ſhall be an uſe of the Church in the world to come, when there ſhall be none of the Scripture, yet thereof it followeth not that the Church is equall (much leſſe better in every poynt then the Scripture.

1. Cor. 13. 8 10. Reu. 21. 22

Your laſt reaſon, that in the Church there is iudiciall authority to determine of doubtfull queſtions, and to puniſh diſobedient perſons, which the Scripture is not capable of, is vaine and frivolous: conſidering that this iudiciall authoritie, it hath for and by the Scripture: from which when ſhee ſwarveth, her iudgements are as eaſily condemned as pronounced, euen as the ſentence of the the iudge is easily repealed, that departeth from the Law appointed for the rule of his iudgement. And here the rule of reason is against you: for that, for whose cause another thing is such or such, ought in that poynt to be preferred before that which is for the sake thereof. Whereupon although the most ordinary resolution of doubts be by the ministery of the Church: yet may particular persons in their doubts by study and invocation of the name of God, in the reading, meditation, and conference of the Scripture, loose their owne knots without the Church: where the Church without the Scriptures may well cut the knot, but can never loose it. And even in your example of the Evidence and Iudges authority, who is so foolish, as having his evidence agreeable and answerable unto the lawes, will yeeld unto the Iudges sentence pronounced against him, and esteeme himselfe to haue an evill cause therefore? When you say, that we defending the decision of all causes by Scriptures onely, do as he which will be tried by no other iudge but by his own evidence, you doe right both to us and your selues, in confessing at unawares, that the Scriptures are our evidences, and that you haue no part nor portion in them: although therein you trifle with the world, when you would giue it to understand, that we refuse to haue any Iudge of ours, which are content to make your selues iudges, so that you iudge according to the Lawes of God in the holy Scripture. But Iudges of the Scriptures we neither make our selues, nor will admit you, which proudly lift up your selues into that iudgement seat. But such is the heavie state of our times, which driveth us to the answer of such trifling arguments, which deserue better to be tumbled into a darke corner in silence, then to be buried with any honour of confutation.

Vers. 6 But of them that seeme to be something, (what they were sometime, it is nothing to me. * God accepteth not the person of man) for to mee, they that seemed to be something, added nothing

The Scriptures alwaies true in themselues, are so known to bee by the Church.

RHEM. 5. [6. Added nothing.] The Gospell and preaching of S Paul was wholy of God, and therefore though it were put to the Churches probation, as gold is to the touch stone, yet being found in all points pure, nothing could be altered or amended therein by the Apostles. Euen so the Scriptures which are indeed wholy of the Holy Ghosts enditing, being put to the Churches triall, are found, proued, and testified vnto the world to be such, and not made true, altered, or amended by the same. Without which attestation of the Church, the holy Scriptures in themselues were alwayes true before: but not so known to be, to all Christians, nor they so bound to take them. And that is the meaning of the famous sentence of S. Augustine cont. ep. fund. c. 5. which troubleth the hereticks so much. I would not beleeue the Gospell (saith he) vnlesse the authoritie of the Church moued me.

In the answer to the Iagges which are after the Preface.

CARTVV. 5. [6. Added nothing.] We take that which you grant, that the Church alereth not the Scriptures, and thereof couclude, that you are not the Church, which (not to speake of the rest) by adding unto them the patchment of traditions, alter them. But, that Christians are not so bound to take them without the Churches attestation, is all one as if you had said, that the Iewes had not been so bound to take IESVS for their Christ, unlesse Iohn had so testified of him. Where the bond of beleeving then, is alwayes one, even in the Infidels, much more in Christians, although the meanes of performing the bond be better with the testimony of the Church then without it: which notwithstanding hath no weight further then her testimony is grounded out of the Scripture it selfe. Wherefore they are strange Christians even of your stampe, and not of S. Pauls, that are not so bound to take the Scriptures to be indited by the holy Ghost. Better Christians then these a man may finde in the Iewes Synagogue. Augustines sentence, contra epist. fund. c. 5. we haue shewed to make nothing for you.

The Apostles commission generall through the world, and yet peculiar to certaine prouinces. Iewes and Gentiles specially committed to the two principal Apostles. Mat. 15. Rom. 15. Neither Peter only of the Iewes, nor Paul Apostle of the Gentiles onely. Caluins foolish reason that Peter was not B. of Rome, and his derogation from Peters Apostleship.

Verse. 7 But contrariwise when they had seen, that to me was committed the Gospell of the prepuce, as to Peter of the circumcision.

RHEM. 6. [7. To Peter of the circumsion.] Wee may not thinke, as the Heretickes deceitfully teach, that the charge of the Apostles was so distincted, that none could preach or exercise iurisdiction, but in those seuerall places or towards those peoples or prouinces onely, whereunto by Gods appointment by their own lot or election, they were specially designed. For, euery Apostle might by Christs commission (Mat. 28. Goe, and teach all nations) vse all spirituall function through the whole world, yet for the more particular regard and care of prouinces, and for peace and order sake, some were appointed to one country, and some to another: as, of the other Apostles, we see in the Ecclesiasticall histories, and for S. Peter and S. Paul, it is plaine by this place and other that to them as to the two chiefe and most renowmed Apostles, the Church of all nations was giuen as deuided into two parts, that is, Iewes and Gentiles, the first and principall being S. Peters lot, that herein also he might resemble our Sauiour, who was sent namely * to the lost sheepe of Israell, and was properly * the minister of the circumsion the second being S. Pauls, whom Christ chose specially to preach to the Gentiles: Not so for all that, that either he was limited to the Gentiles onely, whom the Acts of the Apostles report in euery place, first to haue entred into the Synagogues, and preached Christ to the Iewes, as he wrote also to the Hebrews, and euer had speciall regard and honour to them,) or Peter so bound to the Iews onely that he could not meddle with the Gentils: seeing he was *the man chosen of God, by whom the Gentiles should first beleeue, who first baptized them, and first gaue order concerning them. Therefore the treacherie of Calvin is intollerable, that vpon this distinction of the Apostles charge, would haue the simple suppose, that S. Peter could not bee Bishop of Rome (so might he barre S. Iohn from Ephesus also, nor deale among the Gentiles, as a thing against Gods ordinance and the appointment between him and S. Paul: as though thereby the one had bound himselfe to the other, not to preach or meddle within his fellowes compasse which is further most seditious, hee exhorteth all men to keepe fast the foresaid compact, and rather to haue respect to S. Pauls Apostleship, then to S. Peters: as though the preaching, authoritie, and Apostleship of both were not alike true, and all of one holy Spirit, whether they preached to the Iewes or Gentiles, as both did preach vnto both peoples, as is alreade proued, and at length, partly by the daily decay of the Iewish state and their incredulity, and partly for that in Christianity the distinction of the Iew and Gentile ceaſed after a ſeaſon, both went to the chiefe citty of the Gentiles, and therefore founded the Church common to the Hebrewes and all nations, Peter firſt, and Paul afterward. And therefore Tertullian ſaith, de præſcript. nn. 14. O happy Church, to which the Apoſtles powred out all doctrine with their bloud: Where Peter ſuffered like to our Lords paſſion, where Paul is crowned with Iohn (Baptiſts) death. The Church founded at Rome by S. Peter and S. Paul.

CARTVV. 6. [7. Peter of the circumciſion.] They impoſe upon us, that we teach the charge of the Apoſtles Paul and Peter to haue been ſo difficult, that neither of them could preach in his fellowes compaſſe: the contrary whereof is true, as M. Calvins both iudgement and reaſon, wherewith they haue enlarged and ſet out their note, doth evidently witneſſe. What hope is there then, that our words can be fenced enough from the venome of theſe lying tongues, which ſhame not to father on us that, the contrary whereof we not onely inſinuate in a word, but teach in whole periods, not in darke or doubtfull ſpeeches, but in moſt cleere and plaine termes, Peter having a ſpeciall charge of the Iewes, had the firſt of the two parts, whereinto the whole people of the world were divided: But that he had the principalleſt part, which neither had the greateſt in number, nor the ſtrongeſt in faith, nor the durableſt in perſeverance of the Goſpell which they once received, is utterly untrue. Neither is the principallity of his charge aboue Pauls helped, in that it was (as our Saviour Chriſts) towards the circumciſion: For our Saviours Miniſtery was therefore ſhut up in Iury, becauſe the time of the calling of the Gentiles was not then come, which notwithſtanding at the time when this partition was made, was in great fulneſſe, ſo that there was then, neither Iew nor Gentile, neither circumciſion nor uncircumciſion regarded, but onely the new creature: yea that circumſtance of Chriſts preaching, by ſo much embaſeth the lot of Peters Miniſterie, as he entred upon the labours of Chriſt, and of the Prophets, built upon their foundation, and reaped where they had ſown: where on the contrary part, the Apoſtle Paul magnifieth his Miniſtery for that he built not upon the foundations that other men had laid, but preached unto thoſe who had never heard of Chriſt before: Not to ſpeak of the ſingular prerogatiue of Pauls miniſtery aboue Peters, in that hee was called of Chriſt glorified in heaven, when Peter was of Chriſt converſing upon earth, and learned his doctrine miraculouſly as it were at one inſtant, where Peter learned it in ſome yeares, and by more ordinary meane. Beſide that, if Peter haue any principality of miniſterie in this point of being ordeined the ſpeciall miniſter of the Iewes, he had it in common with Iames and Iohn. So that unleſſe they will make Pauls Miniſtery inferiour unto Iames and Iohns, they cannot by this ſlight make it inferiour to Peters.

Act. 9. 5. Gal. 1. 12.

Gal. 2. 9.

Where M. Calvin proveth out of this place, that Peter was not Biſhop of Rome, his argument is ſound: For notwithſtanding that Peter might come to Rome and preach there, ſaving the bounds of his calling, yet could he not haue a fixed and ſpeciall Miniſterie in Rome, but he muſt needs leaue his ſtanding, wherein both our Saviour Chriſt, and the mutuall compact of the Apoſtles had ſet him: Eſpecially if it be remembred, that the Iewes, over whom his ſpeciall charge was, were by an Edict of Claudius baniſhed Rome. And therefore the reply which they make of Iohn remaining long at Epheſus, is frivolous, conſidering that it appeareth manifeſtly, by the Epiſtles to the Epheſians and Timothy, that the Church of the Epheſians ſtood (in a great part thereof) of Iewes, as well as of the Gentiles: Whereunto adde, that being the moſt traffiqueable and Marchandable Citie of all Aſia, he had by his abode there a ſingular meane of intangling the Kingdom of Chriſt amongſt the Iewes, which came to and fro. Neither is their reaſon, of the daily decay of the Iewiſh ſtate in the true Religion, thereby to proue Peters relinquiſhing of his Miniſtery amongſt the Iewes to be lawfull, any better: For the very flower and greateſt increaſe of the Iewes in the Churches of the Goſpell fell into thoſe yeares wherein they ſuppoſe Peter to haue been firſt Biſhop of Rome. And both the Epiſtles of Peter teſtifie, that the Iewes Churches held out during the life of Peter. And Iohns Epiſtle teſtifieth of ſome reaſonable continuance after Peters death. The reſt belonging to this queſtion is anſwered before, in the anſwer to the argument of the Preface.

Luk. 22.32 Gal. 2. 7. Act. 18. 2.

Laſt of all, whereas upon theſe words of M. Calvin, lib. 4. c. 6. nn. 15. Inſtitut. We ought more to reſpect the Apoſtleſhip of Paul then of Peter, they ſignifie that he placeth more authority and truth in S. Pauls preaching then in S. Peters, they depart not from their old cuſtome of wreſting the words of worthy men unto their advantage. For it appeareth manifeſtly that his meaning is, that we that are Gentiles ought to account the grace of our calling unto the Goſpell, to haue beene rather by the Miniſterie of Paul then of Peter. And who is ſo beaſtly ignorant, as when he heareth exhortation given to a Church that it ſhould haue more regard unto the miniſterie of their proper Paſtor, then to his that hath not ſo ſtraite a bond of inſtructing them, will thereof conclude, that he eſteemeth the authority or truth of the others doctrine leſſe, towards thoſe to whom it more properly appertaineth, then their own Miniſters authority & truth of doctrine is towards them. And if they be not ignorant that a ſouldier of ſome one band fighteth with more courage when hee heareth his own trumpet blown then by the ſound of another that is not ſo proper unto his Enſigne: this ſpeech of M. Calvins ſhould not haue ſeemed ſtrange unto them. And how would you haue triumphed if you were able to charge us in this point, as we are able to convince you, who to make roome for traditions, affirme not of the Preaching, but of the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, that they were written not unto the whole Church, but unto particular Churches as occaſion ſerved, where we affirme with the Scripture, that the Epiſtles written to one Church belong unto all the Churches as well as unto that whereunto they were written; and unto us that now liue, as to them that lived in the times wherein they were written. As for the happineſſe of Rome by ſhedding the bloud of the Apoſtles Peter and Paul, mentioned by Tertullian de Præſcrip. it is ſuch as we pray daily may not fall into the Citie of God: wee rather count it our happineſſe when the true profeſſors of the Goſpell haue not once wet their fingers in that bloud: wherof look more before upon Mat. 17.9. Notwithſtanding the Church of Rome in Tertullians time might thereby be ſaid to be happy, becauſe of the abundant grace of God prevailing againſt the ſinnes of that place, that their innocent bloud which might iuſtly haue brought a curſe vpon it to a perpetuall barrenneſſe, was in ſtead of raine to make it to beare fruit: But the praiſe thereof is due vnto the blond of Chriſt, and not to the Apoſtles bloud, much leſſe to the Church of Rome then, and leaſt of all to that which is now: which for every drop of innocent bloud that Rome then ſpilt, having drunk whole Gallons of the blond of chaſte Martyrs, hath made it ſelfe guilty, and brought vpon her head all the bloud which was ſhed from the firſt day that ſhe perſecuted the Goſpell, vntill this day wherein ſhe perſecuteth the ſame Goſpell.

Verſe. 9 And when they had knowen the grace that was giuen me, Iames and Cephas and Iohn, which ſeemed to be pillers, I gaue to me and Barnabas the right hands of ſociety: that we vnto the Gentiles, and they vnto the circumciſion:

All Catholike preachers and Paſtors muſt communicate with Peter and his ſucceſſors.

RHEM. 7. [9. Gaue the right hand of ſociety.] There is and alwayes ought to be, a common fellowſhip and fraternitie of all Paſtors and Preachers of the Church: Into which ſociety whoſoeuer entreth not, but ſtandeth in Schiſme and ſeparation from Peter and the chiefe Apoſtolike Paſtors, what pretence ſoeuer he hath, or whence ſoeuer he challengeth authority, hee is a Wolfe, and no true Paſtor. Which vnion and communion together was ſo neceſſary euen in S. Paul's caſe, that notwithſtanding his ſpeciall calling of God, yet the Holy Ghoſt cauſed him to go vp to his elder Apoſtles, to be receiued into their fellowſhip, or brotherhood, for it is to bee noted, that S. S. Peter, Iames, and Iohn were not ſent to S. Paul, to ioyne with him or to be tried for their doctrine and calling, by him: but contrariwiſe he was ſent to them as to the chiefe and known ordinary Apoſtles. They therefore gaue Paul their hands, that is to ſay, tooke him into their ſocietie, and not he them And S. Hieromes rule concerning this, ſhall be found true to the worlds end, ſpeaking of S. Peters ſucceſſour, He that gathered not with thee, ſcattereth: Epiſt. 57. And in another place for the ſame cauſe hee calleth Rome, tutiſſimum communionis portum, the moſt ſafe and ſure hauen of communion or ſociety. Ep 16. c. 3. And whereas the Hereticks by this alſo would proue that Peter had no preeminence aboue Paul being his fellow Apoſtle, it is ridiculous. As though all of one fellowſhip or brotherhood be alwayes equall, or as though there were not order and gouernment, ſuperiority and inferiority, in euery ſociety well appointed. And they might perceiue by this whole paſſage, that Peter was the ſpeciall and in more ſingular ſort, the Apoſtle of the Iewes, though Iames and Iohn were alſo; as S. Paul is alſo called in more ſingular ſort the Apoſtle and doctor of the Gentiles, then S. Barnabas, and yet they were both alike taken here into this ſociety, as they were both at once and alike ſegregated into this miniſterie, and ordered together Act. 13. It is a poore reaſon then to ſay or thinke S. Peter not to bee aboue S. Barnabas neither, becauſe of this ſociety and fellowſhip vnto which he was receiued together with S. Paul,

The Hereſtikes ridiculous argument againſt Peters preeminence.

CARTVV. 7. [9. Gaue the right hand of Societie.] Let it be firſt obſerued, that the Ieſuites whole trauell here is, vtterly to ouerthrow S. Pauls driſt in theſe two firſt chapters, which is to ſhew againſt the falſe Apoſtles, that neither by his firſt calling, nor by any courſe which he had runne in his miniſtery, he was inferiour to any of the Apoſtles. And how the Ieſuits iumpe iuſt with the falſe Apoſtles, in haling Pauls iourney to Ieruſalem for conference with the Apoſtles, to proue his inferiority vnto them: directly contrary to the Apoſtles teſtimony which affirmeth, that they conferred or gaue nothing vnto that which he had before. Now let us ſee their reaſons: Firſt, they ſay that Paul was ſent to the Apoſtles, and not they to him. The reaſon whereof was, that ſome couered with the vizard of the profeſſion of the Goſpel, called into queſtion Pauls authority and doctrine, and that vnder colour of giuing the eſtimation which was due vnto the Apoſtles at Ieruſalem. Now therefore if the dignity of Pauls miniſtery be impaired, becauſe it ſuffered more contradiction then the miniſtery of the reſt of the Apoſtles; they may ſo call downe the credit of our Sauiour Chriſts miniſtery, as that which had more gainſaying and oppoſition then any other. Secondly, it was more meete that two equals ſhould goe to three, yea (as it ſeemeth) to 12. whereof three were of ſpeciall account) then that the greater number ſhould goe to the ſmaller. Thirdly, the Apoſtles had an eſpeciall commandement to tarry at Ieruſalem, and to labour in the territory of Iewrie, before they ſhould go into the other quarters of the world. Laſt of all, that Paul by reuelation went vnto the other Apoſtles, and not they to him, proueth no more any ſuperiority of them aboue him, then Peter going by reuelation to Cornelius, and not Cornelius vnto him, proueth Peter inferiour in authority vnto Cornelius the Centurion. Therefore their concluſion inferred hereupon, that they gaue Paul the handes, and not he them, can haue no force, ſeeing that hath none whereupon it ſtandeth. And indeed it proueth as much ſuperiority, as it followeth, that the Crier in the Olimpiacke exerciſes is ſuperiour vnto him that gat the beſt prize, becauſe he put the Crowne which he had deſerued vpon his head. And if the Biſhop of a ſmall Dioceſſe in Italy, be not therefore ſuperiour vnto the Pope, becauſe hee confirmeth and ratifieth his election, much leſſe can Peter be ſuperiour vnto Paul, who never confirmed and ratified his calling, but onely gaue teſtimony vnto it.

And yet further, in that the Arrians laying to Iulius the Biſhop of Romes charge, that he had croſſed them, and oppoſed himſelfe vnto that which they had determined in Councell, he anſwereth, that whatſoeuer he dealt or wrote therein, he did by the Councels iudgement and conſent, and not of his own head. And further ſaith vnto the Biſhops of the Eaſt, that he exhorted them to meet at the Councell holden at Rome, and ſaith not, that he commanded them. Our reaſon of equality amongſt the Apoſtles, becauſe of their fellowſhip, they ſcornefully in words caſt away, but indeed it ſticketh ſtil to the ribbes of their primacie, conſidering that their reaſon of order and gouernment in euery ſocitie ſocietie, cannot ſhake it off: forasmuch as there may be both order and gouernement without ſuperiority and inferioritie. And ſuperiority and inferioritie alſo might well be in the Church, yea, amongſt the Eccleſiaſticall gouernours of Ieruſalem, although it were not amongſt the Apoſtles: as there was in the Senate of Rome and yet not betweene the Conſuls. Now where they ſay, that men may perceiue by this whole paſſage, that Peter was in a more ſpecial ſort an Apoſtle then Iames and Iohn, they begge that in queſtion, and ſhew no light how we ſhould ſee it. We ſee that Iames is ſet before Peter: which confirmeth us in that we haue ſet downe before, that Iames gouerned the action, and was preſident in the Councell holden at Ieruſalem, as heere alſo he ſeemeth to haue been. Look the Treatiſe upon Mat. 18. 18 &c. and Act. 15. 13. Act. 15. 13.

We ſee alſo, that the diſputation of Pauls equalitie with the other Apoſtles, is eſpecially urged in the compariſon betweene him and Peter, becauſe the falſe Apoſtles (as you do now) vaunted moſt of him and his authority therein. Therefore we ſee Paul preſſing, that the Apoſtleſhip ouer the heathen was euen ſo, and with like authority committed unto him as the Apoſtleſhip of the Iewes unto Peter. But Peters prerogatiue we ſee not, nor you neither, but that your eyes are bewitched with Magus of Rome. For your reaſon, that Barnabas was taken into this ſociety, and yet S. Paul called in a more ſingular ſort an Apoſtle, then he, is but a miſt which cannot abide the heat and light of that Sunne which ſhineth in theſe dayes. For howſoeuer Pauls and Peters Apoſtleſhips were more famous by either gifts or fruits, then his: yet the authority of their Apoſtleſhip is all one.

And that this giving of the right hand of ſociety proueth an equality, it may appeare, for that unto Titus, who came with them, this right hand was not given, although he were both an Euangeliſt, and preached the ſame doctrine that they did. Laſt of all, where you ſay, Paul and Barnabas were both at once and alike ſegregated unto this miniſtery, and ordered both together. Actes 13. you utter your palpable ignorance, conſidering that Paul had exerciſed his Apoſtleſhip ſome yeares before that ordination. Neither were they ordained ſimply at that time unto the miniſtery of the Apoſtleſhip, but particularly to that voyage, which S. Luke deſcribeth, chap. 13. and 14. which being furniſhed, they gaue an account of to the Church, which ſent them forth thereunto. Chap. 14. 26. 27. Gal. 2. 1.

Verſe. 11 And when Cephas was come to Antioche, I reſiſted him in face, becauſe he was I reprehenſible.

RHEM. 8. [11. I reſiſted him.] Wicked Porphyrie (as Hierome writeth) chargeth S. Paul of enuy and malepart boldneſſe, and S. Peter of errour, Prem. Comment. in Galat. Euen ſo the like impious ſonnes of Cham, for this, and for other things, gladly charge S. Peter, as though hee had committed the greateſt crimes in the world, for it is the property of Heretickes and ill men, to bee glad to ſee the Saincts reprehended and their faults diſcouered, as we may learn in the writings of S. Aug againſt Fauſtus the Manichee, who gathered out the acts of all the holy Patriarchs, that might ſeeme to the people to be worthy of blame. Whom the ſaid holy Doctor defendeth at large againſt him as both he, and before him S. Cyprian, find hereupon this Apoſtles reprehenſion, much matter of praiſing both their vertues: S. Pauls great zeale, and S. Peters wonderfull humility: that the one in the cauſe of God would not ſpare his ſuperiour, and that the other, in that excellent dignity, would not take it in ill part, nor by allegation of his Supremacy diſdaine or refuſe to bee controuled by his iunior, which of the two they count the greater grace and more to bee imitated. For neither Peter (ſaith S. Cyprian) whom our Lord choſe the firſt and vpon whom hee built the Church, when Paul diſputed with him of circumciſion, challenged inſolently or arrogantly tooke any thing to himſelfe, ſaying that he had the primacy, and therefore the latter Diſciples ought rather to obey him, ep. 71. ad Quintum. num. 2. And S. Auguſt. ep. 19. c. 2. in fine. That (ſaith he) which was done of Paul profitably by the liberty of charity, the ſame Peter tooke in good part by holy and beniene godlineſſe of humility, and ſo he gaue vnto poſterity a more rare and holy example if at any time perhaps they did amiſſe, to be content to be corrected of their inniors, then Paul, for to bee bold and confident: yea the inferiours to reſiſt their betters for defending the truth of the Goſpell, brotherly charity alwayes preſerued. By which notable ſpeaches of the doctors we may alſo ſee, how friuolouſly the Heretickes argue hereupon, that S. Peter could not be Superiour, to S. Paul, being ſo reprehended of him: whereas the Fathers make it an example to the Superiours, to beare with humility the correption or controulement euen of their inferiours. Namely by this example S. Auguſtine li. 2. de bapt. c. 1. excellently declareth, that B. Martyr, S. Cyprian, who walked away touching the rebaptizing of them that were chriſtened of Heretickes, could not, nor would not haue been offended to be admoniſhed and reformed in that point by his fellowes or inferiours, much leſſe by a whole Councell. We haue learned, ſaith he, that Peter the Apoſtle, in whom the Primacie of the Apoſtles by excellent grace is ſo preeminent, when he did otherwiſe concerning circumciſion then the truth required, was corrected of Paul the latter Apoſtle. I thinke (without any reproch vnto him) Cyprian the Biſhop may be compared to Peter the Apoſtle, how beit I ought rather to feare leſt I be iniurious to Peter, for who knoweth not that the principalitie of the Apoſtleſhip is to bee preferred before any dignitie of Biſhop whatſoeuer? but if the grace of Chaines or Sees differ, yet the glory of the Martyrs is one. And who is ſo dull that cannot ſee, that the inferiour, though not by office and iuriſdiction, yet by the law of brotherly loue and fraternall correption, may reprehend his ſuperiour? Did euer any man wonder that a good Prieſt or any vertuous perſon ſhould tell the Pope, or any other great Prelate or greateſt Prince in earth, their faults? Popes may be reprehended, and are iuſtly admoniſhed of their faults, and ought to take it in good part, and ſo they do and euer haue done, when it commeth of zeale and loue, as of S. Paul, Irenæus, Cyprian, Hierome, Auguſtine, Bernard: but of Simon Magus, Nonatus, Iulian, Wickleffe, Luther, Caluin, Beza, that do it of malice, and raile no leſſe at their vertues then their vices, of ſuch (I ſay) Gods Prelats muſt not be taught nor corrected, though they muſt patiently take it, as our Sauiour did the like reproches of the malicious Iewes, and as Dauid did the malediction of Semei. 2. Reg. 16. The Heretikes maliciouſly derogate from S. Peter. Pauls reprehenſion of Peter, teacheth vs the zeale of the one, and humilitie of the other. It proueth nothing againſt Peters ſuperioritie, that he was reprehended. The Superiour may be reprehended or admoniſhed of the inferior. Heretikes reprehenſion of Catholike Biſhops is rather railing.

CARTVV. 8. [11. I reſiſted him.] Pauls purpoſe being evident to ſhew his authority amongſt the reſt of the Apoſtles, if this hiſtory of his reproving Peter, maketh nothing for it; it would follow that Paul therein is beſide his furrough. If therefore taken apart, and by it ſelfe alone, it bee not able to proue an equality: yet accompanied with the Arguments which go before, whereof every one is an euident demonstration of his purpose: it both inforceth or strengthneth, and garnisheth or setteth out every of them. Howbeit euen the very manner of the reproofe, without preface of honour in all boldnesse and sharpnesse, especially, towards Peter his elder, both in yeares and in Apostleship, carry manifest and euident tokens of his equally. For albeit inferiours may reproue their superiors, yet ought that to be done with submission and some acknowledgement of their place and dignity aboue them: which would vtterly shut up their mouthes, if Gods glory, and the profite of the neighbour, and brother especially, did not constraine them to open them.

Hereunto may be added that Barnabas the Apostle being in the same fault with Peter, yet Paul passing by him, reproueth Peter: whereas the proverb of beating the dog that the Lyon may take heed, might haue admonished Paul, if he had esteemed Peter his superiour, to haue rather reproued Peter in the person of Barnabas then Barnabas in Peters person. And we see that notwithstanding the Pharises were the chiefe that blasphemed Christ, in obiecting unto him that hee could not saue himselfe, yet the repentant thiefe hearing both them and his fellow blaspheme, chose rather by a Christian discretion to reproue the Pharises in the rebuke of his fellow, then to rebuke his fellow in reproaching the Pharises: Which boldnesse, as amongst equals, that our English Translations hath noted, by turning κατὰ πρόσωπον to his face, seeing it displeaseth you, you ought to haue confuted it by the nature and signification of the word: For it is like, that if he had meant nothing but a signification of presence, he would haue rather said as before ἐν προσώπῳ then κατὰ πρόσωπον, Howsoever it is, we sought not herein Peters disgrace, more then the Holy Ghost himselfe, by the pen of Paul hath done. If the Greeke words do yeeld the sense which wee haue followed; yet the plaine words of the story, which bring in Paul speaking unto Peter in the second person, do euidently proue that what he spake, he spake not onely in the face and presence of all the Church, but euen to the face and presence of Peters own person. Now where you would proue that the Fathers haue holden this rebuke, to haue proceeded from Paul as from the inferiour against Peter as his superiour, you shamefully abuse your Reader. For the primacy that Cyprian Epist. 71. ad Quintium, giveth unto Peter aboue Paul, he euidently (in the beginning and end of the sentence alleaged by you) doth expound to be that he was first chosen to the Apostleship, and that Paul was a later disciple in regard of Peter: for otherwise both in honour and power, it hath beene shewed out of Cyprian upon Math. 16. 18. that all the Apostles, much more Paul, were equall unto Peter, and euen in the latter end of the sentence, a part whereof you haue alleaged, Cyprian concludeth of this example, that we ought to suffer the check which is given by our brethren and fellowes in office. The next testimonie of Augustine, Epist. 19. first strengtheneth this answer out of Cyprian, considering that the humilitie of Peter is there commended for receiving patiently the rebuke of Paul, which was his Iunior both in age and Apostleship. Secondly, it is manifest against them, in that Augustine having gathered the doctrine of this place of the Galathians, proceedeth further, and sheweth, that not onely Iuniors, as Paul, but inferiours also may resist their superiours for the defence of the Gospell: whereof the particle (Yea) is witnesse, which maketh a plaine separation of this case of the inferiour, reproving the superiour, from Paul reproving Peter.

His other place, Lib. 2, de baptis. c. 1. l. 6. is idlely alledged: for notwithstanding that there was no equall comparison between Peter & Cyprian, whereof the one was a Bishop, & the other an Apostle, yet that can haue no place in Paul, that was an Apostle as well as Peter. Where you say, that Popes may be admonished of their faults, you may be suspected to say so, either for shift of answer, or feare of the people: considering that your brethren the Canonists, with whom you striue whether of you may sing sweetest in the Popes eares, affirme, that whatsoever the Pope doth, no man may presume to say, Sir, why do you so? Your railing and barking against the seruants of God, let the Lord himselfe rebuke you for it.

S. Peter erred in faith, but in conuersation or behauior

Luc. 22. 32.

 See S. Chrysost Theophyl. &c.*

Act. 20. 20

RHEM 9. [11. Reprehensible] The Heretickes hereof againe inferre, that Peter then did erre in faith, and therefore the Popes may faile therein also. To which wee answer, that howsoeuer other Popes may erre in their priuate teachings or writings, whereof wee haue treated before in the Annotation vpon these words, That thy faith fayle not: it is certaine that S. Peter did not here faile in faith, nor erre in doctrine or knowledge, for it was conuersationis non prædicationis vitium, as Tertullian saith, de præscript. num. 7. It was a default in conuersation, life, or regiment, which may be committed of any man, bee he neuer so holy, and not in doctrine. S. Augustine and whosoeuer make most of it, thinke no otherwise of it. But S. Hierome and many other holy fathers deeme it to haue been no fault at all, nor any other thing then S. Paul himselfe did vpon the like occasion: and that this whole combate was a set thing agreed vpon betweene them. It is a schole point much debated betwixt S. Hierome and Augustine ep. 11, 19. apud Aug.

CARTVV. 9. [11. Reprehensible.] You should haue alledged them that say, that S. Peter erred in faith: for we remember none such.

As for your Popes, as they erre in the whole body of religion, so wee haue shewed, upon Luke 22. 31. that euen in those things which you grant heresies, they haue shamefully failed, and that in their publicke Decrees and Councels; your selues also granting here, that they may erre in their priuate teachings, thereby grant they succeed not unto the Apostles spirit, which could no more erre in priuate teachings then in publicke, as it appeareth by Paul, who chalengeth the same truth unto his priuate teachings, as he doth unto his publike.

And where you make it a moot case or as you tearme it, a Schoole poynt, whether Peter faulted at all or no, because certaine of the fathers say, that he faulted not, and that it was a set thing agreed upon betweene them, your prophannesse (whereof your owne conscience, as it seemeth, convinceth you) is out of measure prophane: for thus under the cloke of the iudgement of certain learned men, and the same contraried by other men as learned as they, you make it a Schoole, that is, a doubtfull or difficult poynt in diuinitie, whether the holy Ghost which wrot by the pen of Paul, that

Peter

Peter was worthy of rebuke, be rather to bee charged with a flat lie, then Peter ſhould bee charged with this fall. You likewiſe make it a doubtfull poynt in divinitie, whether Peter and Paul are from Apoſtles changed into players: and the Church of God, where they played theſe parts, from the ſchoole of Chriſt, transferre men into a ſtage. This alſo is made a ſchoole point, whether Peters diſſimulation were well healed by Paules reproofe, who by this iudgment diſſembled as wel as he: that is to ſay, whether one filth is (according to the proverbe) cleanſed by another. And why may not you as well make it a ſchoole poynt, that our Saviour Chriſt ſpake untruely when he foretelleth that Peter ſhould deny him? ſeeing Hillary and Ambroſe defending Peter that he denied not Chriſt, for that he ſaid, hee knew not the man (whom notwithſtanding he knew to be God) is for any thing that we remember, not once confuted (as this is) by any of the ancient Fathers of the Church. Finally, thus ſhall it come to paſſe, that there is nothing ſo certaine in the Holy Scriptures, nor no caſe ſo over-ruled in the Law of God, but ſhall be made a moot caſe, and Schoole poynt, if any godly learned falling aſleepe, ſhall haue a contrary dreame unto it.

CHAP. III.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 1 O Senſles Galatians, who hath ‡ bewitched you, not to obey the truth, bee fore whoſe eies Ieſus Chriſt was preſcribed, being crucified among you.

RHEM. 1. [1. Bewitched you.] For any people or perſon to forſake the faith of their firſt Apoſtles and Couuerſion at the voice of a few nouellaries, ſeemeth to wiſe men a very bewitching and enſles brutiſhnes. Such is the caſe of our poore Country, Germany, and others.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Bewitched you.] Looke the anſwer before: vpon Rom. 6. 17. albeit, being the bare blaſt of their mouth, it is vnworthy of anſwer, as that alſo is before.

Verſe. 7 Know ye therefore that they are ‡ of faith, the ſame are the childeren of Abraham.

RHEM. 2. [7. Of faith, the ſame.] This faith whereby Abraham was iuſtified, and his children the Gentiles be eeuing in Chriſt, implieth all Chriſtian vertues, of which the firſt is faith, the ground and foundation, of all the reſt. and therefore heere and elſe where often named of the Apoſtle.

CARTVV. 2. [7. Of faith, the ſame.] They ſay that the faith whereby Abraham was iuſtified implieth all Chriſtian vertues, whereof faith is the firſt and foundation. Where if by implying they meane conteined, as they needs muſt to haue any ſhift of anſwer, their whole cauſe lieth a bleeding: yet do they neither alleage reaſon, nor ſcripture, nor father. And it is directly contrarie to the words of the Apoſtle, who both in the 6. and 10. verſes oppoſeth faith to the works of the Law, that is, to all Chriſtian vertues; ſeing there is no Chriſtian worke or vertue beſide faith, which the Law commandeth not. And in verſe 12. he ſetteth faith againſt the Law in this very point, that the Law is performed in working onely: which were no oppoſition if hee meant by faith to vnderſtand all good works, aſwell as the beleeuing of Gods promiſes. We haue good cauſe therefore to loue this place ſo much the better as it hath ſtricken the Ieſuites ſo dumbe in the greateſt controuerſie between vs, as euen their common chat, which they are ſo ready in, is here taken from them.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 10 For whoſoeuer are of the workes of the Law, are vnder curſe. For it is written: ‡ Curſed be euery one that abideth not in all things that be written in the booke of the Law to doe them.

RHEM. 3. [10. Curſed be.] By this place the Heretickes would prooue that no man is iuſt truely before God, al being guiltie of damnation and Gods curſe, becauſe they keepe not euery iot of the law, where indeed the Apoſtle meaneth not ſuch as offend venially (as it is plain by the place of Deuteron. whence he reciteth this text) bnt only ſuch as commit great and damnable crimes, and ſo by greeuous and mortall tranſgreſſions wholy break Gods preceps, and thereby incurre the curſe of the Law, from which the ſaid Law could not deliuer them of it ſelfe, nor by any other meanes, but by the faith, and grace of Chriſt Ieſus.

Notwithſtanding venall ſinnes, men are truely iuſt, and may keepe the commandements.

CARTVV. 3. [10. Curſed be.] Let the reader firſt note the care of the holy Ghoſt, to ſhut up all manner of tranſgreſſion of the Law under the curſe of God: firſt that he ſaith, that every one is accurſed: ſecondly, that he ſaith, that hee is accurſed, that obſerueth not all which the Law commandeth. So that unleſſe that their veniall ſinne, which they would exempt out of this curſe, be not contained in the circuit of the Law, Gods curſe muſt needs light upon him that committeth it. Thirdly, in that he is accurſed that continueth not in the obedience thereof, ſo that if he were able to do the whole law all the dayes of his life, and yet faile in the end, yet the curſe of God muſt needes ouertake him. Laſt of all, in that he ſaith, he muſt do them, he declareth, that although he know them all, which no man atayneth unto, and remembreth them alwayes, which is impoſſible, and haue a good deſire to fulfill them, yet unleſſe that he do them perfectly, with all his ſoule, he cannot eſcape the curſe of God. Againſt all which evidence of words, what do theſe brabblers bring? nothing at all, but that the Apoſtle (forſooth) underſtandeth theſe words of great crimes, becauſe Moſes in the place of Deuteron. from whence this text is taken, maketh recitall of ſuch great & damnable crimes; then which, what can be more blockiſhly ſpoken? As if that had been the neereſt way for the Apoſtle to haue driven the Galathians to ſeeke their ſalvation in Chriſt alone, andnot in their workes, to tell them that the Law condemneth them for thoſe things which many heathen men that beleeue not in Chriſt are free from. And indeed there is not one of thoſe crimes which Moſes reckoneth up, but if they be reſtrained unto the bare Law and expreſſe words, as the Rhemiſts do reſtraine them, which may not be performed of any Iew, Turk or Athieſt, and are oftentimes performed of them.

Math. 5. But if under groſſe faults, and greater crimes, Moſes doth there, as in the ten commandements, comprehend the ſmaller, which are of affinitie and allied unto thoſe groſſer ſins that are there mentioned, then not crimes, but ſlips alſo, and the leaſt treading awry from the ſtraight way of Gods Law, muſt needs be ſubiect to the curſe there ſpecified. And if there were no ſuch capacity of thoſe crimes there mentioned, but that they were ſtraitned to the particular and ſpeciall acts there expreſſed, yet ſo deſperate is the Ieſuites cauſe, that that would not relieue it: for after Moſes had made choice of the principalleſt crimes which ſhould be by expreſſe words proclaimed, becauſe it was both inconvenient and impoſſible for the people to ſtand between the two hils, where the curſes were pronounced, untill all the breaches of the Law were reckoned up, he will haue that exerciſe of applying curſes to themſelues, whereby they might make the greater ſpeed to ſeek after Chriſt, to bee ſhut up with this ſentence, where whatſoever either curſe or breach of the Law was not ſpoken of Numb. 15. 22. 23. 24. Deut. c. 4. & 5. before, ſhould be contained. Heereof it is that Moſes commandeth that the children of Iſrael ſhould offer a ſinne offering for the breach of any one of the commandements which the Lord had given them by him, from the firſt day they had received them, forward from age to age, albeit the ſame were committed through ignorance either of the law or of the fact. Which neceſſity of ſacrificing for every breach, and that at any time, doth evidently argue the curſe of the Law to condemnation here ſpoken of, if it had not been removed by the bleſſing of Chriſts death, figured in the death of the beaſt which was ſlaine for a ſin-offering.

And what a brutiſh thing is it, to aſcribe the redemption of the greater crimes unto the death of our Saviour Chriſt, and to take away this vertue from it, that it ſhould not bee the price of our

Math. 18. Math. 15. ſmaller ſins? When if by his death he hath paid the talent and pounds of our great ſinnes, and fulfilled the greateſt letters of the Law for us; he hath much more paid the mites and farthings, and fulfilled the litle tittles, and iods of our ſlips. Which we ſpeake not that we eſteeme them light, but according to their indgement of them: albeit we alſo willingly confeſſe that there are ſtaires in ſin,

Mat. 11. 21 22. whereby ſome men go deeper down into hell then otherſome do, as Catiline more then Camillus, Coraſim and Bethſaide more then Tyre and Sidon. Nay what blaſphemie is it thus to deny that our Saviour Chriſt hath perfected and made a full accompliſhment of our ſalvation, when by this meanes

Heb. 10. 1. Ioh. 19. 30. Pro. 17. 15 Eſay 5. 23. we are left to ſatiſfie for our ſmall ſins? By this it may appeare how abſurd it is, that men which commit veniall ſinne ſhould be iuſt, and fulfill the Law, when the Law ſaith that they are execrable: whereby alſo the Law it ſelfe (which is horrible once to thinke) ſhould become execrable, in pronouncing that man to be iuſtified which is a ſinner.

Verſe. 11. But that in the Law no man is iuſtified with God, it is manifeſt, becauſe The | iuſt liveth by faith.

Not onely faith. RHEM. 4. [11. Liueth by faith.] It is neither the Heretickes ſpeciall preſumption and confidence nor the faith of Diuels, nor faith without works which is dead in himſelfe as S. Iames ſaith that can giue life to the iuſt, for that which is dead, can not bee the cauſe of life, but it is the Catholike faith, as S. Auguſtine writeth, which worketh by charity (according to the Apoſtles own explication of this whole paſſage) by which the iuſt liueth. Li. 3. c. 5. cont. duas ep. Pelag. See the Annotations vpon the ſame words. Rom. 1.

CARTVV. 4. [11 Liveth by faith.] They ſkirmiſh with their own ſhadow in diſputing againſt the dead faith that is ſevered from charitie, and deale leudly by changing the ſtate of the queſtion between us; which is not, whether good workes be neceſſary to be done of a man that ſhall be ſaved, but whether they be the cauſe of our ſalvation. A certaine argument unto the Reader of their inability to maintaine their cauſe, that would ſo gladly change it.

Verſe. 27. For as many of you as are baptized in Chriſt, | haue put on Chriſt.

Baptiſme giueth grace & iuſtification not faith only. RHEM. 5. [27. Haue put on Chriſt.] Here the aduerſaries might haue ſeen, if they were not blinded by contentious ſtriuing againſt Gods Church, that when iuſtification is attributed to faith without mention of good works or other Chriſtian vertues or Sacraments, it is not meant to exclude any of the ſame from the working of iuſtice or ſaluation, for here wee learne that by the Sacrament of Baptiſme alſo we put on Chriſt, which is to put on faith, hope, charitie, and all Chriſtian iuſtice. By the ſame we proue alſo that the Sacraments of the new Law giue grace, for that the receiuers thereof put on Chriſt. And the Aduerſaries euaſion, that it is faith, which worketh in the Sacrament, and not the Sacrament it ſelfe, is plainely falſe: Baptiſme giuing grace and faith it ſelfe to the infant that had none before.

CARTVV. 5. [27 Haue put on Chriſt.] To proue that we are not iuſtified by faith alone, they alleage, that by Baptiſme we put on Chriſt. But if Chriſt were not put on before Baptiſme, it followeth that faith doth not iuſtifie us in part, contrary to their own doctrine: conſidering that until we haue put on Chriſt, we are utterly deſtitute of iuſtice. But the Apoſtle in the verſe next before, doth plainely affirme, that by faith we are the ſons of God: which is as much as to haue put on Chriſt, and to ſtand before God our holy Father, as his ſons through Chriſt, who is by nature the Son of God: And therefore the Sacrament of Baptiſme is nothing elſe but the ſeale of this adoption and ſonſhip which we haue by Chri. as circumciſion was the ſeale of the

Rom. 4. 11. righteouſneſſe of Abraham, and no part of Abrahams iuſtice, as that which he received after that he was made righteous. Therfore where we are ſaid to put on Chriſt by Baptiſm, it is the uſuall phraſe of the Scripture, which giveth that unto the Sacrament which is due unto the thing whereof it is a Sacrament, becauſe that as liuelily as that doth betoken our putting on of Chriſt; ſo truely do we put him on by faith. Wherefore in aſcribing the putting on of Chriſt unto the works of the outward Sacrament, you declare that you haue put off all good and ſound ſenſe of wholeſome doctrine. It appeareth alſo, in that you ſay the Sacraments of the new Teſtament gaue grace, oppoſing them therein unto the Sacraments of the old Teſtament, as though they gaue none, that you are as mad as the Manichees, whom Auguſtine chargeth with doting, for that they eſteemed that the Sacraments of the one Teſtament and the other being changed, the things themſelues were diuers. Or if (as he iudgeth) they thought that the things ſignified by the Sacraments were the ſame that the Sacraments which ſignifie that they are already fulfilled, ſhould not be other then thoſe which ſignified that they ſhould be fulfilled after. And when the neglect or contempt of the Sacraments of the old Teſtament, Circumciſion and the Paſſe-ouer, are puniſhed ſo horribly, with the rooting out of the ſoule that ſhould ſo neglect or contemne them, it muſt needs follow, that in the lawfull and reuerent uſe of them, they then received grace by them.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 3 SO we alſo, when we were little ones, were ſ ſeruing vnder the elementes of the world.

RHEM. 1. [3. Seruing.] There can be no externall worſhip of God nor aſſociation of men in religion, either true or falſe, without the vſe of corporall things or elements. The Heathen ſo vſed the creatures of elements that they ſerued them as their gods. The Iewes of whom the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh, ſerued not the creatures themſelues which they occupied in their ceremonies, but they ſerued the onely true God vnder the elements: that is to ſay, being ſeruilely clogged, yoked, kept occupied and in awe with innumerable fleſhly, groſſe, and cumberſome offices about creatures, The Chriſtians neither ſerue elements, as the one, nor be kept in ſeruile thraldome thereby, as the other, but occupy only a few exceeding eaſie, ſweet, ſeemly and ſignificant, for an agreeable exerciſe both of body and minde. Whereof S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: li.3.c.9. de doct. Chriſt. Some few for many, moſt eaſie to be done, moſt honorable for ſignification, and moſt cleane and pure to bee obſerued and kept, hath our Lord himſelfe and the Apoſtolicall diſcipline deliuered. And lib de ver. relig. c.17. Of the wiſdom of God it ſelfe mans nature being taken whereby we were called into liberty, a few Sacraments moſt holeſom were appointed and inſtituted, which might contein the ſociety of Chriſtian people, that is, of the free multitude vnder one God. And againe cont. Fauſt. lib.19.c.13. The Sacraments are changed, they are made eaſier, fewer, holſomer, happier: the ſame hee hath in the 118. epiſtle c.1. and many other places beſides. By which you may ſee, it is not all one to vſe elements, viſible Sacraments or ceremonies, and to ſeruе them as the Pagans do, or to ſerue vnder them as the Iewes did, wherewith the Heretickes calumniouſly charge the Chriſtians. And as touching the ſmall number, facilitie, efficacie and ſignification, wherein the ſaid holy father putteth the ſpecial difference: who ſeeth not that for ſo many buſie ſacrifices, we haue but one: for Sacraments will neere infinite, but ſeuen: alſo ſo eaſie, ſo full of grace, ſo ſignificant, as can be poſſible, as of euery one in their ſeuerall places is proued.

RHEM. 2. Here let the good Readers take heed of a double deceite vſed by the Aduerſaries about S. Auguſtines place alleadged, firſt, in that they ſay he made but two Sacraments, which is vntrue, for, although treating of the difference between the Iewiſh Sacraments and ours, hee namely giueth example in Baptiſme and the Euchariſt (as ſometimes alſo for example hee nameth but one) yet he hath no word nor ſigne at all that there ſhould bee no more, but contrariwiſe in the foreſaid epiſtle 118. he inſinuateth, that beſides thoſe two, there be other of the ſame ſort in the Scriptures Yea, with water and bread, which be the elements of the two foreſaid Sacraments: hee expreſly nameth oile alſo li.2.cont. lit. Petil.c.104. the element or matter of the Sacrament of confirmation: which in the ſame place he maketh to be a Sacrament as Baptiſme is So doth he affirme of the Sacrament of Orders. li.1.de bapt.c,1. and alſo of Matrimony lib. de bono coniug c 24. of Penance likewiſe, he ſpeaketh as of Baptiſme which he calleth Reconciliation. lib.1.de adult.coning.c.28. Laſtly, by the booke de viſitatione infirmorum in. S. Auguſtine li.2.c.4. by Proſper de pradictionibus, p.2.c.29. S. Innocentius ad Eugubinum to.1. Conc.ep. ad Eugub.c.8. S. Cyrill, lib.2.in Leuiticum, and S. Chriſoſtome lib.3. de Sacerdotio * extreme vnction, is proued to be a Sacrament. It is falſe then that the Heretickes affirme of S. Auguſtine, by whoſe doctrine it is plaine, that though the elemens or Sacraments of the new law bee but few and very few in compariſon of thoſe in the old law, yet there bee no fewer then ſeuen ſpecified by him. Which number of ſeuen the holy Councels of Florence and Trent do expreſly define to haue been inſtituted by Chriſt, againſt theſe late Hereticks. RHEM. 3. The other forgerie of the Aduerſaries concerning the elements or ceremonies, is, that S. Auguſtine (epiſt.119.c.19.) ſhould affirme, that the Church and Chriſtian people in his dayes (whereupon they infer that it is ſo much more now) were ſo loden with obſeruation of vnprofitable ceremonies, that they were in as great ſeruilitie and ſubiection to ſuch things as the Iewes, he ſaith ſo indeed of ſome particular preſumptious inuentions, and vſages of certaine perſons, as that ſome made it a heinous matter to touch the ground with their bare feete within their own Octaues, and ſuch like vanities, whereby ſome ſimple folke might be infected, which this holy Doctor ſpecially miſliked, and wiſheth ſuch things (as they may without ſcandall) to bee taken away. cell, or custome of the Catholike Church, himselfe denieth it in expresse termes in the same place, and in sundry other: where he alloweth all the holy ceremonies done in the ministration of the Sacraments, and elsewhere. Whereby it is cleere, that the Churches most comely orders and significant rites pertaine not to the yoke of the old law, much lesse to the superstition of Gentility, as Hereticks affirme: but to the sweet yoke of Christ and light burden of his law, to order, decency, and instruction of the faithfull, in all liberty, loue, faith, grace, and spirit.

CARTVV. 1. [3. Serving.] The heathen serued the creatures as their gods, but neuer so grosly as the Papists, which both giue godly worshipp vnto diuers creatures, as did the heathen, and worship a peece of bread as the eternall God, which the heathen neuer did: who although they worshipped diuers things vnder the name of gods, which were none, yet did they take them as petty and vnder gods, subiect vnto the highest, whom they cal'ed Iupiter. And as herein they are worse then the heathen, so both in multitude and carnality or grossnesse of ceremonies they farre surpasse the Iewes. For notwithstanding that their seruice and worship of God was by earthly and corporall things, yet were not they as you falsly affirme, carnall Iewes, nor their ceremonies grosse and fleshly, but heauenly, as those which came from heauen: and spirituall, as ordained by the spirit of God. Whereas yours are not only for the matter carnall and grosse, but in regard of voluntary and will worship by them, hellish and diabolicall. And touching your blasphemous and abhominable sacrifice of the Masse, which you oppose vnto the multitude of sacrifices offered vnder the Law, it commeth after to bee spoken of in the proper place. Here remaineth to speake of the number of the sacraments, which although you pretend to be infinitely fewer among you, then amongst the Iewes: yet in the proper nature and signification of a sacrament, which is to seale the Gospell and gracious promises of eternall life, with some outward element in the bodies of those which are in the couenant of grace: you haue (by your profession of seuen) moe then the Iewes had. And in the generall and large taking of the word Sacrament, which is by a visible or corporall thing to set forth some inuisible and spirituall thing, you haue more Sacraments then the Iewes. So that of which side soeuer you turne you, you are in the multitude of sacraments more then Iewish. The truth whereof, as it is euident by your Churchbooke compared with the Law of Moses: so may it easily appeare in that you being oftentimes charged with a greater swarme of ceremonies then the Iewes vsed by prescript of the Law, durst neuer come to the scanning and surueying of them, lest the number of the one and the other being compared, the surplus and remainder of yours should be manifest. Wherein you shift off Augustine Epist ad Ianuarium, which condemneth the multitude of ceremonies in Gods seruice, by saying that he meaneth, that of particular vsages of certaine persons, is shamelesse. So in saying, that the Iewes state was more tolerable then that whereof he complaineth, he alledgeth for reason, that their burdens were by Gods Law, and those the deuices of men: not as you pretend, of particular men. Againe, in that in the same place he opposeth that packe of ceremonies to those which God hath now left, most few and most manifest. But for the number of Sacraments taken in the straighter signification, first we will shew that there are and ought to bee two sacraments onely in the new Testament. For proofe whereof, let it first be obserued, that the Apostle to beat downe the vaine confidence, that the Corinthians had in the vse of the sacraments, which they esteemed to be a buckler good enough to break the poynt of Gods iudgements, threatned for their carnall and licencious abusing of the libertie of the Gospell, the Apostle declareth that the Iewes hauing the sacraments of baptisme & of the Lords Supper as well as they, yet notwithstanding were ouertaken with fearefull iudgements which lighted vpon them: where if the Corinthians had any more then these two sacraments which the Apostle there receiteth, neither had the Apostle broken the whole staffe of their vaine confidence and security, and the Corinthians might haue replied that it followed not that the iudgements of God should fall vpon them as long as they had the vse and ordinary exercise of their Sacraments, seeing they had other sacraments vnder the new Testament, which the Iewes had not vnder the old.

1. Cor. 10. 3 4.

1. Cor. 12. 12. 13.

Againe, to proue that the diuersitie of members, and of their seuerall functions and operations, doth not hinder nor destroy the perfect vnitie of the body of the Church, he alledgeth the two sacraments of Baptisme and the Lords Supper, which by a trope of the part for the whole, he setteth forth in the Cup, as those which perfectly set forth the vnitie of the Church. And if the vnitie of the Church be by these two sacraments perfectly sealed to be the body of Christ, and members one of another, it followeth that there be no more but these.

Vers. 13.

Now that this vnitie is perfectly sealed by these two sacraments, it shall be the easier perceiued, if the reader consider that the Apostle compareth the Church vnto a man, consisting both of one body and of one soule: which comparison being set downe, he confirmeth the vnitie of the body in the Church, by the Sacrament of baptisme, saying, that by the spirit we are baptised into one body, that is, to bee one body: and the vnitie of the Church in one soule by the sacrament of the Lords Supper, saying, that by the spirit (for these words must needs be repeated, as common to both the parts of the sentence) we are made to drinke into one soule, that is, to be one soule. For although the Sacrament of baptisme do as well seale the vnitie of one soule in the Church, as the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: and of the other side, the Sacrament of the Supper doth as well seale the vnitie of one body in the Church, as doth the Sacrament of baptisme, yet the Apostle by a certaine elegancy of speech, ascribeth the one sacrament to the seale of the vnitie of the body, and the other to the seale of the vnitie of the soule of the Church, even as he ascribeth to the death of Christ the remission of our sins, and vnto his resurrection our iustification: when as notwithstanding neither our sins had been done away without his resurrection, nor our iustification could haue been perfect without the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, which was purchased by his death. Neither can the Apostles relying and dwelling vpon the comparison of the Churches vnity in the similitude of a body, hinder that hee should enter into this similitude of setting forth the vnitie of the Church by one soule, considering that hee tooke pleasure to walke more largely in the discourse of that similitude of the body, for that it is more familiar to the senses, and consequently to the vnderstanding, then is that of the soule, whose parts or faculties are neither ſo many, nor ſo well known, as are the members & offices of the body. And as all indifferent iudgement muſt needs yeeld unto this ſenſe and meaning of the Apoſtle, which ſhall weigh the manifeſt expoſition of the words of the Apoſtle, Into one body, and into one ſoule, ſo the like ſpeech of the Apoſtle upon like occaſion otherwhere, is able to ſhut up the mouth of the contentious. For the Apoſtle ſhewing that the Church is one, notwithſtanding the great diverſitie of gifts & offices in the ſame, uſeth the ſame compariſon of one body and one ſoule, as he doth in the place to the Corinthes. In this interpretation we trauell ſo much the more willingly, as it is notable to proue the perfect number of the Sacraments. For the Apoſtle applying the number of the Sacraments unto the number of the comparatiue and parabolicall parts of the Church, placed in the two principall parts of man, his body and his ſoule, it is manifeſt that unleſſe we will ſay, that there are more parts of a man by whom the myſticall perſon of the Church is ſet forth, then two, the body and the ſoule; It followeth, that we can no more ſay, that there are moe ſacraments to ſeale the untie of thoſe parts with, then two, Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord. This number is yet further euident, in that there is no promiſe made unto us of life euerlaſting in Ieſus Chriſt, which is not ſufficiently witneſſed and aſſured unto us by theſe two Sacraments of Baptiſme and of the Lords Supper. For the ſumme of all the promiſes of God in Chriſt are called unto theſe two heads, that for his ſake we are receiued into the fauour and houſhold care of God: and that being once receiued, we ſhall be continued in the ſame for euermore. The former whereof being ſealed by Baptiſme, and the later by the Lords Supper, it muſt needs be, that if there were any other ſacrament, it ſhould be a ſacrament without a promiſe, and a ſeale without a deed of gift, or to a blanke: which ſeeing it is abſurd, it followeth, that a great number of ſacraments which begetteth this abſurditie, muſt likewiſe be abſurd. Fourthly, as the Church is compared to a man, ſo the meanes to preſerue the Church to life euerlaſting, is compared with the meanes wherewith a man is upholden in this life. Whereupon, foraſmuch as the Apoſtle ſaith, that having meate and drinke, and couering in this life, we haue that which is fully ſufficient, and wherewith we ought to be content: it followeth, that as Chriſt is our ſufficient clothing and food to eternall life, ſo the ſacrament of Baptiſme being a ſeale of clothing, and the ſacrament of the Lords Supper a pledge of feeding to eternall life, are a competent number of ſacraments to eſtabliſh and aſſure our faith in the hope of eternall life. Wherefore to make moe ſacraments then theſe, is to reproach the Church with diſcontentment of thoſe Sacraments wherewith it is and ought to be ſufficiently contented.

1. Tim. 6. 8.

Gal. 3. 27. 1. Cor. 10. 3. 4.

And thus much for the prooſe of the iuſt number of Sacraments out of the Scripture: which iudgement the ancient Writers haue from time to time followed, as Iuſtine, Irenæus, Tertullian, Ambroſe, who neither in their Treatiſes that they wholly ſet apart to the laying forth of the doctrine of the Sacraments, nor in thoſe Treatiſes wherein upon occaſion they make mention of the Sacraments of the Church, ſpecifie any other then either Baptiſme or the Lords Supper. And if any of them doth otherwiſe at any time, as [a] Ambroſe, which termeth the waſhing of feete before the Communion, and [b] Tertullian Chriſme and laying on of hands to be Sacraments, the ſame is to no aduantage of the aduerſaries which allow not of Ambroſes Sacrament, and meane another annointing and impoſition of handes then Tertullian, who annexeth both theſe ceremonies to Baptiſme, and doth not make them Sacraments apart, as they do. And as theſe acknowledge none of theſe ſeuen Sacraments, but onely Baptiſme and the Lords Supper, ſo Cyprian in ſaying that men are then altogether ſanctified and may be the ſonnes of God, when they be borne by both the Sacraments, doth preciſely determine of the number of Sacraments to be but two. Hereof alſo we haue the plaine and manifeſt teſtimonie of Auguſtine, who ſpeaking of Baptiſme and the Supper, ſaith, theſe are the two Sacraments of the Church, and not as the Ieſuites would falſly ſurmiſe, theſe are two of the Sacraments of the Church. And in another place he affirmeth, that God would haue Religion to be free, of moſt few, and moſt manifeſt ceremonies of diuine ſeruice. Laſt of all, becauſe the teſtimonies of the aduerſaries are ſtrong againſt themſelues, it is to be noted, that their own and principall Doctors, ouercome with the euidence of truth in this point, haue yeelded themſelues unto it: for *one of them ſaith, that two principall Sacraments, onely Baptiſme and the Euchariſt were inſtituted by the Lord himſelfe: And ‡ another, that in the Goſpell the two Sacraments, meaning Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, are onely manifeſtly diuerced.

Now to come unto the Popiſh number of ſeuen Sacraments: let the Reader firſt obſerue that the Ieſuites cannot finde one word in the Scripture to iuſtifie this number of ſeuen Sacraments by. And it is no marvell, if they which dreame of another Word, and of other promiſes then thoſe which are contained in the holy Scriptures, phanſie likewiſe other Sacraments then thoſe which are found in that compaſſe: Neither ought it to be ſtrange, that their doctrine being ſuch as leaueth one in a doubtfull mammering of his ſalvation, they haue attempted the multiplication of ſeales: the falſifying whereof doth euidently appeare, in that having more then tripled the number of the true ſeales, yet as if they had no ſeale at all, they remaine doubtfull of the poſſeſſion of eternall life, whereunto they make claime, and pretend title. This onely haue they wiſely done, that foraſmuch as their Church is a Stage, their Religion an Interlude, their Prieſts players; as they haue multiplyed the number of their Stages, ſo thus they multiply their pagins and parts, that in the variety both of the players and of their parts, the Comedies which they ſet forth might pleaſe the people: for that they pleaſe not the Lord it is manifeſt, that never a one of the fiue which they haue added unto the two lawfull Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Lords Supper are ſeales of the promiſed redemption which we haue in Chriſt; never a one a ſeale of our vnion, firſt with Chriſt, and then of one of us with another; never a one a ſeale either of our apparell or nouriſhment needfull to preſerue us to eternall life; never a one which hath both promiſe of life, and the outward element adioyned thereunto out of the Word: all which things are neceſſarily required in the nature of that kind of ſacrament which is properly called a Sacrament, whereof Baptiſme and the Lords ſupper are examples. For although repentance haue a promiſe of life, when it is true and unfayned, yet outward rite ordained by the word, beſide the Sacrament of Baptiſme, once for all receiued, it hath none:

The impoſition of hands vſed in abſolution, having not for one finger thereof any warrant from the Word; and the ordination of Miniſters, albeit it haue the outward rite of laying on of hands, yet hath it properly no promiſe of life everlaſting tyed vnto it, but onely of aſſiſtance of gifts meete for the work of that Miniſtery which is committed vnto the perſon ordained. And as every of theſe reaſons do as an axe with one ſtroke fell down all theſe trees of the fiue invented Sacraments, ſo againſt Matrimony and Order there are other inſtruments, which being laid vnto their rootes will not ſuffer them to grow in the paradice of the Lords Church vnder the title, and in account of Sacraments. As that they are not proper vnto the times of the new Teſtament, but common with vs vnto thoſe which lived before and vnder the Law; that they are not common to all the faithfull to be received of them at thoſe times, wherein for their age, health and liberty, yea and ſometimes for gifts able to enter into them, they be fit for them. Beſide that, Matrimony hath ſpeciall diſabilities to be endenized in this ſociety and common-wealth of Sacraments, as that which is among the Infidels ſhut out from all communication of Chriſt, and therefore of Sacsaments, one of the pipes to convey that communion by? as that alſo which was before the fall, when there being no need of redemption, there could be no need of the promiſes thereof, and conſequently no vſe of Sacrament to ſeale them. And therefore their own Biſhop Durand proveth, that in the proper ſignification of a Sacrament Marriage cannot be received for one.

Acts 6.6. 14.23. 2 Tim.1.6

Durand. d. 5. in 4. Sent. diſt. 26. queſt. 3.

Touching Confirmation, when there was an vſe of it in the Apoſtles times, who by laying on of hands gaue gifts to beleeuers, yet was it not then a Sacrament, ſeeing neither it was, nor poſſible could be beſtowed on all that beleeved through their Miniſtery, but vpon thoſe onely on whom (being preſent) they laid hands: which Auguſtine ſo little eſteemed to haue the value of a Sacrament in proper ſignification, that he ſaith, that Confirmation is nothing elſe but prayer ouer a man. Where the Popiſh dotage is notable, who notwithſtanding they labour to make vp their number of ſeuen by this: yet by changing the impoſition of hands vſed by the Apoſtles, into croſſing and chriſme made of oyle and balme, deviſed of their own braine, haue loſt the beſt advantage they had to maintaine the ſeate of it among the Sacraments: from the which alſo it is caſt down by their own Bonaventure, and by another, who confeſſed it to be inſtituted neither of Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles, but of a Councell. But hereof let the Reader look more before vpon Acts 8. as of extreme ointment more particular mention commeth after.

Now that the Scripture will not acquaint vs with this number of ſeuen ſacraments, meanes is made to the ancient fathers, that vpon ſome good report of theirs, if they cannot come in at the Church doore, they might yet creepe in at ſome window thereof. Wherein firſt, it is to be obſerued that there is none alleaged for defence of them, which lived not more then 400. years after Chriſt: ſo that hereby appeareth that this number of ſeuen had no vſe in the firſt foure ages and generations of the Church. Secondly it muſt be noted, that there is neuer a one of all the teſtimonies (the late Conuenticles of Florence and Trent excepted,) whoſe credit is allowable but in that court where one theeſe ſhal be receiued to iuſtifie another) which avoweth this number of ſeuen ſacraments. And one of the fathers, eſpecially Auguſtine, they might aſwell haue proued ſeuentie times ſeuen, as the number which they endeuour. For he ſomewhere defineth a ſacrament to bee nothing elſe [a] but an holy ſigne. In which ſignification hee inſinuateth the [b] croſſe to be a ſacrament: alſo [c] Eaſter and the Lords dayes, which hee alſo reckoneth vp with baptiſme and the Lords ſupper, leſt the Ieſuites thinke that they haue any aduantage in that hee ſometime ioyneth the true ſacraments with theſe in queſtion: alſo he calleth the Sacraments the [d] catechiſing of the Novices in the faith, the making of Prayers and ſinging of Pſalmes. Item, a kinde of [e] bread, which being hallowed was given inſtead of the Lords Supper, to thoſe that were not yet ſufficiently catechiſed to the receiving of baptiſme. And there is never an one of thoſe places alledged out of Auguſtine, where in the truth of this anſwer is not evident with ſome other advantage againſt them: the fruit of diſtinguiſhing them were worth the labour of reading them. Not to ſpeake neither of the falſe allegation of him to proue the Sacrament of Penance, where there is not a ſyllable ſounding that way: nor yet of the baſtard Auguſtine Serm. 215. de temp. without the which your extreame unction had been in great extremitie.

CARTVV. 4. [9 Weake and pore.] You might haue ſaid, weake and beggerly, as wee haue tranſlated, or to come neerer to the meaning of the Apoſtle, ſtrengthleſſe and beggerly, as the nature of the Greeke words doth require. VVhat then? Do wee ſhake hands with you, which heretically hold that the ſacraments of the old Teſtament gaue no grace? God forbid: for ſo we ſhould contrary the Apoſtle, who affirmeth that they ate and dranke of the ſame ſpirituall meate and drinke that wee doe. And wee might aſwell ſay, that the word preached vnto them, which was one of the conduits whereby the grace of God was communicated, had no grace giuen withall, as to ſay, that with the ſacraments grace was not giuen.

But thus wee anſwer, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here (as hee often doth other where) of the ceremonies of the law, as they were vſed of the Galatians, who both after they had receiued the ſpirit of the Goſpel without any mixture of them, made a hochpotch of them & the Goſpel together, and not of the ceremonies as they were vnder the law lawfully vſed when they were in ſome good meaſure both mighty and rich to strengthen and make wealthy to saluation those which so vsed them. Notwithstanding it must withall bee noted, that euen vnder the Law there were certane ceremonies and outward elements which had a base naked signification of some holy thing, which was shadowed out by them: of which which sort was the obseruation of dayes and times there mentioned. By which albeit God gaue grace to some sufficient vnderstanding of the mysteries which they represented: yet did they neither giue nor offer the grace which is necessarily ioyned with saluation, whereof they had no promises annexed. And of these kind of ceremonies or sacraments of the Law it is true which is said, that the sacramennts of the old Law gaue no grace. But there were other which beside the signification were also vessels to passe the grace of God to eternall life, whereof they had the promises.

[10. You obserue dayes] That which S. Paul speaketh against the Idolatricall obseruation of dayes, monethes, and times, dedicated by the Heathen to their false gods, and to wicked men or spirits, as to Iupiter, Mercy, Ianus, Iuno, Diana, and such like, or against the superstitious differences of dayes, fatall, fortunate or dismall, and other obseruations of times of good lucke or ill lucke in mans actions, gathered either by particular fansie, or popular obseruation, or curious and vnlawfull Artes, or (lastly) of the Iudaicall festiuities that were then ended and abrogated, vnto which notwithstanding certaine Christian Iewes would haue reduced the Galatians against the Apostles doctrine: all that (I say) doe the Heretickess of our time falsely and deceitfully interpretate against the Christian holy dayes: and the sanctification and necessary keeping of the same, Which is not onely contrary to the Fathers exposition, but against the very Scriptures, and the practise of the Apostles and the whole Church. Aug. cont. Adimant c. 16. Ep. 118. c. 7. Hier. in hunc locum. In the Apocalips, c. 1. there is plaine mention of the Sunday, that is, our Lords day (Dominicus dies) vnto which the Iewes Sabboth was altered, their Pasche into our Easter, their Pentecost into our Whitsontide: which were ordained and obserued of the Apostles themselues. And the antiquitie of the feasts of Christs Natiuitie, Epiphanie, and Ascension is such, that they can bee referred to no other origine: but the Apostles institution: who as S. Clement testifieth l. 8. c. 6. Ap. Apost. c. 39. gaue order for celebrating their sellow Apostles, S. Steuens, and other Martyrs dayes after their death: and much more no doubt did they giue order for Christs festiuities. According to which the Church hath kept not onely his, but S. Steuens and the B. Innocents, euen on the same dayes they be now solemnely kept, and his B. Mothers, and other Saincts, (as the Aduersaries themselues confesse) aboue 1300. yeares as appeareth in the barbarous combates between Westphalus the Lutheran, and Caluin, and by the writings betwixt the Puritans and Protestants.

Other holy dayes of Saincts Festiuities of our B. Lady.

For which purpose see also how old the holyday of S. Polycarpe is in Eusebius l. b. 4. c. 14. of the * Assumption of our Lady or her dormition in S. Athanasius, S. Augustine, S. Hieromes, S. Damas. and both of that feast and of her Natiuitie in S. Bernard, who professeth hee receiued them of the Church, and that they ought to be most solemnely kept, epist. 174. Wherein wee cannot but wonder at the new Church of England, that (though against the pure Caluinists will and doctrine) keepe other Saincts and Apostles dayes of their death, and yet haue abolished this special feast of our Ladies departure which they might keepe, though they beleeued nor her Assumption in body (whereof yet S. Denys giueth so great testimony) being assured she is departed at the least, except they either hate her or thinke her worthy of lesse remembrance then any other Saincte, her selfe prophecying the contrary of all Catholike generations, that should blesse her. And indeed the Assumption is her proper day, as also the feast of her Natiuitie: the other of the Purification and Annunciation which they keepe in England, being no so peculiar to her, but belonging rather to Christs Presentations in the Temple, and his Conception. To conclude, wee may see in S. Cyprian, p. 34. Origen. hom. 3. in diuers. Tertullian de cor mil. S. Gregory Nazianzene De more pauperum. the Councell of Gangres, yea and in the councell of Nice it selfe giuing order for Easter and the certaine celebrating thereof, that Christian festiuities be holy, ancient, and to be obserued on prescript dayes and times, and that this is not Iudaicall obseruation of dayes, as Arius taught, for which he was condemned of heresie, as S. Epiphanius witnesseth But of holy dayes S. Augustine sheweth both the reason & his liking, in these memorable words. First for the feasts belonging to our Lord, thus: VVee dedicate and consecrate the memorie of Gods benefites with solemnities, feasts, and certaine appointed dayes, least by tract of times there might creepe in ingratefull and vnkind oblivion. Of the festiuities of Martyrs, thus: Christian people celebrate the memories of Martyrs with religious solemnitie both to mone themselues to imitation of them, and that they may be partakers of their merites, and be holpen with their prayers, Cent. Faust. lib 20. c. 21. And of all Saincts dayes, thus: Keepe ye and celebrate with sobriety the Natiuities of Saincts, that we may imitate them which haue gone before vs, and they may reioyce of vs which pray for vs. In Psal. 88. Conc. 2. in fine.

Prescript fasting dayes.

And as is said of prescript dayes of feasts, so the like is to be said of fasts, which elsewhere we haue shewed to be of the Apostles ordinance. And so also of the Ecclesiasticall diuision of the yeere into Aduent, Septuagesme, &c. the week into so many Feries, the day into Houres of prayers, as the Prime, the Third, the Sixth, the None, &c. Wherof see * S. Cyprian, who deriueth these things by the Scriptures from the Apostles also, and counteth these things which the wicked Heretickes reproue, to be full of mystery. Like vnto this also is it, that the holy Scriptures were so disposed of, and deuided, that certain peeces (as is alwayes obserued vntill this day) should be read at one time, and other at other times and seasons, throughout the yeare, according to the diuersities of our Lords actions and benefites, or the Saincts stories then recorded. Which the Puritane Caluinists also condemne of superstition desiring to bring in hellish horror and all disorder. See conc. Carthag. 3. cap. 47. & pag. 288. of this booke.

CARTVV. 5. [10. You obserue dayes.] If Paul condemne the Galathians for obseruing the feasts which God himselfe instituted, & that for his own honour onely, and not for the honour of any creature:

creatnre: the Papists are much more laid open to this condemnation, which presse obseruations of feasts of mens deuising, and to the honour of men. Neither can it helpe them that they obserue them not as the Iewes did vnto whom they were shadowes of things to come, seeing the Galatians beleeuing that Christ was alreadie come, could not keepe them as figures of his comming, but rather as memorials that hee was alreadie come. Therefore the Apostles charge against them, standing especiallie in this, that they placed a religion and worship of God in these dayes, whereunto they necessarilie tied themselues; it followeth that the Papists, which haue the same opinion, and necessitie that they had, lie vnder the same burden of condemnation that they did. And herein it is euident that the Popish yoke is not onely much more heauie in regard of a greater clogg of more feasts then the Iewes had, but that these elements wherewith their Synagogue is ushered and trained vp, not vnto Christ but vnto Antichrist, are grosser, meere fleshlie and carnall, then were the Iewes pedagogie in this behalfe, For the Iewes, howsoeuer they were then as it were in their infancie or childehood, were yet never directed to the honour of God in their solemne feasts by the meanes of holding solemne dayes vnto the honour of Saincts: whereas the best defence, that the Papists haue for Saincts feasts, is, that they are rudiments whereby they are led the more readily to the worship of God. Against this it is so farre that the religious obseruation of the Lords day, maketh any thing that it maketh much for it: for that day being no ceremony, and being before there was vse of any ceremony of our redemption, remaineth by commandement of the morall law, cõmanding a seuenth day to be religiously obserued. Which seuenth day the Apostles hauing declared to be the Lords day, without mention of any more holy dayes: haue thereby defined the ordinary and perpetuall time which the fourth commandement now requireth at our hands. For albeit the Church might vpon occasion ordaine holy dayes, yet neither can it make them perpetuall Lawes, nor for the time of their endurance, binde the conscience with so strait a bond of obedience as it is tied to in the obseruation of the Lords day: the dayes of fast onely excepted, which be proylaimers at such times, and and vpon such causes as the Scripture doth set forth: wherein because the Church commanded nothing but that which God commandeth, the religious obseruation of them falleth vnto the obedience of the fourth commandement aswell as the seuenth day it selfe. As for other holy dayes the Apostles knew not. And that they are not of the Apostles as the Papists surmise, appeareth by the indgement of the elder writers which fauour them. For some affirme that they came by the constitution of wise men: others, by customarie tradition: others affirme expressely, that neither Christ nor his Apostles did comand these feasts to be obserued: And that it was the mark which the Apostles aymed at, not to make any law of feast daies: and that they which had receiued these of others made a Law of them to their posterity. Indeed S. Augustine floteth between two sentences, whether they came from the Apostles, or from generall Councels. But it is euident by the decreee of the Nicene Councell, that things in that, & before, were threaped upon the Apostles, which they never gaue allowance of. For deciding the controuersie of the feast of Easter, between the East and West Churches, whereof the one alledged the ordinance of Iohn, the other of Peter and Paul, they ordained that the East Churches, because they were fewer, should yeeld in conformitie unto the West: which they would never haue done, if either of these ordinances had been of the Apostles. For they were not ignorant but the decree of Iohn alone (if any had been) was as firme as that of Paul and Peter both, and if they had esteemed that the manner of the Easter feast of the Westerne Churches had had ground of the Apostles, they would never haue passed by that so grounded and forcible a reason, which hath more pith and sap in it then all the rest of the reasons which are by them alledged. And if the Apostles were not fathers of the feasts which are dedicated unto Christ himselfe, and to his most saving and glorious actions, much lesse can they be thought to haue begotten such base feasts as those are for which the Papists striue. And notwithstanding that the Iesuits alledge testimonies for them out of ancient Writers, yet neither are they of the eldest worke, neither can the age of the feasts helpe to iustifie them, when their cradle and first birth is infamous, as it must needes be, whose pedigree cannot be fetched, nor by any sufficient matter of record deducted from the Apostles. And Denys testimony set apart, which hath been shewed (upon Acts 1.) to be a counterfeit, shew us one of your Saints feasts of that antiquity that the festivall solemnization of the 50. dayes between Easter & Whitsontide was; which being thrown down from that stately place of festivall estimation, notwithstanding that they were dedicated to the honour of Christ himselfe: it ought not to be strange if your petty feasts be unfeasted, and your prophane holy dayes of idle vacation, converted into dayes of profitable and needfull labours.

RHEM. 7. [24. By an allegory] Here we learne that the holy, Scriptures haue beside the litterall sense, a deeper spirituall and more principall meaning: which is not onely to be taken of the holy words, but of the very facts and persons reported: both the speaches and the action being significatiue ouer and aboue the letter. Which pregnancie of manifold senses if S. Paul had not signified himselfe in certaine places, the Heretickes had been lesse wicked and presumptuous in condemning the holy fathers allegoricall expositions almost wholy: who now shew, themselues to bee meere brutish and carnall men, hauing no sense nor feeling of the profunditie of the Scriptures which out holy fathers the Doctors of Gods Church saw.

The scriptures haue an allegoricall sence beside the literall.

CARTVV. 4. [24. By an allegory.] Can any man be so senseleslesse, as not to see your brutishnesse? First. for that you cannot see the difference of the depth which the Apostles plough was able to enter for discovery of that which was hidden in the ground of the Scripture, aboue that the plough of any of the Fathers is able to cut into. And what is he this day, or sithence the Apostles, which could haue found out this mystical sence, if he had not been helped by this heifer of Pauls interpretation? Secondly, it is to be observed, that the Apostle doth not bring this allegory, whose consequence hath more light of his Apostolicall authority, then of the words of the story, as they appeare to us,

us, untill he had firſt made good the cauſe in hand by manifold arguments: the traces and ſeats whereof were evident in the apparant diduction of the ſcriptures. Which thing if it were now performed, we could the eaſier beare the flaſhineſſe and unſavourineſſe of the allegories which you commend, and without the which your cauſe is uncovered. Thirdly, albeit there were an allegorie ſhut up in two ſuch perſons of chiefe antiquitie in their ſeverall poſteritles of feined and unfained religion, as theſe were, yet to ſeeke for the ſame harueſt in the ſeed of other names or perſons which are not of that marke, is a point of ſmall husbandry in divinity. Therefore Irenæus ſaith, that the Scriptures are open and without ambiguitie, and which may be heard of all alike. And ſheweth, that if there be any parabolicall they muſt be expounded by the ſayings that are manifeſt in the Scriptures. Laſt of all, the thick and threfold uſe, of allegories either in your Fathers, or in your ſelues, is fooliſhly maintained by one onely allegory once uſed in all the writings of the Apoſtles. Irenæus lib. 2 adverſ. hæreſ. Valent. c. 46 Ibid. c. 47.

Verſe. 31 Therefore brethren we are not the childeren of the bond-woman, but of the free: by the freedome | wherewith Chriſt hath made vs free.

RHEM. 8. [31. Freedome.] Hee meaneth the liberty and diſcharge from the old ceremonies, ſacraments, and the whole bondage of the Law, and from the ſeruitude of ſinne, and the Deuill, to ſuch as obey him: but not liberty to do what euery man liſt, or to be vnder no obedience of ſpirituall or temporall lawes and gouernours: not a licence neuer to pray, faſt, keepe holy day, or workeday, but when and how it ſeemeth beſt to euery phantaſie. Such a diſſolute licentious ſtate is far from the true liberty which Chriſt purchaſed for vs. True Chriſtian libertie.

RHEM. 1. ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 6 For in Chriſt Ieſus * neither circumciſion auaileth ought, nor prepuce: but | faith that worketh by charitie.

RHEM. 3. [6. Faith,] This is the faith working by charitie, which S. Paul meaneth elſe where, when he ſaith that faith doth iuſtifie. And note well that by theſe termes, circumciſion and prepuce not auailable to iuſtification, it is plaine that in other places hee meaneth the works of Circumciſion and Prepuces (that is, of the Iewes and the Gentiles) without faith, which auaile not, but faith working by charitie: as who ſhould ſay, faith and good workes, not workes without faith. Iuſtification of faith only, diſproued by conſtruce of Scriptures.

Againe note heere, that if the Proteſtants would pretend conference of places to bee the beſt or onely way to explicate hard ſpeaches of holy Scriptures, had followed but their own rule, this one text would haue interpreted and cleared unto them all other whereby iuſtice and ſaluation might ſeeme to be attributed to faith alone: the Apoſtle here ſo expreſſly ſetting down the faith which hee commendeth ſo much before, not to bee a one but with charitie: not to bee idle, but to bee working by Charitie: as S. Auguſtine noteth, de fid & op. c 14. Further the good reader muſt obſerue, that whereas the Proteſtants ſome of them confeſſe, that Charitie, and good workes bee ioyned and requiſite alſo, and that they exclude them not, but commend them highly, yet ſo that the ſaid Charitie or good workes are no part of our iuſtice or any cauſe of iuſtification, but as fruites and effects of faith onely, which they ſay doth all, yea though the other bee preſent: this falſe gloſſe alſo is reproued euidently by this place, which teach vs cleane contrarie: to witte, that faith hath her whole actiuitie and operation toward iuſtice and ſaluation, of charitie, and not contrariwiſe, without which it cannot haue any act meritorious, or agreeable to God for our ſaluation, for which cauſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, li. 15. de Trin. c. 18. Fidem non facit vtilem niſi charitas, nothing maketh faith profitable but charitie. But the Heretickes anſwer that where the Apoſtle ſaith, faith worketh by Charitie: hee maketh charitie to bee the inſtrument onely of faith in well working, and therefore the inferiour cauſe at the leaſt. but this alſo is eaſilie refuted by the Apoſtles plaine teſtimonie, affirming that charitie is the greater vertue, and that if a man had all faith, and lacked charitie, hee were worth nothing. And againe that Charitie is the perfection and accompliſhment of the Law (as faith is not) which cannot agree to the inſtrumentall or inferiour cauſe. And therefore when it is ſaid that faith worketh by charitie, it is not as by an inſtrument, but as the body worketh by the ſoule, the matter by the forme, without which they haue no actiuitie. Whereupon the ſchooles call Charitie, the forme or life of faith, that How the proteſtants admit charity and good workes to iuſtification. Charitie is more principal then faith in iuſtification. 1. Cor. 13. Rom. 13. 1. Tim. 1. How faith worketh by charitie.

is to say, the force: actiuitie, and operatiue qualitie thereof, in respect of merite and iustice. Which S. Iames doth plainely insinuate, when hee maketh faith without Charitie, to be as a dead corps without soule or life, and therefore without profitable operation, c.2.v.26.

CARTVV.3. [6 Faith.] To assault the Iustification by faith alone upon her own ground where she standeth with divers arguments, as it were with armed men to keep her iust possession, is a shameleſse force: which that it may the better appeare let the Reader first obserue, that *ver.*2. the Apostle affirmeth, that whosoever is circumcised Christ profiteth him nothing, which he saith not in regard of the bare ceremony of cutting off the fore-skin, which himselfe for support of the weak Iewes
Act.16.3. used towards Timothy, but onely for that they had an opinion that it iustified: For those Iewes which thought circumcision a work yet commanded of God in the Law, as well as not to kill, the Apostle
Rom.14.1. receiveth as weak brethren, to whom the death of Christ was profitable. Wherefore Christ being unprofitable unto the circumcised in that regard, that iustice was sought in circumcision as in a work of the Law, it followeth that all the other workes of the Law whereby iustice is sought are incompatible with the merite of Christ. Secondly, *ver.*4. he saith, that they are fallen from grace which are iustified by the Law. Against which, their allegation, that he meaneth the workes of the Law done without faith, hath beene before confuted, and is heere evidently knocked on the head, when as the Apostle speaketh of the Galathians which were the Church of God, and had beleeved, and in the next verse rekoneth himselfe in that number, which looked for the hope, or hoped reward of iustice, not by the workes of the Law, but by faith. Albeit the Iesuites ignorance is heere further betrayed, in that they cõpare Circumcision mentioned here, with the Circumcision spoken of by the Apostles in other places. For although it no waies iustified, neither commanded, nor in wil-worship,
Rom. 2. & 3. & 4. yet in the Epistle to the Romanes he speaketh of it, as of a laudable and commanded work and holy Sacrament of the Law, though not iustifying: where he speaketh of it, as of that which was abrogated by Christ, and therefore of no profite at all, declaring that in Christ Iesus circumcision availeth no more then uncircumcision. Thirdly, let the Reader obserue, that in the fifth verse, opposing the true iustification by the Spirit unto that counterfeit iustification which the Galathians sought in the flesh of circumcision, least he should be thought to stretch out the iustification unto good works, which are the gifts and fruites of the Spirit, he interpreteth what gift of the Spirit he meaneth in the next words, saying, by faith. Last of all, in the sixth verse, least any should abuse this holy doctrine to unbrideled licentiousnesse of life, he marketh out the iustifying faith, to be no bare knowledge of God, or dead faith, such as is in the devils, but to be liuely, fruitfull, and working by charity. Wherein first, that they alleage out of *Augustine de fide & operib. c.*14. that faith is not alone but worketh by charitie, is vainely and idlely cited, as that which they are in the next words constrained to confesse to be taught and avowed of us; although in saying that some of us confesse this, their false tongue could not but slanderously surmise that there are other some of us which deny it. Secondly, unto our answer, that charity, although it be necessarily ioyned unto faith, yet iustifieth not, their reply, that it is evidently reproved by this place, which teacheth that faith hath her whole activity and operation to salvation of charity, is evidently brutish. For first Act.15.9. of all, thereby they set Peter against Paul, which saith, that God by faith purgeth the hearts of men, and not by charity, as they say. Secondly, they make Paul against himselfe, which maketh charity
1.Tim.1.5. an effect proceeding from faith: so that to say, that faith hath her activitie of charitie, is all one as if they should say, the efficient cause hath activitie and operation of her effect, a worthy principle for the Iesuites demonstrations.

And if the Reader will yet further see the dizzie spirit of these Iesuites, let him consider it in these conclusions, which are of the same stamp with theirs: The soule speaketh by the mouth, therefore the soule hath all her activity of the mouth: The will worketh by the affections, therefore the will hath all her activity from the affections. Againe, the soule speaketh by the mouth, therefore the soule alone understandeth not but the mouth also; the will worketh by the affections, therefore the will chooseth not onely, but the affections also. For even such is their Logick, when of this, that faith worketh by charity, they will conclude, that faith onely iustifieth not.

These things, although they be more then sufficient to convince them of a slumbring and drowsie spirit, yet that which followeth doth manifestly declare that the Lord hath stricken them with a spirit of madnesse, whereby they haue lost the common iudgement of the baseſt and grosseſt sort of people: For unto us, pressing the words of the Apostle, that faith worketh by charity, whereby charity is made an inferiour cause, or instrument for faith to work by, they answer, that faith worketh by charity, as the bodie worketh by the soule, and the matter by the forme: Which are speeches of that absurdity, that no tongue, either learned or unlearned, holy or prophane, is acquainted with. The Shop it selfe (much more the Schoole) knoweth that the soule worketh by the body, and not the bodie by the soule; that the body is an instrument for the soule to worke by, and not the soule an instrument for the body to work by. And the least smatterer in naturall Philosophy
Look Aristes Physic. knoweth, that the forme worketh in the matter, and not the matter either in, or by the forme, seeing the matter of every thing is passiue onely, and not actiue, suffering of the forme, and not working either in it, or by it. And where they make charity the forme of faith, thereby making both faith and charity but one vertue, consisting of two parts, they are evidently confuted by the RHEM. 1. [9, Reape not.] The workes of mercie bee the seed of life euerlasting, and the proper cause thereof, and not faith onely.

CARTVV. 1. [9. Reape not.] Look the answer before vpon 2 Cor. 9. 9 Beside that when as we reape spirituall things of the ministers of the Gospell, we reape them not as of the causes, but as of the meanes which God hath appointed for us to come vnto them: and wee reape them not by desert, not so much as of the Ministers, much lesse of the Lord: so when we reape life everlasting of the workes of righteousnesse, we reape it not as of the causes, but as of the meanes and wayes which God hath ordained that we should walke by to life everlasting, not by desert, but by the grace of God in Iesus Christ. *1. Ver. 14 But ‡ God forbid that I should glorie, saving in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ: by whom the world is crucified to me, and I to the world.

RHEM. 2. [14. God forbid.] Christ (saith S. Expos. in Euang. Io. tract. 43.

CARTVV. 2. [14. God forbid.] To glory in the crosse of Christ, is to glory in his sufferings especially vpon the crosse: and not in the woodden crosse or tree whereon he suffered. And therefore the fastening of the Crosse, that is to say, of two lines one overthwart another upon the forehead, was not drawne from the meaning of the Apostle, but from the superstitious use and custome of the Church in Augustines time (the ground whereof looke before) without the which custome this place of the Apostle would haue as soone yeelded a crosse any where, yea in the heele as well as in the head: considering that the communication of the true Crosse of Christ with us, belongeth unto the whole body and soule also.

And if hee would haue had more outward signes of his crosse then Baptisme and his Supper, he would haue given us example thereof in his owne person as well as he did in these. And if it were a worke commanded of God as it it is not, yet were it not to be gloried in. And therefore it is not the crosse of Christ whereof mention is made in this place: but rather a fleshly seruice which is here expressly forbidden to be gloried in. Math. 20. & 26. Rom. 4. 2. *1. Verse. 15 For in Christ Iesus neither circumcision auialeth ought, nor prepuce, but a new creature.

RHEM. 5. [15. A new creature.] Note well that the Apostle calleth that here a new creature which in the last chapter hee termed, faith working by charitie, and (1. Cor. 7. 19.) the observation of the commandements of God. Whereby wee may learne that vnder the name of faith is conteined the whole Iustice an inherent qualitie in vs.

whole reformation of our ſoules and our new creation in good workes, and alſo that Chriſtian iuſtice is a very qualitie, condition and ſtate of vertue and grace reſident in vs, and not a phantaſticall apprehenſion of Chriſts iuſtice onely imputed to vs. Laſtly, that the faith which iuſtifieth, ioyned with the other vertues, is properly the formall cauſe, and not the efficient or inſtrumentall cauſe of iuſtification, that is to ſay, theſe vertues put together, being the effect of Gods grace, bee our new creature and our new iuſtice in Chriſt.

Faith with the other vertues is the formal cauſe of iuſtification.

CARTVV. 5. [15. A new creature.] Circumciſion was a Sacrament which did as well figure out the couenant of grace on Gods behalfe, as the couenant of Chriſtian duties on our part. And therefore as in regard of the Galatians opinion, who eſteemed that it iuſtified, it was before (cap. 5. 6.) well oppoſed unto faith, wherewith it cannot ſtand: ſo here, in regard that they eſteemed it a worke of the Law yet in force, and commanded to the faithfull to walke in, it is flatly againſt the new creature, as that which is old and worne out, and is now no commandement of God, but a will-worſhip of mens owne device. In which regard it availeth no more to any end whereunto good workes are ordained, then it profiteth to the iuſtifying of a man, which is the unproper worke of faith. And therefore it is falſe which the Ieſuites ſay, that the Apoſtle calleth here a new creature, that which before he termed faith working by charity. The contrary whereof the very courſe and order of the Apoſtles treatiſe in his Epiſtle might haue taught them. For handling the cauſes and inſtruments of iuſtification unto verſ. 15. of the fifth chapter, in the reſt of the Epiſtle he laieth forth the fruits and effects of the ſame. Wherefore as in the former place of the Apoſtle it had been a ſtray and ſtrange ſpeech to haue ſpoken of the effects of our iuſtification: ſo the Apoſtle here muſt needs haue wandred if he had ſpoken of the cauſes and inſtruments thereof. But foraſmuch as the Ieſuites will not ſee this diſtribution and diſpoſition of the Epiſtle, which they may grope both here and in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, we will ſeek no further to barre them in this point, then the place of the Corinthes alledged by themſelues; whereby they affirme, that a new creature is the ſame with the keeping of the commandements: which if it be true, it followeth, that a new creature is not all one with faith working by charitie; ſeeing that by their owne expoſition, in the one, faith and good workes together, in the other good workes onely are underſtood.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 4 AS he chose vs in him before the constitution of the world, that we should be holy & immaculate ‡ in his sight in charitie.

RHEM. 1. [4. In his sight,] We learne here that by Gods grace men bee holy and immaculate, not onely in the sight of men, nor by imputation, but truely and before God; contrary to the doctrine of the Caluinists. Iustice imputed is not iustice.

CARTVV. 1. [4. In his sight.] Look the answer before upon Luk. 1. 6.

Verse. 13 In whom you also, when you had heard the word of truth (the Gospel of your saluation:) in which also beleeuing you were ‡ signed with the holy Spirit of promis, RHEM. 2. [13. Signed with the.] Some referre this to the grace of Baptisme; but to many learned it seemeth that the Apostle alludeth to the giuing of the Holy Ghost in the Sacrament of Confirmation, by signing the Baptized with the signe of the Crosse and holy Chrisme. For that was in vse in the Apostles time as elsewhere we haue proued. Annot. Act. 8.

CARTVV. 2. [13. Signed with the] The seale of the Spirit is the spirit of Christ whereby we are sealed and made sure, that God (in Christ) is our father and we his sonnes and daughters. And it is not tied unto the sacrament of baptisme, which is notwithstanding the outward seale thereof to the beleeuer, much lesse to confirmation, which is no sacrament nor seale at all, but it is given to all which truely beleeue in Christ, although they neuer be able to attaine the participation of either of the sacraments. And therefore the Apostle saith, that in beleeuing they were sealed with the spirit of promise, and not in being baptised or confirmed. Seeing therefore he maketh this seale inseparable from the faith in Christ, from the which the Sacraments are sometimes by reason of sudden death, or other accidents separated, it followeth, that this grace of the spirit is not giuen, but sealed onely by the sacrament, whereas the vse and administration of it may be conueniently atchieued. Rom. 8. 15. Gal. 4. 6.

Verse 23. Which is the body, the ‡ fulnesse of him which is filled all in all.

RHEM. 3. [23. Fulnesse of.] Christ is not full, whole and perfect without the Church no more then the head without the body.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 21 Aboue all Principalitie and Potestate and power, and Domination, and euery name that is named not onely in this world, but also in that to come.

RHEM. 4. [21. All principalitie.] The Fathers vpon this, and other places of the old and new Testament, where they find the orders of the holy Angels or spirits named, agree that there be nine orders of them, Of which some bee here counted and called as wee see: in the Epistle to the Colossians, the order of Thrones is specified, which maketh fiue: to which if we adde these foure, Cherubim, Seraphim, Angels, and Archangels, which are commonly named in holy write, in all there be nine, S. Denys cal. Hier. c. 7. 8. 9. & Ec. Hist. c. 1. S. Atha. li. de Communi essent. in fine Georg. Morall. lib. 32. c. 18. Therefore good Reader make no account of Caluins and others infidelity, which blasphemously blame and condemne the holy Doctors diligence in this point, of curiosity and impiety. The whole endeuour of these heretickes is, to bring all into doubt, and to corrupt euery article of our religion. Nine ordes of Angels. Caluin upon this place.

CARTVV. 4. [21. All Principalitie.] The doctrine of Angels is hony-sweet, but holesome onely then, when this hony is moderately and measurably eaten. As too much hony cloyeth and ouerwhelmeth the stomacke, so the over-reach of knowledge in the nature and estate of Angels, ouercommeth and oppresseth the soule. Now the excesse & ouercharge is, in that men going out of the circle of the Scripture, range and roue in the wanton diſcourſes of their vaine wits: who notwithſtanding that they be ignorant of things which are before their feet, yet prate of the ſealed ſecrets of God, as if they had ſeated themſelues aboue the ſtarres. And albeit they are over run of footmen; yet dare enterpriſe the race with horeſemen. For they remember not that the Angels doe with one paire of Eſay 6. 2. wings as well cover their feet, that they ſhould not bee ſeene of us, as with the other paire they hide their faces, that they might not looke vpon the infinite maieſty of the Lord. Whereby we are taught, that as we can no more ſearch out the glory of the Angels, then Angels can the glory and maieſty of the Lord: Let us therefore vnderſtand that the Scripture maketh mention of no orders of Angels, but onely two: whereof ſome are called by the generall name of Angels, ſome are termed Archangels: other kinds the Scripture acknowledgeth not. Which if otherwiſe it were holden, yet

Heb.1.4. 1.Theſ.4. 16. the ſame might eaſily appeare by the vnſauory diſtinction which the Ieſuites haue heere made: for the Seraphims, which they make one order of Angels, is a common name vnto all Angels, be-

Exo.26.31 1.Cor.11. 10. is of Cherubims: For that all the Angels are Cherubims, it is evident by the curtaines of the Tabernacle which were ſet forth and garniſhed with Cherubims onely, ſignifying the preſence of the Eph.3.10. Pſal.18.10. Angels in the Aſſembly of the Church, as the Apoſtle himſelfe doth expound it. Vnleſſe therefore they wil ſay that one onely of the 9 orders is preſent in the Church to behold the things that are done there, they muſt be conſtrained to caſt away this diviſion. For it is certaine that all Angels are called Cherubims, for that they are carried with a wonderfull ſwiftneſſe vnto the excution of the commandements of God, as if the Lord by them came in chariots, or flew with wings to effect either iudgement againſt the wicked, or mercy to the godly. We deny not, but that Angels may haue ſeverall actions and effects aſſigned vnto them, wherein they may differ one from another: but thereof to conclude that there are as many orders of Angels, as there be divers works done by them, is as if one would ſay, that there were divers orders of ſoules in every man, becauſe there are divers operations and faculties of the ſoule. And if they will follow this rule in dividing the orders of Angels, Zach. 2. 8. they may make as well a thouſand, as thoſe which they do, and ſay that ſome are red, ſome white, ſome black, and ſome bay.

And if they were put to proue out of good Authors, a ſeverall ſignification of every of theſe words, Principalities, Potentates, Powers and Dominions (which muſt needs be done if they will make divers Orders of them) they will be forced to take longer day then they for ſhame dare aske, or any patient Reader can abide to waite for. Where it is evident, that the Apoſtle heapeth up divers words of one and the ſame ſignification, thereby the more effectually to ſet forth the ſuper-eminent power of our Saviour Chriſt aboue all.

They fault alſo groſſely when they make theſe foure words to note out foure Orders of Celeſtiall Spirits, ſeeing the Apoſtle vnder theſe words comprehendeth as well the higher powers that are vpon earth and in this world, as thoſe which are in heaven, and in the world to come. By all which it may eaſily be ſeene how ſhameleſſe the Papiſts are, that dare condemne our modeſty and ſobriety of iudgement in the matter of Angels: and how extremely impudent they be, which take the boldneſſe of thruſting Articles of Religion vpon the Church, which haue neither ground in Scripture, nor in Councell, generall or other. As for the teſtimony of Denys, how unpleadable it is the Reader may ſee before vpon Act.1. From whom Gregory taking the ſame ſentence, carrieth the ſame credit towards all which giue no inchanting power to the Sea of Rome to turne falſhood into truth. And the diſorder of this diviſion may be eaſily known, in that they make the order of Arch-Angels the laſt and loweſt ſaue one alone; when as our Sa. Chriſt, as touching the office of mediation, is named an Archangell.

Verſe. 22 And he hath * ſubdued all things vnder his feete: and hath made him | head ouer all the CHVRCH,

As Chriſt is king and yet men are kings alſo: ſo Chriſt it head of the Church, and yet man may be head thereof alſo.

RHE.5 [22.Head] It maketh a high proof among the Proteſtants that no man can be head of the Church, becauſe it is a calling & dignity proper to Chriſt. But in truth by as good reaſon there ſhould be no king nor Lord, becauſe, He is king and Lord, neither ſhould there bee Biſhop or Paſtor, becauſe hee is the Biſhop and Paſtor of our ſoules: nor Pontifex nor Apoſtle, for by thoſe titles S. Paul termeth him. Heb.3. none ſhould be pillier, foundation, rocke, light, or maſter of the Church or truth, becauſe Chriſt is properly all theſe. And yet our new doctors (though they bee exceeding ſeditious and would for the aduanaage of their ſect bee gladly ridde of kings and all other Superiours temporall, if they feared not the ſword more then God, and would finde as good Scriptures to bee deliuered of them, as they now finde to diſcharge themſelues of obedience to Popes,) yet (I ſay) they will not deny all the formes titles and dignities (notwithſtanding Chriſts ſoueraine right in the ſame) to be giuen and communicated to the Princes and Magiſtrates of the earth both ſpirituall and temporall though Chriſt in a more diuine, ample, abſolute, excellent and tranſcendent ſort, haue all theſe things attributed or appropriated to himſelfe. So then, though he bee the head of the Church, and the onely head in ſuch ſoueraine and principall manner as no earthly man or meere creature euer is or can bee, and is ioyned to the Church in a more excellent ſort of coniunction, then any king is to his ſubiects or Country, or any Pope or Prelate to the Church, whereof he is gonernour, euen ſo farre that it is called his body Myſticall: life, motion, ſpirit, grace iſſuing down from him to it and the members of the ſame, as from the head to the naturall body: though in this ſort (we ſay) no man can be head but Chriſt, nor the Church be body to any but to Chriſt; yet the Pope may be the miniſteriall head that is to ſay, the cheefe Gouernour, Paſtor and Prelate of the ſame, or may bee his Vicar or Vicegerent in the regiment of that part which is in earth. as S. Hierome calleth Damaſus the Pope, Summum Sacerdotem, the cheefe and higheſt Prieſt: and the Apoſtle ſaid of this miniſteriall head. The head cannot ſay to the feet, yon are not neceſſary for me. For therein alſo is a great difference between Christ and euery mortall Prelate that as the Apostle here saith) hee is head of the whole Church, meaning of the triumphant(& of all Angels also though in other sort)no lesse then of the Church militant. So Peter was not,nor any Pope,nor any man can be, where you must obserue, that for this souerain preeminence of Christ in this case, the Church is not called the body mysticall of any Gouernour, Peter, Paul, or what Prelate or Pope so euer. 1. Cor. 12. 21.

Chriſt

CARTVV. 4. [22 Head.] How high a proofe it is, that none which is but a bare man can be head of the Church because it is a calling and dignity proper unto Christ, may easily appeare, for that none of the engines which the Iesuites haue made to pull it downe, are able once to moue it, no more then when a man throwes out a number of eares of corne against a defenced hold. Which we will then make triall of when we haue laid down the grounds of this doctrine of the Head-ship of Christ out of this place.

The Apostle giveth this title of Head of the Church unto Christ, to lift him up aboue all Powers and Dominions in heaven or in earth. Where, if this title belong also unto the Pope, or to any man upon earth, it is manifest that there is a power in earth whereunto our Saviour Christ is not in this title superiour. And by the same reason,that you may giue this title of head unto a man, you may also giue him the name of the first begotten of all creatures, and the first begotten of the dead: considering that the Apostle fastneth this unto the Crown of our Saviour Christ as well as he doth the other. This is further strengthned by the demonstratiue Article, whereby the Scripture is accustomed so to appropriate a thing unto one, that it shutteth forth all other from communication therewith: For when he saith, that he is the Head, it is as much as if he would say, hee and none other. Further, where all the Ministeries of the Church, even to the Apostleship (and therefore unto Peters office) are reckoned up, they are all opposed by the Apostle unto the head Christ: and therefore no Ministery how high soever can rightly haue the name of Head. And if Christ be the onely Head between God and every beleeuer, as the Apostle saith he is, how much more is he the onely Head of the whole Church. Col. 1. 18. αὐτὸς ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλή. Epk. 4. 11. 12. 13. 14. 1. Cor. 11, 3

The reasons wherefore this title is given to our Saviour Christ considered, will greatly cleere this cause: whereof one is, that as the head is the highest part in a man, aboue which there is none: so is he the chiefest and highest in his Church. Secondly, for that as the head giveth sense and moving unto all the body, so he quickneth the Church by his Spirit: and together, with understanding of spirituall things, giveth strength also to walke in them. Thirdly, for that, as the head cannot be taken from the body without the certaine death and ruin thereof, so without Christ the Church is nothing else but a dead carcase. Seeing therefore those things do so fit our Saviour Christ, as they neither agree, nor can in any possibility agree with any creature in heaven or in earth(either in regard of the whole Church, or in regard of any particular member of it) it is manifest that the name of Head of the Church, cannot be (without great violence) given unto any simple creature in heaven or in earth. And as this hath certain grounds out of the Scripture, so there be of the elder Writers which haue been zealous over this title, that it should not bee communicated unto any but unto Christ: Cyprian saith, that there is but one Head of the Church. Augustine affirmeth, that there is one Head of the Church which is Christ. And againe, he proueth, that the Minister which baptizeth, cannot be the head of him that is baptized, because Christ is the head of the whole Church. And further, that Paul could not be the head of the Churches which hee planted, because Christ is the Head of the whole Body. De simplicitat. prælatorũ. Aug. Ep 57 Epist. ad Darda. lib. 1 contra literas Petil. c. 5. Lib. 3. cont. lit. Petil. cap. 42.

Now to come to your shifts. Amongst which, those in the first ranke of the titles, of King and Lord so given unto Christ, that they be also communicated with men, are most absurd, and such as the Papists themselues would be ashamed of. For is there any King over the Church but Christ alone? or any Lord over it but he himselfe, who shutteth and no man openeth, openeth and no man shutteth? There are indeed Kings of Countries and Common-wealthes, and Lords of Prouinces: but King or Lord over the Church beside Christ the Sonne of God, we esteeme to haue been rarely heard of, euen amongst the Popish Chapmen, who of all other men do make the best price of the crown and royalties of our Saviour Christ. Psal. 2. 6. Zach. 9. 9. 1. Cor. 8. 5 6. & 12. 3. 5.

In the second ranke, first Bishop and Pastor of the whole Church (such as the Apostle meaneth) there is none but Christ alone. The same may be said of the title of Apostle: for not so much as the Son of God was the Apostle of all the world, but of the Circumcision onely. And the Apostles, although they had authority to teach all, yet were they not authorised or sent unto all alike, but some were Apostles of the Circumcision, and others of the Gentiles. So that the Pope in claiming an Apostolicall authority alike over all the world, claimeth more then either Christ or any of his Apostles ever used. This may also be said of the other title, The light of the world, seeing that the faithfull generally, and not the Apostles onely, are called the light of the world, not severally every one, but iointly altogether, for that they being set heere and there as starres in the heaven of the Church giue light with their knowledge and holinesse of life unto the rest of the dark world. And if it be restrained unto the Apostles, yet forasmuch as it is in regard of their Ministery, their light can be no more generall then is their Apostleship, in regard whereof they are called the lights of the world: It must be further understood, that in that sort wherein these are attributed unto Christ (which is, that by his merites and spirit, he careth for, feedeth, and illuminateth his Church) he hath these things incommunicable with any creature under heaven or earth. Againe, as touching the outward Ministery of some part of his Church, therefore he hath Vicars, because by his Word he hath appointed them and decked them with the titles and names of Bishops, Pastors, Apostles, Lights, &c. which if they be able to shew in the title of Head of the Church, the controversie is at an end. But so far it is from the Scripture to giue any allowance hereof, that it utterly condemneth it, as hath been said. Mat. 5. 14. 16. Phil. 2. 15. 16.

And as for these titles,they are therefore communicated with others, because somewhat of that which is signified by them,may be performed of them to whom they are communicated: but there was never any found of whom any of these things for the which our Saviour Christ is called head of the Church, can be in any meaſure or degree atchieued: for none can be aboue all but he: none can giue life vnto the body but hee: no mans deſtruction is the Churches death and overthrow but his alone. Neither is it againſt either nature or reaſon, that of one Church (as it were of one Citty) there ſhould be divers watchmen or Biſhops: or that to one common ſocietie of the Church, diuers and ſundry Embaſſadors ſhould be ſent, or that there ſhould bee of one flocke diuers Sheepheards; or in one houſe (or as it were heauen of the Church) ſundry lights. But it is againſt nature and reaſon, that of one body there ſhould be diuers heads: which were monſtrous, and to the great diſhonour both of Chriſt and his Church: eſpecially ſeeing where vnder-heads haue any place, it is either in the abſence of the principall head from the body, or in the vnabilitie of it when it is preſent, to performe all the duties which the body hath need of. Neither whereof falling into our Saviour Chriſt, it is evident that thereby all multiplication of Church heads is taken away. Wherefore it is no head, but a dead skull which they would clap upon the body of the Church vnder the pretext of 1. Cor 12. 21. where they affirme that there muſt needs be another head of the Church then our Sauiour Chriſt, foraſmuch as it is ſaid, that the head hath need of the feet. For firſt of all, there is nothing ſaid, but which may well agree vnto Chriſt. For although Chriſt haue no need (in reſpect of his own good) of any; yet to perfect the office of his mediation which hee hath vndertaken, hee hath need of the baſeſt and moſt abiect member of the Church, without the which the Apoſtle in this place affirmeth, that Chriſt, who in himſelfe is moſt perfect, is as it were maimed and vnperfect: which the Ieſuites themſelues in the margent of this placed haue obſerued. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not there of the Catholicke Church ſcattered through all the world, but of that particular Church which was at Corinth, as before to the Romans hee ſpake of the diſorders that were in the members of the Church at Rome. For as there is a reſemblance of mans body with the whole Church, as with the mother: ſo is there a repreſentation of that with every particular Church, as with the daughter. So that if in this place any other head then Chriſt be vnderſtood, yet the ſame proveth not a generall head ouer the whole Church. Thirdly, it is to be obſerved, that theſe words of the Apoſtle to the Corinths, are not ſpoken of the myſticall body of the Church, but of the naturall body only, and from thence a ſimilitude is taken to ſhew that as a mans body ſtandeth of divers members differing in excellency one from another, and yet of great agreement in loue & care one for another: even ſo the Church conſiſting of divers Chriſtians, higher in calling and gifts one aboue another, ioynes notwithſtanding in mutuall care and ſeruice one for another. Wherefore as by the feet he meaneth men of baſeſt calling and gifts, how many ſoever, without ſtraightning them to the number of two, which onely is fitting and comely in the naturall body: ſo by the name of head hee meaneth all thoſe of higheſt calling and graces in the Church, without tying this title to any one, according as the proportion of a naturall body doth require. Vnleſſe therefore they will admit but two in the Church to occupy the place of the Churches feet, they cannot vnder the colour of the word (head) place one ruler over all the Church. Which thing the Apoſtle doth evidently declare, when expounding himſelfe verſ. 27. he affirmeth, that God hath ſet in his Church firſt (that is to ſay in the head) Apoſtles, not one Apoſtle, much leſſe Peter, &c.

And if it be replied, that the name of head is notwithſtanding thus applied by the Apoſtle vnto a bare creature; we anſwer that it is one thing to be head member in the body of the Church, and another thing to be head over the body of the Church: for there may be many head and principall members in the Church, but head over the body of the Church, there can be but one, which is Chriſt. And this anſwer hath evident proofe of the concluſion which the Apoſtle maketh, ſaying, Ye are the body of Chriſt, and members in part one of another.

1. Cor. 12. 27.

High Prieſts in the Church of Chriſt we receiue no moe then wee doe heads: which the one onely high Prieſt vnder the law (a figure of the high Prieſthood of our Sav. Chriſt) doth figuratively and yet very plainly ſet forth. That Chriſt is any where in Scripture called a pillar of the Church, we remember not: ſo farre it is that it is peculiarly aſcribed vnto him. Of the foundation and the rocke, it is anſwered before (upon Math. 16. 18.) in part, and in part in this anſwer to the name of Biſhops, Apoſtles, &c.

Any maſters of the Church we acknowledge not, but maſters in the Church, as our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe ſpeaketh. If by maſters of truth you vnderſtand Doctors or Teachers, which lay the ground of their precepts in the word of God, wee embrace them: otherwiſe with our Saviour Chriſt, we reiect them. That Ierom. Epiſt. 123. calleth Damaſus the chiefe Prieſt, is a ſpeech more agreeable to the ambitious humour of men, then to the ſtile of the Scripture when it ſpeaketh of the miniſters of the Goſpell. Howbeit (how exceſſiue and tranſcendent ſoever it bee) it is giuen to all Biſhops that ſate in the firſt ſeates, as your owne Pope doth declare. MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 9 ‡ Not of workes, that no man glorie:

RHEM. 1. [‡. Not of works.] It is ſaid, not of works as thine, of thy ſelfe being vnto thee but but as those in which God hath made, formed, and created thee. August. de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 8. & seq.

CARTVV. 1 [9. Not of works] It is euident that by works he vnderstandeth those which proceed from the spirit of God in the man vnregenerate, and not the workes which proceed from vs, as of vs: because forbidding to glorie in them, he giueth this reason, that they are of God, set and created in vs, in Christ Iesus, when there was no more seed or sparkle of them in our degenerate estate, then there was matter subiect vnto the creation of the world, which appeared and was made of nothing. Again, in that he opposeth faith to workes, and not the workes of our degenerate nature, vnto the workes of our nature renewed and regegotten. Last of all, in that he opposeth these workes of ours vnto the works which Christ wrought in his own flesh, vers. 13. 14. &c.

The place of Augustine is answered before, vpon Rom. 2. 6.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 8 For by ! grace you are saued through faith (and that not of your selues for it is the gift of God.

RHEM. 2. [8. By grace you are saued through faith] Our first iustification is of Gods grace, and not of our deseruings: because none of all our actions that were before our iustification, could merit or iustly procure the grace of iustification. Again he saith: through faith: for that faith is the beginning, foundation and root of all Iustification, and first of all other vertues, without which it is impossible to please God.

Our first iustification of mere grace, and faith the foundation thereof.

CARTVV. 2. [8. By grace you are saued through faith.] This distinction of our first iustification by grace, implying a second by desert, is before confuted, and receiveth a stroke in this place. In that the Ephesians at this time, which was many yeares after they had beleeved, are said to be saued by grace, and not then onely when they first beleeued, as the Iesuites doe surmise. And yet further it appeareth, that he giueth the whole iustification vnto grace, and not the beginning thereof onely, in that he affirmeth that we are saued by grace, where a man is not saued vnlesse he be fully and wholy (and that to the end also) iustified. Last of all, in that he excludeth workes out of iustification, and therefore workes after faith: which onely can moue question among beleeuers, whether a man can be iustified by them, seeing those before faith are sin, as hath been shewed, vpon Rom. 14. and seeing it were absurd for a man to glory in sin, which is his shame.

Neither doth he say onely, through faith, but addeth, without workes: which is all one as if hee had said by faith alone: seeing it must be needs either by faith or by workes: seeing therefore not of workes, it remaineth that the whole is of faith, and not (as the Iesuites pretend) the beginning onely.

The Church builded vpon Christ & yet vpon the Apostles also.

Verse. 20 ! Built vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Iesus Christ himselfe being the highest corner stone:

RHEM. 3. [20. Built vpon the foundation.] Note against the Heretickes that thinke it dishonourable to Christ to attribute his titles or callings to mortall men, that the faithfull (though builded first, principally, and properly vpon Christ yet are said here to be built also vpon the Apostles and Prophets. Why may not the Church then be builded vpon Peter?

CARTVV. 3. [20. Built vpon the foundation] This cauill of attributing our Sauiour Christs titles vnto mortall men, is answered before. But let the reader further note that this place doth raze the foundation of the popish religion: first for that all the Apostles & Prophets are called the foundations of the Church aswell as Peter. Secondly that they are so called not in regard of their successors, but in regard of their doctrine, which they left behind them: For the Prophets (vpon whom the Church is aswell builded as vpon the Apostles) haue none which succeed them in that office, whether by Prophets be vnderstood those which lived vnder the Law, as Moses, &c. (which iudgement most do follow) or Prophets which were giuen in the first spread of the Gospell, as Agabus, &c. of which minde some are, by conference of this place with that of the sixth verse of the next Chapter.

CHAP. III.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 17 CHRIST ‡ to dwel by faith in your hearts rooted and founded in charitie, RHEM. 1. [17. To dwell by faith] Christ dwelleth in vs by his gifts, and we be iust by those his gifts remaining and resident in vs, and not by Christs proper iustice onely, as the Heretikes affirme.

CARTVV. 3. [17 To dwell by faith.] Inherent institice cleaueth vnto your corrupt and perverted mindes, and not to the words of the Apostle, which do plainely overthrow it: for first, the strength of the inward man is referred vnto faith, as vnto the cause and fountaine: the Apostle assuring the Ephesians that they shall haue strength in the inward man, for that Christ dwelleth in them by faith: Secondly, in that he affirmeth, that Christ dwelleth in vs, that is to say is one with vs by faith, and not by any other vertue or gift of the Holy Ghost, as otherwhere he is said to liue in vs by faith, which may yet better appeare by Iohn, who affirmeth, that by charity it is made known that Christ dwelleth in us: Now to haue Christ to dwell in us, and to haue it known that hee dwelleth in us, differ, as the cause and the effect: charity therefore being an effect of Christs dwelling in us, is not the cause of his dwelling.

Gal. 2. 20. Iohn. 4. 12. 13.

Charity. RHEM. 2. [17. In charitie.] Not faith onely must be in vs, but charitie which accomplisheth all vertues.

CARTVV. 2. [17 In charitie.] Albeit it be true, that charity must be within vs aswell as faith, yet the mention of it in this place is (as a shower of raine in harvest) altogether unseasonable: considering that the Apostle by charity meaneth the charity of God wherewith he loveth us, and not that whereby we loue him: For our charity is a fruite, and not the roote; laid upon the foundation of Christs building, and not the foundation it selfe. Secondly, for that the charity heere spoken of is beyond the capacity and receite of our understanding; whereas our charity is of no such unmeasurable extent, but that it may be meeten with the span of mans knowledge. Last of all, for that the treatise of our charity falleth fitly into the next chapter, and is plainly inferred of the charity specified in this place.

CHAP. IIII.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 9 AND that he ascended, what is it, but because he descended also first into the inferiour ‡ parts of the earth;

RHEM. [9. Inferiour parts.] He meaneth specially of his descending to Hell.

CARTVV. 1. [9. Inferour parts.] By the lower parts of the earth he noteth out the earth it selfe. But that by the lower parts of the earth, hell and the place of the damned should be meant, it wanteth proofe: And if it should be shewed, yet here it could haue no place. For when the same which ascended, led captiues, and gaue gifts unto men, is he that descended, it is necessary that in this place, whole Christ both God and Man, Soule and Body be understood, considering that whole Christ ascended. Seeing therefore the fancie of descending into the place of the damned is but of the soule onely, it is evident that the place cannot be drawn unto that kinde of descending. Neither is it strange, that God should be said to descend; if it be remembred, that for the personall unity of the two natures, that which is truely and properly affirmed of one of them, is also as truely (although not so properly) verified of the other.

Verse. 23 And ‡ be renewed in the spirit of your minde:

RHEM. 2. [23. Be renued.] The Apostle teacheth vs not to apprehend Christs iustice by faith onely, but to be renued in our selues truely and to put on vs the new man formed and created in iustice aud holines of truth. By the which, freewill also is proued to be in vs, to work with God, or to consent vnto him in our sanctification.

CARTVV. 2. [23 Be renued.] This argument, We are exhorted to put on the new man, therefore we haue freewill to consent to good, is more sauouring of Aristotle then of Paul, and is flatly against the words of the Apostle, who by the new man understandeth whatsoever is good in us tending to the attainement of life everlasting, and therefore also the will and affections. And therefore a little before vers. 18. he sheweth two causes which estrange us from the life of God, one of ignorance, whereby we cannot see the way to salvation, and the other of heardnesse of heart, whereby when we see it, we cannot choose it: which you blindly haue translated blindnesse, putting no difference between πώρωσις and ἄγνοια: Whereupon the Apostle otherwhere saith, that God worketh in us both the will and the deed: Before which time the heart is prone to evill onely, and a heart which cannot repent nor beleeue, albeit together with the goades and pricks of exhortations there be multiplied many miracles and wonders: The impossibility whereof to assent unto good, the Prophet amplifieth when he saith, that it is of a stony hardnesse: so that he that laboureth in this field, is all one with him that ploweth among the Rockes, before such time as the Lord doth dew down his grace from aboue. And therefore Augustine saith, the the whole must be given to God, both to prepare the will, and to help it when is prepared.

Verse 5 One Lord, ‡ one faith, one baptisme.

Vnity of the Cath. Church RHEM 3. [5. One faith.] As rebellion is the bane of ciuill Commonwealths and kingdoms, and peace and concord the preseruation of the same: so is Schisme, diuision, and diuersitie of faiths or fellowship in the seruice of God, the calamitie of the Church, and peace, vnity, vniformitie, the speciall blessing of God therein, and in the Church aboue all Commonwealths, because it is in all points a Monarchie tending euery way to vnitie, but one God, but one Christ, but one Church, but one hope, one faith, one baptisme, one head, one body. Whereof S. Cyprian lib. de vnit. Ec. nn. 3. saith thus: One Church the holy Ghost in the person of our Lord designeth and saith. One is my doue. This vnity of the Church, he that holdeth not, doth he thinke hee holdeth the faith? Hee that withstandith and resisteth the Church, he that forsaketh Peters chaire vpon which the Church was built, doth he trust that he is in the Church When the blessed Apostle S. Paul also sheweth the Sacrament of vnity, saying, One body and one spirit, &c. Which vnity wee Bishops specially that rule in the Church, ought to hold fast and maintaine, that wee may proue the Bishoply function also it selfe to be one and vndiuided, &c. And againe, There is one God, and one Christ, and one Church, and one Chaire, by our Lords voice founded vpon Peter. An other altar to be set vp, or a new Priesthood to be made, besides one altar, and one Priesthood, is impossible. Whosoeuer gathereth else where, scattereth. It is adulterous, it is impious, it is ſacrilegious, whatſoeuer is inſtituted by mans fury to the breach of Gods diuine diſpoſition. Get ye far from the contagion of ſuch men, and flee from their ſpeeches as a canker and peſtilence, our Lord hauing premoniſhed and warned before hand. They are blind leaders of the blind, &c. Whereby we learn that this vnity of the Church commended ſo much vnto vs, conſiſteth in the mutuall fellowſhip of all Biſhops with the See of Peter. S. Hilarie alſo (li. ad Conſtantium Auguſtum) thus applieth this ſame of the Apoſtle againſt the Arians, as we may do againſt the Caluiniſts. Perilous and miſerable it is, ſaith he, that there are now ſo many faithes as wils, and ſo many doctrines as manners, whiles either faithes are ſo written as we will, or as we will ſo are vnderſtood: and whereas according to one God, and one Lord, and one baptiſme, there is alſo one faith, we fall away from that which is the onely faith, and whiles moe faithes be made, they beginne to come to that, that there is none at all.

Amongſt heretickes as many faithes as willes.

CARTVV. 3. [5 One faith.] It is a meere dotage to eſteeme that there are ſo many arguments to proue the Monarchy of the Church, as there are bonds of vnitie; ſeeing that other Common-wealthes haue their bonds of peace and vnitie wherewith they are preſerued aſwell as the Monarchy. And as for the forme of the Church Gouernement, it is not ſimply a Monarchie, but compounded of all the kinds of good and lawfull gouernement, and therefore the beſt of all: For in regard of Chriſt the King of the Church, it is Monarchicall, and vnder the gouernment of one. In regard of the Church Gouernours it is Ariſtocratical or vnder the gouernment of the beſt: and in reſpect of the reſt of the bodie of the Church, by whoſe conſent divers things in the Church do paſſe, it is Democraticall, or vnder the gouernment of the people. And herein the Ieſuites impudency is notable, that would make men beleeue that this place of the Apoſtle countenanceth the Papacy, which frowneth and bendeth the brow againſt it: for the Apoſtle exhorting to vnitie, and making recitall of divers ones which tend to the preſeruation of it, maketh no mention of one Pope over all: which he would never haue paſſed by, if to haue a Pope had been of ſuch great weight toward the preſeruation of the vnitie of the Church, as is pretended. Whereby it appeareth that the Apoſtle eſteemed theſe ones or vnities to be ſufficient for the preſeruation of the Church in that commendable peace which all the godly ought to labour for.

Ariſt. Polit.

The former place of Cyprian de vnitate Eccleſiæ, making mention of Peters chaire, maketh nothing for you. For by Peters chaire is not meant any prerogatiue of Rome, but one & the ſame office given to the Apoſtles in Peter, and to all Biſhops ſo farre as they ſucceed the Apoſtles. Wherefore hee ſaith, that the primacie was giuen to Peter, that the Church and chaire of Chriſt might thereby be ſhewed to be one: that they are all Paſtors, but that there is but one flocke, which is fed with a full conſent of all the Apoſtles. And that which doth vtterly overthrow them, followeth within a line after their words, which they haue guilefully left out. There is one Biſhopricke whereof one whole part is holden of every one, meaning Biſhops, whereby it appeareth that everie Biſhop in the Church hath as good and as full a part in the one Biſhopricke of the Church, as hath the Biſhop of Rome, which hee almoſt repeateth in another place, ſaying; There is but one Biſhopricke whereof every Biſhop holdeth one part wholly or fully. And again, that he holdeth his Biſhoprick of Chriſt, which is the chiefe Biſhop. The next place of Cyprian Epiſt. 40. is as flat againſt them.

Cyp. de ſimpl. Prælatorum.
Ibid.
Look the anſwer in my firſt book againſt the Doctor. p. 101. and in the ſecond, 553. 554.

Hilarie ad Conſtantium hath nothing of this matter, for he ſaith onely, that there ought to be but one faith which wee confeſſe: but, that that is the faith of Rome rather then of Potiers hee hath not a word. And firſt, theſe words of his are alleaged. not againſt the Arrians, but againſt the Churches owne Councels, who varied one of them from another, firſt in decreeing that the word conſubſtantiall ſhould be ſuppreſſed or foreborne. Secondly, that it ſhould be vſed. Thirdly, that it might be excuſed. Fourthly that it was neither to be excuſed nor condemned. And again, we repent vs of our decrees: We defend thoſe that repent: We accuſe thoſe which we defended: and we either condemne other mens doings in our owne, or ours in other mens. The remedie of all which variances and diuerſities of faith hee aſſigneth, not to bee (as you would abuſe your reader) the iudgement of one Biſhop of Rome, but he will haue the whole controuerſie to be decided out of the holy Scriptures: where he admireth the Emperour, for that he deſired that the faith ſhould onely be according to that which is written. And againe hee humbly deſireth him, that whileſt the Synod ſate which contended about that matter, hee would heare him in few words out of the Euangelicall Scriptures. And this he confeſſeth euen then, when he confeſſeth that the Heretickes alleaged the Scriptures, for defence of their wicked opinions. So that through the euidence of the Scriptures, and of nothing elſe but the Scriptures, he doubted nothing but that he would make the Emperour vnderſtand the truth againſt all the cloudie ſophiſmes of the perverſe Arians.

Verſe. 11 And he * gaue, ‖ ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and otherſome Euangeliſts, and otherſome Paſtors and doctors, RHEM. 4. [11. Some Apoſtles.] Many functions that were euen in the Apoſtles time, are not here named: which muſt bee noted againſt the Aduerſaries that call here for Popes, as though the names of Biſhops, Prieſts, or Deacons, were not as well left out as Popes: whom yet they cannot deny to haue been in vſe in S. Pauls dayes. And therefore they haue no more reaſon, out of this place to diſpute againſt the Pope, then againſt the reſt of the Eccleſiaſticall functions. Neither is it neceſſary to reduce ſuch as be not ſpecified here, to theſe here named: though indeed both other Biſhops and Prelates and ſpecially Popes, may be conteined vnder the names of Apoſtles, Doctors, and Paſtors. Certes the roome and dignitie of the Pope is a very continuall Apoſtleſhip, and S. Bernard calleth it Apoſtolatum. Bernard. ad Eugen. li. 14. c. 4. & c. in fine.

The heretikes fooliſh negatiue argument againſt the Pope, anſwered.
The Popes office is called an Apoſtleſhip.

CARTVV. 4. [11. Some Apoſtles.] We are not aſhamed of our argument, that for ſo much as Apoſtles, Prophets, Euangeliſts, Paſtors & doctors are ſufficient for the perfect building of the Church, the Church ſtandeth in no need of a Pope, who maketh a knob in an vnprofitable burden, and deformed lumpe of Egyptian fleſh in the body of the Church. But you may be aſhamed of your fooliſh replie, of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, neceſſary for the building, and yet left out aſwell as the Pope. For firſt you cannot deny but that the Apoſtle reckoned vp the principall Miniſteries of the the Church; and therefore ought not to haue baulked the Pope if hee had been of that ſeruice which is ſuppoſed of him. Secondly it is knowen that the office of Biſhops in Scriptures, being vſed for the ordinary miniſtery of the word vnder the Goſpell, whether it be done by the Paſtor or by the Doctor noteth out no divers miniſtery from theſe here reckoned vp, as the Ieſuites themſelues are forced to confeſſe.

Phil. 1. 1. 1. Tim. 3. 1. &c.

As for Elders (which you call Prieſts) and likewiſe for Deacons, forſomuch as by Gods inſtitution they meddle not with the miniſtery of the word, which is here diſtributed into certaine kindes, it is evident that they could haue no due place in this diviſion.

Your other ſhift, that the Pope is an Apoſtle: firſt, is manifeſtly falſe in it ſelfe: for that the function of an Apoſtle is extraordinary and ceaſed, as after ſhall appeare. Then it is falſified by your owne words: for ſeeing you hold the Pope for a Biſhop, and a Biſhop to bee contained under the names of Paſtors and Doctors, it followeth, that Paſtor and Doctor being different from an Apoſtle, the Biſhop alſo being one with them, muſt needs differ from an Apoſtle as well as they. And if you ſay, that ſome may be Apoſtles, Biſhops, Paſtors, Doctors, and all, the words of the Apoſtle will not ſuffer you to make any ſuch maſh. For when he ſaith that God gaue ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, &c. And againe, He ſet, firſt Apoſtles, ſecondly Prophets, &c. And yet againe, Are all Apoſtles? are all Prophets? &c. thereby appeareth, that the holy Ghoſt placeth theſe divers gifts in ſeverall perſons: and that they are one under another: ſo that unleſſe one and the ſame man may be at one time firſt and ſecond, inferiour and ſuperiour, before and after himſelfe, it cannot be that one and the ſame can be an Apoſtle, Evangeliſt, Biſhop, &c. And as thoſe that God by the miniſtery of men, maketh Biſhops, whether it be Paſtors or Doctors, he may by the ſame miniſtery of men either remoue or tranſlate from Paſtor to Doctor, or contrariwiſe: ſo thoſe that God himſelfe hath ſet in charge without the miniſtery of men, by mens miniſtery cannot be either debaſed or depoſed.

As for Bernard, it is no marvell if he forget to ſpeake diſtinctly the language of Canaan. Howbeit as the Apoſtles are ſometimes of the Fathers called Biſhops in a generall ſignification of ſuperintendancy or overſight: ſo the Biſhops may be called Apoſtles in a large and ample ſignification of being ſent in Embaſſages to their ſeverall flockes: which is no more to proue them either Biſhops or Apoſtles properly (according to the vſuall ſpeech of the new Teſtament) then hee that ſaith an Atturney in the Law is a Sergeant of the ſame, becauſe he ſerveth and attendeth thereupon.

Verſe. 13 Vntill we meete all into the vnitie of faith and knowledg of the ſonne of God, to a perfect man, into the meaſure of the age of the fulnes of Chriſt:

Continuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops, an evident argument of the true viſible Church. The fathers refuted heretikes by the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome.

RHEM. 5. [13. Vntill we meete.] The Church of God ſhall neuer lacke theſe ſpirituall functions, or ſuch as be anſwerable to them, according to the time and ſtate of the Church, till the worlds end. Whereby you may proue, the Catholike Church, that is to ſay, that viſible company of Chriſtians which hath euer had, and by good records can proue they haue had, a continuall ordinary ſucceſſion of Biſhops, Paſtors, and Doctors, to be the onely true Church: and theſe other good fellowes that for many worlds or ages together cannot ſhew that they had any one Biſhop, or ordinary yea or extraordinary officer for them and their ſect, to be an adulterous Hereticall generation. And this place of the Apoſtle aſſuring to the true Church a perpetuall viſible continuance of Paſtors and Apoſtles or their ſucceſſours, warranted the holy fathers to try all Heretickes by the moſt famous ſucceſſion of the Popes of Rome. So did S. Irenæus, lib. 3. c. 3. Tertullian, in præſcript. Optatus lib. 2. cont. Parm. S. Auguſtine in pſ. cont. part. Donat & cont. ep. Manich. c. 4. & ep. 165. Epiph. hær. 27. and others.

CARTVV. 5. [13. Vntill we meete.] The Popiſh vaunt of continuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops, is not unlike the brag of the baſtard Iewes, touching their genealogies: for as the Iewes chiefe pillar to uphold themſelues in the account of Gods people, was in conveying their pedigrees to Abraham: ſo the principall fort of the Popiſh religion is ſet upon the regiſter of the Biſhop of Rome from Peter.

And upon what Regiſter I pray you? not verily upon the regiſter or record of any of the Prophets or Apoſtles, but upon the record and report of men that are oftentimes deceiued. So that if none had written the ſtorie of the Biſhops of Rome: or if having written, they haue failed in the truth of their ſtory; or if having both written, and written truly, their writings haue either miſcarried, or been depraued, the principall groundſell of their Popiſh religion failing, the whole building muſt needs be ſhaken. Which thing of it ſelfe might teach the vanity of their reaſon which they falſely father upon the Apoſtle out of this place. For firſt of all it may be ſaid, that although this be the ordinary courſe that the Lord hath appointed for the entertainment of his people: yet when the Church prouoketh him with her ſinnes, he may bereaue them for a time of this miniſtery, which afterward upon repentance he reſtoreth unto them againe. Euen as the Lord having ordained a Prieſtood and kingly office to continue for ever untill Chriſt, did notwithſtanding for their ſinnes ſometimes leaue them naked of theſe helpes of comfort and inſtruction. Secondly, how childiſh an argument is this, that the lawfull miniſters of the Church ſhall alwayes continue unto the worlds end; therefore they ſhall be viſibly known of all, or the moſt men unto the worlds end? the inſufficiencie whereof hath been declared before upon Math. 5. and Rom. 11. Wheere it having been ſhewed, that the Church ſometime may be ecclipſed through either perſecution or apoſtaſie, or both, that for fewneſſe and ſolitarie reſidencie in caues and dennes amongſt the beaſts of the fieldes, it cannot be ſeene in publicke places; it muſt needs follow, that the miniſters, which are but one part of the Church, may well be ſecret and unknowne. Yea granting that they muſt neceſſarily be in the ſight and view of all, yet unleſſe they be able to proue, that a memoriall muſt needs be kept of them truely written, and faithfully preſerued, this reaſon will yeeld them nothing. And as they are paires with the baſtard Iewes in this vaine boaſt of their continuall ſucceſſion: ſo are they farre inferiour unto them in the certaintie and truth of their catalogues and deductions: for the Iewes in our Saviour Chriſts time, were able to make certaine conveyance of their linage and pedigree from Abraham: whereas the truth truth of the continuall succession of Bishops from Peter, the report is very wavering and vncertaine: for Ieroom maketh Peter the first Bishop, Linus the second, Cletus the third, Clemens the fourth, and all successiuely: Irenæus maketh Linus the first, Cletus second. Russinus affirmeth, that Linus and Cletus were Bishops while Peter lived. And where the doubtfull and uncertaine report of ancient writers in this behalfe, doth crack the credit of this argument, which is drawn from the authoritie of this continuall succession; your owne Chronicler commeth and breaketh it all to shivers: whileſt (at unawares he writeth, that all the Popes which sate at Rome for the space of 150 yeares, from Iohn the eighth, untill Leo the ninth, to the number of 50. or thereabout, were Apostaticall rather then Apostolicall, were monstrous, and entred not by the doore, but by a posterne gate, As for these authorities out of the Fathers, it hath been shewed how they used this argument, as a probable coniecture of the truth of their cause, and falshood of their adversaries, rather then as any sound and substanciall proofe: and that they would thereby rather make the cause of the adversary suspected then condemned: which hath been expressly shewed out of Augustine, which teaching that they had weightier and grauer proofes of the truth then that, confesseth thereby that it selfe alone is not able to hold the truth from falling: which notwithstanding it should be able to beare up, if it had the strength of a necessary consequence.

Hieronym. de scriptorib. eccles. Iræn. adverſus Hæres. lib. 3. c. 3. Ruffin. præfat. recognit. Clemens. ad Gaudentiũ. Vide Chronolog. lib. 4. secul. 10.

Tertullian also, which is here cited, teacheth plainly that the Churches which came later to the profession of the Gospell, either by preaching or otherwise, then others: hauing the consanguinity of doctrine with other Churches, are in as good reputation and account of Gods Churches, as the other that can shew the continuall succession of their ministers And therefore Vincentius Lyrinensis alleaging vniuersalitie, antiquitie, and consent, as notes of truth, doth himselfe shew that the truth can haue no perpetuall safetie and constant refuge vnder any of them: and that the holy scripture is the onely touchstone whereby the truth in doubtfull times is to be tried. And it appeareth that Irenæus commeth to this proofe forced by the Hereticks, which refused the Scriptures as doubtful & vncertain: euen as now you flee from the triall by Scripture as these Heretickes then did. Againe, Irenæus sheweth that this continuall succession of Bishops was aswell in all other Churches of the Apostles as in Rome, and therefore it is no prerogatiue of that Church to lift vp the head thereof aboue others. And it is well known that the Greeke Church from Anacletus the Apostle vnto Ieremy that now sitteth hath as good records for the continuall succession of Bishops, as that of Rome. Thirdly it followeth not that because that a catalogue of the succession of Bishops was able to bee afforded for the space of some few hundred yeares, that therefore it hath kept it selfe free from all corruption and iniury that the space of 1500. huue assailed it with.

Verse. 14 That now we be childeren wauering and carried about | with euery wind of doctrine in the wickednesse of men, in craftinesse to the circumuention of errour.

RHEM. 6 [14. With euery wind.] The speciall vse of the spirituall Gouernour is, to keepe vs in vnitie and constancie of the Catholike faith, that we be not carried away with the blast or wind of euery heresie. Which is a very proper note of sects and new doctrines that trouble the infirme weaklings of the Church, by certaine seasons of diuerse ages: as sometimes the Arians, then the Manichees, and other times the Nestorians, then the Lutherans, Caluinists, and such like: who at diuers times in diuers places haue blowen diuers blasts of false doctrine.

CARTVV. 6. [14. With euery wind.] You trust much in the follie and ignorance of your Disciples, which thinke that this breach of yours, the Lutherans and Caluinists haue blowed diuers blasts of false doctrine, will carry them to beleeue you. Chaffe it selfe will hardly stir out of the barne doore with this blast. Wee might with much more truth haue said, that M. Luthers and Calvins doctrine, was like the vehement whirle wind mentioned in the Acts, before which the Popish doctrine hath fled as smoke before the wind; And hereof wee might haue called to witnesse all the countries in Europe, where the vertue and power hereof is so manifestlie euident. Act. 2. 2.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 5 FOR vnderstanding know you this, that no fornicator, or vnclean, or couetous person (which is ‡ the seruice of Idols) hath inheritance in the kingdome of Christ and of God.

RHEM. 1. [5. The seruice.] See the heretical corruption of this place in the Annotation Col. 3. v. 5.

CARTVV. 1. [5. The seruice.] That Idols and Images are all one in matter of religion, look before vpon Act. 19. 35. Rom. 11. 4. 1. Cor. 6. 11. And the Iesuits themselues in their marginall note vpon Rom. 1. 23. vse the words as all one. The Apostle also himselfe condemneth the Gentiles of detestable Idolatrie, not onely for worshipping of creatures, but for that they made the Image and similitude of the incorruptible God, like vnto the forme and frame of a corruptible man.

Verse. 23 Because * the man is the head of the woman, as Christ is the head of the ‡ CHVRCH, himselfe, | the sauiour of his body.

RHEM. [23. CHVRCH.] It is much to bee noted, that in the first English Bible there is not once the name of Church in all the Bible, but in steed thereof Congregation, which is so notorious a corruption, that themselues in the latter Bibles correct it for shame, but yet suffer the other to be read and vsed still. See the Bible printed in the yeere 1562.

CART VV. 2. [23. Church.] It appeareth what degenerate and vnkindly hounds you be, which hunt so hotly after so small game: and how small the errors of our translation bee, when you keepe such stirs and make such outcries for the exchange of one word with another, which your selues cannot deny to bee of one and the same signification. For as both Church & Congregation generally and particularly vsed, note out the company of those which professe godlinesse: so they are both of an indifferent and middle natvre to be called holy and malignant. Onely the fault was in departing from the vsuall and receiued word, which might haue been gentlier handled of you, if you were led with that spirit which reioyceth not in iniquitie, but reioyceth together with the truth: for your selues confesse that it is amended.

ANNOTATIONS.

No saluation out of the Catholik Church.

RHEM 3. [23. Saviour of his body.] None hath saluation or benefit by Christ, that is not of his body the Church. And what Church that is, S. Augustine expresseth in these words The Catholike Church only is the body of Christ, whereof he is head: out of this body the holy Ghost quickneth no man. And a little after, Hee that will haue the Spirit, let him beware hee remaine not out of the Church, let him beware hee enter not into it fayrdly. August. ep 50. ad Bonifacium comitem in fine.

Verse. 24 But as the CHVRCH is subiect to Christ, so also the women to their husbands in all things.

The Church neuer erreth.

RHEM. 4. [24 Subiect to Christ.] The Church is alwayes subiect to Christ, that is not onely vnder him, but euer obedient to his words and commandement. Which is an euident and inuincible demonstration that shee neuer rebelleth against Christ, neuer falleth from him by errour, Idolatry, or false worship, as the Hereticks now, and the Donatists of old did teach.

Gen. 4. 13. 1. Chro. 13. 2. 7. Act. 1. 46. Mat. 16. 18

CART VV. 4. [24. Subiect to Christ.] You falsely report vs when you say we teach that the Church of Christ may generally fall away by error or Idolatrie. We teach, that the whole Church may erre, in that there is a sacrifice appointed for her reconcillation when she erreth: of which general error looke the examples both in the old and new Testament: for although the gates of hell cannot preuaile against her: yet they may shroudly and dangerously wound her.

Verse. 25 Husbands, loue your wiues, as Christ also loued the CHVRCH, and deliuered himself for it:

Christs loue toward his Church.

RHEM. 5. [25. Loued the Church.] Loe Christs singular loue of the Church: for which onely and the members thereof he effectually suffered his Passion, and for whose continuall cleansing and purifying in this life, he instituted holy Baptisme and other Sacraments: that at length in the next life it may become without all spot, wrinkle, or blemish, for in this world by reason of the manifold infirmities of diuers her members, shee cannot bee wholy without sinne, but must say alwayes, Demitte nobis debita nostra. Forgiue vs our debts. August. li. 2. Retract. c. 18.

The Church triumphant without spot or wrinkle.

CART VV. 5 [25. Loued the Church.] Here the Iesuites are taken in the Campe of the Anabaptists: for they affirme that the Church in this world must by reason of the manifold infirmities of diuers of her members, say forgiue vs our debts: Whereby they manifestly declare that they hold that in regard of diuers other her members in this world, she is not bound to say, forgiue vs our debts: which is as opposite to Augustine (whose authoritie they pretend for this sentence) as that which is most, who teacheth, that the Apostles themselues, Paul and others, are in regard of sins committed by themselues, daily so to pray. And the holy Apostle Iohn affirming, that if we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, shutteth himselfe within the number of sinners. That beside baptisme there are no sacraments but one onely sacrament of the supper of the Lord, looke before on Gal. 4. 3.

Verse. 29 For no man euer hated his owne flesh: but he nourished and cherisheth it, as also Christ the CHVRCH.

The manifold dignity of the Church.

RHEM. 6. [29. As Christ the Church.] It is an vnspeakable dignitie of the Church, which the Apostle expresseth often elsewhere, but specially in this whole passage, to be that creature onely for which Christ effectually suffereth, to bee washed, and embrued with water and blood issuing out of his holy side, to be nourished with his own body (for so doth S. Irenæus expound lib. 5. in principio) to bee his members: to bee so ioyned vnto him as the body and members of the same flesh, bone, and substance to the head, to be loued and cherished of him as wife of husband, yea to bee his wife and most deere spouse, taken and formed (as S. Augustine often saith) out of his own side vpon the Crosse, as Eue our first father Adams spouse was made of his ribbe. In Psal. 126. & in psal. 127. & tract. 9. in Ioan. & tract. 120. In respect of which great dignity and excellency, the same holy father affirmeth the Church to bee the principall creature, and therefore named in the Creede next after the holy Ghost, and he proueth against the Macedonians, the Holy Ghost to be God, because he is named before the Church in the cõfession of our faith. Of which incomparable excellency of the Church, so beloued of Christ and so inseparably ioyned in marriage with him, if the Heretikes of our time had any sense or consideration, they would neither think their contemptible company or congregation to be the glorious spouse of our Lord, nor teach that the Church may erre, that is to say, may be diuorced from her spouse for Idolatry, superstition, Heresie, or other abominations: Whereupon one of these absurdities would ensue, that either Christ may sometimes bee without a Church and spouse in earth (as he was all the while there were no Caluinists, if their Church be the spouse of Christ, or else if the Catholike Church onely is and hath been his wife, and the same hath such errors as the Hereticks falsely pretend, that his wife so deere and so praised here, is notwithstanding a very whore. Which horrible absurdities proove and conuince to any man of common sense, both that the Catholicke Church alwayes is, and that it teacheth truth alwayes, and to honour God truely and sincerely alwayes: whatsoeuer the adulterous generation of Hereticks thinke or blaspeme,

The Curch is the principall creature.

The Church cannot erre.

Absurdities that follow, if the Church may erre.

CART VV.

CARTVV. 6. [29. As Christ the Church.] Here is much waſt and idle ſpeech; the whole drift whereof is to diſtreſſe our Sauiour Chriſt, and to put him to this hard choice, that either hee muſt be content to be without a ſpouſe many yeares, or elſe take the whore of Rome for his ſpouſe. And to this end many and glorious things are raked together of the Church. But this glorie and beautie of the Church is meaſured with the Iewiſh ſtandard, who reading of the glory of Chriſt, and of his Church in the Prophets, deſpiſed both him and it; becauſe that glory appeared not in outward ſhew and pompe of the world, but contrariwiſe was darkened and diſgraced with much contempt and ſhame of the world: whereas the glory and beautie of the Church ſtandeth eſpecially in the Law of Chriſt to her, who notwithſtanding that ſhee bee blackiſh both by ſtaine of ſin, and deformitie of afflictions, is yet (through the flame of the loue of Chriſt, wherewith hee loueth her and in loue hath waſhed and bathed her in his own bloud) moſt beautifull and glorious in his ſight. And hereof riſeth the exhortation of the Apoſtle, that men ſhould loue their wiues, although diuerſly and in ſundry ſorts defectiue and blemiſhed, becauſe Chriſt ſo dealeth with his Church. Another point is, that the Church cannot fall away from Chriſt by Idolatry; thereby thinking to win vnto Rome, the credit of an honeſt woman, for that ſometimes ſhee was ſo. Wee graunt that the true Church, (which is the companie of the elect, called to the worſhip of God) cannot fall away. But we teach that the viſible Church, that is, an outward company of men which are called the Church, and ought in mens iudgements for the time ſo to bee accounted of, may fall, either in themſelues or in their ſucceſſours. Which hath been ſeen in the Church of Hieruſalem, otherwiſe priuiledged and endowed with more ſpeciall prerogatiues then euer Rome was: for it is ſaid of it, that being ſometime, the faithfull cittie ſhe became an harlot. We deny not but a great part of the Church may ſometime haue a wanton eye, and commit ſome foule thing, vnworthy that pureneſſe that becommeth the Churches virginitie; and yet not vtterly fall away; as it is euident in the Church of the Corinthes deſtained with a kind of Idolatry. But that the Church of Rome, which hauing (declined by little and little euen from the Apoſtles times) hath laid her ſelfe open to euery one that paſſed by, and fornicated with gold, and ſiluer, wood and ſtone in town and field, ſhould bee notwithſtanding the ſpouſe of Chriſt, will not agree with his holy iealouſie, and praiſe worthy impatience of bearing ſuch ſhameleſſe adulteries, as ſhe is polluted with. Yet hath not our Sauiour Chriſt, therefore wanted his ſpouſe becauſe Kings daughters haue not alwayes waited vpon her with a traine great in number and glorious in ſhew. For herein it fareth often with the Church of Chriſt, as ſometime with the remnant of Iſrael, which were caried into the wilderneſſe, where none could come to her, nor ſhe to none, and there fed very thinely for the ſpace of ſome hundred years, as it were with an Omer and an halfe of barley for her daily food, without King, without Prieſt, and without other her ſpouſe-like Iewels which ſometime ſhee had inioyed, there that ſpace chaſtly to waite vntill the Lord would giue her towns and cities to inhabit as in former times. And therfore the Prophet Eſay, when the tempeſt of Gods iudgements ſhould come vpon the Church which ſhe had ſtirred vp by her ſins againſt the Lord, counſelleth her that ſhe ſhould go into her cloſe chamber & hide her ſelfe vntill the Lords indignation be paſt. For which cauſe Salomon compareth the Church of Chriſt through all ages vnto a turtle doue, which while it is winter and raynie weather, & in attendance & waiting for of the ſpring time, is hidden in the clefts of the rock. And it is no maruell although the Church, vnder her poore habit be not known of the world to be the Church of God, ſeeing our Sauiour Chriſt whoſe glory was ſeene of a few of his diſciples, as a glory meete for the Son of God, was not acknowledged of his own, who in all likelihood ſhould ſooneſt and moſt willingly haue receiued him. All which proofe of the obſcure and hidden eſtate of the Church, ſometimes needed not, if it were not now yea, and then no with you, as the contrariety of the principles of your religion driue you to ſpeake. For to ſhift the Pope from being the Antichriſt which Paul ſpeaketh of, you are conſtrained to confeſſe that the Church may be ſmall, and without outward ſhew; and conſequentlie hidden and obſcure.

Marriage a Sacrament.

Who would haue thought ſuch Myſteries and Sacraments to be in Marriage, that the ioyning of man and wife together ſhould repreſent ſo great a myſterie, if the Apoſtle himſelfe, and after him this holy father and others, had not noted it? or who can maruaile that the holy Church taketh this to be a Sacrament, & to giue grace of ſanctification to the parties married that they may liue together in mutuall fidelitie, bring vp their children in faith and feare of God, and poſſeſſe their veſſell (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) in ſanctification and honour, and not in paſſion of luſt and ignominy, as the Heathen doe which know not God, and as our brutiſh new maiſters ſeeme to doe that commend marriage aboue all things ſo far as it feedeth their concupiſcences, but for grace, Sacrament, myſtery, or ſanctification thereby, they care no more then the Heathen or bruite beaſts doe? And thus wee gather that Matrimony is a Sacrament, and not of the Greeke word Myſtery onely, as Caluin falſely ſpith, not of the Latine word Sacrament, both which wee know haue of their nature a more generall μυστήριον. Sacramentum. ſignification, and that in the Scriptures alſo: but whereas theſe names are here giuen to Matrimony by the Apoſtle, and are not giuen in the Scriptures to Baptiſme & the Euchariſt, let them tell vs why they alſo apply theſe words from their generall ſignification to ſignifie ſpecially and peculiarly theſe two Sacraments neuer ſo named expreſly in Scripture, and do not likewiſe follow the Catholike Church in calling Matrimony by the ſame name, which is here ſo called of the Apoſtle ſpecially whereas the ſignification in it, is as great as in any other of the Sacraments, and rather greater.

CARTVV. 7. [12 This is a great Sacrament.] To the Papiſts which are deptiued of all light of the word of God, it may eaſily befall to thinke that Matrimonie is a Sacrament: For they being ſick of a continuall feuer, and ſhaking in all the principall points of Religion, haue many ſtrange dreames which others meet not with. Otherwiſe how muſt they not needs haue ſeen, that the Apoſtle having ſpoken of the coniunction of man and wife, and of Chriſt and his Church, doth of purpoſe reſtraine theſe words of great Myſterie, or Sacrament (as they terme it) unto our Saviour Chriſt and his Church, ſaying purpoſely, I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church: For having immediately before ſpoken of the knot between man and wife, becauſe theſe words of great Myſterie, might be carried from the coniunction of Chriſt and his Church unto the bond which is between a man and his wife, doth by theſe words (I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church) as it were, firſt raiſe up a wall to ſhut forth from this great Myſterie the coniunction of man and wife; and then make a chaine, the firſt linke whereof being faſtened unto our Saviour Chriſt, the laſt is tyed unto the Churches girdle.

And if there were not theſe forcible words to ſeale up the mouthes of all contentious wranglers and wreſters of the word of God; yet the very nature of a Sacrament would eaſily convince this counterfeit forge and ſtamp of a Church Sacrament. For how can it be a Church Sacrament, which hath neither element nor word of promiſe? For that they ſay, that thereby is given grace of ſanctification to liue in mutuall fidelity, is utterly abſurd: conſidering that Baptiſme ſealing up all manner of riſing from the death of ſinne to newneſſe of life, doth ſeale unto us all the graces which wee haue need of in any ſtate of our life. And they might as well by this reaſon make a Sacrament between father and ſon, maiſter and ſeruant, Prince and Subiect: ſeeing unto all the faithfull (ioyned together in theſe ſocieties) the grace of ſanctification is given to behaue themſelues ſo towards one another, as the place and calling of each towards other doth require. Againe, when the Sacraments are the peculiar and proper poſſeſſion of the Church of Chriſt, how can that be a Sacrament which is (and lawfully may be uſed) out of the Church amongſt the Turkes and Iewes, to whom
1. Cor. 7. 13. 14. the benefite of Matrimony cannot be denied? And as this doctrine is abſurd in all mens mouthes, ſo it may worſt become the Papiſts thus to ſpeake, which barre their Prieſts from this their Sacrament, whom it is ſo farre to make more ſacred and holy, that they eſteeme better of him that liueth in fornication, then of him which ioyneth himſelfe with a wife.

Their ſhifts alſo are ſhamefull which they are driuen upon, whilſt they affirme Marriage in the Church under the Law, no Sacrament, which now (forſooth) becomes a Sacrament under the Goſpell: when it is euident, that under the Law ſundry things were Sacraments, which under the Goſpell are none. But that it ſhould be no Sacrament under the Law (when the childiſh eſtate of that time craued multitude of Sacraments) which under the Goſpell is a Sacrament, when the full age
1. Cor. 10. 24. of the beleeuers is content with a ſmall number, hath no example nor likelyhood at all: But of the contrary ſide, as the Apoſtle diſputeth, that their Baptiſme and ſpirituall banquet were aſwell Sacraments as ours; ſo it may be truely ſaid, that their Marriage had as much of the nature of a Sacrament as ours. And albeit the coniunction of the man and wife in Matrimony doth in part ſet forth the ſpirituall coniunction between Chriſt and his Church; as that Chriſt and the Church are one, even as the man and wife muſt be one, and that he loueth his Church as a man loueth his wife; yet hath it not therefore any more approach unto the nature of a Sacrament, then hath a Vine, which nouriſheth and quickneth her branches, as our Saviour Chriſt doth his Church. The cheiſe reſemblance
Ioh. 15. 4-6 of all, wherein the ſtrength of this ſuppoſed Sacrament is principally placed, hath been ſhewed (upon Math. 5. & 19.) to haue no correſpondence between them: where it hath been declared that through breach of Wedlock the parties are at liberty to marry againe, during the life each of other.

And although Matrimony could not be diſſolued but by death: yet were it not able thus to match the indiſſoluble bond which is between Chriſt and his Church, whoſe ſpirituall Matrimony neither is, nor was ever diſſolued by death, either of Bride or Bridegroome. And if in this point a reſemblance and ſimilitude had been ſought, it would haue been more fitly found in this: that as the corporall marriage of man and wife is diſſolued by breach of faith either to other: ſo the ſpirituall marriage between Chriſt and his Church is then broken off, when the Church hath falſified her faith wherein ſhe was betrothed: For by death of either of the parties in the ſpirituall Marriage there is not onely any knot looſed, but not ſo much as ſlacked; nay, it is yet by death more firmely and faſtly tyed: whereas by ſpirituall whooredom it is dangerouſly aſſailed, and ſhould bee utterly undone, if the Lord in mercy ſhould not ranſome it, and by his gift of repentance make it ſure. It is alſo a paſſing impudency, ſo confidently to affirm, that the Apoſtle giueth the name of ſacrament unto Matrimony: whereas the word myſtery, which the Apoſtle uſeth, ſignifieth a hidden and μυστήριον. ſecret thing. And if they will make all hidden and ſecret things Sacraments, the whole religion and Goſpell of Chriſt, and euery part and parcell thereof, ſhall be transformed into Sacraments. So ſhall
1. Cor. 2. 7 Eph. 3. 4. 1. Tim. 3. 16 all be Sacraments, and no promiſes: all ſhall be ſignes, and nothing ſignified. It is not therefore the Apoſtle that giueth the name of a Sacrament unto Matrimony, but your ſelues, who upon a ſlip of the old Interpreter, in tranſlation of a word, haue fallen groſſely into this palpable error; whom if you cannot endure to be corrected by others, which haue better expreſſed the nature of the word Coloſ. 1. 27. here, then he did: yet you might beare to be reformed by himſelfe, who otherwhere tranſlateth the ſame word to be a myſtery or ſecret, as we haue done. And if you obſtinating your ſelues, you will

ſay, that in good diſcretion and ſharpe iudgement, hee tranſlated one and the ſame word ſometime ſacrament, and otherwhiles ſecret, or myſtery, according to the exigence of the place: beſide that, you can bring no proofe hereof out of any of the Maſters of this tongue, you are manifeſtly convinced by his tranſlation in another place, where he hath beſtowed this word ſacrament upon thoſe things, whereunto (in your owne iudgement) it cannot agree, un'eſſe unto your number of ſeven ſacraments you will adde three more: which glut if you bring in, it is to be feared, that your market and gain was never ſo made, by multiplying two to ſeven, as it will be mard by the increaſe of ſeven unto thirteen. 1. Tim. 3. 16

It is alſo falſe, that the word that is here given (as we proue) unto the ſpirituall coniunction, as you ſay, unto the corporall marriage, is not given in the Scripture unto Baptiſme and the Euchariſt. For when Paul ſaith, that the Miniſters of Chriſt are ſtewards of the myſteries of God, uſing the ſame word which he doth in this place, he doth under the roome and capacitie thereof comprehend as well the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, as the preaching of the word: ſo that the word myſtery, or (as you will needs haue it) ſacrament, is there affirmed both of Baptiſme and the Euchariſt. 1. Cor. 4. 1.

Touching Auguſtine, it hath been anſwered, that he taketh the word ſacrament largely, and not properly for an outward ſeale to teſtifie the grace of God in Chriſt for remiſſion of ſins. There is nothing hereof 25. Tract. in Ioan. where he is flat againſt you: for he expoundeth the marriage of Adam and Eue to haue been a ſacrament, which yet could not be an Evangelicall Sacrament, as you hold it. Yea in the ſame ſence that he calleth marriage a ſacrament, he calleth Polygamy, or marriage of many wiues at once under the Law, a ſacrament, ſignifying the multitude of the Gentiles that ſhould be ſubiect unto God. Againe, foraſmuch as in that 9. Tract. he ſaith, that there are ſacraments hidden in it, and not a ſacrament, he declareth evidently, that by ſacraments, he meaneth nothing elſe but myſticall ſenſes, which he promiſeth to open and unfold before them. And againe, theſe words (This is a great ſacrament) he preciſely putteth from the corporall matrimony of man and wife, and tieth them unto the ſpirituall coniunction of Chriſt and his Church, ſaying, Leſt any ſhould underſtand this greatneſſe of the ſacrament to be in euery one that hath a wife, he ſaith, This I ſay of Chriſt and his Church, that this is a great ſacrament. Aug. Tract. 9. in Ioan. Aug. de bono coniugal. c. 18.

The reſt of the teſtimonies of Auguſtine haue the ſame anſwer: your railing and reuilings ſhall haue none.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

RHEMIST.

HOW S. Paul was called by a viſion into Macedonia, we read Act. 16. and how he came to Philippi being the firſt Citty thereof, and of his preaching, miracles, and ſufferings there. And again, Act. 19. Paul purpoſed in the ſpirit, when he had paſſed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Hieruſalem, ſaying: after I haue been there, I muſt ſee Rome alſo. Which purpoſe hee executed Act. 20. taking his leaue at Epheſus. And being afterward come into Achaia, he had counſell to returne through Macedonia, and ſo at length from Philippi hee began his nauigation toward Hieruſalem, and from Hieruſalem being caried priſoner to Rome (Act. 28.) he wrote from thence this Epistle to the Phillippians: or rather in his second reprehension. about 10. yeares after the first.

Ephes. 3. In it he confirmeth them (as hee did * the Ephesians also about the same time) against the tentation
Phil. 1. v. 12 23. 26. that they might haue in hearing that he were executed, therefore he first saith, And I will haue you know brethren, that the things about me, are come to the more furtherance of the Gospell: so that my bands were made manifest in Christ in all the Court, &c. Secondly he signifieth that his desire is, to be dissolued and to be with Christ, but yet (least they should be discomforted) that hee hopeth to come againe to them.
Phil. 2. v. 23. 24. 27. Whereof notwithstanding, that he hath yet no certainetie, he signifieth in saying: I hope to send Timothee vnto you, immediately as I shall see the things that concerne mee. Thirdly therefore he prepareth them against the worst, saying, I hope to come againe vnto you, but and if I be immolated vpon the service and sacrifice of your faith, I reioyce and congratulate with you all, and the selfesame thing doe you also reioyce and congratulate with me.

Moreouer he partly warneth them (as he had done before (of those Iudaicall false-Apostles who Phil. 3. preached circumcision & Moses law to the Christian Gentils: partly he exhorteth them to suffer persecution, to liue wel, and specially to humble themselues one to another rather then by any pride to break the peace and vnity of the Church.

THE EPISTLE OF PAVL TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

CHAP. I.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 PAVL and Timothee the seruants of Iesus Christ: to all the Sancts in Christ Iesus that are at Philippi, with the ! Bishops and Deacons.

RHEM. 1. [2. Bishops and Deacons.] Wickleffe and other Heretickes would prooue by this that Priests are not here named, and for that there could not be many Bishops of this one town, that there is no difference betwixt a Bishop and a Priest, which was the old heresie of Arius, of which matter, in other places: for this present it is enough to know that in the Apostles time there were not obserued alwayes proper distinct names of either function as they were quickly afterward, though they were alwayes diuers degrees and distinct functions, See S. Chrysost. Oecumen. Theophyl. and the rest of the Grecians vpon this place.

Bishops and Priests alwaies distinct functions. See Annot. Tit. 1. v. 5.

CARTVV. 1. [2. Bishops and Deacons.] The Apostle maketh here a most exact and exquisite diuision of the ordinary Church ministery, when he cuteth it into Bishops and Deacons, even as is also done in sundry other places: for under the name of Bishop hee vnderstandeth both Pastor and
Rom. 12. 6. 7. Doctor, as it appeareth Rom. 12. 7. 8. and likewise 1. Tim. 3. 2. where he noteth the proper qualitie of
1. Tim. 3. 1. 8. a Bishop (agreeing as well to the Doctor as to the Pastor) to be an abilitie to teach. And vnder the
1. Pet. 4. 11 name of Deacons, he setteth forth both the Elders of the Church, which goueme together with the Bishop, as those which are called by the generall name of Deacons, which deale with the Church treasure, as likewise appeareth manifestly, Rom. 12. 8. and may be also gathered by 1. Tim. 3. 8, &c. where the Apostle describeth such qualities as are required both of the one and the other: although more heapedly in the Elder then in the Deacon, as they are more abundantly required in them both, then in the rest of the body of the Church. Out of this place therefore may well bee refelled the common error, that in one Citty or Church there may be but one Bishop: where it is euident out of
Act. 20 17 21. this place, and otherwhere, that in one Cittie there were moe then one, which error came in not many hundred yeares after the Apostles times. The occasion whereof seemeth to haue risen, that the Churches of Christ (in times when there were no Christian Magistrates) suffering great disturbances by hereticall and schismaticall Synagogues, which started up in the same Citties, where the true Churches had planted themselues, it came to passe, that in the same Church (as it were twins in one belly) there was striving and struggling of one Bishop with another. For whereas the ancient Bishop bewailed the reliance of two Bishops in one Church, whereof one was oppolite and contrary to the other, and two Altars (as they speake) one erected against another: their successors (carried away rather by ambition then misled by errour) wrested those complaints and lamentations of their predecessors, to the banishing of all number of Bishops assistant unto the truth, which the other meant of resistant. As if upon treason found in one of the Watch-men of the Citie, the Burgesses thereof should ever after make a Law, that how large and how perillously soever the Citie

should be besieged, there should be but one Watchman to discover the enemies at all the gates of the Citie: Whereas, seeing he onely is a true Bishop which is apt to teach, and to convince false doctrine: it must needs follow, that one such being oftentimes insufficient for the furniture of some one Church (much lesse for many Churches in one Citie) others ought to be added for supply thereof. It cannot be denied but this order was stricken at by certaine Canons of Councels: yet did they not so generally prevaile, in the declining times, but that it admitted exception in places of best renowne for good government of the Church: Which hath evident proofe both generall and particular. Generall out of Ierome, who witnesseth, that the appropriating of the name of Bishop to one onely in a Church, over-spread not the Church suddenly, and at a clap, but entred in by little and little: so that it is like, that there were divers ages passed, or ever this custome had passage throughout all the world. Particular, in that it is recorded of Augustine, that he was made Bishop of Hippo, by the instant request of Valerius another Bishop there, and by consent of the Metropolitan of Carthage: Where albeit (in consideration of Councels to the contrary) he was loath to take the charge, yet being instantly required he accepted it. Augustine himselfe also was of iudgement, that in those places where was a Donatist Bishop and a Catholicke; if the Donatist returned unto the unitie of the Church, he should be received into the fellowship of the Bishops office with the Catholick Bishop: where he putteth onely these exceptions, If the people will suffer it, If because it is not accustomed the people will beare it: Whereby it is evident that Augustine esteemed it but of custome, and other by-grounds, that in one Church there should bee but one onely Bishop: where if he esteemed it repugnant unto the Word, he would never either haue admitted it in himselfe, or counselled it unto others. Againe, saying, that Cyprian communicated the Lords Supper, not onely with his people and common sort of the Clergie, but with Bishops themselues: it seemeth that in some part of Cyprians time, the custome of having one onely Bishop in a Church, had not gotten so firme footing as to haue thrust out all good fellowship of Bishoply charge in one Church. Eusebius also maketh mention of two Bishops at once in one parish. And if it be true which hee reporteth, that the same was by revelation from heaven, it is certaine, that this voyce was a repeale of that custome of the Church that had been brought in contrary to the first institution of the Scripture.

As for their shift, that in the Apostles time there were not observed proper distinct names of functions, as they were quickely after by Chrisostome, &c. it is worthy to proceed from their blasphemous mouthes: For howsoever they craftily go about to cover it, yet their meaning is, and must needs be whether they will or no, that not onely the Apostles times did not so well distinguish the names of Church offices, as did the times of Chrysostome, &c. but also that the Apostles themselues did not so properly and so distinctly speak of them as did Chrysostome, &c. which is as much to say, as the fathers spake not so distinctly as their children, the masters so exactly as their schollers: which though it were not impossible, when men are compared with men; yet when (as in this case) the fathers and masters speake with the tongue of God, and the children and schollars with the lips of men, it is more absurd then any sufficiencie or commoditie of speech is able to utter. It were dishonourable to Christ to giue him lesse abilitie in fitting every Church matter with proper termes, then to the first Adam (whilst yet his wisedome remained with him) in calling the creatures by their aptest names. How much more then are they outragious against him, which affirme that sinfull and corrupt men speak more distinctly of Gods matters, then the second Adam Christ: For whatsoever is heere spoken of the unproper and undistinct speech of Paul, the same cleaveth not unto his person, but from him rebounds unto the person of Christ, who both spake and wrote by him. If it bee hereticall in VVicklisse to say that an Elder differeth not from a Bishop, he hath herein companions, not Arius the hereticke, as you account him, but Ierome and Augustine that were Catholike Writers, as shall appeare in that place, whither the consideration hereof is reserved.

CHAP. II.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 9 FOR which thing God also hath exalted him, and hath giuen him a name which is aboue all names:

RHEM. 1. [9. For the which.] Calvin doth so abhor the name of merit in Christian men toward their own saluation, that he wickedly and vnlearnedly denieth Christ himselfe to haue deserued or merited any thing for himselfe: though these words which (he shamefully writeth from the proper & plain sense, to signifie a sequele, & not a cause of his exaltation) and diuers other in holy writ proue, that he merited for himselfe according to all learned mens iudgement, As Apoc 5. The lamb that was slain is worthy to receiue power and Diuinitie. And Heb. 2. Wee see Iesus for the passion of death, crowned with glory and honour. See S. Augustine vpon these words of the Psalm 109. propterea exaltabit caput.

Calvins blasphemy against Christs own merits.

CARTVV. 1. [9. For the which] That Christ according to his manhood deserued not the glory whereunto he was exalted, is an evident plain doctrine. For this dignitie which he obtained, that he should be personally united unto the Godhead, thereby to be worshipped of men and Angels, is such an excellency as no man nor Angell is able to deserue. Which is also confirmed by the place of the Psalme (alledged by the Apostle, and applied unto Christ) marvelling that God would haue such respect unto man, and visit him so as to make him Lord of all things. Wherefore it is wholy against the streame of that place, to proue the merit of Christ. And therefore they haue disappointed the words of the Apostle, carrying them to the latter clause of the sentence, that must be coupled with the former.

Psa. 84. 6. Heb. 2. 6. 9

former. For in ſtead that the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt was for a ſmall time made inferiour vnto Angels, becauſe of the ſuffering of death, they make him ſay, that Ieſus for the paſsion of death was crowned with glory, &c. it being euident, that the Apoſtle hauing before noted an inferiority of Chriſt for a time vnto the Angels, doth herein declare wherein that doth conſiſt. Albeit, if their ſence were admitted, yet the ſame muſt needs rather note the order or ſequell then the cauſe of his glory. For as Chriſt could not deſerue to haue his manhood ioyned with his God-head into the vnity of one perſon: ſo for that perſonall vnitie of the manhood with the Godhead, he deſerued at his very conception to haue the chiefeſt place aboue all creatures both in heauen and in earth. And had it not been for our cauſe, he ſhould forthwith from his birth haue been rapt vp into the higheſt heavens, there to haue remained in glory for evermore. And therefore the place Apoc. 5. 9. of the worthineſſe of Chriſt to receiue all glory, is nothing to this queſtion. For the worthineſſe there ſpoken of, is not conſidered in regard of that worke which Chriſt was worthy to receiue for himſelfe, but in regard of that which he was worthy to receiue for vs. Now he was worthy for himſelfe after the perſonall vnitie, to know all myſteries, and to receiue all glory without regard of any worke that euer he did: but to be worthy to receiue it, that we might be partakers of it, could not be (with ſafety of Gods iuſtice) but by his obedience, and that to the death of the croſſe. And this is the worthineſſe which the Angels doe ſo dignifie and commend in Ieſus Chriſt. Again, being choſen and predeſtinate vnto it before the beginning of the world, when he had deſerued nothing, vnleſſe you will make the cauſe come after the effect, his workes that he wrought cannot be cauſes of his felicity. Which doctrine, euident in it ſelfe, is ſtrengthened by Auguſtine, who teacheth, that Gods election or reprobation, is neuer made in regard of workes forepaſt and to come. And euen in this very cauſe of our Saviour Chriſt, he teacheth that he was choſen of God, not in regard of workes, but of grace.

Aug. de prædeſt. c. 12. & de perſeu. c. 9. 10. Lib. de bono perſeuer. ca. 24.

Hereof the reader may ſee how poyſoned tongues the Ieſuites haue, which cry out blaſphemy, wickedneſſe, and vnlearnednesſe in M. Calvin, for that which is manifeſtly proved out of the word of God, and approued by Auguſtines teſtimony: whereas the iudgement of M. Calvin is ſound, and his purpoſe holy, which is, to hold men wholy in the conſideration of the loue of Chriſt towards them, in that he will haue all that which either he did or ſuffered, to be carried to the price of our redemption onely. Wherefore to ſay, that Chriſt by his workes merited for himſelfe, is to diminiſh both the loue of God, and of Chriſt towards vs; whileſt his obedience, which is wholy for vs, is thus parted between him and vs, contrary to the Prophet, who affirmeth, that his ſuffering of death was nothing to him: which he would not haue ſaid, if he merited thereby to haue had a place of ſo great maieſty, as now he is poſſeſſed of.

Dan. 9. 26.

Verſe. 10 That * in the ! name of Ieſus euery knee bowe of the celeſtials, terreſtrials, and infernals:

The Proteſtants will haue no reuerence done at the name of Ieſus.

RHEM. 2. [10. Name of Ieſus.] By the like wickedneſſe they charge the faithfull people for capping or kneeling when they heare the name of IESVS, as though they worſhipped not our Lord God therein, but the ſyllables or letters or other materiall elements whereof the word written or ſpoken conſiſteth, and all this, by ſophiſtications to draw the people from due honour and deuotion toward Chriſt Ieſus, which is Satans drift by putting ſcruples into poore ſimple mens mindes about his Sacraments, his Saincts, his croſſe, his name, his image, and ſuch like, to aboliſh all true religion out of the world, and to make them plaine Atheiſts. But the Church knoweth Satans cogitations, and therefore by the Scriptures and reaſon, warranteth and teacheth all her children to do reuerence when ſo euer Ieſus is named, becauſe Catholikes doe not honour theſe things nor count them holy, for their matter, colour, ſound, and ſyllables, but for the reſpect and relation they haue to our Sauiour, bringing vs to the remembrance and apprehenſion of Chriſt, by ſight, hearing, or vſe of the ſame ſignes, elſe why make we not reuerence at the name of Ieſus the ſon of Sirach, as well as of Ieſus Chriſt. And it is a pittifull caſe to ſee theſe prophane ſubtilities of Heretickes to take place in religion, which were ridiculous in all other trade of life. When wee heare our Prince or Soueraine named, wee may without theſe ſcruples doe obeiſance, but towards Chriſt it muſt be ſuperſtitious.

How Catholickes honour the name of Ieſus, and other things pertaining to him.

CARTVV. 2. [10. Name of Ieſus.] This durt which they daſh vs with, is as well made of them, as throwne by them. For it is falſe, that we will haue no reverence given to the name of Ieſus. We ſay, that there ought to be no other honour or reuerence given vnto it, then vnto the name of Chriſt, of Lord, of God. And further we ſay, that this ſuppleneſſe of your knees, in bowing at the name of Ieſus, is nothing but a maske to hide the ſtarkneſſe and numbneſſe of all the ioynts of your ſoule, in your ſubmiſſion to the commandement of Ieſus. For it is well knowne, that your knees, which are Camell-like in the curteſie which you giue vnto this name, are ioyntleſſe and Elephant-like in your obedience vnto his precepts, to whom this name appertaineth. Thirdly, we teſtifie, that this is a will-worſhip, not onely troubleſome vnto the aſſembly by irkſome ſcraping of the pauement, and vnſeaſonable interruption of that which is read or preached; but pernitious in regard of the ſuſpition that it may moue of the inequalitie of the perſons in Trinity, whileſt a title of the Sonne being honoured with cap and knee, the other haue neither bonnet vailed, nor foot moued to teſtifie any honour vnto them. Their vaunt of Scripture for proofe of this worſhp, muſt needs avaunt. For this being the onely ſtay which they can pretend out of Scripture, maketh nothing for it. Firſt, for that the name of Ieſus in this place ſignifieth not any title or note whereby Chriſt is called, but his authority, and whatſoever is glorious and excellent within him, as in divers places it doth likewiſe appeare. Secondly, for that he underſtandeth not by the word knee the member of the body, whereby men giue a ſignification of reverence towards the perſons whom they honour, but (by a borrowed ſpeech) the ſubiection and bending of all creatures vnto the infinite power of Chriſt. So that the ſoules departed and Angels (which haue no knees) are ſubject vnto this curtiſing as well as men which liue vpon earth. If therefore the heavenly Spirits can yeeld this ſubiection vnto Chriſt without curteſing at the name of Iesus, it followeth that this exposition of bowing the knee is farre from the meaning of the Apostle. Thirdly, for that the kneeing and curtesying here spoken of, is performed as well by the wicked and disobedient, as by the holy and obedient spirits; it is plaine, that all kind of reverence being a voluntary and franke worship of Christ after the prescript of his word, is without all warrant of this place.

Act. 2. 38. & 3. 16. & 4. 10. 12 & 5. 40. Col. 3. 17.

This Scripture making nothing for them, their reason, although it were likely, cannot beare it out. And where they would free themselues from superstition in syllables, because they bow not at the name of Iesus the sonne of Syrach, the same maketh against them, which haue deuised such a worship as at unawares they may giue as well to Iesus the sonne of Syrach, as to Iesus the sonne of God: whilest the knee iumping with the first utterance of the word Iesus, preventeth oftentimes the pronuntiation of the other words of the sonne of Syrach. The very danger therefore of communicating of this worship with others, which they would haue proper to our Saviour Christ, might easily haue admonished them of the insufficiency of this service, And seeing the name of Iesus in the son of Nun, and in the high Priest of the same name, of whom onely we are assured that they were rightly thus called, is the same with the name ascribed unto Christ, we see not by what reason honour may be withdrawn from the one, which is given unto the other: especially considering that they had not this title of Iesus in their own right, but in the right of Christ, whose figures and liuely representations they were. And if other might with-hold it, yet you which giue the same honour to the image which you giue unto the thing it selfe, cannot be conceived so to do: What will you answer to this, that as you are in danger of superstition in the former point, so in this you are charged with prophaneneſſe, which neither cap nor curtesie at the name of Iesus out of the Church where the name is the same, and as well to be honoured without as within the Church: which service you performe in the crosse, whereunto you do homage as well when it standeth in the field, as when it it is erected in the Chancels.

Heb. 4. 8.
2. Nicen. Concil.

To your other reason, that in reverence we uncouer our heads at the name of Princes: wee answer, that if it were so, yet the civill honour is not tyed to such strict lawes, as is the divine: therefore there is greater freedome of choice in the one, then in the other. And it is known what is said of civill honour, that it rather standeth in the will and iudgement of the giver then of the taker, which is cleane contrary in the honour of God, which dependeth of the pleasure and commandement of him that taketh it, and not of him that giveth it.

Aristot. Ethic.

Verse. 12 Therefore my deerest (as you haue alwaies obeyed) not as in the presence of me onely, but much more now in my absence, with feare and trembling worke your salvation.

RHEM. [12. With feare and trembling.] Against the vaine presumption of Heretikes that make men secure of their predestination & saluation, he willeth the Phillippians to work their saluation with feare and trembling according to that other Scripture, Blessed is the man that alwayes is fearfull, Prou. 28. v. 14.

Vaine security of saluation.

CARTVV. [12 Feare and trembling.] This feare is a feare of displeasing and provoking Christ who is exalted into so great Maiesty, and not a feare of falling away from him, or doubt whether he loveth us or no. And it is the feare which the child and wife beare towards their parents or husband: whom they are so much more afraid to offend, by how much they know they are tenderly beloved of them. And therefore this feare hath the comfort and ioy of the holy Ghost ioyned withall, where the other is accompanied with paine and griefe. This is manifest by Proverb. 28. 14. which you alleage, where to him that feareth is opposed, not he which is surely perswaded of the loue of God, but he onely which hardneth his heart to sin. Otherwise the same Salomon affirmeth, that a iust man is confident, and is no more afraid then a yong Lyon: when the wicked, by reason of his heart unstaied in the grace of God, flyeth where no man pursueth him. David and Paul are plentifull witnesses, that feare doth not shut forth a certainty of obtaining that for the which they were afraid. For although they knew undoubtedly, the one that he should be King, and the other that he should escape drowning upon the Seas; yet there was neither of them which was not afraid of the lets and staies which might hinder the attainement of their promised good.

Verse. 13 For it is God that worketh in you both to will and to accomplish, according to his good will.

RHEM. [13. Worketh in you.] Of this thus saith S. Augustine, Not because the Apostle saith it is God that worketh in you both to will and worke, must we thinke he taketh away our free-will. For if it were so, then would he not a little before haue willed them to worke their own saluation with feare and trembling. For when they be commanded to worke, their free-will is called upon: but with trembling and feare, is added, lest by attributing their well working to themselues, they might bee proud of their good deeds as though they were of themselues. Aug. de grat. & lib. arbit. c. 9.

S. Augustine answereth the obiection against free-will.

CARTVV. [13 VVorketh in you.] It is worthy to be obserued, that the opinion of free-will to chuse good or evill, which the Papists make the fountaine of good workes, is heere assigned of the Apostle to be the overthrow of all holy conversation, and to engender a security and carelesnesse to please God. For he sheweth that men are holden in this bridle of feare to offend the Lord, because it is God that worketh all, both beginning and ending, both will and deed. As if he should say: If it were in your power to keepe your selues from the infection and pollution of sinne, you needed not to walk so circumspectly and fearefully against it, because when you will, you may repent and turne over a new leafe, after you haue taken your fill of your lusts. But now when you perceiue that all is of God, not onely to do good, but even to will that which is good, you must take heed that you let not slip the opportunities of well-doing which the Lord offereth you. Wherefore the Iesuites must needs haue hard faces, which both against the plaine words of the Apoſtle, affirming that the will to do good is as well the gift of God, as the abilitie to performe it, and againſt the circumſtance of the place, would ſet up the horne of freewill. Auguſtine de grat. & lib. arbit c.9. affirming that we haue free-will, oppoſeth manifeſtly free-will to compulſion and conſtraint; that whether wee will any good thing by grace, or evill by nature, that the ſame is freely and of our own accord done, and not by conſtraint. Wherefore he ſaith otherwhere, that we are not dragged by neceſſity, neither to vertue nor to vice: otherwiſe where neceſſitie is, there is no crown. And even in this booke of God whereout they alleage this teſtimony, he affirmeth, that we keep the commandements if we will, but that the will is prepared. And again, Of him we muſt aſke that we may will ſo much as may ſuffice, that by willing we may bring to paſſe: Where he citeth this very teſtimonie of the Apoſtle, that the will is the gift of God. Wherefore when in theſe words which you alledged he ſaith, that Wel doing or working is of God, and not of themſelues, he underſtandeth not onely the performance and effecting of a good work, but alſo the good will to begin to do the ſame. The will therefore to do well being the free gift of God, it is cleere that it is not in our power to make choice of that which is good. Yet more plainely hee uttereth thus, when he ſaith, that without us he worketh that wee ſhould will, but when we will, and will ſo that we do alſo, then hee worketh together with us.

RHEM. 5. [17. The ſacrifice.] The obedience of faith and martyrdom be ſo acceptable acts to God, when they be voluntarily referred to his honour, that by a metaphore they be called ſacrifices and pleaſant hoſtes to God.

CARTVV. 5. [17 The ſacrifice.] The Ieſuites are deceived, which eſteeme that Pauls martyrdome is called a ſacrifice: for the Philippians being by the Preaching of the Goſpell, as it were ſlaine with the ſword of the ſpirit, are ſaid to be offered up in ſacrifice unto God, As for his Martyrdom hee compareth it not unto a ſacrifice, but unto the drink offering, which was annexed unto the ſacrifice to the perfecting of it. The ſimilitude of the ſhedding of bloud anſwering aptly unto the powring forth of the wine.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 11 IF be any meanes I ‡ may come to the reſurrection, which is from the dead.

RHEM. 1. [11. If by any meanes.] If S. Paul ceaſed not to labour ſtill, as though we were not ſure to come to the marke without continuall endeuour: what ſecurity may we poore ſinners haue of Heretikes perſwaſions and promiſes of ſecuritie and ſaluation by onely faith.

CARTVV. 2. [11. If by any meanes] This conditionall note, If I may come, is no note of doubting, as you ſurmiſe, but a token of difficultie in atchieving a thing thereby to awake us to all carefull and diligent endevour. Which may be eaſily concluded hereof, for that it was written, that our conformity to the reſurrection of Chriſt cannot be ſeparated from the coniunction in his death. Seeing therefore the Apoſtle doubteth not of his conformitie with Chriſt in his death, it followeth, that of his likeneſſe and reſemblancee with him in his reſurrection, he could haue no doubtfull ſcruple. Againe, the words in the next verſe (where he affirmeth, that he was comprehended by Chriſt) doe plainly teach that he nothing doubted of his ſalvation, ſeeing that thoſe which he laieth hold of, he never looſeth, nor ſuffereth to be pulled out of his hand. Hitherto belong his often ſpeeches of his certaine and undoubted ſalvation, without the ſhot and danger of any enemies, within or without, aboue or beneath: as when he ſaith, that he runneth not at an uncertaine mark, or beateth the aire. Alſo, that he hath finiſhed his courſe, kept his faith, and hath a crowne laid up for him. And againe, that neither life nor death, &c. are able to ſeparate him from the loue that God in Chriſt loues him with. So that by this place, or any other ſuch like, to ſurmiſe of the Apoſtle, that he wavered or ſtaggered of the iſſue of his ſaluation, is to imagine that the Apoſtle is at oddes with himſelfe, where the Apoſtle being alwayes like himſelfe, the Ieſuites are double tongued: otherwhere not reiecting that opinion of the Papiſts, who ſay of S. Paul, that by ſpeciall revelation, he came to the aſſured knowledge of is ſalvation, here they haue a contrary iudgement, ſuppoſing him unſtaied and unſetled in the certaine attendance and exſpectation of eternall life.

CARTVV. 2. [17. Of me brethren] We muſt follow our Miniſters as they are followers of Chriſt, which caution the Apoſtle himſelfe maketh when he ſpeaketh of himſelfe, how cleere a light and burning lampe ſoeuer he was. As for your yoaking of Auguſtine with Benedict, Dominick, and Francis, it is as if you ſhould match the Cedar of Lebanon with the thornes and thiſtles thereof: if eſpecially they were ſuch as you deſcribe them to haue been.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 9. And may be found in him not having ‖ my iuſtice which is of the Law, but that which is of the faith of Christ, which is of God iustice in faith.

RHEM. 3. [9. My iustice.] Diuers Lutherans in their translations doe shamefully mangle this sentence by transposing the words and false pointing of the parts thereof, to make it haue this sense that the Apostle would haue no iustice of his own, but onely that iustice, which is in Christ. Which is a false and hereticall sense of the words, and not meant by S. Paul: who calleth that a mans own iustice, which hee chalengeth by the works of the Law or nature without the grace of Christ: and that Gods iustice (as S. Augustine expoundeth this place) not which is in God, or by which God is iust, but that which is in man from God and by his gift, lib. 3. cont. 2. epist. Pelag. c. 7. de Spir. & lit. cap. 9.

The obiection against inherent iustice, answered. Magdeburg. cent. 1. lib. 2 c. 4. p. 222.

CARTVV 3. [9. My Iustice.] There is no light so great and cleare, as can giue light vnto these Bats: which by iustice in this place, vnderstand that iustice which is before faith, and before grace obtained, that is to say, which expound iustice to be iniustice. Else how durst they place in this account of iustice, the holy sacrament of circumcision rightly administred, both for the person and time to whom, and wherein it was applied. And are they so blinde, that they know not that Paul both elect and receiuing the seale of the couenant duly administred, was in the good grace and fauour of God at that time, although afterward he fell into foule enormities. Yet is this circumcision a part of that iustice which is removed from being cause of saluation. Againe, the Apostle doth expressly in the 8. verse take in this account not onely his workes that he did in ignorance, but those that hee presently did, which were not workes done out of grace. Moreover, in this verse he opposeth the iustice of workes unto the iustice of God, which is by faith: whereas to make your interpretation good, hee should haue opposed workes before grace to those after grace. And this is evidently confirmed by Augustine Psalm. 119. where he saith, that he had the supereminent knowledge of Christ in faith, and not in sight.

In fide, non in specie.

Verse. 12 Not that now I haue receiued, or now am perfect: but I pursue, if I may comprehend wherein I am also comprehended of Christ Iesus.

RHEM. 4. [12. Not that now.] No man in this life can attaine to absolute perfectnes either of iustice or of that knowledge which shall be in heauen; but yet there is also another perfectnes, such as according to this state a man may reach vnto, which in respect of the perfection in glorie, is small, but in respect of other lesser degrees of mans iustice and knowledge in this life may be called perfectnes. And in this sense the Apostle in the next sentence calleth himselfe and others perfect though in respect of the absolute perfectnes in heauen, he saith here, he is not yet perfect nor hath yet attained thereunto.

Double perfection: here, and in the life to come.

CARTVV. 4. [12. Not that now.] Although it be true which they say here, that no man is perfect in respect of the perfection which shall be in heauen: yet they depraving the meaning of the Apostle, surmise a perfection in this life of holinesse, as the Law requireth, although it be not of glory. Where the Apostle calleth not himselfe unperfect in regard onely of perfection which shall be in heauen: but in respect of that which is required of him in earth. And therefore in the way of some submission and abasing of himselfe, he professeth frankly that he doth not esteeme himselfe to haue attained the marke: which had been needlesse, if he had meant it onely of the heavenly glory which every one knew well enough without any such solemne protestation. Also, that he setteth himselfe as a courser, which had run a good part of the race of holinesse, whereunto he was called, and that there remaineth something thereof to run, By holinesse wee meane not that which the Law exacteth to make a man iust by, but such as the Gospell requireth to testifie this iustice by the faith of Christ.

Verse. 15 Let us therefore as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if you be any otherwise minded, this also God hath reuealed to you.

RHE. 5. [15. Otherwise minded.] When Catholike men now a dayes charge Hereticks with their horrible diuisions, dissensions, combates, contentions, and diuersities among themselues, as the Catholikes of all other ages did chalenge their Aduersaries most truly & iustly for the same (both because where the spirit of God is not, nor any order or obedience to Superiors, there can bee no peace nor vnitie, and specially for that it is, as S. August. saith (lib. de agone Christ c. 29.) the iust iudgement of God, that they which seek nothing else but to diuide the Church of Christ, should themselues be miserably diuided among themselues) therefore (I say) when men charge the Protestants with these things, they flee from their defence to this, that the old Fathers were not all of one iudgement in euery point of religion: that S. Cyprian stood against others, that S. Augustine and S. Hierome wrote earnestly in a certaine matter one against an other, that our Dominicans and Franciscans, our Thomists and Scotists be not all of one opinion in divers matters, and therefore diuisions and contentions should not be so preiudiciall to the Zuinglians & Lutherans, as men make it. Thus they defend themselues: but ridiculously and against the rule of S. Paul here, acknowledging that in this imperfection of mens science in this life euery one cannot bee free from all error, or thinke the same that an other thinketh: whereupon may rise differences of vnderstanding, opinion, and iudgement, in certaine hard matters which God hath not reuealed or the Church determined, and therefore that such diuersitie is tollerable and agreeable to our humane condition and the state of the way that we be in: alwayes prouided, that the controuersie bee such and in such things as bee not against the set known rule of faith, as hee here speaketh, and such as breake not mutuall society, fellowship, and communion in prayer, seruice, Sacraments, and other offices of life and religion, nor such diuisions and differences come neuer but of Schisme or Heresie, and such are among the Hereticks, not onely in respect of vs Catholikes, but among themselues: as they know that be acquainted with the writings of Luther against Zuinglius, or Westphalus against Calvin, or the Puritans against the Protestants, not onely charging one another with Heresie, Idolatry, Superstition, and Atheisme, but also condemning ech others ceremonies or manner of administrations, till it come to excommunication & banishment, yea sometimes burning one of another. Thus did not S. Cyprian, S. Augustin, S. Hierom, the Dominicans, Franciscans, Thomists, Scotists, who all agree in one rule of faith, all of one cõmunion, all most deere one to another, all (thankes be to God) come to one holy Masse, and receiue the same Sacraments, & obey one head throughout all the world. S. August. lib. 2. de bapt. c. 5. shall make vp this matter with this notable sentence. We are men (saith he) & therfore to think somwhat otherwise then the thing is, is an humane temtation: but by louing our own sentence too much, or by envying our betters, to proceed to the sacrilledge of dividing the mutual society & making schisme or heresie, is diuelish presumption: in nothing to haue other opinion then the truth is, that is Angelicall perfection, And a little after. If you be any otherwise minded, thus God will reueale: but to them onely (saith hee) that walke in the way of peace, and that stray aside into no diuision or separation. Which saying would God all our deere countrie men would marke, and come into the Church, where onely God reuealeth trueth.

A notable place of S. Augustine.

CARTVV. 5. [15. Otherwise minded.] Here must bee obserued, how childishly and ridiculously they either avoid the defence of our Churches, or make apologie for their owne. First they affirme, that the contentions in the true Churches, are as here they were amongst the Philippians, of things either not reuealed of God, or not determined of the Church, and therfore tollerable, which is most false. For the contention here was about circumcision: the abrogation whereof was both reuealed in the word, and determined of by a solemne councell holden at Ierusalem. Yet doth the Apostle iudge, that herein they should beare one with another, untill God in opening their eyes reueale that to them by his spirit, which he had already reuealed by his word. Secondly, they affirme, that that which is contended for, ought not to disagree with the known rule of faith. As if it were not a most known and undoubted rule of faith, that the figures should giue place unto the things figured, and the shadowes vanish when the body is in place. Thirdly, they say, that the Churches dissention breaketh not off society, neither religious, in prayers or sacraments, by excommunication; nor civill, by banishment or death. Let us grant that this is the Apostles advice, which notwithstanding cannot throughout be iustified: for both the Church and Common-wealth may use their censures and corrections for the reclaiming of such as iudge not aright in matters of religion: and the obstinate and proud resistance of him that is of the Church, may call for some hard measure to be exercised against him. But granting this counsell to be good, if they follow it not, they double their fault, and to the sinne of dissenting one from another, they adde the sinne of disobedience to the word of God.

Act. 15.

Victor with his Church at Rome, excommunicated the East Churches for not conforming themselues unto the West in the celebration of the Passouer: which fact although it were worthy to bee condemned, yet do we not therfore condemne the Bishop as no Catholick Bishop, nor the Church as no lawfull Church of Christ. And as we condemne not the Bishop in those times wherein there was some good estate of a Church in Rome: so wee assure our selues that you will not condemne either Austine the Monkes religion, or Romes, whose Embassadour hee was when the estate thereof was much more corrupt, for that he procured the death of so many innocent Monkes of Bangor, which would not receiue him for their Metropolitan. Albeit we know of no such extremities ever used by us towards one another, as they surmise: we know by story, that there haue been such tragicall cruelties of Pope against Pope, as of Stephen against Formosus, and of his successors against him, as the Roman Emperours in their greatest infidelitie and outrage, never gaue example off: but of such sauage and bestiall behauiour of one of us towards another, ye cannot shew.

The last thing they allleage, is the greatnesse of the matters wherein wee differ one from another, noted out by mutuall charge of heresie, superstition, Idolatrie and atheisme. Which as they are said onely, and not proued, nor wholy can be, as we are perswaded: so make they no proofe at all that ours is not therefore the Church of God, seeing these charges are made vpon particular persons in the Church, and not of the Churches themselues, which can neither be hereticall nor an Atheist, although it may haue both Atheists and Hereticks in it. Besides, that the Church it selfe may not onely be superstitious, but vnto a certaine degree of infection euen Idolatrous, as hath been shewed. To haue said somewhat against vs, (thereby to haue shut vs out for our diuisions from our consanguinitie with the true Churches of Christ in the Apostles times, and after) you should haue been able to haue iustly charged vs with dissension amongst our selues in the radicall or fundamentall points of our religion, from which accusation I suppose you were with-holden, not so much by our innocency in that point which are neuer wont to tie or restrain your tongues from slandering vs, as for that therein you feared a recharge from vs in this kind, for you know well that we can proue you to be at variance amongst your selues not onely in matters of smaller moment, but in the most principall articles of all your religion. As whether the Pope bee supreme head of the Church onely by the authority of councels as Pope Zozymus made claime, or by the institution of God in his written word as other pretend. Likewise whether the Pope be aboue the councell or the councell aboue him.

There is neither of these points which can bee shaken, but the whole kingdom of Popery must needs fall to the ground, Not to speake of Transubstantiation, which being esteemed of you as the heart of your religon, is notwithstanding doubted whether it haue any ground of the Scripture, or else be to be beleeued onely for that the Church and Councell hath so determined. Augustins sentence therefore of a light and small dissenting one from another doth not fit you, but that rather which Themistius a Philosopher said of the Heathen, that there were more then sixe hundred things wherein they had combate one with another.

Whereas they confeſſe here that neither M. Caluin nor M. Beza would ſuffer this word to be vnderſtood of any wife, that Paul had, for that he neuer had any; thereby the reader may underſtand the loue which they did beare to the truth, who though they might haue holden the Apoſtle for a married man, with good aſſiſtance of Antiquitie, yet would not vſe that aduantage againſt a truth which they were perſwaded of. Whereas if the Papiſts may, for maintenance of their opinion, take but hold of the ſkirt of one old writer, there is no Scripture ſo plain, nor reaſon ſo euident againſt them, that can ceaſe their cackle againſt the cauſe that they thinke they haue perced with ſuch a bullruſh. And if we would follow this iudgement of Antiquitie which held Paul for married, as there is reaſon that may probably conuince vs, ſo is there none which can maſterfully and forcibly wreſt it from vs: ſeing, to all that can be ſaid herein, the anſwer were at hand, that Paul which then was vnmarried and had a gift of continencie when he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; afterward wanting that gift he might take a wife.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO THE COLOSSIANS.

RHEMIST.

THE Epistle to the Colossians is not onely in sense, but almost in words also, all one with the Epistle to the Ephesians, and was sent also by the same messenger Tychicus c.4.v.7. and in it hee maketh like mention of his bands and sufferings. cap.1.v.24. and cap.4.v.3.18. And therefore no doubt it was written at Rome at the same time, to wit, in his last apprehension, yet before hee knew of his martyrdome.

This difference there is, that hee had himselfe preached to the Ephesians, but with the Colossians hee had neuer beene, as hee signifieth c.2.v.1. Therefore althhough in matters of exhortation hee bee here briefer then to the Ephesians, yet in matters of doctrine he is longer. And generally he assureth them, that to be the truth, which their Apostle Epaphras had taught them, but namely he giueth them warning both of the Iudaicall false-Apostles, who sought to corrupt them with some ceremonies of Moyses law: and also of the Platonike Philosophers who reiected Christ) who is indeed the head of the Church and Mediator to bring vs to God) and in steed of him, brought in certaine Angels, as more excellent then he, whom they termed, Minores dii, teaching the people to sacrifice vnto them (calling that humilitie) that they might bring them to the great God. With which falsehood the heresie of Simon Magus a long time deceiued many, as we read in Epiph. her.21.

Against such therefore S. Paul telleth the Colossians, that Christ is the Creator of all the Angels, God in person, the head of the Church, the principall in all respects: that hee is the Redeemer, Mediator, and Pacifier between God and men, and therefore by him we must go to God, so that whether we pray our selues, or desire any other on earth or in heauen to pray for vs, all must be done as the Catholike Church in euery Collect doth) Per Christum Dominum nostrum, that is, through Christ our Lord, or per Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum filium tuum, qui tecum vivit & regnat &c. Whereby the Church professeth continually against such seduction, both the Mediatorship, and the Godhead of Christ.

CARTVV. To the Argument, S. For the fable of certaine in the Church reproued for lifting up the Angels aboue Christ commeth after to be handled, where they lay forth the idle coniectures thereof, thereby to establish a subordinate intercession of Angels for us.

CHAP. I.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 6 THat is come to you, as also ✝ in the whole world it is, and fructifieth, and groweth, even as in you, since that day that you heard and knew the grace of God in truth.

RHEM.

RHEM. 1. [6. In the whole world.] He ſheweth that the Church and Chriſts Goſpell ſhould daily grow and be ſpred at length through the whole world, which can not ſtand with the Heretickes opinion of the decay thereof ſo quickly after Chriſts time, nor agree by any meanes to their obſcure conuenticles. See S. Auguſt ep. 80 in fine.

CARTVV. 1. [6 In the whole world.] Heere we will ſet our foot unto yours, and ioyne with you this iſſue, that if you be able to ſhew that your Religion hath ever been receiued in the whole world, and that the line or ſound thereof hath been carried to the uttermoſt part of the earth: we will confeſſe your Church (a ſhame to do it of ſuch a famous harlot) to bee the ſpouſe of Chriſt. Of the contrary part, when it is certaine, that the ſtrongeſt hold of all your Religion (namely that the Pope is ſupreme head of all the Church) was not builded many hundred yeares after the Apoſtles times; and neither then, nor any time ſithence acknowledged of the Eaſt Churches, it cannot be that ſhe may claime any affinitie with this Church that was planted by the Apoſtle. Whereas on the other ſide, when we profeſſe the ſame faith which was then beleeued in all the world, we are no more to be ſeuered from the ſiſterly kindred of that Church, becauſe we haue not ſo large a ſpread as then it had: then either the grapelage of the vine, or the gleaning of the harveſt, are not to be counted good corne and grapes, becauſe they are rare and ſcattered heere and there. For that there ſhall be ſuch a viſible acknowledgement of the truth, of all Nations in the world, as was in the Apoſtles times, it hath no ground that we do underſtand of. Howbeit, that the Goſpell preached of us is of the ſame nature that that was, may eaſily be ſeene of all that haue eies, to behold in how ſhort a time that ſeed (which the Lord had reſerued to put a difference between Sodom and the ſpirituall Ieruſalem) hath ſprouted and become a great and tall tree, wherein and where-under diuerſe Nations and Kingdomes haue builded their neſts, and are harboured. And as it proueth it ſelfe the true leven, that in ſo ſmall a ſpace it hath levened ſo great a batch: even ſo that it hath broken out and prevailed againſt craft and treacherie, might and maine, it argueth that it is as it were ſpoken with fiery tongues, and ſent out with a whirle-wind, peircing all, and bearing down whatſoever ſtandeth in the way thereof. Of the other ſide, the egge of Popery being laid in the Apoſtles daies, and ſcarce able to be hatched in eight hundred yeeres, declareth, that it is altogether fleſhly, and ſuch as hath not been accompanied with any evidence of the power of God, eſpecially ſeeing after the Goſpell began to ſhew her bright beames, it melted as wax before the fire, and as ſnow before the Sunne: ſo that there was more caſt down in fortie yeares, then had been builded in a thouſand: notwithſtanding that all the Kings and Princes of the earth had for a time, ſet their ſhoulders under it to haue borne it up, and underpropped it. Laſt of all, we produce the ſame witneſſes of the truth of our Church, which the Apoſtle did of the Church in his time. Firſt, the word of truth, or the Goſpell conteined in the Scriptures, as true and iuſt weights to weigh our Religion by, from which you flie (as from the rock of your Religion) to the ſhelter and ſhroud of mans traditions. Againe, we bring forth another witneſſe, the fruites which are worthy the Goſpell; One is, the knowledge of the myſteries of the Goſpell, whereof your people is ſo deſtitute, that to cover the ſhame thereof, you haue not been aſhamed to giue out, that Ignorance is the Mother of Deuotion. Another is, Pitty and honeſty of converſation, which as it can bee none with you, who knowing not the will of God, cannot ſet your ſelfe in the way to practiſe it: ſo, that it is none indeed, your ſhamefull whoredomes (and that avowed) your often othes and blaſphemies uncontrouled, your Simonie and Marchandiſe of Benefices unpuniſhed, and finally, all manner of wickedneſſe unbridled, which by Gods iuſt iudgement accompany idolaters, worſhipping the creature (beſide the Creator) do proclaime.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 24 Who now reioyce in ſuffering for you, and I doe accompliſh thoſe things that want of the paſsions of Chriſt, in my fleſh for his body, which is the Church.

RHEM.

There is no want in Christs passions which he suffered in himselfe as head: but there is want in those passions of Christ which hee daily suffereth in his body the Church, and the members thereof. Rom.8.17. Leo ser. 19, de passio.

RHEM.4.[24.Do accomplish that wanteth.] As Christ the head & his body make one person mysticall and one full Christ, the Church being therefore his plenitude, fulnesse, or complement Ephes.1. so the passions of the head and the afflictions of the body and members make one complete masse of passions. With such difference for all that, between the one sort and the other, as the preeminence of the head (and specially such a head) aboue the body, requireth and giueth. And not onely those passions which he suffered in himselfe, which were fully ended in his death, and were in themselues fully sufficient for the redemption of the world and remission of all sinnes, but all those which his body and members suffer, are his also, and of him they receiue the condition, qualitie, and force to be meritorious & satisfactorie, for though there be no insufficiencie in the action or passions of Christ the head, yet his wisdom, will and iustice requireth and ordaineth, *that his body and members should be fellowes of his passions, as they looke to be fellowes of his glory: that so suffering with him and by his example: they may apply to themselues and other the generall medicine of Christs merites and satisfactions, as it is effectually also applied to vs by Sacraments, Sacrifice, and other wayes also: the one sort being no more iniurious to Christs death then the other, notwithstanding the vaine clamours of the Protestants, that would vnder pretence of Christs passion, take away the valure of all good deeds. Hereupon it is plaine now, that this accomplishment of the wants of Christs passions, which the Apostle and other Saincts make vp in the flesh, is not meant but of the penall and satisfactorie works of Christ in his members, euery good man adding continually (and specially Martyrs) somewhat to accomplish the full measure thereof: and these be the plenitude of his passions and satisfactions, as the Church is the plenitude of his person: and therefore these also through the communion of Saincts and the societie that is not onely between the head and the body, but also between one member and an other, are not onely satisfactory, and many wayes profitable for the sufferers themselues, but also for other their fellow-members in Christ, for though one member can not merit for an other properly, yet may one beare the burden and discharge the debt of an other, both by the Law of God and nature, and it was a ridiculous heresie of Wickliffe to deny the same. Yea (as we see here) the passions of Saints are alwayes suffered for the common good of the whole body and sometimes withal by the sufferers speciall intention they are applicable to speciall persons one or many: as here the Apostle ioyeth in his passions for the Colossians, in another place his afflictions be for the saluation of the Corinthians, sometimes he wisheth to be Anathema, that is according to Origens exposition (in lib. xii hom.10. & 24.) a sacrifice for the Iewes, and hee often speaketh of his death as of a libation, host, or offering, as the fathers doe of all Martyrs passions. All which dedicated and sanctified in Christs blood and sacrifice, make the plenitude of his passion, and haue a forcible crie, intercession, and satisfaction for the Church and the particular necessitie thereof. In which as some do abound in good works and satisfaction (as S. Paul, who reckoneth vp his afflictions and glorieth in them 2.Cor.11. and Iob, who auoucheth that his penalties farre surmounted his sinnes: and our Lady much more, who neuer sinned, and yet suffered so great dolours) so othersome do want and are to be holpen by the abundance of their fellow-members.

The workes of one may satisfie for another. 2.Cor.1.6. Rom.9.3. Phil.2. 2.Tim.4. Iob.1.6.

The grounds of indulgences, or pardons.

Which intercourse of spirituall offices and the recompense of the wants of one part by the store of the other, is the ground of the old libles of Indulgence whereof is treated before out of S.Cyprian (See the Annotations 2 Cor.2. v.10) and of all indulgences and pardons, which the Church daily dispenseth with great iustice and mercy, by their hands in whom Christ hath put the word of our reconcilement, to whom he hath committed the keyes to keep and vse, his sheepe to feed, his mysteries and all his goods to dispense, his power to binde and loose, his commission to remit and retaine, and the stewardship of his familie to giue euerie one their meate and sustenance in due season

CARTVV.4.[24.Doe accomplish that which wanteth.] The Apostle teacheth verse 22. that wee are reconciled vnto the Father, not by the Death and suffering of his mysticall body, which is his Church, but by the death and sufferings of the body of his owne flesh, and that so fully and so accomplishedly, as thereby he presenteth us before him vnspotted and vnblameable. After (it being dangerous lest the Colossians should faint, because of the Apostles present imprisonment, and death which was to follow) he teacheth them to beare them with a patient and a glad minde. First for his owne cause, which must be conformed to the example of Christs sufferings, to bee made like vnto him in glory. Then for the fruit and profit of the Church, namely of the Colossians, who in the experience of the mighty power of Christ, strengthning him against the crueltie of death, were to be confirmed in the truth which they had received by him. Wherefore when wee are perfectly redeemed by Christs sufferings in his owne person, it is false that wee satisfie any thing for our owne sinnes, much lesse for the sinnes of other men. Againe, when the Apostle sheweth that the Churches sufferings are good and profitable in respect of our conformitie with Christ in his passions, that wee may be like vnto him in glory: good for our fortification and comfort in faith, and for our example to teach us how to suffer for his sake: it is a brutish conclusion vpon the words of suffering for the Church, to conclude a suffering for satisfaction of the sinnes of the Church: as if a man could not suffer for the Church, or accomplish the passions of Christ in his body for the Church, vnlesse he did it to satisfie for the sinnes of the Church, as Christ did. They may as well conclude, that forsomuch as the Apostle affirmeth, that we suffer for Christ, we also satisfie for him. Whereas the Apostle doth manifestly and in precise words, expound the end of his suffering farre otherwise, as hath been shewed vpon 2.*Cor.*1 5. And the Apostle which was inferiour vnto none in holy sufferings for Christ and his Church; yet is so farre from making them satisfactory for the sinnes of others, that crying out of his owne sinnes, and asking who shall deliver him, hee placeth the hope of his deliverie from them, not in any thing of his, but onely in the grace of God by Iesus Christ. And therefore in the same Epistle, he maketh our glory in suffering affliction, a fruit and effect of our reconciliation with Christ; and not as here you make it, a cause of our saluation. Neither followeth it, because the sufferings of the godly, are called the sufferings of Christ, that therefore Christ giveth them them the vertue of satisfying, either for themselues or others. For the difference of his passions from ours in respect of merit, is manifest: First, for that his were without sinne, where ours receiue no such vertue from Christ as doth free them from all pollution and defect which the Law condemneth: for seeing no man can say, that his heart is altogether cleane, it is evident, that whatsoever commeth from that fountaine, carrieth the note and mark of the pollution thereof. Pro. 20. 9.

Secondly, the passions of the sonne of God could not haue satisfied for us, unlesse they had been offered by the eternall Spirit. Seeing therefore none of the Churches passions are, or can be offered so; it followeth that none of them can haue the vertue and force of satisfaction. Hebr. 9. 14.

Thirdly, seeing the sonne of God by his owne bloud, hath satisfied for all our sinnes, it followeth, that there are none that remaine to be paid by our selues: otherwise it would follow, that in the most exquisite worke of our redemption, there were something idle and superfluous, whereas in the very worke of creation, which was farre lesse then this, nothing was in vaine or overmuch. And if there were any over-plus or surplusage of merit, yet it were meeter that the merits of Saints (if any be) should rust and lye dead, rather then the merits of Christ should not be employed and bestowed to the end whereunto they are provided. And therein the Iesuites are at open warre with themselues, who confessing that the passions of Christ in his owne person, are sufficient for us; doe notwithstanding unto this rich kingly ransome of our Redemption, present unto the Lord, the lame, blinde, and leane gift of their owne sufferings: wherein the analogie of the naturall body (whether they runne for helpe in this case whilest they say that one member may beare the burden and pay the debt of another) helpeth them not. For in a naturall body (well disposed and orderly affected) every member doth the proper office which belongeth unto it for preseruation of health and comelinesse in the same. The eye cannot heare for the eare, nor the eare see for the eye. And those parts of the body which are so set and qualified, that they may serue the turne of their next neighbours, which are defectiue in their proper and speciall functions, yet doe not performe those duties either so safely for health, or so comely for order as is required: as when a thing is taken up with the feete, or the teeth, which ought to be laid hold of with the hand: or when it is done with the left hand, which ought to be done with the right. So that this first presupposeth a great want in the passions of Christ to satisfie for us, whilest men are driuen to make such hard shifts. And secondly, it bringeth in a confusion into the body of the Church, whose best and most orderly constitution is, when every member having from the head that life and sence which is meet for the entertainment of it selfe, doth the proper and speciall dutie which belongeth unto it. But admitting this disorder and confusion in the body of Christ, which is the Church, that one member doth the office and dutie of another: yet what doth it, which in the law of nature it is not bound to doe for the preseruation of the body? And if it be bound, and that upon paine of being unnaturall and undutifull to the body, to giue this supply unto his fellow member: then your merit and ouerplus of dutie vanisheth quite away. Wherefore, although it be a weake reason that is drawne from the proportion of the naturall body unto the mysticall, where either Scripture it selfe doth not make the comparison, or it haue no other stay of reason to leane upon, yet it appeareth that these Naturalists, or Naturals rather, are thrust out even from this poore shadow under the which they would so faine sit down and rest themselues.

Where they further affirme, that by these sufferings of ours, the sufferings of our Saviour Christ are applyed unto us as well as by the Sacraments, &c. they say falsely: for there are two things whereby the death of Christ is applyed unto us, the one outward of the Ministery of the Word (and consequently of the Sacraments which are a visible word) another inward, which is faith, mentioned vers. 23. of this chapter. And therefore it is said, that he that beleeveth in the Sonne of God, hath the witnesse in himselfe. According whereunto Augustine affirmeth, that every one offereth the sacrifice of Christs passion for himselfe. And if they did apply his sufferings to us, yet the consequence thereof, that they are therefore satisfactory for our selues, or for others, is senseleſse; seeing not so much as faith it selfe (much lesse the ministery of the Word and Sacraments) hath any vertue of it selfe, as it is a worke, to deserue any thing, no more then a leprous hand receiving a great iewell that is put into it, deserueth that largesse. Nay rather, by this speech they overthrow the former: For if our passions do apply satisfaction, it followeth, that they are not satisfaction it selfe; seeing that the applyer, and the thing applyed do differ. 1. Ioh. 5. 10.

This Madianish fight of themselues with themselues, is increased by another blasphemous speech; that the death of Saint Paul was a sacrifice for the sinnes of the Iewes: they might as well haue said of the Gentiles too, and rather of the Gentiles then of the Iewes, for so much as his Ministery both in life and death did pertaine to them rather then to the Iewes: for notwithstanding that the death and bloud of the Saints is precious before God (especially when it is shed for the testimony of Christ) yet to the use of a satisfactory or expiatory sacrifice it is prophane; as that which is as directly against the Word, as it was to offer a dog or a hog in sacrifice. The proofe whereof is evident; for where before they said it was an applying of the sacrifice of Christ for sinne, now they affirme it to be a sacrifice for sinne: and it was never read of, that one sacrifice for sinne, should be the application of another. And this blasphemy, whereby the bloud of the Sonne of God, is mingled with the bloud of mortal and sinfull men, which by consequence is made the price of the redemption of the world as well as his, is more execrable, then if the Iewes should haue mingled the bloud of hogs and dogs with the bloud of the cleane beasts which were appointed to sacrifice, in that there was never any sacrifice whose bloud figured and represented the bloud of any other man, but only of our Saviour Christ. Neither was there ever any Priest that offered sacrifice which figured any other then Christ: And as there is no Priest (properly so called) but Christ alone: so even the Papists, not daring to say that all Martyrs are Priests, ought to be ashamed to affirme that their bloud cleanseth; which to haue the vertue of cleansing, must be offered by a Priest. It is therefore Christs bloud alone, which being sprinkled upon the whole Church (as upon the Tabernacle) and upon every one of the faithfull (as upon all the vessels thereof,) cleanseth them from Rom. 11. 13 Gal. 2. 7. Psal. 116. 15 all iniquity. This the Apoſtle well expoundeth when he ſaith, that there is no name wherein wee may bee ſaued but onely by Ieſus Chriſt. What reckoning we haue to make of Origen, whoſe authoritie is heere holden out for defence of this execrable blaſphemy, Ierom doth declare, which ſaith, that he praiſed him for a good Interpreter, and not for a ſound teacher: for his wit, and not for his faith: Alſo that we ſhould beleeue him that had tried him, that his opinions were venemous, and both ſtrange or far off from the Scriptures, and offering violence vnto them.

Act. 4. 12. Hier. ad Pāmachium & Ocean.

Iob. 6. 2. 3. The place of Iob, that his penalties were greater then his ſinnes, is falſly alleaged; there being no ſuch words in the text, but that his afflictions, if they were balanced, would bee found heauier then the ſand of the Sea. And if they were, yet all men may eaſily perceiue that theſe words muſt be vnderſtood to haue proceeded of impatience, and to bee in the number of them which Elihu, and the Lord himſelfe from heaven do condemne: For it is vtterly repugnant to the iuſtice of God, that he ſhould inflict a greater puniſhment vpon any offender then the offence deſerueth: yea, if it were as you would haue it, yet doth it ouerturne you, for that then he ſhould haue ſatiſfied for his ſinnes, and not for the puniſhment onely, as you hold. Laſt of all, it is cleane contrary to the whole courſe of the book, and doth ouerthrow the Argument thereof, which is, that he was not puniſhed for his ſinnes, as his friends ſuppoſed, but for his triall. And if they will not beleeue the Scripture heerein, yet let them heare Leo the firſt, Biſhop of Rome, who affirmeth that Martyrs or iuſt men receiued crownes, but gaue none: Of whoſe valour and manhood in ſuffering, there are riſen examples of patience for the faithfull to follow but no gifts of righteouſneſſe: So Ierome noteth the fruit of the ſufferings of Martyrs, that by their wounds the faith of ſuch as beleeue might be confirmed. It is alſo a meere fable, that euery Martyr may diſpoſe or diſpence his merites (if any were) to whom hee liketh beſt: For when his afflictions cannot ſo much as profite himſelfe, but by the ſupply of the Holy Ghoſt, which is given at the pleaſure of no man, but onely at the good will of God, and vpon whom hee will breath it: it followeth that it can much leſſe profit others, vpon whom the Martyr himſelf would haue it to be beſtowed. Whereunto ſerueth, that as there was no bloud ſhed for remiſſion of ſin, but onely Chriſts, either in himſelfe or in his figure: no ſacrifice offered but in like ſort: ſo is there no bloud ſprinkled but in the ſame manner. By the miniſtery of the Word, as it were by the moſſe and wooll, the bloud is carried: but ſprinckled it is not, but by the Prieſt, which is Chriſt. This is cleered manifeſtly in the example of Paul, who ſuffering many things for the Iewes ſake, that it might go well with them; and deſiring eſpecially that it might profite them, yet did not obtaine the ſame. Nay, it appeareth that our Saviour Chriſt deſiring greatly as he was Man, that his Miniſtery might be profitable to the Iewes, yet did not enioy his hearts deſire therein.

Wherefore ſeeing there are neither ſuch merites of Martyrs, as they imagine: and ſeeing (if any were) they cannot be dealt out at the pleaſure of any man, but onely according to the good will and pleaſure of God: it followeth that the gold and ſilver which is given for purchaſe of the Popes pardons, is as ſeed ſown in the bottome of the ſea, whereof no harveſt, nor increaſe is to be looked for.

CHAP. II.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 8 BEware leſt any man deceiue you | by Philoſophy, and vain fallacie, according to the tradition of men, according to the elements of the world, and not according to Chriſt.

Philoſophy & other humane ſciences, how profitable or hurtfull to the Church of God.

RHEM. 1. [8. By Philoſophy] Philoſophie and all humane ſcience, ſo long as they be ſubiect and obedient to Chriſt (as they be in the Schooles of Chriſtian Catholike men) bee not forbidden, but are greatly commended and be very profitable in the Church of God. Otherwiſe where ſecular learning is made the rule of religion and commandeth faith, there it is pernicious and the cauſe of all hereſie and infidelitie, for the which S. Hierom and before him Tertullian call Philoſophers, the Patriarkes of Heretickes, and declare that all the old hereſies roſe onely by too much admiring of prophane Philoſophie. Hierom. ad Cteſiph. cont. Pelag. c. 1. Tertull. de præſcript. & cont. Hermog. & cont. Marcio. lib. 5. And ſo doe theſe new ſects no doubt in many things, for other arguments haue they none againſt the preſence of Chriſt in the B. Sacrament but ſuch as they borrow of Ariſtotle and his like, concerning quantitie, accidents, place, poſition, dimenſions, ſenſes, ſight, taſte, and other ſtraites of reaſon, to which they bring Chriſts myſteries. All Philoſophicall argumens therefore againſt any article of our faith be here condemned as deceitfull, and are called alſo here, the tradition of men, and the elements of the world. The better to reſiſt which fallacies and traditions of heathen men, the Schoole learning is neceſſary, which keepeth Philoſophie in awe, and order of faith, and vſeth the ſame to withſtand the Philoſophicall and ſophiſticall deceits of Heretickes and Heathen. So the great Philoſophers S. Denys, S. Auguſtine, Clemens Alexandrinus, Iuſtine, Lactantius and the reſt, vſed the ſame to the great honour of God and benefite of the Church. So came S. Cyprian S. Ambroſe, S. Hierome, and the Greeke fathers furniſhed with all ſecular learning vnto the ſtudy of Diuinitie, whereof ſee S. Hierome ep. 84. ad Magnum Oratorem.

The Proteſtants abuſe Philoſophy againſt the B. Sacrament.

Schoole learning.

CARTVV. 1. [8. By Philoſophy.] It is true, that Philoſophy, as a handmaid to Diuinitie, ought to giue her attendance vpon her Miſtreſſe. But how greatly this is neglected of you, your opinions of the prouidence of God, of righteouſneſſe by workes, of Free-will, Purgatory, &c. doe euidently declare. In all which, vnleſſe your Phyloſophicall Agar had malaperdy gainſaid her Miſtreſſe,

miſtreſſe, you ſhould either haue been dumb, or opened your mouthes with the greater ſcorne of all. But for us, we reiect not your Tranſubſtantiation, becauſe it is Metaphyſicall, or aboue nature (which thing we willingly accord to be agreeable enough to the nature of a Sacrament) but we refuſe it as Antiphiſicall, or againſt nature. Againſt the which, albeit we embrace the helpe and aid of theſe weapons, which common reaſon putteth into our hands, yet we bring them not, but ſharpned, and headed out of the holy Scripture: As when it is ſaid, That he is riſen and is not here, and that the heauens muſt containe him vntill the day of the reſtoring of all, and that Chriſts fleſh may be handled, and ſeen when it is preſent. Mat. 16. 6. Act. 3. 21. Luk. 24. 39

Verſe. 16 Let no man therefore iudge you | in meat or in drinke, or in part of a feſtivall day, or of the New-moone, or of Sabboths.

RHEM. 2. [16 In meate.] The Proteſtants wilfully or ignorantly apply all theſe kinds of forbearing meates to the Chriſtian faſts: but it is by the circumſtance of the text plaine (as S. Auguſtine alſo teacheth) that the Iudaicall obſeruation and diſtinction of certaine cleane and vncleane meates is forbidden to the Coloſſians, who were in danger to be ſeduced by certaine Iewes, vnder pretence of holineſſe to keepe the Law touching meates and feſtiuities and other like. Which the Apoſtle ſheweth were only ſhadows of things to come: which things are come, and therefore the ſaid ſhadows to ceaſe. Where hee nameth the Sabboths and feaſts of the new moone, that no man need to doubt but that he ſpeaketh only of the Iewiſh dayes and kinds of faſts and feaſts; and not of Chriſtian holy-dayes or faſting dayes at all. Aug. ep. 59. ad Paulinum in ſolut. 7. queſt. Scriptures abuſed by th Proteſtants againſt Chriſtian faſting and holy daies.

CARTVV. 2. [16 In meate.] The armory of Chriſtians againſt hereſies and errors, ſhould be quickly empty, if the weapons which are hung up in the Scriptures, ſhould ſerue onely for the perſons, places, and times, wherein, and againſt the which they were uſed of the Prophets and Apoſtles. And therefore your ſhift, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh againſt the Iewes feaſts and faſts, is vaine, as hath been ſhewed upon Matth. 15. & Rom. 14. & Gal. 4.

Verſe 18 Let no man ſeduce you, willing in the humilitie and | religion of Angels, walking in the things which he hath not ſeene, in vaine puffed up by the ſenſe of his fleſh.

RHEM. 3. [18. Religion of Angels.] By the like falſe application of this text as of the other before the Hereteicks abuſe it againſt the inuocation or honour of Angels vſed in the Catholike Church where the Apoſtle noteth the wicked doctrine of Simon Magus and others (See S. Chryſ. hom. 7. in hunc locum. and Epiph. hær. 21) who taught, Angels to be our mediatours and not Chriſt, non tenens caput, not holding the head, as the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh, and preſcribed ſacrifices to be offered vnto them meaning indifferently as well the ill Angels as the good. Which doctrine the ſaid Hereticke had of Plato who taught, that ſpirits (which hee calleth dæmones) were to bee honoured as mediators next to God. Againſt which S. Auguſtine diſputeth li. 8. 9. & 10. de ciuit. as hee condemneth alſo the ſame vndue worſhip li. 10. Confeſſ. c. 42. S. Hierome (q. 10. ad Algaſiam) expoundeth this alſo of ill ſpirits or deuils whom he proueth (out of S. Stevens ſermon Act. 7.) that the Iewes did worſhip, auouching that they ſerue them ſtill, ſo many of them and ſo often as they obſerue the Law. Of which idolatrie alſo to Angels Theodoret ſpeaketh vpon this place, declaring that the Iewes defended their ſuperſtition towards Angels by that, that the Law was giuen by them, deceitfully at once inducing the Coloſſians, both to keep the law, and to honouring of the Angels as the giver of the ſame. Whereby diuers of the faithful were ſo ſeduced, that they forſooke Chriſt and his Church and ſeruice, and committed idolatrie to the ſaid Angels. Againſt which abominations the Councell of Laodicia. c. 35. took order, accurſing all that forſooke our Sauiour and committed Idolatrie to Angels, and contemning Chriſt, kept conuenticles in the name of ſpirits and Idols, of which kind of worſhip of Angels and Deuils ſee Clement. Alexand. Strom. 3. Tertullian (l. 5. cont. Marcion.) expoundeth this place of the falſe teachers that feined themſelues to haue reuelation of Angels, that the Law ſhould be kept touching difference of cleane, & vncleane meates which is very agreeable to that* in the Epiſtle to Timothee, where S. Paul calleth abſtaining from meates after the Iewiſh or hereticall manner, the doctrine of Diuels; whereof ſee more in the annotation vpon that place. Haimo a godly ancient writer, vpon this place, ſaith further, that ſome Philoſophers of the Gentiles and ſome of the Iewes alſo taught, that there were foure Angels Preſidents of the foure elements of mans body, and that in feined hypocriſie (which the Apoſtle here calleth humilitie) they pretended to worſhip by ſacrifice the ſaid Angels. Theophylacte expoundeth this feined humilitie, of certaine Heretickes, that pretending the mediatorſhip to bee a derogation to Chriſts majeſtie, worſhipped Angels as the onely mediators. All which wee ſet down with more diligence, that the Hereticks may be aſhamed to abuſe this place againſt the due reuerence and reſpect of prayers made to the holy Angels. Whom the Scriptures record ſo often to offer our prayers vp to God, and to haue been lawfully reuerenced of the Patriarkes, neuer as gods, but as Gods miniſters or meſſengers. Ioſu 5. 14. Tob. 12. 12. Gen. 48. 16. Angelus qui eruit me, 1. Tim. 5. 21. And that they may bee prayed vnto, and can helpe and heare vs, See S. Hierome in cap. 10. Danielis. S. CARTVV. 3. [18. Religion of Angels.] The Ieſuites by this packe of divers expoſitions upon this place (as it were by a heape of pebble and baſe ſtones, gathered together to hide and to darken the true expoſition lodged as a pearle amongſt them) haue more fooliſhly then diligently made this a maſſe. For what a madneſſe is it to alledge ſo many opinions to overthrow the truth, which are overthrowne each of other? ſeeing theſe are as well contrary to themſelues as to the iudgement which we follow. And if it be lawfull for the Ieſuites, notwithſtanding this great varietie of ſentences to follow that which liketh them beſt, why may not we haue leaue to doe the ſame, unleſſe they be able to lay in better weight of reaſon to carry away their opinion, then we can do to cauſe the beame of the ballance to incline to our iudgement? wee affirme, that in this place, is forbidden the worſhip of Angels. They ſay, that the Apoſtles meant it of a worſhip of Angels, by ſuch as made Angels Mediators, and not Chriſt: which answer, firſt, for that both the Doctors which taught this errour, and the Schollers which were warned not to learne it, were all covered with the name and calling of Chriſtians, and were either of the Church, or in ſome account of members of the Church of Chriſt. Neither doth he here ſpeake of any other hereſie then that which was endevoured to be perſwaded vnto Churches of Chriſt. Now that it ſtandeth with the cunning and method of the Divell, at the firſt brunt to ſet vpon the Churches of Chriſt, with this poynt of worſhipping Angels, with abandoning of Chriſt, will hardly be admitted of ſuch as haue not been acquainted with his ſleight, who firſt ſtaieth to thruſt in his taile, that after he may draw in his head and whole body. Secondly, for that the Apoſtle ſheweth, that this error was bred by a ſhew and pretence of humility, or of their owne vnworthineſſe, which is the very cloke, that you wretched Caitiffes would hide your idolatry with. In going therefore from the mediation and invocation of Chriſt, to the worſhip of Angels vnder pretence of humilitie, they muſt neceſſarily leaue our Sauiour Chriſt in a higher and more glorious eſtate then the Angels. Whervnto belongeth, that this error of Angelworſhip is taught of mans wiſedome, or fleſhly vnderſtanding, which is to prepare the way to the ſonne by the ſeruants, that after by the ſonne they may haue a more commodious acceſſe to the Father. And this was the very opinion of Plato, who made two kinde of Mediators between God and man, one of Angels, ather of ſoules departed. And againe, that the ſoules departed haue care of mans affaires vpon earth: which falſe-named Philoſophy, and vaine deceit, how fully it iumpeth with the Popiſh errour of mediation, let the reader iudge. The difference onely is, that Plato hauing no knowledge of Chriſt, could not ſpeake of a third kinde of Mediator between God and men, as they doe. Thirdly, the reaſon which hee draweth from the effects, confirmeth this: For therefore hee would not haue vs to go to Angels, but to Chriſt alone, becauſe the fulneſſe of the Godhead dwelling in him, they ſhould looke for their accompliſhment and full perfection in him; thereby inſinuating, that the aduerſaries granted that wee haue part in Chriſt, although not all: the beginning, albeit not the ending. And if the Angels had been appointed Mediators, with an vtter contempt of Chriſt, he would not haue ſhewed what we haue, or come vnto by Chriſts mediation: but it behoued him rather to haue proued, that Chriſt is a mediator, which he taketh for granted: diſputing this onely, whether he were ſufficient for all aſſayes without the Angels, or no. Againſt that which they alledge, that theſe men hold not the head, is of no value: for by theſe words he doth not note their errour which profeſſedly they held, but what at vnawares followed of that which they held. Even as hee telleth the Galatians, that they were fallen from Chriſt, if they ſought to be iuſtified by circumciſion, howſoeuer they thought that they might hold both Chriſt and circumciſion too: for when Chriſt hath the dignitie of being the head of the Church, in that he is the onely mediator betwixt God and vs: whoſoeuer caſteth him from this title of the onely mediator, with the ſame caſt throweth him downe from his moſt high eſtate of being the head of the Church: ſeeing it is the vertue and office of the head, immediately to ſend from it, whatſoeuer belongeth to the ſence and motion of the whole body. Further, how ſmally auayleth their cauſe gaineth by this ragge of diſtinction, that Angels may be worſhipped, ſo that Chriſt be not ſhut forth from being the chiefe mediator, it may appeare by the ſtory of Iohn, who is reproued for worſhipping the Angell, albeit it was farre from his meaning to ſhut out our Sauiour Chriſt from his office of mediation. This worſhipping of Angels is likewiſe ſimply and flatly condemned by the fathers, and not as the Ieſuites pretend, in regard of that our Sauiour Chriſt was either omitted or ſet behinde them. Irenæus affirmeth, that the Church hath nothing to do with the invocation of Angels, but meeth her prayers vnto the Lord that doth all things, and in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Epiphanius refuting thoſe which worſhipped the virgin Mary, ſaith, that if God would not haue the Angels worſhipped, much leſſe would he haue the daughter of Anna to be worſhipped. And dare the Ieſuites ſay, that thoſe which worſhipped the virgin Mary, did giue ouer the worſhip of Chriſt, to whom (no doubt) they had a more honorable reſpect then to her whom they worſhipped, onely for his ſake. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of a kinde of Heretickes, whom he calleth Angelicall, not for that they had vowed themſelues wholy to worſhip Angels, with a falling away from Chriſt: but becauſe they were inclined to the worſhip of Angels. And in another place, teaching that wee ſhou'd not lift vp our eyes vnto the mountaines, but vnto the Lord alone, hee interpreteth the Saints and Angels to be thoſe Mountaines which we may not put our truſt in: and otherwhere, that they may not be called vpon with any prayer. Ierom likewiſe affirmeth, that the Chriſtians neither worſhipped Sunne, nor Moone, nor Angels, nor Archangels, Cherubims nor Seraphins, nor any name that is named either in this world or in the world to come, leſt we ſhould ſerue the Creature rather then the Creator. About which time it was decreed by a Councell holden at Laodicea, that men ſhou'd not pray to Angels, as Theodoret citeth and reciteth the Canon. Whereas the Papiſts, becauſe of the euidence of the Councels words, haue corrupted the Canon; and in ſtead, that the Councell decreed, that men ſhould not pray to Angels, as if by them hee ſhou'd procure himſelfe fauour to come vnto God, haue ſet downe, that men ſhou'd not leaue the Church to pray in corners.

In the teſtimonies which they alledge, thoſe of Ioſh. 5. 14. and Gen. 48. 16. are ſpoken of Chriſt before his incarnation, who is alſo called the Angell of the Covenant: which is euident, in that the ſame is called Iehovah, a name which cannot be given vnto any created Angell. That of 1. Tim. 5. 21. is no prayer to the Angels, but a proteſtation before them; wherein Timothy is charged the rather to looke to his office. And by the ſame reaſon that Angels may be prayed vnto, for that they are called to beare witneſſe, they may alſo pray vnto the heaven and earth, ſtones, &c. which are alſo in like manner called vpon. And although the Angels, in regard of their miniſtery attending vpon the Church, vnderſtand that which is done in them farre otherwiſe then the dumbe creatures doe, yet to be fit for adoration in prayer, it behoued them not onely to know what is outwardly done, but alſo what is inwardly thought; which is the property and prerogatiue of God alone. RHEM. 4. [19. Not holding the head.] Becauſe he hath much a do with ſuch falſe preachers as taught the people to prefer the Angels which gaue the Law, or other whatſoeuer, before Chriſt: in this Epiſtle, and to the Ephesians, he often affirmeth Chriſt to be our head, yea and to be exalted farre aboue all creatures, Angels, Poteſtates, Principalities, or whatſoeuer.

CARTVV. 4. [19. Not holding the head.] The fancie of the Coloſſians prefering Angels before Chriſt, is before confuted, and the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, cited to proue this fable is againſt it. For the Princedom of Chriſt ouer Angels is not mentioned there, as if there had been any of the Church which extolled Angels aboue Chriſt: but firſt to teach, how rich and ſufficient Chriſt is to perfect his Church without the aduantage or helpe of any creature, as is plaine in other Epiſtles. Secondly, that in the moſt excellent glorie which Chriſt already enioyeth, the faithfull (to whom in regard of their preſent contempt the glory to come may be incredible) ſhould (in the vndoubted knowledge of the glory of Chriſt their head, which hee after extreme ignominie attained vnto) not feare, but that they alſo making way through the greateſt calamities ſhould come, vnto the like glory in the end. CARTVV. 5. [20. VVhy do you.] Our tranſlation which hath turned the Greeke word here burdened with traditions, hath tranſlated it faithfully, albeit it hath not ſo preciſely kept it ſelfe to the word for he meaneth not here the Iewiſh rites (which the Greek word otherwhere noteth, but the traditions of men, as is apparant verſ. 22, 23. where they are called the commandements of men, and a nil-worſhip: and for that the Ceremoniall Law, which forbiddeth the eating of certain meates, doth neuer forbid either the touching, or handling of them. As for your tranſlation, it is firſt againſt Grammer, which turne that actiuely which the text vttereth paſſiuely. Secondly, it implieth a manifeſt contradiction vnto the Apoſtle, in that it thus ſuppoſeth the Church to haue yeelded vnto this falſe doctrine; ſo farre as to haue made a decree for the eſtabliſhing of it: contrary to the Apoſtle, which giueth them teſtimony of the ſoundnes of their faith: ſo that hereby he noteth what was attempted by the Doctors, and what was effected in the Hearers. Verſe. 21 Touch | not, taſte not, handle not.

RHEM. 6. [21. Touch not.] The Heretickes (as before and alwayes) very vainly alleage this againſt the Catholicke faſtings: when it is moſt cleere that the Apoſtles reprehendeth the ſo ſaid falſe teachers that thought to make the Chriſtians ſubiect to the obſeruation of the ceremonies of the old Law, of not eating hogges, conies, hares fleſh, and ſuch like, nor to touch a dead corps nor any place where a women in her flowers had ſitten, & other infinit doctrines of touching, taſting, waſhing, eating, and the reſt, either commanded to the old people by God, or (as many things were) voluntarily taken vp by themſelues, ſometime cleane gainſt Gods ordinance, and often friuolous and ſuperſtitious. Which ſort as Chriſt in the Goſpell, ſo here S. Paul calleth the precepts and doctrines of men, and ſuperſtition, and (as the Greeke word ſignifieth) *voluntary worſhip, that is inuented by Heretickes of their own head without the warrant of Chriſt in the Scriptures, or the holy Ghoſt in the Church or any lawfull authoritie of ſuch whom Chriſt commandeth vs to obey. Againſt ſuch Sect maiſters therefore as would haue yoked the faithfull againe with the Iewiſh or Hereticall faſts of Simon Magus and the like, S. Paul ſpeaketh, and not of the Churches faſts or doctrines. CARTVV. 6. [21 Touch not.] The matter and forme of abſtinence here condemned being the ſame with the Popiſh faſts, they cannot be but ſtricken with the ſame ſword that theſe are. The matter is of things which periſh, and are conſumed with the uſe of them. The forme, is the commandements and doctrines of men for a worſhip of God. For although they boaſt of the ſpirit of God, yet it is a vaine cracke of the ſpirit, which is ſundered from the commandement and word of Chriſt. Whereunto it commeth, that there were never any more ridiculous in the ſuperſtitious obſeruation of theſe things then the Papiſts: amongſt whom it is a heinous crime once to taſte of fleſh in a forbidden day, and which (in their begging Friers) eſteeme it a deteſtation once to touch the peece of money with their hand, which their heart by deſire hath touched and touched againe. RHEM. 7. [23. Hauing a ſhew.] Againe the Heretickes of our time obiect, that theſe foreſaid falſe teachers pretended holines, wiſedom, and chaſtiſement of their bodies (for ſo S. Paul ſaith) by forbidding certaine meates according to the Iewes obſeruation, euen as the Catholickes do. It is true they did ſo, and ſo do moſt vices imitate vertues, for if chaſtiſing of mens bodies and repreſſing their concupiſcences of luſts were not godly, and if abſtinence from ſome meates were not laudably & profitably vſed in the Church for the ſame purpoſe, no Hereticks (to induce the aboliſhed obſeruations The hypocritical abſtinence of old Heretickes, maketh nothing againſt tions and indifferences of meates of the Iewes, or the condemnation of certaine meates and creatures as abominable according to others) would haue falsely pretended the chastisement of their flesh or made other shew, of wisdom & pietie, to found their vnlawfull Heretical or Iudaical superstition concerning the same. The Catholike Church and her children, by the example of Christ, S. Iohn Baptist, the Apostles and other blessed men, do that lawfully, godly, religiously, and sincerely indeed to the end aforesaid, which these false Apostles only pretended to do. So *S. Paul did chastise his body indeed, by watching, fasting, and many other afflictions, and that was lawfull and was true wisdom and piety indeed. The foresaid Heretikes not so, but to induce the Colossians to Iudaisme and other abominable errors did but pretend these things in hypocrisie.

1. Cor. 9. 27. 2. Cor. 11. 27.

CARTVV. 7. [23 Hauing a shew.] This is also a meere dotage, that the old heretickes made a pretence of holinesse, where they follow holinesse sincerely and indeed: for first they say nothing which the old heretickes might not as easily haue said as they; neither haue they any more sauce of reason to relish this vnsauorie shift of theirs then they had. Secondly, they perceiue not that the Apostle carrieth not this to the counsell and end of the superstitions, but vnto the very kinde of false worship, which although it haue a shew and shine of wisedom and godlinesse, yet, is indeed destitute of both: so that their distinction is ridiculous, whereby they put the difference betweene the worshippers, which ought to haue been put between the worships themselues. Even therefore as this worship and abstinence, seeming to the worshippers commendable for some apparance of wisedom and humility, in that the flesh is thus put to paine and vexation, was neither truely wise nor humble; so your worship in this kind, although it haue a certain deck and cover of wisedom and humility, yet in truth is altogether void of them. Wherefore the example of the Apostle 1. Cor. 9. and 2. Cor. 11. which subdued his body according to the word of God, by lawfull fasting, serueth not your turne. For his fast stood not in prescript daies, either of the yeare or of the week, but as occasion serued, and as temptations assailed him. Neither stood it in choice of abstinence from one meate more then from another, but in forbearance from all meates, as the Churches fast hath been before declared. Neither doth hee make a Law for others to follow his fast, nor could not, seeing the most of his fasts, watchings, with other bodily exercises, were undertaken in respect of his Apostleship, which cannot be communicated with vs.

Verse. 24 KNowing that you shall receiue of our Lord the ‡ retribution of inheritance. Serue our Lord Christ.

RHEM. 1. [24. Retribution of.] Retribution or reward of good works; ἀνταπόδοσις which signifieth rendring one for another.

ANSVV. 1 Retribution of the heauenly inheritance, is not the wages merited by good and faithfull seruice done to men, as vnto God, but it is the reward promised, and freely giuen, to Gods children, of his meere grace and mercy, by which they are made his children: and so haue interest vnto his inheritance: and yet it is truely and duely rendred, because it is promised.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 5. Mortifie therefore your members that are vpon the earth, fornication, vncleanesse, lust, evill concupisence and ‡ auarice, which is the seruice of Idols.

Heretical & foolish translation.

RHEM. 2. [5. Auarice which is the seruice of Idols] Here is a maruelous impudent and foolish corruption in the vulgar English Bible printed in the yeere 1557. and (as it seemeth) most auctorised. Where for their error against the Images of Christ and his Saincts, and to make image and idoll, all one: the translatour for that which the Apostle saith in Greeke, Couetousnesse is idolatrie, maketh him to say in English, Couetousnesse is worshipping of images, as also, Ephes. 5. 4. he translateth thus. The couetous person is a worshipper of images: for that which the Apostle saith, The couetous man is an idolater, meaning spirituall idolatry because he maketh money his God. In which sense to call this spirituall idolatry, worshipping of images, is ridiculous, and must needs proceed of blind heresie.

Images and Idols.

ANSVV. 2 A maruelous impudent and foolish corruption, to make Image and idoll all one. A great corruption I promise you to expresse a Greeke word by a Latine or English word. For that εἴδωλον signifieth an image, not onely all the new Dictionaries do testifie, but also the ancient Greek Lexicons of Hesychius, and Phauorinus and so is the word vsed by Plato, Homer, and all other ancient writers. But if there be so great difference between idols and images, why doe you translate out of your Latine, which ss Seruitus simulachrorum, the seruice of images, contrary to your Latine, calling it the seruice of Idols? if you will stand in argument with vs, that Simulachrum signifieth the same, that εἴδωλον doth in Greeke and not that ἄγαλμα: first the vse of all learned authors in the Latine tongue is against you, and namely Tullie, the father of Latine eloquence, which oftentimes vseth the word Simulachrum, for the same that is otherwise called Imago, or Effigies. One or two examples, I will bring for many; Pro Archia, hee saith Statuæ & imagines non animorum simulachra sunt sed corporum. Standing images, and other images, are not similitudes or images of mindes, but of the bodies. Against Verres, he nameth Effigies simulachrumque Mithridatis. The shape and images of Mithridates. Lactantius an eloquent Christian, calleth men, viuentia Dei simulachra, the liuing images of God: where you must translate the liuing idols of God; if this your translation be true. Penenius a Popish fryer in Dyonisius de celest. Hierarh. li. 1. c. 1. for the Greeke word ἀγαλμα translateth Simulachra, which if you should vnderstand for an idoll, would make a madde meaning of Dyonisius. but of this word Simulachrum, and of our translation, I haue answered more at large in my defence against. Greg. Martyn cap 1. & sect. 5. c. 3. through out all the sections. Why spirituall idolatrie, may not bee called spirituall worshipping of images I greatly marueile, though it seeme to you neuer so ridiculous. For there is spirituall worship, as well as bodily, & spirituall images, as well as bodily images, though you laugh till your splene ake. But yours is the blind heresie, which worshippeth them that haue eyes and see not, and by the iudgement of God and the prophets execration, are become like vnto those whom you worship, that is hauing eyes and see not, for who is so blind, as he that will not see.

Dyonisius

Verse. 10. And I doing on the new, him that is renewed unto knowledge, according to the Image of him that created him.

RHEM. 3.] 10. Doing on the new.] By this and the whole discourse of this chapter conteining an exhortation to good life: and to put on the habite of the new man, with all vertues: wee may see our iustice in Christ to be a very qualitie and forme inherent in our soule, adorning the same, and not an imputation onely of Christs righteousnes, or an hiding onely of our sins and wickednes which the Heretikes falsely affirme to remaine in vs after baptisme and alwayes during life. See S. Aug. de pec. mer. & remiss. li 2. c. 7. & cont. Iulian b. 6. c. 7. Iustice an inherent quality in us.

ANSVV. Wee know there is in the regenerate, a qualitie inherent of iustice inchoated and vnperfect, by which we are not iustified before God, but onely by the iustice of Christ imputed to vs through faith: whereby our sinnes are hidde, and couered from the sight of Gods iustice. Yet so, that they are forgiuen and remoued from vs, as farre as the East is from the west: and not remaine still in vs (as you falsely say, we affirme) after baptisme, although corruption of our nature which is of originall sin, doth remaine in vs during our naturall life. And our renouation is begun in regeneration, not perfected vntill after this life. And that doth Augustine expresly affirme, in the first place, whether you send vs. For not from that houre, in which euery man was baptized, all his old infirmitie is consumed, but renouation beginneth of the remission of all sinnes. And the same argument he holdeth, against Iulianus the Pelagian as appeareth by these his words. Although in baptisme bee performed full remission of sinnes, yet there hath remained wherein we might profit to a better wrestling, to be watchfully and continually exercised, against the troops of euill desires, rebelling within vs, for which it is said, euen to them that are baptized, Mortifie your members which are vpon the earth &c. Inflice inherent. Slander.

CHAP. IIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 13 FOR I giue him testimony that he hath much ✝ labour for you, and for them that be at Laodicia, and that are at Hierapolis.

RHEM. 1. [13. Labour for you.] He did not onely pray, but tooke other great paines to procure Gods grace for the Colossians: perhaps by watching, fasting, and doing other penance of body: that God would not suffer them to fall from their receiued faith to the sect of Simon Magus or the Iudaizing christians.

ANSVV. The Apostles word is zeale or great loue, and not labour. Neuertheless what labour soeuer he tooke for them, it was not, merite either for himselfe, or them.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO THE THESSALOIANS.

RHEMIST.

HOW S. Paul with Silas (or Silvanus) and Timothee according to a vision calling him out of Asia, into Macedonia, came to Philippi being the first cittie thereof, wee read Act. 16. And how againe from Philippi, after scourging and imprisoning there, he came to Thessalonica being the head citty of that country, we read Act. 17. where after three weekes preaching, the Iewes stirred the citty against them, and pursued them also to Berœa: so that S. Paul was conueied from thence to Athens where he expected the comming of Silas and Timothy from the foresaid Berea in Macedonia, but receiued them (as wehaue Act. 18.) at Corinth in Achaia.

Having

Hauing therefore left the Theſſalonians in ſuch perſecution, and being careſull to know how they did in it, he was deſirous to returne vnto them, ; as he ſignifieth in the 2. chapter of this Epiſtle v.17. But as he there addeth) Satan hindereth vs, therefore tarrying himſelfe at Athens, hee ſendeth Timothee vnto them, at whoſe returne vnderſtanding their conſtancie, hee is much comforted as hee declareth c.3. So then they are all three together at the writing of this Epiſtle, as alſo we haue in the title of it: Paul and Siluanus and Timothee to the Church of the Theſſalonians. And therefore it ſeemeth to haue been written at Corinth, not at Athens, becauſe after the ſending of Timothee to Theſſalonica, they mette not at Athens againe, but at Corinth.

The firſt three chapters of it are, to confirme and comfort them againſt the tentation of thoſe perſecutions. The other two are of exhortation to liue according to his precepts namely in ſanctification of their bodies, and not in fornication: to loue one another: to comfort one an other about their friends departed, with the doctrine of the Reſurrection and with continuall preparation to die: the laitie to obey, and the Cleargy to be diligent in euery point of their office.

Verſe. 9 FOR they themſelues report of us what manner of entring we had to you: and how you are turned to God ‡ from Idols, to ſerue the liuing and true God.

RHEM. 1. [9. From Idols.] In this and like place the Heretikes malitiouſly and moſt falſely tranſlate, conſtrue, and apply all things meant of the Heathen idols, to the memories, and images of Chriſt and his ſaincts, namely the Engliſh Bibles of the yeeres, 1562. 1577. CARTVV. 1. Seeing therefore your worſhip is of things which haue no life in them, nor of themſelues, and be Creatures, and not the Creator: it followeth that there is neither falſe nor malitious dealing, when the gods of falſe Chriſtians are put in the ſame livery of Idolatry with the gods of the heathen.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 6. And you became ‖ followers of us, and of our Lord; receiuing the word in much tribulation, with ioy of the holy Ghoſt.

RHEM. 2. [6. Followers of vs.] S. Paul is bold to commend them for imitation of him, yea and to ioyne himſelfe in that point with Chriſt, to bee their paterne to walke after. Where without curioſitie he nameth himſelfe firſt, and our Lord afterward, becauſe hee was a more neere and ready obiect then Chriſt, who was not nor could not bee followed but through the preaching and conuerſation of the Apoſtles, who was in their ſight or hearing. And this imitation of ſome holy man or other, hath made ſo many Religious man of diuers orders and rules all tending to the better imitation of Chriſt our Lord. See the like words of the Apoſtle, 1. Cor. 11. 1. and Philippi 3. 17.

Religious perſons imitation of diuers holy men is the imitation of Chriſt himſelfe.

CARTVV. 2. For it is neceſſary for all Chriſtians to follow both Chriſt and Paul in ſuffering for the kingdom of heaven, otherwiſe they can never enter it: ſo that this collection inplieth evidently, that no man can be amongſt the elect of God, or in the account of the faithfull, but they onely that are of the order of S. Francis, &c. thing and conuersation, it followeth, that S. Francis, Dominicke. &c. being dead, the imitation of them (by your owne reason) ought to cease. For if Christ himselfe was not imitable, because hee was in heaven, how much lesse S Francis, S. Dominick. &c. of whom (it being out of doubt that they are neither in sight nor hearing) it may be doubted whether they be in heauen or no. And as this reason iustifieth the sect of Benedictines, Franciscans. Dominicks, &c. onely during their life to the first founder, and no longer; so it doth euidently conuince the Scisme of Iesuites to haue never been lawfull, as that which never having Iesus either in sight or hearing, could never imitate or follow him. Last of all, albeit this maxime be a sword to cut the throat of all the Rag-man-roules of the Popish singularities of profession: yet because it is a leaden one, we utterly refuse it. For it is false that Christ could not be followed, because he was neither in sight nor hearing, but by the Apostle: seeing the Scripture setteth those before us to be followed whom we never saw nor heard. And having oft-times other examples of most excellent men then aliue upon earth; yet leaveth them, and rather chooseth the example of Christ, as more mouing for the perfection of it (although without sight or hearing) then any other patterne which is helped by both those advantages. For although the present examples are more imitable if they be compared with examples absent in the same degree of goodnesse, yet that hindereth not but that the example of Christ (in body absent) is of greater force to moue to imitation, then Paules being present; and one Paules example (although absent) more then an hundred S. Francisses present. Whereupon the Apostle otherwhere setting himselfe for an example to the Church, maketh Christ the principall example, whereby they shall reforme whatsoeuer is amisse in the patterne of his life.

CHAP. II.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 18. FOR what is our hope, or ioy, or crown of glory? ‡ Are not you before our Lord Iesus Christ in his comming.

RHEM. 1. [18. Are not you before.] If the Apostle without iniurie to God, in right good sense call his scholers the Thessalonians, his hope, ioy, glory: why blaspheme the Protestants the Cath. Church and her children for terming our B. Lady or other Saincts, their hope, for the speciall confidence they haue in their prayers.

CART VV. 1. [18. Are not you before] S. Paul in calling the Thessalonians his hope, ioy, and glory, meant that he hoped by them to receiue both ioy and glory in the day of iudgement, when his diligent and faithfull Ministery towards them should be rewarded. And therefore the harlotry Church of Rome, with her bastard children, are not by this speech freed from their whoorish and fornicating speech of calling the blessed virgin, and other Saints, their hope. For they call not her or them their hope for reward of any profitable ministery, that by the will of God, and in a lawfull calling, they performed towards them: if they doe, let them shew us wherein they can be fruitfull or profitable unto them, especially by vocation from God, as the Apostle was by a commanded ministery unto the Thessalonians. Secondly, Paul affirmeth that they are his hope in regard of the gift of God at the latter day and comming of Christ, when both he and they shall bee ioyned together. Where you make the Saints your hope for graces, which you being aliue looke for at their hands which are departed. Thirdly, Paul looked for a crowne of ioy and glory of the undeserued grace of God, who hath promised freely to reward his labours towards them. But you looke for reward of God for the merit and desert of those whom you make your hope and glory. If you were not forsaken of all common iudgement, you could not be so brutish as once to affirme that Paul being aliue upon earth, did by the meditation and intercession of the Thessalonians when they were dead, call upon the Lord: or that by their merits he esteemed that he might come to heaven, or be more acceptable unto God, all which things (and moe to) when you ascribe unto the Saints, by calling them your hope, you may easily see that this speech of the Apostle to the Thessalonians notwithstanding the note of blasphemie cleaveth fast unto you still: for that in a likenesse of words and syllables, your cause and matter is found to be most unlikely. Lastly, the aduantage and strength of argument which you seeke in the word schollers, whom Paul called his hope, &c. is foolishly urged. For thereby is proued that the virgin Mary, and Saints departed being superiours unto us, are rather to call us their hope, then we to call them ours; as Paul being superiour unto the Thessalonians, called them his hope, &c. and not they Paul theirs: or at the least, that the one may be done as well as the other, whereof whethersoe ver is granted, you are undone.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 12. Therefore wee also giue thankes to God without intermission: because that when you had receiued of us the word of the hearing of God, you received it not as the word of men, but (as it is indeed) the word of God, who worketh in you that haue beleeued.

RHEM. 2. [12. The word of God.] The Aduersaries will haue no word of God but that which is written and conteined in the Scripture, but here they might learne that all Paules preaching before he wrote to them, was the the very word of God. They might also learne that whatsoeuer the lawfull Apostles, Pastors and Priests of Gods Church preach in the vnitie of the same Church, is to bee taken for Gods owne word, and ought not to bee reputed of them for doctrines of men or Pharisaicall traditions, as they falsly call canons, precepts, and decrees of holy Church.

Not onely the written word is the word of God.

CARTVV. 1. [12 Word of God.] It a malicious surmise that we esteeme not the Apostles preaching the word of God before it was written: And it is as foolish a collection thereupon to conclude that there is now a word of God not either expressed or contained in the Scripture, which is onely the controversie between us. And therefore let the Reader understand that as under the Law the doctrine of the Prophets Esay, Ieremy, Osiah, &c. which they preached in the whole course of their Ministery for the space of many yeares, was shut up into so short a summe as one may read in fewer howres then the yeares were wherein it was preached: even so the doctrine of the Apostles which they preached at large, was by writing drawn into smaller roome, which thing ought not to seeme strange to any that shall consider, that all the good workes which are commanded, and the contrary which are forbidden are all brought under the straight of ten words; and that all good prayers that ever were or shall bee made are summed in the six short petitions of the Lords prayer.

Deut. 10. 4 Mat. 6. 9. 12. Luk. 16. 29 Ioh. 5. 39. Acts. 25. 22 Rom. 1. 2. & 26. 26.

Secondly, as the Church under the Law contented it selfe with the Scriptures of these Prophets which were written, notwithstanding that there had been Prophets also that wrote nothing: so the Church underneath the Gospell resteth in the Scriptures of those Apostles and Evangelists that wrote, notwithstanding that there were also others which preached the word of God and wrote it not: especially considering that they protest that they taught nothing but that which was contained in the Scripture of the Law and the Prophets. Wherefore albeit that all be the holy word of God which proceeded out of the sacred mouthes of the Prophets and Apostles; yet when the same is all couched in the Scripture, as it were in the Lords library, they which deny that the Scripture and the Word are the same, do all one as if they should deny that it is not the same hand which being first stretched forth palme-wise, is after gathered in fist wise. And they which leaving the Apostles Scriptures seek to their Sermons, do all one as if the Israelites would leave the Law of Moses (wherein all duties are plainely set down) to seek it then in the Sermons of Noah, Abraham. &c. If indeed we had our eyes in the hinder or back part of our head, that we could as well see the things that are past as present, it might be better borne with if we ran back to those things which are past, although they were not preserved by some faithfull and undeceiueable record of those which cannot lie. But seeing that it is not so, and of the contrary side those things which are written in the Scriptures are as truely and effectually represented unto us as when they were first spoken: it is a great perversnesse (that we see use no sharper words) to leave the infallible testimony of God himselfe, testifying of his own Word, and to seek it at the uncertaine report and tradition of men, which are lyars and may be deceived.

And to the second point in this Annotation, whether the Sermons of the Pastors are the word of God or no: we deny not, but that being duely made, they may well be termed the word of God, so farre forth as backed and grounded out of the Scripture, they are accompanied with the power of the Spirit, either to the regeneration of the elect, or iust conviction of the reprobate: Even as an Advocate or Counsellour is said to speake Law when he speaketh agreeable to the Law; even as the Church is called Christ, not for it selfe, but for the Sonne of Gods sake, to whom as to a fountaine and head, she cleaveth. Howbeit that account of the word of God is in a lower degree of authority and excellency then that which was preached and written by the Prophets and Apostles. For although it be a faithfull interpretation of the Scripture, yet it is not inspired of God, and therefore hath not credite of it selfe, further then it agreeth with that which is inspired. Again, for that the godliest and learnedst, and most circumspect Pastors may be deceived, and sit beside the stoole sometimes, so that slip agreeing unto all Pastors and Bishops particularly, may by the same reason fall into their Canons when they meet in Councell: For as the Councell of the Apostles could not erre, because none of the Apostles which ruled and bare the sway in that Councell was subiect to errour: So of the other side, there being no one in the Councell of Bishops which cannot erre, it must needs be that their Councels may erre, as hath beene already upon Iohn 20, & Act. 15. and may further be shewed. This errour not falling into the doctrine of the Apostles either severally or ioyntly, it is evident that the word of God spoken and written by the Apostles is of a higher nature then that which is spoken or written by Bishops and Pastors.

Rom. 3. 4. 2 Tim. 3. 16 1. Cor. 3. 12 13. 14. 29. 33. 1. Thes. 5. 20.

Last of all, in the word of God spoken or written by the Apostles is required, not onely that there be a true sense, but that the frame both of the words and sentences be inspired of God, which is then onely performed when both the words and sentences are so fitted to the argument that is handled, that nothing is wanting, nothing is abounding, nothing not most profitably bestowed. It is evident that this goeth farre beyond the measure and reach of any Pastor how sufficient soever. For the word inspired is perfect, tryed and purified seven times, wherein there is not so much as a mote of drosse or allay: So that there is nothing can be either added, diminished, or displaced but with impairement: whereas in the Pastors preaching it is enough that it bee grounded upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, and that they haue a patterne of the word of God, although they misse that exactnesse of speech that it useth.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 10 YEA and you do it toward all the brethren in all Macedonia. But wee desire you brethren, that ‡ you abound more.

RHEM. 1. [10. Abound more.] Christian men ought to proceed and profit continually in good works and iustification.

CARTVV. 1 [10 Abound more.] Christians ought to proceed in good works: but in iustification they can no more proceed then Christ, (who by faith is their iustice) can bee increased. This faith (indeed) proceedeth, and is increased, and therefore they also increase in further assurance and confidence of their iustification; but thereof followeth no more any growth in iustification, then one of twenty yeares, having a liuelier feeling and more use of the faculty of reason, then at twelue, is therefore more a reasonable creature then at yonger yeares: or that a iewell which one receiued when his hand was through age or sicknesse weaker and not so strong to hold it: is therefore increased because the hand strengthened by riper yeares, or freedom from sicknesse, is able better and faster to gripe it then before. Rom. 1. 17.

ANNOTATIONS.

Vers. 8. Therefore he that despiseth these things, despiseth I not man but God, who also hath giuen his holy Spirit in us.

RHEM. 2 [8. Not man but God.] He that despiseth the Churches or her lawfull Pastors precepts offendeth no lesse then if hee contemned Gods expresse commandements. For they bee of the holy Ghost, and are not to be counted among the commandements of men onely. The precepts of the Church

CARTVV, 2. [8. Not man but God.] This note of receiving of the lawfull Pastors precepts, being without exception, is false: for it is true onely generally and absolutely of the Prophets, Apostles, and other the Pronotories of God, which were inspired of God as the Apostle was: and then of Pastors with this exception, so farre as they giue precepts of that which they haue out of the the Scripture; as the forbidding of uncleannesse, and commanding of sanctification, mentioned also in this place. For further answer looke before, chap. 2. 12.

Verse 13. And wee will not haue you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that I sleepe, that you be not sorrowfull, as also others that haue no hope.

Verse. 8 BVT we that are of the day, are sober, having on the breast-plate of faith and ‡ charity, and a helmet the hope of saluation.

RHEM. 1. [8. Charity.] A Christian mans whole armour is not faith onely, but all the three vertues here named.

CARTVV. 1. [8. Charity.] If Charitie and hope were no part of the armour of a Christian Souldier, they should not be profitable at all; which as it is absurd, so it is farre from us, who acknowledge that without them none can come to heaven, but affirme that they are necessary as fruits of men already saued and iustified, and not causes why men are either the one or the other: and notwithstanding that these vertues pertaine to the compleat harnesse of a Christian; yet (to continue in the same allegory) the victory is ascribed to faith alone. 1. Verse 17. pray ‡ without intermission.

RHEM. 2. [17. Without intermission.] To desire eternall life of him that onely can giue it, is to pray without intermission: but because that desire is often by worldly cares cooled, certaine houres and times of vocall prayer were appoynted. See S. Aug. ep. 121. ad Propam.

CARTVV. 2. [17. Without intermission.] That to desire eternall life of God onely able to giue it, is to pray without intermission, although it giue not for an egge a Serpent, yet it giueth for bread, a stone which no teeth can enter into: where the meaning of the Apostle is nothing else but that men should not giue over at any time the care and travell of praying daily and nightly at commodious times, or as any speciall occasion requireth: nor let fall any holy sute that they haue once commended, before such time as they haue obtained it, as the manner of many is to pray by fits either in the beginning of their profession of the Gospell, or when they are first bitten or wrung with trouble. Looke more hereof before upon Luke 18. vers. 1. 7. And if by certain houres of prayer, you meane that men were taught in the morning, noone, and eueningtide to pray unto God, and to take conuenient houres for that purpoſe, you alledge Auguſtine well: but of Canonicall houres epiſt. 21. he hath not a word.

CARTVV. 3. [20. But proue.] The ſpirit of your Catholicke Church is a giddy ſpirit, if it depart at any time from the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, which are the Loadſtarre, and can not beguile all that follow her in that Spirit.

RHEMIST.

THE ſecond to the Theſſalonians hath in the title as the firſt: Paul and Siluanus and Timothee, &c. And therefore it ſeemeth to haue been written in the ſame place, to witte, at Corinth, where they remained a yeare and ſixe moneths*, and ſtraight vpon their anſwer to the firſt Epiſtle. Acts 18. 11.

Firſt hee thanketh God for their increaſe, and perſeuerance (comforting them againe in thoſe perſecutions) and prayeth for their accompliſhment. Secondly he aſſureth them, that the day of Iudgement is not at hand, putting them in remembrance what hee tolde them thereof by word of mouth, when hee was preſent (as therefore hee biddeth them afterward * to hold his Traditions vnwritten, no leſſe then the written,) to witte, that all theſe perſecutions and hereſies, raiſed then, and afterward againſt the Catholicke Church, were but the myſterie of Antichriſt, and not Antichriſt himſelfe, but that there ſhould come at length a plaine Apoſtaſie, and then the whole forerunning myſtery being once perfitly wrought) ſhould follow the reuelation of Antichriſt himſelf in perſon (as after all the myſteries of the old Teſtament, Chriſt Ieſus our Lord came himſelfe in the fulneſſe of time.) And then at length after all this, the day of Iudgement and ſecond comming of Chriſt, ſhall bee at hand, and not before, whatſoeuer pretenſe of viſion, or of ſome ſpeach of mine (ſaith S. Paul) any make to ſeduce you withall, or of my former Epiſtle, or any other. For which cauſe alſo, in the end of this Epiſtle, he biddeth them to know his hand, which is a ſigne in euery Epiſtle. c. 2. v. 15.

Laſtly he requeſteth their prayers, and requireth them to keepe his commandements and Traditions namely that the poore which are able, get their their own liuing with working, as he alſo gaue them example, though he were not bound thereto.

CARTVV. There are here two things unſufferable, the one of Traditions ſet cheeke by cheeke with the writings of the Apoſtles: The other of painted and forged Antichriſt, which as well becauſe they haue here no ſtay of reaſon, but onely the rotten word of the Ieſuites, as alſo that they come afterward in this Epiſtle to bee examined and deducted more at large, wee will reſerue to their proper place.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAVL TO THE THESSALONIANS.

CHAP. I.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 5 FOr an example of the iuſt iudgement of God, that ‡ you may bee counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for the which alſo you ſuffer.

RHEM. 1. [5. You may be.] Note that by conſtant and patient ſuffering of afflictions for Chriſt, men are made worthy (ſo the Greek ſignifieth as the Aduerſaries themſelues tranſlate v. 11. of the crown or kingdom of heauen, and ſo do merit and deſerue the ſame. See Annot. Luc. 20, 35. And the Apoſtle here ſaith that it is Gods iuſtice no leſſe to repay glory to the afflicted, then to render puniſhment to them that afflict, becauſe of their contrary deſerts.

CARTVV. 1. [5. You may be.] The Greeke word ſignifieth not any dignitie inherent in vs as you pretend: for it is well known that this forme of verbes anſwereth the Hebrew Coniugation Hiphill whereas to haue wonne the ſignification that you runne for, it ſhould haue anſwered the ſignification of the verbe in Hithpaell betokening that hee hath made himſelfe worthy, or that his worke had made him worthy, which is not the ſpeech of the Apoſtle in either of the places of this chapter. Beſide that not being able to wring this ſenſe out of this verſe not ſo much as by your own and old tranſlation, both which doe ſet the worthineſſe of the faithfull in that they are ſo accounted and reputed of, it is a ſhame for you to ſeeke it out of the 11 verſe where the ſenſe is the ſame, howſoeuer the words of ours and your tranſlation differ; eſpecially ſeing if there were any aduantage for you it might by reaſon of the compoſition be rather gotten out of the former then of the latter place. And as this ſentence of afflictions making a man worthy of the kingdom of heauen, is ouerthrown by preciſe teſtimony of the Scripture otherwhere, which affirmeth that the afflictions of this life are not worthy of the glory which ſhall be reuealed; ſo it is euidently caſt downe by the circumſtance of this place. For firſt of all, giving thankes vnto God for their condition ver. 3. he doth thereby inſinuate that they haue a ſtraighter bond of thankfulneſſe then he had, which notwithſtanding they could by no neceſſitie bee tyed vnto, if they had by merite of their afflictions earned it out. Secondly requeſting of God further that he would make them worthy, he teacheth that the ſame proceedeth of the good pleaſure and will of God: whereof when either of them apart do ouerturne our merite, both of them ioyned together beate down the ſwelling pride of our proper worthineſſe and deſert. Adde hereunto, that in affirming that God doth accompliſh the good pleaſure of his goodneſſe towards them: he thereby giueth to vnderſtand that the whole ſtate and courſe of ſalvation, as well for the beginning, as for the middle and end, depeudeth upon the moſt free and franck good-will and pleaſure of God. Neither doth it help the Ieſuits any whit, that God in iuſtice doth as well reward the godly, as puniſh the wicked: conſidering that the iuſtice of God is as well declared in keeping of his gracious and vndeſerued promiſes to the ſonnes of men, as in giuing them the deſerued hier and wages of their wickedneſſe: For that the iuſtice of God is often taken for the truth of Gods promiſes it is manifeſt by the Apoſtle in the third to the Romanes, who in the fourth and fifth verſe calleth it the iuſtice of God, which in the fourth and ſeventh he calleth the truth of Gods promiſe kept and holden towards thoſe which were moſt vnworthy of them. Whereof alſo it commeth, that God is called iuſt in the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes according to his promiſe. But the place of the Pſalme is notable heere, where iuſtice is not alone taken for the truth of Gods free promiſe, but is manifeſtly oppoſed to the iuſtice of God, which recompenſeth every one according to the deſert of workes; ſaying, deliuer me in thy iuſtice, but enter not into iudgement, &c.

Pſa. 143. 1. 2.

Verſe. 10 When hee ſhall come to be ‡ glorified in his Saints, and to be made marvellous in all them that haue beleeved, becauſe our teſtimony concerning you was credited in that day.

RHEM. 2. [10. Glorified in his Saincts.] Chriſt ſhall be glorified in his Saincts, that is, by the great and vnſpeakable honour and exaltation of them he ſhall be honoured, as now hee is: the honour which the Church doth to them, not diminiſhing Chriſts glory (as the Aduerſaries foliſhly pretend) but excedingly augmenting the ſame.

CARTVV. 2. [10 Glorified in his Saincts.] We honour the Saints that are departed, and therefore they ſay untruely which affirme that we deny them all honour; onely we barre them of that honour which is proper unto God, as invocation and ſuch like. For the overthrow of which doctrine of ours, that which is brought, that Christ is glorified in his Saints is fooliſh: for albeit he be glorified in the glory of his Saints, yet it followeth not therefore that he is glorified in all manner of glory of his Saints, but onely in that which fitteth his Saints, and agreeth to their quality of being inferiour members, creatures, ſubiects, &c. And therefore this argument of the Ieſuites is all one, as of that, that a King is honoured in the honour and wealth of his ſubiects, one would conclude that it ſtandeth with the Kings honour that his ſubiects ſhould weare his Crown, hold his Scepter, ride in his Chariot and vpon his horſe, or vſe his royalties and princely prerogatiues.

Verſe. 4 WHich is an adverſary, and ‖ is extolled ‡ aboue all that is called God, or that is worſhipped, ſo that he ſitteth in the ‖ Temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe as though he were God.

RHEM. 1. [4. Aboue all that is.] How then can the Pope bee Antichriſt, as the Heretickes fondly blaſpheme, who is ſo far from being exalted aboue God, that he prayeth moſt humbly not onely to Chriſt, but alſo to his B. mother and all his Saincts.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 2. That you be not eaſily moued from your ſenſe, nor be terrified, neither by ſpirit, nor by word, nor by epiſtle as ſent by us, as though the day of our Lord were at hand.

RHEM. 3. [2. As though the day] The curioſitie of man led by Satans deceites, hath ſought to know and to giue out to the world, ſuch things as God will not imparr to him, nor be neceſſary or profitable for him to know: ſo farre, that both in the Apoſtles dayes and often afterward, ſome haue feined reuelations, ſome falſely gathered out of the Scriptures, ſome preſumed to calculate and coniect by the ſtarres. and giuen forth to the world a certain time of Chriſts comming to iudgment. All which ſeducers bee here noted in the perſon of ſome that were about to deceiue the Theſſalonians therein. And S. Auguſtine (in his 80. Epiſtle ad Heſychium) prooueth that no man can be aſſured by the Scriptures of the day, yeare, or age, that the end of the world or the ſecond aduent ſhall bee.

CARTVV. 3. [2 As though the day.] When the diſciples asked our Saviour of the ſignes that ſhould go before the deſtruction of the Temple, and the end of the world, Chriſt maketh that queſtion which they eſteemed to be one alone to be (as it was indeed) two, and therefore anſwereth ſeverally, diſtinctly, and apart vnto both: Firſt therefore, foretelling the ſignes that ſhould go before the deſtruction of the Temple, hee affirmeth that all thoſe ſhould be accompliſhed before one age ſhould be run out, which alſo came to paſſe accordingly, it being deſtroyed before halfe an age, which is fifty yeares, were fully attchived. Afterward laying before their eyes the tokens that ſhould fore-run the latter day, hee ſhutteth up all that ſpeech with a like clauſe, that they ſhould all be fulfilled or ever one age were accompliſhed. Wherefore it is evident, that the age wherein the latter day ſhall come, may be known of them vpon whom the day ſhall come: which thing is yet more evident by the oppoſition which the Evangeliſts make between the age and the day and houre: For after he had ratified vnto them the age by the ſignes and tokens that ſhall fall in it, he addeth, but of the day and houre, no man can know, &c. As if hee would ſay, I haue thus farre fulfilled your requeſt touching the knowledge of the time of the end of the world, as to tell you of the age wherein it ſhall be, but the day and houre, or other particular times, ſhall be hid. We therefore with Chriſt, dare confidently affirme, that the age may be known, but more particular times are ſealed up from us, we leaue them in the power of our heavenly Father. And heerein whatſoever modeſty and hatred of curioſity you pretend out of Auguſtine epiſt. 80. yet indeed you are more malapert and curious then ſome of theſe which you accuſe: For when you determine of three yeares and ſix monthes of Antichriſts comming before the latter comming of Chriſt: you thereby teach evidently that a man may not onely attaine to the knowledge of the age, but alſo into the yeare and monthes wherein the world ſhall be ended. And withall it is to be obſerved, how deceitfull a rule of interpretation of the Scriptures it is, which the Popiſh Church followeth of receiving that ſenſe which the moſt of the ancient Fathers follow. And it is not onely deceitfull, but forſaken of themſelues, who (in this point of not knowing the time of the end of the world, ſeeming to follow Auguſtine) forſake the greateſt part of the fathers, which teach that the world ſhall end within the terme of 6000 yeares.

Verſe. 3. Let no man ſeduce you by any meanes, for vnleſſe there come a revolt firſt, and the man of ſinne be revealed the ſonne of perditition.

RHEM. 4. [3. Vnleſſe there come a reuolt firſt.] Though wee cannot bee aſſured of the moment, houre, or any certaine time of our Lords comming yet hee warranteth vs that it will not be before certaine things bee fulfilled, which muſt come to paſſe by the courſe of Gods prouidence and permiſſion before which, are diuers, whereof in other places of Scriptures wee bee forewarned. Here he warneth vs of two ſpecially, of a reuolt, defection or an apoſtaſie, and of the comming or reuelation of Antichriſt. Which to pertaine in effect both to one, either depending of the other, and ſhall fall (as it may be thought) neere together and therefore S. Auguſtine maketh them but one thing.

Two ſpeciall ſignes before the later dayt a generall apoſtaſie, and the comming of Antichriſt.

This apoſtaſie or reuolt, by the iudgement in manner of all ancient writers, is the generall forſaking and fall of the Romane empire. So Tertullian li. de reſur. carnis S. Hierome q. 11. ad Algaſiam S. Chryſoſtome hom. 4. and S. Ambroſe vpon this place, S. Aug. de Ciuit. Dei lib. 20. c. 19. All which fathers and the reſt Calvin preſumptuouſly condemneth of error and folly herein, for that their expoſition agreeth not with his and his fellowes blaſphemous fiction that the Pope ſhould bee Antichriſt. To eſtabliſh which falſe impiety, they interpret this reuolt or apoſtaſie to be a generall reuolt of the viſible Church of God, whoſe houſe or building (they ſay) was ſodenly deſtroyed, and lay many yeares ruined, and ruled only by Satan & Antichriſt. So ſaith the foreſaid Archheretick here, though for the aduantage of his defence, & as the matter elſe where requireth, he ſeemeth (as all their faſhion is) to ſpeak in other places quite contrary: but with ſuch colour and colluſion of words, that neither other men nor himſelfe can tell what he would haue or ſay. And his fathers Wickleffe and Luther his fellowes and followers Illyricus. Beza, and the reſt, are (for the time of the Churches falling from Chriſt) ſo various among themſelues, and ſo contrary to him, that it is horrible to ſee their confuſion, and a pittifull caſe that any reaſonable man will follow ſuch companions to euident perdition.

Calvin in hunc locum. The hereticks interpretation of this apoſtaſie, and their condemning of the fathers

RHEM. 5. But concerning this errour and falſe hood of the Churches defection or reuolt, it is refuted ſufficiently by S. Auguſtine againſt the Donatiſts in many places. Where hee proueth that thee Church ſhall not faile to the worlds end, no not in the time of Antichriſt, affirming them to deny Chriſt, and to rob him of his glory & inheritance bought with his bloud, which teach that the Church may faile or periſh. Lib. de vnit. Ec. c. 12. 13. de Ciuit. li. 20. c. 8. In Pſal. 85. ad illud, Tu ſolus Deus magnus, Pſal. 70. Con. c. 2. & Pſal. 60. de vtil. cred. c. 8. S. Hierome refuteth the ſame wicked Hereſie in the *Luciferians, prouing againſt them, that they make God ſubiect to the Diuell, and a poore miſerable Chriſt, that imagine the Church his body may either periſh or be driuen to any corner of the world, both of them anſwer to the Heretickes arguments grounded on Scriptures falſely vnderſtood which were too long here to rehearſe. It is enough for the Chriſtian reader to know, that it is an old deceite and excuſe of all Heretikes and Schiſmatikes, for defence of their forſaking Gods Church, that the Church is periſhed, or remaineth hidden, or in themſelues onely and in thoſe places: where they and their followers dwell: to know alſo, that this is reproued by the holy Doctors of the Primitiue Church, and that it is againſt Chriſts honour, power, prouidence and promis.

Dialog. aduerſ. Luciſer. cap. 6.

RHEM. 6. If the Aduerſaries had ſaid that this reuolt which the Apoſtle foretelleth ſhall come before the worlds end, is meant of great numbers of Heretickes and Apoſtates reuolting from the Church, they had ſaid truth of themſelues and ſuch others, whom S. Iohn calleth Antichriſts. And it is very like (bee it ſpoken vnder the correction of Gods Church and all learned Catholikes that this great defection and reuolt ſhall not be onely from the Romane empire, but ſpecially from the Romane Church, and withall from moſt points of Chriſtian religion nor that the Catholike Chriſtians, either in the time of Antichriſt or before ſhall refuſe to obey the ſame but for that neere the time of Antichriſt and the conſummation of the world, there is like to be a great reuolt of kingdomes, peoples, and Prouinces from the open externall obedience and communion thereof. Which reuolt hauing been begun and continued by Heretikes of diuers ages, reſiſting and hating the Seate of Peter, (which they called Cathedam peſtilentiæ, the chaire of peſtilence, * In S. Auguſtine dayes) becauſe it is Chriſts fort erected againſt hell gates and all Heretickes, and being now wonderfully increaſed by theſe of our dayes the next precurſors of Antichriſt as it may ſeeme ſhall bee fully atchieued a litle before the end of the world by Antichriſt himſelfe, though euen then alſo, when for the few dayes of Antichriſts reigne the externall ſtate of the Roman Church and publick entercourſe of the faithfull with the ſame may ceaſe, yet the due honour and obedience of the Chriſtians towards it and communion in hart with it, and practiſe thereof in ſecret, and open confeſſing thereof if occaſion require, ſhall not ceaſe, no more then it doth now in the Chriſtians of Cypres and other places where open entercourſe is forbidden.

RHEM. 7. This is certaine and wonderfull in all wiſe mens eyes, and muſt needs bee of Gods prouidence, and a ſingular prerogatiue, that the Seate of Peter ſtandeth, when all other Apoſtolike ſees be gone: that it ſtood there for certaine ages together with the ſecular ſeate of the Empire: that the Popes ſtood without wealth, power, or humane defenſe, the Emperours knowing, witting, and ſeeking to deſtroy them, and putting to the ſword aboue thirty of them one after an other, yea and being as much afraid of them as if they had been æmuli imperii Competitors of their Empire, as S. Cyprian noteth (Epiſt. 52. ad Antonianum n. 3.) of S. Cornelius Pope in his dayes, and Decius then Emperour. Againe, that the Emperours afterward yeelded vp the citty vnto them, continuing for all that in the Emperiall dignitie ſtill: that the ſucceſſors of thoſe that perſecuted them, laid down their crownes before their Seate and ſepulcres, honouring the very memories and Relikes of the pore men whom their predeceſſors killed: that now well neere 1600. yeares this Seate ſtandeth as at the beginning in continuall miſery, ſo now of long time for the moſt part in proſperitie: without all mutation in effect, as no other kingdom or ſtate in the world hath done, euery one of them in the ſaid ſpace being manifoldly altered. It ſtandeth (we ſay) all this while (to uſe S. Auguſtines words de vtil. cred. 6. 17.)

The wonderfull prouidence of God in preſerning the See of Rome more then all other ſtates, notwithſtanding manifold dangers and ſcandals.

c. 17.) Frustra circumlatrantibus Hereticis, the Heretikes in vaine barking about it, not the first Heathen Emperours, not the Gothes and Vandals, not the Turke, not any sackes or massakers by Alaricus, Genserieus, Attila, Borban, and others, not the emulation of the secular Princes, were they kings or Emperours, not the Popes own diuisions among themselues and manifold difficulties and dangers in their elections, not the great vices which haue been noted in some of their persons, not all these nor any other endeuour of scandall could yet preuaile against the See of Rome, nor is euer like to preuaile till the end of the world draw neere, at which time this reuolt (here spoken of by the Apostle) may bee in such sort as is said before, and more shall bee said in the Annotations next following.

CARTVV. 4. [Vnlesse there come a revolt first,] In the second section of this Note, to divert his consideration from the Apostasie of the Romish Church, they would hang their Reader in the falling away of men from the Romane Empire, which cannot be the Apostles meaning in this place: For first, the Apostles word here, is used by the Scripture, and by Ecclesiasticall Writers (that haue herein followed the Scripture) to note an Ecclesiasticall, and not a Civill falling away; it is also absurd, as that which confoundeth the subiect with the adiunct or accident: the execution of this iudgement, with the time wherein the execution shall be: for the Apostle ver. 9. doth declare that this Apostacie shall be, when he that letted then, should be taken away, meaning of the Romane Empire. Moreover the Apostle speaking of the same defection, doth expresly marke it out to be a defection from the faith. Last of all the Apostle interpreting himselfe doth evidently declare it to be an Ecclesiasticall, or Church falling away, when he saith, the man of sinne shall bee
2. Tim. 4. 1 revealed. Tertullian de resurrect. carnis, doth indeed expound the ninth verse, he which withholdeth, of the Romane Empire, but this third verse he doth not so interprete, but as we do, of defection from the kingdom of Christ: for (having made no mention at all of the Romane Empire before) to proue that God hath appointed set times, changes and seasons before the resurrection, after he had alledged this place, I beseech you brethren by the comming of the Lord, and our assembly vnto him, &c. as it is in the Text, hee addeth, For vnlesse a departure come first euen of this Kingdom: where it is manifest that these words, euen of this Kingdom, must needs be referred to the visible assembly and Congregation of Christ: for of it he had spoken before, but of the Roman Empire not a word; vnlesse the Iesuites will make the relatiue huius to be referred to that which commeth after, and not to that which goeth before. And seeing after he maketh that which letteth this departure to bee the Empire, he cannot in any reason make the same thing that was first to bee fulfilled, the let of it selfe.

In alledging Chrisostom the Iesuites declare themselues to haue neither conscience nor shame: for to proue that he expoundeth this third verse, speaking of the Apostasie to be vnderstood of the Romane Empire, they send us to his fourth Homily, which is not the interpretation of this verse but of the ninth verse, which he also interpreteth manifestly against them, of the Romane Empire. They durst not send us to his exposition vpon this verse, because it doth evidently convince them and make for us. What is it (saith he) that he calleth defection or Apostasie? The Anti-christ himselfe hee calleth Apostasie, as that which shall destroy and lead away many, so that euen the elect should be offended, if it were possible. Wherefore M. Calvin should not haue been so much presumptuous as fooliish, if by condemning all these fathers of errour, hee had laid himselfe and his good cause open to a needlesse envie of opposition and dissent from them. But as you haue deale with Tertullian and Chrysostom in falsification of them: so haue you untruely spoken of M. Calvin, who doth not reiect the iudgement of all these fathers, or of the rest, as you say, but of that part of them that follow your iudgement. And if all the ancient VVriters in a manner bee of this minde with you; you haue done very unadvisedly, who of foure which yon haue brought, haue but two onely Ieremy and Ambrose to speak for you, the other two not onely giving no witnesse vnto your cause, but quite against it for ours. If we had said, that the Church could fall away, or cease to be; one word of the Prophet, which calleth it an everlasting people, would haue had more weight to confute us then all this.

But in the third section of this Annotation, the Iesuites playing the tall men lay on load, and fight without an Aduersary: For they heape Doctor upon Doctor to proue that the Church cannot fall away, or be in one corner or angle of the world, which wee deny not: But against this, that those which in outward profession are the Church, may fall away, or that there may bee a time wherein the true Church scattered throughout all the world, may partly for fewnesse in comparison of the rest, and partly for feare of Church tyrants, lye hid in solitarie places (which is the question) they neither haue nor can haue one word. Yea in the very next section, themselues (ouercome with the light of the truth, hauing first asked a grace of the Popish pillars which think otherwise) affirme that the Catholicke Church through a great vniuersality of revolt from it shall be driuen to make her conventicles in secret. And let them not thinke much, if taking this which they giue with an evill eye, we wring more from them whether they will or no: For if they thinke that this Apostacie will not be onely from the Empire, but from the Church also, wee aske them upon what ground they so thinke? If they do it by the spirit of prophecy: albeit it is not impossible but that Saul may be among the Prophets: yet this Prophecie being neither of wine nor strong drink, is like never to haue the Popes allowance. Peradventure they seeing already so many armes of Kingdomes, and boughes of people and Provinces hewed off by the axe of the Gospell, from the great tree of Rome, which (as Babylon her mother did sometime the Easterne parts) hath for many yeares past ouer-spread and over-shadowed the Westerne governments: And gathering by that conquest that the Gospell hath already made, what further successe it is like to haue to the bringing of that tree to a bare and naked stump: thought good (of that which their sense partly, and partly a common reasonable discourse doth yeeld) to insinuate some singularity of diuination, and of fore-telling things to come. And if they like better to answer that they made this collection collection of the Scriptures, then we aske of what Scriptures rather then of this? If of this, why do they so proudly condemne, and so doggedly bite that in us, which in themselues they iustifie and fawn upon.

In the fifth Section the Iesuites to advance the credit of the Romish Church, doe imagine great wonders in the marvellous continuance thereof, but themselues onely see them, for to others they cannot shew them, not so much as the Egyptian Inchanters, or ordinary Iugglers; which although they abuse mens eyes, yet in Divellish Art or sleight of hand, make some representation of that which they pretend, That that seat standeth when all other Apostolike seates are fallen away, it must needs be (say they) of Gods providence. What else? For how otherwise should the Divell himselfe, and his kingdom stand unlesse it were by Gods holy providence: but their meaning is, that it standeth in the truth: but so their meaning is a plaine begging of that which is the question, considering that we deny it, and proue by many discourses of whole bookes, that the Church of Rome hath been for the space of 980. yeares, or thereabout, Antichristian, and that as before her falling away shee stood not alwayes in the same degree of sincerity, but declined, and was (as it were) in the wane, not as the Moone by approching, but by going further off from the times of the Apostles, which had affected and possessed her whole body with the light of the Gospell; even so sithence her falling away, shee hath not stood alwayes in the same direct line of opposition to that she was in the Apostles time, but hath corrupted herselfe more and more, according to the measure of time wherein she first began to play the harlot. And as by falling first to this Whoredome, she lost her head which is Christ Iesus, so by continuance in it so many hundred yeares, she hath now lost her forehead, not ashamed to deny her Whooredome, albeit shee bee taken in the very act, and bee convinced not onely by strangers, which worthily hate her, and are appoynted to eate her flesh, but by those of her owne household, Secretaries, Chauncellors, Monkes, Friers, Bishops, Cardinals, and other her officers, who haue eaten bread at her table. This, albeit it hath the proofe of whole bookes; yet because the Reader may see the better likelihood of it, to cause him to enquire after it, let him heare what a Bishop of their own at the last Councell of Trent saith: Would to God that they were not wholly with generall consent gone from religion to superstition, from faith to infidelity, from Christ to Antichrist, from God to Epicure, saying with wicked heart, and filthy mouth, there is no God: neither hath there been any Pope this great while that hath regarded those things: for they all sought their own, and not so much as one of them the things of Christ, and therefore we can see no singular prerogative in her preservation: for in case of religion there can bee no prerogative of preservation where there is not, nor hath been for many hundred yeares the truth to preserue, and if there were, yet she is matched with Constantinople (an Apostolicall seat as well as she) which holdeth in substance the same religion which she doth, inferiour unto her in nothing, but in the procession of the holy Ghost from the Sonne; superiour in many, wherein she hath not fallen from the faith, as Rome hath done. And as for the continuance of her estate in stones and timber, in walles and gates, and some pollicie to uphold the state and countenance of a Citty, whereof the Iesuits make no small vaunt, if they had remembred that Tyre, Sidon, Ninive, and such like, razed from their foundation, were not so wicked as Capernaum and Bethsaida, that stood upon their foundation: they would haue been ashamed to haue made Rome so great with such a small argument as this is, yet is it also untrue, that Rome hath been upholden by any such high hand of God, aboue other Empires and Cities, considering that by their owne confession it hath been sacked foure times, beside many desolations it hath been subiect to at other times, which they peradventure are not ignorant of, whereas the Citty of Ninive, and the Empire of the Assyrians, stood both longer and faster with lesse motions and shakings then Christian, much more then Popish Rome hath done. And if truth of religion should be measured by foot of continuance, and defence of Gods hand, the Citty of Venice should carry it from Rome, which hath stood 1400. yeares without any one sacke, or desolation, whereof Rome hath felt divers. If you can bring stories of any miraculous and unwonted deliverances, wherewith God hath delivered Popish Rome with a stretched out arme, where fiue of you haue driven away an hundred of your enemies, or one of you haue driven away a thousand of them, it might cause men to harken somewhat unto you. But when your victories haue been by the arme of flesh, in the multitude of men, your escapes in distresses by fained and deceitfull words of S. Peter and Paules chaire, of a money ransome, and such like meanes: you may not blame us if we can see no singular prerogative in the defence of Popish Rome; although (by Augustines testimony as in a glasse) wee could see some in the preservation of Rome, when the Gothes and Vandals, and other such barbarous nations invaded it before it was yet utterly fallen away from the truth. But if you had not the pearle of preiudice and fore-iudgement in the eyes of your mindes, you might easily haue seen this singular prerogative in the preservation of Geneva, the standing whereof one yeare onely, in so great will, might, endevour and enterprise of Pope and Popish Princes to destroy it, is more miraculous then the preservation of Rome 1500. yeares, which alwayes hath had carnall and worldly weapons to defend it. The like might be said of Rochell, which being but a small towne, was the rocke whereat the royall Campe of a puissant King did breake it selfe. These reasons of yours, as they are either untrue or impertinent: so that alledged out of Cyprian, Epist. 52. that the Emperours were afraid of the Bishops of Rome, as of Competitors to their Empire, is against you: for thereby it appeareth it had come to the Emperours eares by the sound of the doctrine preached in the Church in those times, that the Empire should be overthrowen by Antichrist, according as the Apostle teacheth, whose tyranny, because it is prophesied that it should be seated in that place which was sometime the Temple of God, they did wisely to haue the seat of that Citty in iealousie, out of which, as out of the root, should rise the Serpent that should sting the Empire unto death. And it was no marvell if in Cyprians time they suspected seeing even then the foundation of that Antichristian state began to be laid by the Bishops there, who although for divers things they are commended of Cyprian, yet for intrusion into the right of other Churches, by receiving those rashly which other Churches had advisedly deposed, and cast out, they be worthily rebuked.

Many Antichrists, as fore runners of the great Antichrist.

RHEM 8. [3. The man of sin.] There were many euen in the Apostles time (as we see by the 4. Chapter of S. Iohns first Epistle) and in the writings of the auncient fathers) that were fore-runners of Antichrist, and for impugning Christs truth and Church were called Antichrists, whether they did it by force & open persecution, as Nero & others either heathen or heretical Emperours did, or by false teaching and other deceits, as the Hereticks of all ages, in which common and vulgar acceptions S. Ierom saith, all belonged to Antichrist that were not of the communion of Damasus then Pope of Rome. Hier. ep. 57. ad Damas. and in another place all that haue new names after the peculiar calling of Heretickes, as Arians, Donatists (and as we say now, Caluinists, Zuinglians, &c. all such (saith he) be Antichrists. Dial. cont. Lucifer. c. 9. Yea these latter of our time much more then any of the former for diuers causes which shall afterwards be set down. Neuertheless they nor none of them are that great aduersary, enemy, and impugner of Christ, which is by a peculiar distinction and speciall signification named, the Antichrist, in Ion. 2. and the man of sinne, the sonne of perdition, the Aduersary, described heere & elsewhere, to oppose himselfe directly against God and our Lord IESVS CHRIST. The heathen Emperours were many. Turks be many, Heretices haue been and now are many, therefore they cannot bee that one great Antichrist which here is spoken of and which by the article alwayes added in the Greek is signified to be one speciall and singular man: as his peculiar and direct opposition to Christs person in the 5. chapter of S. Iohns Gospell v. 43. the insinuation of the particular stocke and tribe whereof he should be borne, to witte, of the Iewes (for of them hee shall be receiued as their Messias Io. 3. v. 45. and of the tribe of Dan. Iren. li. 5. Hieron. com. in c. 11. Dan. Aug. q. in Ios. q. 22. the note of his proper name Apoc. 13. the time of his appearing so neere the worlds end: his short reigne, his singular waste and destruction of Gods honour and all religion, his feined miracles, the figures of him in the Prophets and Scriptures of the new and old Testament: all these and many other arguments proue him to bee but one speciall notorious aduersary in the highest degree, vnto whom all other persecutors, Heretikes, Atheists, and wicked enemies of Christ and his Church, are but members and seruants.

The great Antichrist shall be one special & notorious man.

Beza in hoc cap.

RHEM. 9. And this is the most common sentence also of all ancient fathers. Onely Heretikes make no doubt but Antichrist is a whole order or succession of men, which they hold against the former euident Scriptures and reasons, onely to establish their foolish and wicked paradoxe that Christs chiefe minister is Antichrist, yea the whole order. Wherein Beza specially pricketh so high that hee maketh Antichrist (euen this great Antichrist) to haue been in S. Paul dayes, though he was not open to the world. Who it should bee (except hee meane S. Peter, because hee was the first of the order of Popes) God knoweth. And sure it is, except he were Antichrist, neither the whole order, nor any of the order can be Antichrist, being all his lawfull successors both in dignitie and also in truth of Christs religion. Neither can all the Heretickes aliue proue, that they or any of them vsed any other regiment or iurisdiction Ecclesiasticall in the Church, or forced the people to any other faith or worship of God then Peter himselfe did preach and plant. Therefore if the rest be Antichrist, let Beza bold'ly say that S. Peter was so also, and that diuers of the ancient Catholike fathers did serue and worke (though vnwares) towards the setting vp of the great Antichrist, for so doth that blasphemous penne boldly write in his Annotations vpon this place: and an English printed booke of late comming forth out of the same schoole, hath these words: As for Leo and Gregorie Bishops of Rome, although they were not come to the full pride of Antichrist, yet the mysterie of iniquitie hauing wrought in that Seate neere fiue or six hundred yeere before them, and then greatly increased, they were deceiued with the long continuance of error. Thus writeth a malapert scholler of that impudent schoole placing the mysterie of Antichrist as working in the See of Rome euen in S. Peters time, and making these two holy fathers great workers and furtherers of the same, whereas an other English Rabbine doubted not at Pauls crosse to speak of the selfe-same fathers, as great Doctors and Patrones of their new Gospell, thus, O Gregorie, O Leo, if we be deceiued you haue deceiued vs. Whereof we giue the good Christian Reader warning more diligently to beware of such damnable books and Maisters, carying many vnaduised people to perdition.

The Caluinists place Antichrist in the See of Rome in S. Pauls dayes.

They make S. Leo and S. Gregory great furtherers of Antichrists pride. Against D. Sanders rock pag. 248. et pag. 278. Iucl.

CARTVV. 8. 9. [3. The man of sin] Let not the reader maruell if the Iesuits are so paineful to disguise Antichrist, thereby to procure his escape from the hands of his pursuers, for they know well that if the maister theefe and principall be once conuinced and condemned, they which are parteners of the same robberie and accessories vnto it, cannot escape. Therefore they thinke good to make men beleeue that Antichrist is but one singular man, in whose death should die all this impietie which the Apostle describeth; which opinion is so vain, that if it were not for some gray hairs it hath in the approbation of ancient times, it were not worthy to be once disputed against. Diuerse of them by the cleere light they had out of this place, and the booke of the Apocalypse did easily find his cage in the citty of Rome; but if they had liued to haue seene the managing of that citty these many hundred yeares, they would neuer haue sought further for the vncleane bird then to the Bishop of Rome, which hath hatched his cockatrice egges there the space of yeares aboue specified, for when whatsoeuer is sayd of Antichrist here by the Apostle, doth (as shall appeare) so fit and become the Pope, as if it had been made for him and written of him, sithence he grew to be in his prime and full age of Antichristianitie, who is hee that can doubt, but the Pope is Antichrist, to whom this definition or description of Antichrist doth so well agree? for whomsoeuer else it shall be applied unto, beside the Pope, it will neuer sit cleare and handsomely on, but will bee most euidently either too wide or too narrow, too short or too long, as all reasonable iudgement shall easelie see that the Apostle did not take this measure for him. Againe, seeing this Apostacie is laid by the Apostle with the Antichrist he speaketh of; the Apostatie being found in that pestilent seate of the Bishop of Rome, who forbiddeth to marrie and to eate meates, both which God hath ordained to be soberly vsed with thanks giuing, it followeth that the Antichrist can not be far from thence. Hitherto commeth the spirituall whoredome of most abhominable Idolatry, and the denying of the Lord that redeemed them by establishing a iustice of their owne workes: either wherof doth doth raise from the foundation the holy faith wherein that Church was first betrothed vnto Christ.

Thirdly he is Antichrist whose chiefedome ouer the citie of Rome was hindred by the Romane Emperour; but the chiefedome of the Bishop of Rome ouer that Cittie was hindred by the Emperour: Wherefore the Bishop of Rome is Antichrist. The proposition is Pauls who affirmeth that there was a person extant and in being when he wrote, that hindered the reuelation and full growth of Antichrist: which thing (beside that it hath confirmation from the close manner of speech whereby S. Paul, to auoide the Churches danger, couertly marketh out the Romane Emperours, and from sondry of the ancient writers also) is so euident, that the Papists and Iesuites themselues are here at their wittes end, not knowing whether to turne them. The Assumption is euident seing it is known that vpon remoue of the state of the Empire vnto Constantinople the Bishop of Rome gat that supremacie in both estates of Church and common wealth which he now enioyeth. Diuers other reasons of equall necessitie and greater euidence of sense and palpable feeling there are in the Apocal. which after come in their proper place to bee handled. But by these wee may see, and especially by the last what a toy it is that the Papists would mocke the world with, in saying that this Antichrist shalbe one singular man; for seing the person that hindered the reuelation of Antichrist in Pauls time was not one singular man alone but a succession of Emperours of Rome, it followeth that this Antichrist which is opposed vnto him and succeeded into his estate must not be one singular man but a succession of Church men which shall follow one another in the gouernement of the Church as the Emperours entered vpon the place each of other in the common wealth. Againe, when the Apostle declareth that the mysterie of Antichrist which began in his time was not to bee fully weeded out but by the latter comming of Christ: it is manifest that it cannot be tyed to the life of one man; although he should liue the age of Methushalah; And if it be said that the mysterie begunne to bee formed in the wombe of the Church in Pauls time, had no head nor perfect shape vntill a little before the end of the world; it is confuted not onely in that there must be an analogie and answerable increase and frame of him to the beginnings which were in the Apostles time, but also that so God should misse of the end for the which hee threatneth the raising up of that Apostaticall seat, which is to punish those vnder the Gospell which beleeue not the trueth by the effectual errour that Antichrist through false miracles shall cast them into. Whereunto adde, that it is an idle and fond fantasie which imagineth that this Antichrist shall not come but three yeere and halfe before domesday. For it is manifestly ouerturned by the Apostles discourse who disputeth that this Antichrist shall come not onely before the comming of Christ, but before that the comming of Christ shall be at hand, that is within the life of a man, for that to be at hand signifieth not three yeere and a halfe onely but the whole age of a man, it is euident by the error of the Thessalonians which Paul here confuteth: for where vpon his words in the former Epistle, We which liue shall not preuent those that sleepe, They of Thessalonica had supposed that the Lords day should fall into their age, the Apostle declareth that (before that instance of time should come) the Antichrist shall be reuealed. Last of all, that this Antichristian Apostacie should be most notable, and most importing the waste and desolation of the Church, it appeareth in that it was so diligently taught and beaten vpon in the Church; whereof notwithstanding there should bee no reason, if it should bee of so short a continuance as is three yeeres and a halfe: for there had beene better cause to haue stood and laboured in the speciall prophecie and foretelling of Arius and his heresie, then of this counterfeit Antichrist, considering that that enduring many yeeres and hauing so great a spread as drew forth this complaint, that the whole world was become Arrian, should haue striken more deepely into the vniuersall state of the Church then any furie of one man how wicked so euer can do in so small a continuance of time as three yeeres and a halfe. And therefore the Iesuites wittes were not neere vnto them when they conioyne together his small time of raigne with his so horrible a wast and desolation of the Church, both which can not stand together vnlesse the Deuill should vse other instruments thereunto then those which haue their dwelling in flesh. The reasons whereupon the Iesuits would ground this opinion of Antichrists being one singular man are yet more ridiculous then the opinion it selfe. The first is for that the article restraineth that which is said of him to one singular man. The Iesuites are indeed better able to teach rules of Grammer then of diuinity; But it appeareth by this that they are fit for neither; for how should they teach this which they neuer learned, considering that it is euident that the article in Greeke is as much as when we ioyne to any thing A, or the, as to say a man of sinne, or the man of sinne, an Antichrist, or the Antichrist. Now dare they say that as often as wee say A man, or the man, a beast, or the beast: so often we vnderstand one particular man or beast onely, where indeed as we by A and The, the Hebrewes by their ה heh doe note an vniuersalitie in that whereunto they are added: Euen so in the tongue wherein the Apostle wrote, the Article doth often note a generalitie in the signification of that whereunto it is annexed. Beside, that those which haue skill in that tongue vnderstand that the Article is oftentimes vsed rather for an elegancie and ornament of speech then for any signification that it carrieth with it; so that the circumstance of the place must determine of the signification of the article; which how flat it is against them is euident. For when the article is vsed as well in him that letteth the reuelation of Antichrist as in the Antichrist, it followeth that seing he which letteth the reuelation of Antichrist neither is, nor (by the Iesuites own doctrine) is possiblie able to bee one singular man, but a succession of many men, the Antichrist himselfe whom the Apostle opposeth to him that hindered, cannot be a singular man, but a succession of many men in one estate of antichristianitie: Hether also belongeth that the same article vsed in Daniel and the Apocalypse too, noteth out the Monarches, which were not one singular man but a succession of many men one after another.

also, in saying that by this Article the Apostle putteth a difference betweene the Antichrists in the Apostles times, which were many, and betweene this which should be but one onely man; they
1. Ioh. 2. 22 & 4. 3. abuse the reader impudently: for the article is twice used by Iohn in speaking of those Antichrists which were fore-runners and harbingers as it were to prepare the way, and provide lodging for this great Antichrist. And as they doe openly falsifie the Apostle heerein, so they doe it foolishly and giddily in respect of the end wherefore they bring it. For if the Apostle had distinguished this Antichrist from those by the article as they say, and say foolishly, the same should make against them; for the other Antichrists which haue not the article adioyned unto them, being singular men, it should follow, that the article making difference between this and them, should argue that this should note out a number or a multitude of men gathered to one head or primacie of Antichristianitie; howbeit we deny not but that the article here doth both note a singularitie and a difference from other Antichrists, but it noteth a singularity of wickednesse, and a difference of destroying power, both for the meanes and continuance aboue all other Antichrists that ever were before him, or shall come after him. And this singularity is evidently gathered first of the article, so often, and so thicke, and therefore repeated: secondly, by the description that the Apostle maketh of him, who maketh him more spotted and speckled in all manner of iniquitie, then ever was the fourth beast, which for the excesse of impietie and iniustice, found no name which might be answerable to the monstrous wickednesse thereof. Last of all, by the experience and practise of these many hundred yeares, wherein this strange beast hath furiously playd her part against the Saints of God.

Their next reason is out of Iohn 5. 43. where (upon that that our Saviour Christ saith, that the Iewes refusing him who was sent of God, and did not seeke his glory, would receiue another not sent of God, and who would seeke his owne glory) they conclude that hee meaneth this of Antichrist; as if there could be none that should come to the Iewes in their owne name, not being sent of God, and that would seek their own glory, but only this Antichrist: whereas our Sauiour in that place opposeth himselfe and his doctrine to all those that should teach otherwise then he did. And he speaketh (if not onely, yet) especially of the Iewes which liued in the time of his ministery, who despising him, would receiue deceivers: and therefore this speech cannot be fitted to those Iewes which never heard Christ, nor any other preaching the truth in his name. Our Saviour Christ therefore doth apparantly note out certaine deceivers which soone followed him, and boasted that they were the Iewes Messias, whereof one of them led away 30000. the other an infinite number. And were it
Iosephus bello Iudaico. lib. 2. cap. 12. Pet. Galatin. lib. 4. c. 21. Luk. 21. 24 Rom. 11. 25 26. not the iudgement of some of the ancient writers which they follow here, no censure could bee too sharpe for the Iesuites most impudent wresting of this and such like places. Of like weight it is that they say he shall be a Iew, and of the tribe of Dan. For first, that is a very idle fable that either he shall come of the Iewes, or be received of them in the latter end of the world, as that which doth cleane overthrow the propheste of our Saviour Christ, and Paul, declaring that the whole nation of the Iewes, shall toward the latter end of the world bee commonly and ordinarily called unto the Gospell. And therefore they might with more likelihood haue assigned this apostasie amongst the Iewes now, or in the times of the Apostles when defection was and is upon them to the full, rather then so neere the end of the world, which is the time when they shall returne againe to their fathers
1. Ioh. 2. 19 house, from which they haue been so long banished; it being also necessary that there be a certaine suitableness betweene this Antichrist and his fore-runners: it followeth, that they being Apostates from the true Church, this also must be so, and therefore cannot bee understood to rise up from the Iewes. Moreover, if he should be of the tribe of Dan, yet is it childish thereof to conclude, that hee is one and a singular man: for many may come out of one tribe successiuely, that may sit in the same seat or throne of Antichristian Dominion, and they may as well conclude, that because it is prophesied, that the Lords leader or governour should come out of the tribe of Iudah, therefore there
Gen. 49. 10 1. Chro. 5. 2 was but one singular man which was governour or conductor of Gods people: and the testimony of the Scripture touching Dan, that he should be like a Serpent lying in wait for the rider, is spoken not of one man of that tribe, but of certaine disposition of the whole tribe for the most part inventiue of sleights and subtile practises to surprise their enemies. Whereby all men may see how indiscreetly that testimony and such like, are forced to proue Antichrist to come from thence.

The third reason they bring to proue Antichrist to be one singular man of the note of his proper name, Apocal. 13. is not unlike the rest: For first, there is no proper name of Antichrist noted, but the time wherein he should be revealed, as in that place shall appeare. Secondly, if there bee any name noted, yet it followeth not thereof that Antichrist is one singular man: for it is knowen that the name of Pharaoh, Ptolomie, Agag, Cæsar, &c. are names common to many successiue kings and Emperours of Egypt, Philistia and Rome. His appearing so neere the end of the world, and short reigne; beside that it is false, as hath been shewed, is rooliſh; seeing that the experience of the kingdom of Israel, and of the Popes own seate would haue furnished them of many monstrous heads within the space of three yeares and a halfe.

Last of all, they say that his feined miracles and propheties of both testaments, of him proue him to be one singular man onely, are cast in amongst the rest to helpe to make weight. The former whereof hath no manner of colour, seeing fained miracles may bee as well wrought by many as by one. The other is a flat begging of that in question. Albeit wee for our part content our selues with The propheties of the new Testament to lay foorth the whole Anatomie and portraict of Antichrist. Propheties of the old Testament about this matter, we know none, howsoeuer both by writers old and new some be carried thereunto: We confesse that there are places in the old Testament whereunto the Prophets of the new do allude; But the propheties of the old touching the calamities of the Church were determined in the publishing of the Gospell by Christ and his Apostles: for the which cause it was necessary that there should also bee Prophets of the new Testament to foretell the great occurences that should befall vnto the Euangelicall Church, as the legall had Prophets to forewarne the important euents that should greatly concerne her, whereas if the old Testament had foretold these affaires of weight vnder the Gospell. Paul and Iohn should haue in this point been rather expositors of the Prophets by analogie of Scriptures then Prophets themselues. As for that which is here brought to releeue the Popes estate out of Ierome epist. 57. that they belong to Antichrist that are not of Damasus communion, it maketh not for him, for Ierom meaneth it not of the succession of the Bishops of Rome necessarily drawing with it the profession of the truth: for himselfe writeth that Liberius the next Bishop of Rome before Damasus subscribed to the Arrian heresie, but he meaneth his communion that he held with Damasus (and consequently Damasus with him) in the true faith which Damasus held then. This doth yet further appeare in that in another place he vseth the same phrase in this meaning; for charged with the Arrian heresie, he iustifieth his faith aswell by his communion with other Churches, as with the Church of Rome, as well with AEgypt as with Italy: as well with Peter Bishop of Alexandria as with Damasus B. of Rome. As for the note of infamie in the new names of Caluinists, &c. which they themselues falsly & slanderously thrust vpon vs, although vnworthie of answer, is yet answered before. As for the ancient Fathers here alledged, it is no marvell if they were not able so easily to discover him, seeing in their time this mysterie, albeit it were in brewing, yet was it wrought as it were privily & under the ground. And in that they convey his pedigree from the Iewes, and some from the tribe of Dan, the slip was easie because of the Iewes most deadly hatred of Christ in their time. And how weak their iudgement was that way, it may easily appeare to all which shall examine the places of the scripture that they force thereunto. And the matter is so plaine, that Bellarmine the Professor at Rome, in his written booke of controversies, confesseth that it is without all ground of Scripture or reason, that he shall be of the tribe of Dan. Let the Reader; marke diligently what Augustine writeth of this matter, who testifieth, that there were divers which affirmed that by Antichrist was understood not onely the Prince of this revolt, but his whole body and multitude of men belonging unto him: and this iudgement hee rather alloweth then reproveth. Also that Irenæus doth so apply it to one of the tribe of Dan, as in him hee doth comprehend the Latine kingdome.

What other arguments they haue at home which they will not bring to the assault of this truth, that Antichrist hath a succession, the Reader may easily know by that they haue mustred such Skullians and dish-clout Souldiers as divers of these are. As for their reproches against these worthy learned men, M. Beza, Iewel, Fulke, their credit with all not onely godly, but of equall and sober iudgement, is greater and higher then such base barkings are able to reach: for your insinuation of M. Beza, that he seemeth to meane that Peter was Antichrist, is so palpably false, that your owne cankred and malicious heart doth not thinke that which your venemous mouth doth speake: neither doth he giue any suspition that way by saying that the Antichristian tyranny began in the Apostles times: unlesse the Apostle himselfe be to be suspected thereof which saith the same. And when hee expresly affirmeth, that that place is to be understood of many Antichrists which lived then: it is evident that hee understood not that place of this great Antichrist, much lesse of the holy Apostle Peter. Only he teacheth that the kingdom of Antichrist was then begun, and therefore could not be determined by the life of one man. The contrarietie also that is assigned between M. Iewel alledging Leo and Gregory for upholders of the doctrine which we maintaine, and M. Fulke affirming that they were deceived in some poynts thereof, argueth evidently that it were for the credit of their owne cause if they sate still and were idle, rather then to bee so triflingly occupied, it being more cleare then the day it selfe, that Leo and Gregorie might stand for the truth in some part which they stand against in another.

RHEM. 10. [4. Extolled.] The great Antichrist which must come neere the worlds end, shall abolish the publicke exercise of all other religions true and false, and pull down both the B. Sacrament of the altar, wherein consisteth specially the worship of the true God, and also all Idols of the Gentiles, and sacrifices of the Iewes, generally all kind of religious worship, saving that which must be done to himselfe alone, which was partly prefigured in such kings as published that no God nor man but themselues should be prayed vnto for certaine dayes, as Darius and such like. How can the Protestants then for shame and without evident contradiction, auouch the Pope to be Antichrist, who (as wee say) honoureth Christ the true God with all his power, or (as they say) honoureth Idols, and chalengeth no diuine honour to himselfe, much lesse to himselfe onely, as Antichrist shall do? Hee humbly prayeth to God, and lowly kneeleth down in euery Church at diuers altars erected to God in the memories of his Saincts, and prayeth to them. Hee saith or heareth Masse daily with all deuotion, hee confesseth his sinnes to a Priest as other poore men doe, hee adoreth the holy Eucharist which Christ affirmed to bee his own bodie, the Heretickes call it an Idoll (no marueil if they make the Pope his Vicar Antichrist, when they make Christ himselfe an Idoll) These religious duties doth the Pope, whereas Antichrist shall worship none, not pray to any, at the least openly.

Antichrist shall suffer no worship or adoration but of himselfe onely, therefore the Pope cannot be Antichrist. Dan. c. 6.

CARTVV. 10. [4 Extolled.] To proue that the Pope doth not extoll himselfe aboue all that is called God, is brought, that he humbly prayeth to Christ and all his Saints, &c. It is a greater work, and of more cost then the Iesuits poverty is able to affoord, to proue that the Pope humbly prayeth to Christ and his Saints; It is easier for them to proue that he prayeth, then that he humbly prayeth. Againe, where they proue the Popes humility unto Christ by the honour he giveth to the Sacrament of the Altar, whom he taketh for Christ himselfe, wee could except against him the scornefull nod and beck he giveth unto it when he passeth by it: Likewise how Hildebrand in his mad mood threw it into the fire: Also that he giveth small reverence unto the Saints, while he maketh them all to stand at his courtesie whether they shal be Saints or none, also that it is said of him, that his power is more then the power of all the Saints. Moreover, that if he did pray humbly unto them, yet the humility to Angels in worshipping them being condemned, it will follow follow, that the more humbly he prayeth vnto them, the more presumptuously and wickedly he prayeth. But to grant that his prayer to Christ and his Saints with confession of sinnes, were in it selfe for outward shew and iudgement of men vnblameable, haue they forgotten that there are which approach vnto God in lippes, whose heart is far from him: that there be that professe God in shew and word, which deny him in deed and truth: that it is oftentimes the neerest way to put downe Christ to kisse him, and say, haile Master. And this secret undermining of Christ, vnder colour of kissing him, agreeth well with this, that the Apostle calleth this reuolt, a mystery, or secret thing, and that it is said, ver. 10. that he should come with deceit of vnrighteousnesse: and could not fitly agree to an Antichrist that would plainly professe enmity to Christ. And therefore it is false, that they say Antichrist shall worship none openly, and spoken without all ground or likely-hood of truth: for the very name of Antichrist giveth sufficiently to vnderstand that his heresie shall not be against God simply, but against Christ, and yet so as if he were for him also, and his Vicar, as the word doth signifie. The Apostle Iohn declaring, that his brethren which went before him did so set themselues against Christ, as that they did acknowledge the Father: doth euidently set forth that this Anti-christ also shall so bid battell against Christ, that he shall cover himselfe vnder the worship of the true and liuing God. As for his shew of loue to Christ, let us let go his words, and looke to his deeds; let passe his lippes, and take heed to his hands and feet, which seeing they haue troden vpon the necke of Emperours, Gods Lieuetenants vpon earth, seeing they haue been giuen them to kisse, and their highnesse made to waite vpon the stirrop, they cannot bee the feet of any other then of Antichrist: considering that our Saviour Christ gaue reverence euen vnto their Deputies when they were his bitter and deadly enemies. Further let us consider, that this beast not contented to tread all power in earth vnder his filthy feet, climeth into heaven, and taketh vpon him to command the Angels themselues; that he taketh vpon him to do all that God can do: viz. make something of nothing, yea, and that which God himselfe cannot do, that is, to make that which is iniust to be iust, make new Articles of faith, &c. For God cannot lie, nor deny himselfe, which hee should do, if he should do either of these things: neither should it be a power but a weaknesse in God so to do. Aboue Christ also he hath exalted himselfe euidently, for he teacheth that the pardon which Christ hath purchased by his precious bloud, serueth onely to deliver us from the fault of actuall sinne: whereas he maketh his own pardons, grounded vpon the satisfaction of men, sufficient to deliver us both from fault and punishment also. And as for the open profession of these horrible blasphemies in words, although it be so impudent an impiety as no ground (one would think) might beare it without sinking vnder the burthen of it, yet the Italian earth (the mother of all venomous things) hath borne it. For the Pope was well content in the Lateran Councell, to be saluted by the name of God: Can they be ignorant of the glosse which saith, Our Lord God the Pope? If they be not, we aske then to what record they can direct vs to seek where (we will not say iustice) but so much as any correction hath been done vpon such blasphemous Parasites. Thus it is euident, that the Protestants blaspheme not, but speake the words of truth, when they affirme that the Pope lifteth himselfe aboue all that is called God: vnto which blasphemy his passage hath been made the easier and more speedie by turning the glory of the immortall God into the image of a piece of bread: for thereby shaking off all reverence and feare of the Almighty, he hath climed up to this height of pride whereunto he is now come.

RHEM. 11. [4. In the temple.] Most ancient writers expound this in the temple in Hierusalem, which they thinke Antichrist shall build vp againe; as being of the Iewes stocke, and to bee acknowledged of that obstinate people (according to our Sauiours prophecie Io. 5.) for their expected and promised Messias. Iren. li. 5. in fine. Hippolit. de consum. mundi. Cyril Hieros. Catech. 15. Author. op. imp. hom. 49. in Mat. See S. Hierome in. 11. Dan. Gregor. lib. 31. Moral. c. 11. Not that he shall suffer them to worship God by their old manner of sacrifices, (all which hee will either abolish, or conuert to the onely adoration of himselfe: though at the first to apply himselfe to the Iewes, hee may perhaps be circumcised and keep some part of the law) for it is here said that he shall sit in the temple as God, that is, he shall be adored there by sacrifice and diuine honour, the name and worship of the true God wholy defaced. And this they thinke to be the abomination of desolation foretold by Daniel mentioned by our Sauiour, prefigured and resembled by Antiochus and others, that defaced the worship of the true God by prophanation of that temple, specially by abrogating the daily sacrifice, which was a figure of the onely sacrifice and continuall oblation of Christs holy body and bloud in the Church, as the abolishing of that, was a figure of the abolishing of this, which shall bee done principally and most vniuersally by Antichrist himselfe as now in part by his fore-runners) throughout all nations and Churches of the world (though then also Masse may bee had in secret, as it is now in nations where the secular force of some Princes prohibiteth it to bee said openly.) For although he may haue his principall seat and honour in the temple and citie of Hierusalem yet he shall rule ouer the whole world, and specially prohibite that principall worship instituted by Christ in his sacraments, as being the proper aduersarie of Christs person name, law, and Church, the prophanation and desolation of which Church by taking away the sacrifice of the altar is the proper abomination and desolation, and the worke of Antichrist onely.

The abomination of desolation consisteth chiefely in abolishing the sacrifice of the Altar.

RHEM. 12. S. Augustine therefore lib. 20. de ciuit. c. 19. and S. Heirome q. 11. ad Algasiam, do think, that this sitting of Antichrist in the temple, doth signifie his sitting in the Church of Christ, rather then in Solomons temple. Not as though he should be a cheefe member of the Church of Christ, or a speciall part of his body mystical, & be Antichrist & yet withal continuing within the Church of Christ, as the Hereticks feine to make the Pope Antichrist (whereby they plainely confesse and agnise that the Pope is a member of the Church, & in ipso sunt Ecclesiæ, and in the very bosome of the Church, say they:) for that is ridiculous, that all Heretikes whom Iohn calleth Antichrists as his precursors, should go out of the Church, and the great Antichrist himselfe should be of the Church, & in the Church, & continue in the same, and yet to them that make the whole Church to reuolt from God, this is no abſurditie. But the truth is, that this Antichriſtian reuolt here ſpoken of, is from the Catholike Church: and Antichriſt, if he euer were of or in the Church, ſhall be an Apoſtata and renegate out of the Church, and ſhall vſurpe vpon it by tyranny and by chalenging worſhip, religion, and gouernment thereof, ſo that himſelfe ſhall be adored in all the Churches of the world which hee liſt to leaue ſtanding for his honour. And this is to ſit in the temple or * againſt the Temple of God, as ſome interprete. If any Pope did euer this, or ſhall doe, then let the Aduerſaries call him Antichriſt.

Neither Antichriſt nor his precurſors are members of the Church, as is ſayd.

RHEM. 13. And let the good Reader obſerue, that there be two ſpeciall cauſes why this great man of ſin is called Antichriſt. The one is, for impugning Chriſts kingdom in earth, that is to ſay, his ſpirituall regiment which he conſtituted and appointed in his Church, and the forme of gouernment ordained therein, applying all to himſelfe by ſingular tyrannie and vſurpation, in which kind S. Athanaſius (ep. ad Solit. vit. degentes.) is bold to call the Emperour Conſtantius being an Arrian Heretike, Antichriſt, for making himſelfe Principem Epiſcoporum, Prince ouer the Biſhops and preſident ouer the Eccleſiaſticall iudgements, &c. The other cauſe is, for impugning Chriſts prieſthood, which is onely or moſt properly exerciſed in earth by the ſacrifice of the holy Maſſe, inſtituted for the commemoration of his death, and for the external exhibition of godly honour to the B. Trinitie, which kind of externall worſhip by ſacrifice no lawfull people of God euer lacked. And by theſe two things you may eaſily perceiue, that the Heretikes of theſe dayes doe more properly and neerely prepare the way to Antichriſt and extreme deſolation, then euer any before their ſpeciall hereſie, being againſt the ſpirituall Primatie of Popes and Biſhops, and againſt the ſacrifice of the altar in which two the ſouerainty of Chriſt in earth conſiſteth.

CARTVV. [4 In the temple.] In the firſt Section they would faine build the Temple of Ieruſalem for Antichriſt, but their morter will not cleaue: wherefore themſelues in the ſecond Section, are conſtrained to pull it down againe. And yet notwithſtanding it had been wiſedom for them to haue holden them to that opinion of ſitting in the Temple of Ieruſalem, as that which is moſt ſutable unto their fable of Anti-chriſt, to be a Iew borne, and of the tribe of Dan. And verily it muſt needs be a ſtrange illuſion that carrieth men to beleeue ſuch a tale of Antichriſt which they haue here inuented, not only contrary to truth, but euen to all ſhew & appearance of the truth, as that the Iewes in the time when they ſhall bee by the Prophecie of the Apoſtle to be converted, ſhould runne flocking after one ſingular man Antichriſt. Secondly, that he ſhall be known to be borne of the tribe of Dan, whereas the Scripture declareth that the diſcretion of the Tribes was but to laſt untill the firſt comming of the Meſſias. Thirdly, that contrary to that which they know and alwaies haue profeſſed, they ſhould forſake the tribe of Iudah to gad after the tribe of Dan. Fourthly that they ſhould follow him that ſhall ouerthrow their manner of worſhipping of God by ſacrifices, and other ceremonies of the Law of Moſes, which the Apoſtle affirmeth to be a vaile that hangeth before their eyes, and ſhall hang untill ſuch time as they ſhall be converted unto Chriſt. Fifthly, that the Iewes, that from the time of Chriſt, and a good while before, haue abhorred the groſſe Idolatry of religious worſhiping of any creature, ſhould ſuddenly flock and ſwarme to it. Sixthly, that the Gentiles which toward the end of the world, as prouoked by the calling of the Iewes, ſhall be gathered in greater multitudes unto the outward profeſſion of the Goſpell, ſhould then in a manner make a generall and catholike reuolt from the truth. Seuenthly, that the Iewes and the Gentiles through the whole world, between whom there is ſo deadly and irreconciliable hatred, eſpecially in their manner of worſhipping God, as that they never could be united but in the truth, through the bloud of the croſſe of Chriſt, ſhould on a ſudden meet together in a worſhip & religion which neither of them was ever trained vp unto. Laſt of all, that they ſhall in ſo ſmall a pace, as it were in a trice (none, or no long teaching going before) fall to ſuch groſſe Idolatry, as to worſhip a very mortall man, as the onely and euerliuing God, which never was heard of amongſt the Egyptians and Chaldeans, the groſſeſt and beaſtlieſt Idolaters that ever were, the Popiſh Idolatry in their paſted god one only excepted: eſpecially ſeeing it is a thing cleane contrary to all religions, both of Iew and Pagan, to beleeue that any one perſon is both God and Man. But let us returne to Ieron and Auguſtine, who expound it as we doe, as doth alſo Theodoret, ſaying that he calleth the Temple of God the Churches where firſt he ſhall take his ſeate. Thus therefore they are conſtrained to ſeate him (for the generality of the place) in Gods Church. Where we do ſet him in his very Chaire. But where they ſay that we agnize him to be a member of the Church, they th eap kindneſſe of us: for farre be it from us, that we ſhould take ſuch a Sodomiticall harlot to make her a member of the myſticall body of Chriſt. Neither maketh it any thing for this, that it is ſayd by M. Beza, that he hath his ſeate in the middeſt of the Church: unleſſe the Ieſuites eſteeme, that a Wolfe in the middeſt of a flocke, is therefore a ſheepe becauſe he is in the middeſt of them. Let them therefore know, that when we ſay, that the Pope ſitteth in the middeſt of the Church, we meane that hee had firſt his ſeat and tyrannous gouernment in thoſe, that were at the time of his entry, the Churches of God, as thoſe which conſented not (at the firſt) to that uſurpation of Boniface. Secondly, that even now alſo (after their ſubiection to that ſeat) they are called the Church or Temple of God, as our Saviour Chriſt calleth the Temple of Ieruſalem the holy place, becauſe it had been ſo, although at the time where in that abhominable deſolation ſhould ſtand there (which he propheſieth of) it was a moſt deteſtable place, namely, when the Romanes came to deſtroy it, as it appeareth euidently by Luke, who ſo interpreteth it. And ſo muſt all that antiquitie expound the Temple of God, which they underſtand a materiall ſitting in the Temple of Ieruſalem, ſeeing at that time it could not be called the Temple of God, but in reſpect of that it had ſometime been. Wherefore the Popiſh Church is called the Temple of God for that it was ſometime (before her apoſtaſie) the Church of God. And in this ſence wee often call the dead corpes of a man by his name whoſe ſometimes it was, before it fell to be a carkaſſe. Laſt of all, for that the true and liuing Church of God, is for the moſt part gathered, not from amongſt the Iewes, Turkes, or other infidels, but from that people that liueth under the ſpiritual bondage of the Pope. The Apoſtles pen was divinely directed in affirming that Antichriſt ſhould ſit in the Temple of God. As for the Ieſuits dream that Antichriſt ſhal be ſet up in the materiall Churches of lime & ſtone, as the Images are ſet up in the Popiſh Synagogues, there to be adored, it is both childiſh, and farre from the meaning of the Scripture, which (beſide the Temple of Ieruſalem, a figure of Chriſt, and his Church the true Temples) doth never call any materiall building made for the aſſembly of the faithfull, the Temple of God; ſo that this language is barbarous to the writers of the Scripture. And yet if they would needes forge ſuch an Idoll and Image-like ſetting up of a man to be adored, and fallen downe before; where (in all the world) may that bee more liuely and expreſly found then at Rome, where this beaſt being ſet in throne more then Princely, and born of his ſcarlet knights, is kneeled and knocked unto of the miſerable people. So that Chriſt beeing God, did never humble himſelfe ſo low, but this Antichriſt, being a bare man, hath exalted himſelfe as high, to the cauſing of the heavens to ſweat and melt again upon his head, if the Lord againſt the deſpiters of his Goſpell did not for iudgement reſerue him, rather then in patience toward him lead him to repentance. And whereas to faſten upon us ſome practiſes tending and making way to Antichriſtianitie, they marke out two things whereby they will haue Antichriſt eſpecially to be tried, the one of a government, the other of a ſacrifice contrary to that which Chriſt ordained, wee are well content that that be the Iſſue: for who is ſo blinde as not to ſee, that the Pope hath utterly overthrowne the whole government of Chriſt, by placing one Biſhop over all the Churches of the world, in ſtead that Chriſt would haue one Biſhop in every Church; by placing Cardinall Deacons which ſhould eate up the poore, for Deacons which ſhould gather for the poore; by ſetting up Cardinall Prieſts to rule and over-rule the Biſhops, in ſtead of Elders, that ſhould (in an inferiour degree) bee aſſiſtant unto the Biſhops: by taking from the Church, the election and depoſition of her miniſters, the excommunication and abſolution of her repentant or unrepentant Citizens; by taking away the offices which Chriſt himſelfe ordained, by adding many whereof Chriſt never made mention, neither did it ever enter into his heart once to name them.

And as for the Sacrifice of Chriſt, is not the Pope hee that maketh himſelfe the head of the Church, and conſequently the Prieſt thereof? Is it not he that maketh every ſir Iohn Lack-Latin a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec, that is having neither father nor mother? Is it not he that offereth, and cauſeth to be offered, a ſacrifice for the quick and the dead? that undertaketh to offer Chriſt often, making his ſacrifice no better then the ſacrifices of ſheep and oxen, which had need therefore to be repeated, becauſe they had not the vertue to take away ſinne? Finally, is it not he that (in pretence) offering, and cauſing to be offered the ſonne of God, maketh himſelfe better, and his Prieſts better then our Saviour Chriſt; conſidering that the ſacrifice is accepted and looked upon for his ſake that offereth it: for which cauſe Chriſt himſelfe being the Prieſt and offering the ſacrifice, as he offered himſelfe by the eternall Spirit or God-head, was ſuperiour unto himſelfe, being the ſacrifice, that is to ſay his body and ſoule, or humane nature onely.

S. Auguſtins humility in interpreting the Scriptures

RHEM. 14. [6. What letteth.] S. Auguſtine (lib. 20. c. 19. de ciuit. dei) profeſſeth plainely that he vnderſtandeth not theſe words, nor that that followeth of the myſterie of iniquitie, and leaſt of all that which the Apoſtle, Onely that he which holdeth now do hold &c. Which may humble vs all, and ſtay the confident raſhnes of this time, namely of Heretickes that boldly feine hereof whatſoeuer is agreeable to their hereſie and phantaſie. The Apoſtle had told the Theſſalonians before by word of mouth a ſecret point which he would not vtter in writing, and therefore referreth them to his former talk. The miniſterie of iniquitie is commonly referred to Heretikes, who work to the ſame, and do that that Antichriſt ſhall do, but yet not openly, but in couert and vnder the cloke of Chriſts name, the Scriptures, the word of the Lord, and ſhew of holineſſe, &c. Whereas Antichriſt himſelfe ſhall openly attempt and atchieue the foreſaid deſolation, and Satan now ſeruing his turne by Heretikes vnder-hand, ſhall toward the laſt end utter, reueale: and bring him forth openly, and that is here, to be reuealed, that is, to appeare in his own perſon. Theſe other words, Onely that he which now holdeth, hold: Some expound of the Emperour, during whoſe continuance in his ſtate, God ſhall not permit Antichriſt to come, meaning that the very Empire ſhall bee wholy deſolate, deſtroyed, & taken away before or by his comming: which is more then a defection from the ſame, whereof was ſpoken before; for there ſhall be a reuolt from the Church alſo, but it ſhall not be vtterly deſtroyed. Others ſay, that it is an admonition to all faithfull, to hold faſt their faith, & not to be beguiled by ſuch as vnder the name of Chriſt or Scriptures ſeeke to deceiue them, till they that now pretend religion and the Goſpell, end in a plaine breach, reuolt and open apoſtaſie by the appearance of Antichriſt, whom all heretikes ſerue in myſtery, that is couertly and in the Deuils meaning, though the world ſeeth it not, nor themſelues at the beginning, thought it, as now euery day men more and more perceiue they tend to plaine atheiſme and Antichriſtianiſme.

The myſterie of iniquity is the ſecret working of Heretickes toward the manifeſt reuelation of Antichriſt himſelfe.

CARTVV. 14. [6 Which letteth.] That the Apoſtle underſtandeth the Romane Emperour, it is manifeſt, both by reaſon and authority: for ſo generall an Apoſtacie could not be, vnleſſe firſt there had been a generall and catholique eſtabliſhment of the Goſpell, which was under the Emperour Conſtantine, and the moſt of all the Emperours after him, untill the time that Antichriſt came to ſit at Rome. Secondly, after the Goſpell was once ſo generally eſtabliſhed, it could not be well ſo generally diſplaced, but by one that ſucceeding unto the ſame authority, ſhould haue the ſame ſtrength to pull down that the good Emperours had ſet up: the ſame arme of power and worldly authority to roote up, that they had to plant. Laſt of all, that Let being then in being which ſhould hinder the diſcovery and revelation of Antichriſt, let the Ieſuites aſſigne (if they can) any thing but the Romane Emperour, whoſe place Antichriſt could not enter upon, untill he was removed from it. And howſoever it ſeeme good to Auguſtine to doubt what it ſhould be, yet others (with great conſent consent and full resolution) assigne the Let to be the Romane Empire. Wee haue heard before, the iudgement of Irenæus, Tertullian, Chrysostom and Ierom, the same is the iudgement also of Lactantius, Ambrose, and of him that is authour of the book intitled of Antichrist: And dare the Iesuites say that all these were presumptuous, because they affirmed precisely that which Augustine doubted of? If not, why charge they us as presumptuous which say the same that they do? Augustine also himselfe affirmeth in the same place which they alleage, that it is not absurdly beleeued that this is spoken of the Romane Empire. Also where the Apostle saith, he that now letteth, Augustine saith, he which now reigneth or empireth: which cannot but be understood of the Empire of Rome. And in another place he himselfe declareth himselfe to be of that opinion. And whereas they would shift it by saying, that Antichrist shall not come untill the Romane Empire shall be utterly overthrown, it is utterly untrue. For first of all it is said, the harlot (which is known and confessed to bee the Antichrist) shall ride upon the beast, and shall be borne up by it, which could not be, if so be the beast which is the Empire, should be taken away before Antichrist come. Secondly, according to the measure of the decrease and weakning of the Romane Empire, the Antichrist increased and grew strong: As the Emperours became withered, so the Antichrists flourished; as the sinewes of the one were shrunk, so the strings of the other were enlarged: and therefore Iohn saith, that the beast goeth to destruction, noting thereby the present time wherein he shall by little and little, as a candle go forth. Onely that was necessary for an entrance of the revelation of Antichrist, that the Emperour should be removed from Rome, without the which Antichrist could not haue appeared. And although the Emperours kept some Imperiall rights and prerogatiues after that Antichrist was discovered, yet the Pope by degrees took them away, untill he had left the bare name of an Emperour, rather then any Emperour indeed: not onely for the small territory and possession that he had shut them into, but also for that they held that little that he left them, rather as tenants at his will and curtesie, and his vassailes, then in any estate or quality of imperiall dominion and signiorie.

Verse. 9. Whose comming is according to the operation of Satan, in all power and lying signes and wonders.

RHEM. 15. [9. In all power.] Satan whose power to hurt is abridged by Christ, shall then be let loose, and shall assist antichrist in all manner of signes, wonders and false miracles, whereby many shall be seduced, not onely Iewes: But all such as be deceiued and carried away by vulgar speech onely of heretikes that can worke no miracles, much more shall follow this man of sinne doing so great wonders. And such both now do follow heretikes, and then shall receiue Antichrist, that deserue so to be forsaken of God, by their forsaking of vnitie and happie fellowship of Saincts in the Catholike Church, where onely is the Charitie of truth, as the Apostle here speaketh.

What kinde of men shall follow Antichrist.

CARTVV. 15. [9 In all power.] By false miracles, the Apostle meaneth not onely feigned miracles but those that are wrought indeed, but yet to deceiue and to confirme falshood: For we can well affoord unto the Pope and his Popelings the working of miracles indeed: as well as Moses, and our Saviour Christ affordeth them unto the false Prophets. And the Iesuites themselues (at unawares) haue yeelded unto this: For making a difference heere, between Antichrist and us: that we can worke no miracles when Antichrist shall haue power to worke: they thereby must bee constrained to confesse that Antichrist wrought miracles indeed. For otherwise how doth Antichrist differ from us in this point: seeing we (if we would endevour it) could either by sleights and legier demaine, or else by the black Art, do things that should seeme wonderfull to the simple people. Heere therefore they haue utterly overthrown a principall stay of their tottering religion, which thereupon would conclude it to be good, because the Priests thereof can do miracles. And if by false miracles, they will needs understand fained miracles done in shew not in deed, that note of Antichristianity is so notable in the Popish Church, that there shall never be found any heresie, or by-way from the truth, so infamous in this kinde of trumpery and mocking of men, as is Popery: where it is both so often and so grossely used, that their own friends and vpholders, are constrained to confesse, that her Priests for lucre sake shamefully deceiue the people with miracles.

[15. Traditions.] Not onely the things written and set down in the holy Scriptures, but all other truths and points of religion vttered by word of mouth and deliuered or giuen by the Apostles *to their schollers by tradition, be so here approued and else where in the Scripture it selfe that the heretickes purposely, guilefully, and of ill conscience (that belike reprehendeth them) refraine in their translations, from the Ecclesiasticall and most vsuall word, Tradition, euer more when it is taken in good part, though it expresse most exactly the signification of the Greeke word, but when it soundeth in their fond fansie against the traditions of the Church (as indeed in true sense it neuer doth) there they vse it most gladly. Here therefore and in the like places, that the reader might not so easely like of Traditions vnwritten, here commended by the Apostle, they translate Instructions, Constitutions, Ordinances, and what they can inuent else, to hide the truth from the simple or vnwarie Reader, whose translations haue none other end but to beguile such by art and conueiance.

We might adde to all this, that the Scriptures themſelues euen all the books and parts of the holy Bible, be giuen vs by tradition: elſe we ſhould not, nor could not take them (as they be indeed) for the infallible word of God, no more then the works of S. Ignatius, S. Clement, S. Denys, and the like. The true ſenſe alſo of the Scriptures (which Catholikes haue and Heretikes haue not) remaineth ſtill in the Church by tradition. The Creed is an Apoſtolike tradition Ruffin. in expo. Symb. in principio. Hier. ep. 61. c. 9. Ambr. Ser. 38. Aug. de Symb. ad Catechum. lib. 3. c. 1. And what Scriptures haue they to proue that wee muſt accept nothing not expreſly written in Scriptures? Wee haue to the contrary, plaine Scriptures, all the fathers, moſt euident reaſons, that wee muſt either beleeue tradition or nothing at all. And they muſt be asked whether, if they were aſſured that ſuch and ſuch things (which bee not expreſſed in Scriptures) were taught and deliuered by word of mouth from the Apoſtles they would beleeue them or no? If they ſay no, then they bee impious that will not truſt the Apoſtles preaching: if they ſay they would, if they were aſſured that the Apoſtles taught it: then to proue vnto them this point, we bring them ſuch as liued in the Apoſtles dayes, and the teſtimonies of ſo many fathers before named neere to thoſe dayes, and the whole Churches practiſe and aſſeueration deſcending downe from man to man to our time, which is a ſufficient proofe (at leaſt for a matter of fact) in all reaſonable mens iudgements, ſpecially when it is known that S. Ignatius the Apoſtles equal in time, wrote a booke of the Apoſtles traditions, as Euſebius witneſſeth li. 3. Ec. hiſt. c. 30. And Tertullians booke of preſcription againſt Heretikes, is to no other effect but to proue that the Church hath this vantage aboue Heretikes, that ſhe can proue her truth by plaine Apoſtolike tradition, as none of them can euer do.

The Creed an Apoſtolical tradition.

CARTVV. 19. [15 Traditions.] Vpon this, that the Apoſtle affirmeth that he gaue the Theſſalonians ſome things by word, and ſome things by Epiſtle to be holden for euer: the Ieſuites conclude that there are certaine things not contained in Scripture, as neceſſary to be obſerued as that which is contained therein. And they do not conclude it onely, but do it with ſuch triumph and trumpet blowing againſt us, with ſuch inſultation and lewd reproaches, as if they had wonne Carthage. Wherein if the Reader ſhall finde nothing but words and winde, or as it were, a childiſh crackling of paper-ſhot, let him thereby learne at the leaſt, not alwaies to be troubled when the Ieſuites cry alarum. And firſt of all, marke the ſtrength of their Argument: Paul taught the Theſſalonians ſome things by word of mouth, which he taught them not in his two Epiſtles which he wrote vnto them; therefore he taught ſome doctrines which he wrote not: as who ſhould ſay, that Paul wrote no more Epiſtles then theſe two, whereby that which he taught not them in writing vnto them, he taught them by writing vnto others. Was it not fitting vnto the wiſedom of the Apostle to write rather to all the Churches ioyntly the whole bodie of the doctrine of the Gospell which he preached to every one apart; then to write the whole to every Church apart which hee Preached unto? For so should the Church haue had more books then the world would haue contained. In the time when the Prophets lived, it was iust and dutifull, that men should keep not onely the writings of Moses, but also that which they received by the Preaching of the Prophets: will you conclude therefore, that the Iewes were not bound to stay onely upon the writings of the Prophets and the Law, when all the whole Canon of the old Testament was written? If you do so, you shall not onely conclude contrary to truth, but contrary to the iudgement of your own pillars, and grossest Papists. Againe, how followeth this Argument, Paul wrote not all the doctrines of God unto the Thessalonians, therefore they are not all written in the Propheticall and Evangelicall writings: whereas it is plainely testified that the old Testament containeth a perfect rule of the doctrine of salvation; the new being written for a declaration of the fulfilling and further clearing of that in the old Testament. Who would therefore use such Arguments as these, but either ignorant or shameless men? Or who can be abused by them, but such as haue their eares tied to beleeue whatsoever their Teachers which they haue made choice of, shall say? Secondly, if upon this, that it is said, that they should as well hold that which was given by word as by writing, it followeth that something is given by word that is not giuen by writing: then it followeth also that something was given of the Apostle by writing that he gaue not by word: considering that it is as well said, that the Traditions were given by word as by Epistle. But the latter is false (considering that the Apostle taught the whole doctrine of God by word, as is granted, and may be shewed by that which he expressly testified of his preaching at Ephesus) therefore also the former.

Act. 20. 20. 27.

Thirdly, to cease these Iesuiticall ianglings about traditions, it appeareth manifestly in the Actes, what was the summe of that which Paul taught the Thessalonians by word of mouth. For there it is witnessed, that Paul taught out of the Scriptures, that it behooved Christ to suffer and rise again from the dead, and that Iesus was Christ, which goeth to the winde-pipe of the traditions which you establish out of this place; seeing this teaching by word, which you enlarge to the compassing in of all your unwritten verities, is there strained and brought within the territory and limits of the holy scriptures of the Law and the Prophets. Neither ought it to seeme strange, that this was the summe of all which the Apostle taught at Thessalonica, where he tarried so small a while, when amongst the Corinthians, (where he remained longest of any place, and consequently taught most) hee sheweth that he taught nothing but Christ and him crucified.

1. Cor. 2. 2.

Last of all, the Apostle himselfe in this very place, calling (vers. 14.) whatsoever hee taught by word, or writ by the name of the Gospel, doth declare evidently that he taught nothing but that which is contained in Scripture; seeing the Apostle defineth the Gospell which he preached, to be that which is contained in the Scriptures. But herein we are (forsooth) too blame, that where this Greek word doth marke out things in worser part, there we translate traditions, and when it signifieth any thing in the better part, there we translate Doctrines, Ordinances, and what not saving traditions. It is true that we alter according to the circumstances of the place, especially considering that the word of traditions, which of it selfe is indifferent, as well to that which is written, as to that which is not written, hath been both of us and you appropriated to note forth onely unwritten constitutions; so that unlesse we should lead the simple Reader to another sense then the Apostles meaning will suffer, we must needs avoid in such places as this, the word of tradition. But having no meat to feede this cause of their unwritten vanities in the Scripture, they go a foraging in the Fathers; whom (that the reader may understand how shamefully and impudently they abuse them) we will shortly set down what their iudgement is of these traditions which are not contained in the scripture. Denys, the first of those that are here alledged, affirmeth in the beginning, that what soever he would teach, should be out of the supernatuall and most holy oracles, which your owne Denys the Monke (expounding that place) interpreteth to be the holy Scriptures. Chrysostom (the second of those which they alledge) affirmeth that every necessary thing is cleere and evident in the scriptures. Basil (the next alledged by them) affirmeth it to be a manifest revolt from the faith, either to disallow any thing that is written, or to bring in any thing that is not written. Ierom (the next to him) affirmeth that as we beleeue because we reade, so we beleeue not because we read not: which if it be a good reason against Helvidius, it is as strong against the pope. Augustine (another of their witnesses) affirmeth that whatsoever concerneth faith and manners is plainly contained in the Scriptures. Irenæus utterly condemneth the heretickes of his time, for that they affirmed, that the truth could not bee learned out of the holy scriptures, vnlesse a man knew the tradition. Tertullian saith, that he honoureth the fulnesse of the Scriptures. Let (saith he) Hermogenes whole rout or traine shew it to bee written; if it be not written, let him feare that woe which is appointed for them that either adde or diminish. Cyprian expounding what the Evangelicall & Apostolicall tradition is, saith, it is that which is written in the Gospell, in the Actes, or in the Epistles. Origen saith, that for every Doctrine we must bring the sence of the Scripture to confirme that sence which we will confirme. Here we passe by Epiphanius, because (notwithstanding it were not hard to proue out of his disputations against the heresies, somewhat for this purpose, yet) we see that he chose rather to use his wooden dagger of tradition against the adversaries of the truth, then to content himselfe with the two hand sword of Gods word, which is able to cut asunder all the knots which any hereticke at any time is able to knit, wee would not (as the Papists doe in the other Fathers) wrest his words against his setled and stayed iudgement in other places. And how fondly hee was carried away with the opinion of these traditions: the Reader may thereof conjecture, that he had rather thinke according to unwritten tradition, that our Saviour Christ was borne in a caue by the way, then according to the Scripture that hee was borne at Bethlehem. To these here reckoned might be added the testimonies of Iustine, Athanasius, Cyril, &c. if it were not tedious to the Reader, whom we would not haue charged with these, were it not that by this poynt of unwritten verities, not onely a doore, but broad gates are opened, not to bring in onely one or two errors, as it were the ſhankes, but all the whole carkaſſe of Popiſh religion.

Their firſt teſtimony out of Denys is depraued: for Denys meaneth, that whatſoeuer in the ſcripture, is contained in that matter he handleth, the ſence of it was deliuered by the Apoſtles, and other teachers, and from them to others. Therefore he ſaith not that ſome, but whatſoeuer was given, not partly written, and partly unwritten, but both written and unwritten: ſo that he meaneth, that which we confeſſe, that the ſame holy inſtitutions were written and unwritten, and affirmeth that both the one and the other were according to the Scriptures.

WITH THE VSES.

Secondly, although he ſhould meane as you would haue him, that thoſe things he ſpeaketh, were partly written and partly unwritten, yet he is ſtill againſt you, ſeeing your traditions are not unwritten, but written, partly in counterfeit writers, partly in ſome of the Fathers: not delivered, as Denys ſaith, from vnderſtanding to vnderſtanding, or mouth to mouth, by a bodily ſpeech, and yet paſsing all ſence, but paſſing from paper to paper, not by word which exceedeth ſence, but by conveyance of them from the books of ſome Fathers, without whoſe record of them they ſhould haue vtterly fallen away. Chryſoſtome appeares to be miſtaken, whoſe meaning is, that the Apoſtles did ſpeake at large many things that are not particularly laid downe in writing, and yet notwithſtanding contained in the Scriptures, and of the ſame authority with that which is written. Firſt, for that, if by Chryſoſtoms words it be concluded, that ſomething was taught which is not written, it will alſo follow of the ſame words, that hee eſteemed ſomewhat written which was not taught by word of mouth. The latter whereof being too hard a iudgement of him, it followeth alſo that the former is ſo. Secondly, Theophilactus (which followed him) ſeemeth to deliuer the ſame ſence, ſaying, that they delivered their doctrine by liuing voyce, not by Epiſtle onely: ſo that his meaning is, that the Apoſtles delivered their doctrine, not onely briefly by writing, but largely by ſpeech, and both of equall authority. Laſt of all, if Chryſoſtom ſhould meane otherwiſe, he ſhould be at variance with himſelfe, who not onely in the place before recited, but otherwhere, doth moſt clearely and in many words declare, that nothing muſt be taught in the Church, whether in inſtruction of truth, or refutation of falſhood, or &c. but the ſcriptures, which (ſaith he) are in ſtead of Paul unto all Miniſters.

Vpon 2. Tim 3. Hom. 9.

Now where you ſay, that other Greeke Scholies and Commentaries doe follow the ſame ſence that you father upon Chryſoſtome, you bewray an impudent face paſt all ſhame. For firſt Theodoret ſaith, you haue for a rule of doctrine the words we delivered you, which we did both preach unto you when we were preſent, and wrote unto you when we were abſent; plainly and directly ſetting downe that the Apoſtle wrote the ſame doctrine which he preached by word of mouth. Touching the place of Baſil, it is anſwered before: Item followeth, ad Luciferi 4. & Epiſt. 28. who ſpeaketh not of Apoſtolicall traditions, as you pretend, but of cuſtomes and obſervations grounded upon ſome reaſon. And the traditions that he ſpeaketh of, are in part not obſerved of your ſelues, as the giving of milke and honie to children new baptiſed, not to worſhip kneeling at Whitſontide, &c. Vnleſſe you will therefore take upon you to diſanull the doctrine and tradition delivered in Scripture, you cannot allow theſe things to be Apoſtolicall, and of like authoritie with that which is written in the Scriptures: for thereof will follow, that by the ſame authoritie that you haue broken thoſe, you may alſo breake thoſe which the Scripture commandeth to be done in baptiſme. That other which is neerer in words, is in matter further off: for in that Epiſtle he ſpeaketh onely of ſuch Apoſtolicall traditions as are variable by time and place, which he admoniſheth his friend to keepe ſo farre as they are not hurtfull to faith, as whether a man ſhould faſt on the Sabboth, or receiue the Supper of the Lord every day, which being done of ſome, were not obſerued of other ſome. Auguſtine de Geneſ. ad Lit. lib. 10. & de Baptiſ. lib. 2. c. 7. is no leſſe ſhamefully abuſed: for he ſpeaketh there of Apoſtolicall tradition, but not of Apoſtolicall tradition unwritten. And when themſelues are conſtrained to confeſſe, that the word of tradition containeth as well written as unwritten doctrines; it is too childiſh to conclude from the generall to the ſpeciall affirmatiuely, as to ſay it is proved by Apoſtolicall tradition, ergo by unwritten verities, or by unwritten verities onely. And that it may bee evident that Auguſtine ſtood upon better ground for the baptiſme of yong Infants then upon unwritten traditions; let the Reader conſider by that he writeth in theſe words: Leſt I ſhould ſeem to handle this matter with humane reaſon, I bring forth certain inſtructions out of the Goſpell. And in another place he alledgeth this ſentence to proue childrens baptiſme; Vnleſſe a man be renewed of water, and of the ſpirit, hee cannot enter into, &c. And this is evident by his words in this place which they alledge: for when he ſaith, it were not to be beleeved, unleſſe it were Apoſtolicall, if it ſhould be reſtrained to unwritten traditions, it ſhould thereof follow, that we may beleeue nothing but unwritten verities, which is abſurd; beſide that of this poynt, in the next words he giveth a reaſon out of the Scriptures. And where they pretend, that upon ground of unwritten verities onely, he refuſed the opinion of rebaptizing thoſe which were baptized by Hereticall Miniſters, they doe extremely wrong him, as one which in divers places affirmeth, that it was contrary to the Scriptures which Cyprian did with his Councell determine in that behalfe. For beſide the Churches cuſtome, and the ſtrength of Generall Councels, hee ſaith, that there were both many and great teſtimonies of Scripture, and alſo evident reaſons. Alſo, that it is againſt the commaundement of God that they are baptized which haue been baptized of Hereticks; and what commandement that is, he ſheweth by name the teſtimonies of the Scriptures, which doe not onely teach, but plainly teach, that they ſhould not be rebaptized. And in the 14. chapter of this booke which they alledge, he citeth this Scripture to proue it, that he which is waſhed, needeth no more to be waſhed: So that under the word of Tradition, Auguſtine muſt needs underſtand the Scriptures. And when he denieth that ſuch things are written in the Scriptures, his meaning muſt needes bee, that there is no particular and expreſſe caſe wherein it is namely ſaid, that an infant was baptized, or that a Chriſtian baptized by an hereticke was not to be rebaptized.

As for the ſurmiſe of the Helvidians hereſie againſt the perpetual maidenhead of the bleſſed mother of Chriſt, that it ſtandeth upon tradition onely, it hath been anſwered before upon Mat.

1.25. Whereunto adde that Basil affirmeth, that it belongeth nothing to the mysterie of faith, whether she married againe or remained a virgine: So that if there were nothing in Scripture to proue her perpetuall maidenhead, yet the faith of Gods people (by Basils iudgement) should not be once touched, much lesse shaken. Basil. de natiu. Christi.

In Epiphanius first place, *heres.*55. he sheweth that not to marry after vow of virginity is an Apostolicall Tradition, and yet you pretend Scripture for it; And himselfe alledgeth 1.*Tim.*2. to proue it: wherefore it is apparant that Apostolicall Tradition is not here opposed unto the doctrine of the Scriptures. In the second place *heres.*55. asking what Treatises ought to be credited; hee answereth that they are to be beleeved as they bring right Traditions, and like Succession and such like. But this proveth not that there are things in Tradition necessary to salvation, no more then it can proue succession to containe things necessary to salvation, not contained in tradition. Thus you see that you can winne nothing to helpe you with, not so much as out of Epiphanius, who of all other, unlesse it were Clemens Alexandrinus, was the most traditionary father. Iræneus is answered before upon *Ephes.*4.13. so is Tertullian upon *Gal.*4.9. Cyprian is heere affirmed to be of their iudgement in divers places, but they durst name none: for he is in truth an utter enemy to their unwritten traditions, as hath appeared, and further may if need were. Origen is to be understood of Ecclesiasticall observations onely, as it appeareth by his examples which he useth of kneeling and praying toward the East: And that there is any necessity of such things, we thinke that the Iesuites themselues will not say. In one of them we are sure that they fault (if it be a fault) oftentimes in their Masse, where the Priest saith the most of his prayers standing boult upright. Vpon Eph. 4 13. Vpon. Gal.4 9.

In the next of *Denys Eccles.hierarch.cap.*7. they go about to abuse the Reader and to deceiue him, by taking the word Tradition, which hath divers significations, in another sense then the Author meant it; for he taketh it for that which is delivered, and yet contained in Scripture: for in the same place he saith, that the Minister hath learned out of the holy Scriptures the promises whereby his prayers are made, touching the reward of those that haue lived godly: whereby it is evident that he would haue the prayers of the Church grounded upon promises fetched out of the Scriptures. And he saith also that the Minister and the rest kissed the dead corps, which was perfumed with oile powred upon it. And (beside that there was no Aniversaries in his time) he sheweth, that those which they prayed for were in ioy, and saith that they were come to the end of their battales. And therefore it is cleere, that although that corruption were then in the Church, yet was it without the opinion of Popish Purgatory. Tertullian de coron. milit. is falsified, who saith, that prayers for the dead rose of a custome, and placeth it amongst the tasting of milk and hony after Baptism, which the Iesuites dare not say to haue been an Apostolicall tradition of the same authority with that which is taught in Scripture. conformes

Touching Augustine de cura pro mort. he saith that mention was made of the dead, but thereof followeth not, that they were prayed for; considering that it might bee in the way of thanksgiuing. And understanding it of prayer for them: yet as it was a foule corruption without all warrant of the word, helping to proue and prepare the way to Antichrist, that was to come two hundreth yeere after: so it appeareth that it was but to declare their loue and christian affection towards the dead; as in that he praying for his mother, assureth himselfe that shee had already that which hee prayed for. *Chrys.epist.ad Philip.hom.*3. saith indeed that it is an Apostolicall tradition; but that maketh nothing for vnwritten verities: for in the same place hee doth the best hee can to proue it out of that Scripture 4.*Reg.*7. I will protect it for Dauid my seruants sake. Damascene (as hath been shewed) is not of age to beare witnesse in this cause. Beside that he is manifestly conuinced of vntruth by Ierome and Pope Gregorie, who affirme that the Apostles vsed no other prayer in the celebration of the supper, but only the Lords prayer, Hereunto we may add (say they) that the Scripture hath no authoritie, but by tradition. They that may speak all vntruth by their Popes good leaue, may also add this blasphemie; but the contrary hath been shewed before at large. And if wee had receiued the Scripture by tradition, yet thereof followeth not that we should receiue whatsoeuer they will deliuer as the tradition of the Apostles, no more then we are bound to beleeue the Iewes in their Cabala, because we beleeue them in their true testimonie that they giue of the bookes of the old Testament. As for the 12. Articles of our Creed, it hath been shewed before, what place they haue; and are here spoken of without a cause; seing there is nothing said in them which is not contained, and (almost) in as many words expressed in the holy scriptures, whereas our question here is, whether there be any apostolicall traditions (not contained in Scripture) of equall authoritie and necessitie to obserue, with them. Where they ask what Scripture we haue to proue that nothing is to be receiued but that which is expresly written in Scriptures, they shew themselues loath some triflers; seing none of vs hold that, nor need to hold it, to cast down their hold of vnwritten traditions. But if they had asked vs how we proue that nothing is to be receiued, but that which is contained in the Scriptures, and may be soundly and substantially grounded and gathered of them, (which is sufficient for vs in waging our battaile against their traditionarie doctrine) then they know that the proofe thereof both by scripture, reason, & fathers, is such, as they durst neuer look in the face of, but either do vtterly turne backe vpon them, or else cowardly come behind them here and there to bite at the heele of one or two of them. Your last argument with two hornes is crooked and striketh with neither, for if there were Apostolicall tradition, yet is there no necessitie of obseruation of them, considering that some of their orders which they gaue to be obserued were of ceremonies variable by time person and place, which may be altered; in which regard, their ordinance (which is written) of not eating of blood, and things strangled, is now out of vse. Secondly, if it were possible that they should be the Apostles traditions, which you intitle them vnto, as it is not; Yet would we not feare vpon the word of the Apostle himself to refuse them, as those which we proue contrary to that which the Apostles haue left written. Your other horne, that you haue those for witnesses of your traditions fetched from the Apostles which liued in their times, goareth none, but your selues: In the answer to their shreds after the Preface. Gal.1.8.

for first of all you are driven here to such straights as you can alledge none, but lost evidences, an evidence of your lost cause. Secondly, it is shewed already to be a foolish argument of a booke written by Ignatius of Apostolicall traditions, to conclude that they wrote of Traditions not contained in the Scripture, when themselues are constrained to confesse out of this place, that the word of Apostolicall Tradition is taken as well for written, as for unwritten doctrines, and so often taken in the Fathers, especially Cyprian. Secondly, if Ignatius booke had not been lost, yet being none of those holy men which spake by inspiration, as we were to respect his testimony as the testimony of a holy Martyr, in those things wherein he contraried not the Apostles writings; so we could not build our conscience upon his words, being not the words of God: how much lesse when we could not be assured that they should be so much as the words of Ignatius, through the manifold corruptions and falsifications that haue crept in to the most worthy Writers. As for that they alledge of Tertullian de prescript. they keepe their old wont of most untrue speaking, seeing it is evident throughout the discourse of that whole book that Tertullian fighteth with the sword of Gods written word against the power of hell in those heresies against which he dealt; and expressly taketh up the heretickes, for that (under colour of our Saiours saying, that he had many things to teach which the Apostles could not then beare away,) they fled from the iudgement of the Scriptures: In which things the Papists comming behind those old heretickes in time, haue notwithstanding ouertaken and gone beyond them, in the shamelesse practise of that hereticall slight.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 6 AND we denounce unto you brethren, in the name of our Lord IESVS CHRIST that you with-draw your selues from every brother walking inordinately, and not according to the ‡ tradition which they haue received of us.

RHEM. 1. [6. Tradition.] Here also (as is noted before, 2. Thes. 2. 15.) the aduersaries in their translations auoyd the word, Tradition, being plaine in the Greek, lest themselues might seeme to be noted as men walking inordinately, and not according to the Apostolicall Tradition, as all Schismatikes, Heretikes and rebels to Gods Church do.

CARTVV. 1. This is answered in the chapter immediately going before.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 10. For also when we were with you, this we denounced to you, that if any will not work, I neither let him eate.

The heretickes cauilation against religious men that work not, answered.

RHEM. [10. Neither let them eat.] It is not a generall precept or rule, that euery man should liue by his handworke, as the Anabaptists argue falsly against Gentlemen, and the Caluinists apply it peruersly against the vacant life of the Clergie, specially of Monkes and other Religious men. But it is a naturall admonition onely, giuen to such as hath not wherewith to liue of their own, or any right or good cause why to challenge their finding of others, and to such as under the colour of Christian liberty did passe their time idlely, curiously, vnprofitably, and scandalously, refusing to do such works as were agreeable to their former calling and bringing vp. Such as these, were not tollerable, specially there and then, when the Apostles and others (that might lawfully haue liued of the altar & their preaching) yet to disburden their hearers, and for the better aduancement of the Gospel, wrought for their liuing: *protesting neuertheless continually, that they might haue done otherwise, as well as S. Peter and the rest did, who wrought not, but were found otherwise iustly and lawfully, as all sorts of the Clergie preaching or seruing the Church and the altar, be & ought to be; *by the law of God & nature, Whose spirituall labours far passe all bodily trauailes, where the dueties and functions of that vocation bee done accordingly, as S. Augustine affirmeth of his own extraordinary paines incident to the Ecclesiasticall affaires and regiment: in steed of which, if the vse of the Church and his infirmitie would haue permitted it, he wisheth he might haue laboured with his hands some houres of the day, as some of the Clergie did euer voluntarily occupy themselues in teaching, writing, grauing paynting, planting, sowing, embrodering, or such like seemely and innocent labours. See S. Hierom ep. 114. seu præf. in Iob. & in vit. Hilario.

1. Cor. 9.

* See S. Cypr. ep. 66

The spirituall trauailes of the Clergie.

Religious men working with their hands.

And Monkes for the most part in the primitiue Church (few of them being Priests and many taken from seruile works and handicraftes, yea oftentimes professed bondmen, made free by their maisters to enter into religion) were appointed by their Superiours to worke certaine houres of the day, to supply the lackes of their Monasteries: as yet the Religious do (women specially) in many places, which standeth well with their profession. And S. Augustine writeth a whole booke (de opere Monachorum tom. 3.) against the errour of certaine disordered Monkes that abused these words, Nolite esse soliciti, Be not carefull, &c. and Respicite volatilia cæli, behold the fowles of the aire, &c.) to proue that they should not labor at all, but pray onely and commit their finding to God: not onely so excusing their idlenesse, but preferring themselues into holines, aboue other their fellowes that did work and erroniously expounding the said Scriptures for their defence: as they did other Scriptures, to proue they should not be shauen after the manner of Monkes. Which letting their heads to grow he much blameth also in them. See lib. 2. Retract. c. 21. & de op. Monach. c. 31. S. Hierome ep. 42. c. 3. of Nonnes cutting their heare.

Monkes were shaven in the primitiue Church, and Nunnes chipped of their haire.

Where by the way you see that the religious were shauen in S. Augustines time, who reprocheth them theth them for their heare, calling them Crinitos, Heartlings, as the Heretickes now contrariwise deride them by the word Rasos Shauelings. So that there is a great difference between the ancient Fathers and new Protestants. And as for hand labours, as S. Augustine in the booke alleaged, would not haue Religious folke to refuse them, where necessitie, bodily strength, and the order of the Church of Monastery permit or require them: so he expresly writeth, that all cannot nor are not bound to worke, and that whosoeuer preacheth and ministreth the Sacraments to the people or serueth the altar (as all Religious men commonly now do) may chalenge their liuing of them whom they serue, and are not bound to worke, *no nor such neither as haue been brought vp before in state of Gentlemen, and haue giuen away their lands or goods, and made themselues poore for Christs sake. Which is to be noted, because the Heretikes affirme the said Scripture and S. Augustine to condemne all such for idle persons.

S. Augustins opinion concerning religious mens working or not working. Lib. de op. Monach. c. 21.

CART VV. 2. [10. Neither let him eate.] The Iesuites on the one side, match (as it were Oyle with Lentiles, or some such vile pulse) Gentlemen with the vile scutse of their fat Monkes: on the other side (as it were thornes with roses) they compare them with the old Monks in Ierom and Augustines time. But they are better matched with the Massilian heretickes of old time, and with certain new Massilian Anabaptists of ours, who under colour of praying alwayes (as their Monkes at mid-night) would do no hand labour. And is not this the very profession of your Monkes? And if you will say that they Masse it too, yet seing they needed not to study to say Masse, who seeth not that they lived idlely all that time that they were not in their will-worsh p; not to speake of that here, that then they were of all worst occupied, when they were most busie, and furthest out of order when they were in their order. But if they can say here something for their monkes, yet they can say nothing, for their huswiues the Nuns, who could be employed in no publicke affaires of the Church or Common wealth. Now how unlike these Monkes are to those old Monkes, under whose shadow they would build their filthy Sodomiticall Nests, hath been already declared upon Math. 3. Furthermore, your expolition is foolish and unlearned, which would restraine these words of the Apostle to certaine poore men which haue nothing to liue of their owne, when the Apostle maketh it a generall rule taken from that which in Adam was commanded unto all his posterity, that they should painfully bee bestowed in some worke tending to Gods glory and the good of others. So that a Prince in the Church of God is not to eate his bread without painfull travell in his Princely affaires. For the Iesuites are too childishly abused, if they thinke that the word labour reacheth no further but to the bodily or hand labour, the labour of the minde, and the carefull discourses of the spirit taking more of a man sometimes in one houre, then the labour of the body will do in many. Cyprian 65. Epist. is here shamefully falsified, who hath no word of Monke, but onely sheweth that they which serue in the ministery of the Church, should be maintained of the Churches charge, which is no question between us. And speaking of those which were termed the Clergie, hee could not comprehend Monkes, which are not of the Clergy, as hath been shewed vpon Math. 3. 1. Ierome in the preface upon Iob, hath no such thing. That in Vita Hilarian hath been handled, upon Math. 3. 1. that a ledging for shaving out of Augustine, &c. maketh nothing for them: for he would not haue them shaven (as you falsely pretend) as appeareth both by his word (pouled) and by his profes drawn out of 1. Cor. 11. where the Apostle speaketh against those which had long effeminate haire like women, and not against those which had their heads pouled, as also he doth as much disallow women for cutting their haire, as he condemneth men for nourishing it. So that whosoeuer should bee authour to cut the virgins haire without some urgent need, should not onely offer violence to nature, but unto the Apostles holy doctrine. And therefore that alledged out of Ierom. epist. 48. maketh nothing for the cutting of your Nunnes haire. For first he onely sheweth what was done in Egypt, &c. without giuing his iudgement of it in praise or dispraise. Secondly, he sheweth that those virgins had their haire cut, because (never washing their haire) there was otherwise danger of breeding Lice in their heades, which your Nunnes are not in danger of, which do little else but trim them and combe them a great part of the day, and amongst whom there was oftentimes more delicacie both in their diet and attire, then in many matronly Ladies of the Land. For you know well enough, that your Nunnes were not of S. Francis religion, who (in the zeale of his beggarly profession) would take up Lice from the ground to put in his Friers frocke.

Theodoret. hist. eccles. lib. 4. c. 11.

Gen. 3. 19.

The last place of Augustine. de opere Monach. cap. 2. maketh also nothing for Monkish Gentlemen. For he speaketh of those which having lands, sold them to bee divided for the relieue of the poore in such manner as is mentioned Actes 2. which is not your voluntary poverty, but that which all Christians are bound unto when they see that the poore cannot otherwise be prouided for. And therefore he saith, such were by all likelihood the Citizens of Ierusalem · for it is written that they sold their lands, &c.

RHEM. 3. [14. Obey not,] Our Pastors must be obeyed, and not onely secular Princes, and such as will not be obedient to their spirituall gouernours, the Apostle (as S. Augustine saith) giueth order and commandement that they be corrected by correption or admonition. *By degradation, excommunication, and other lawfull kindes of punishments. CARTVV.4. not that a man should be forth with so proceeded against, untill to disobedience he hath added contumacie, and opposition against the Churches admonition. Secondly, for that in willing that hee bee certified thereof by letter (so to reade it) it seemeth that the Apostle by some medicinably warning meant to turne away from the offender the terrible thunder clap of excommunication. Thirdly, for that he willeth the brethren to admonish him, which were not with safty to be done by a common brother towards one that hath obstinated himselfe against the Church to the procuring of the sentence of excommunication against himselfe, but rather ought to bee done by the Pastor, who is able both to do good of him, and to take least hurt by him. THE ARGVMENT OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO TIMOTHY.

RHEMIST.

AFTER the Epistles to the Churches, now follow his Epistles to particular persons, as to Timothee, to Titus, who where Bishops: and to Philemon.

Of Timothee we read Act. 16. how S. Paul in his visitation tooke him in his traine at Lystra, circumcising him before, because of the Iewes, he was then a Disciple, that is to say, a Christian man. Afterward the Apostle gaue him holy Orders, and consecrated him Bishop, as he testifieth in both these Epistles vnto him. 1. Tim. 4. v. 14 and 2. Tim. 1. v. 6.

Hee writeth therefore vnto him as to a Bishop, and himselfe expresseth the scope of his first Epistle, saying: These things I write to thee, that thou mayest know how thou ought est to conuerse in the house of God, which is the Church. And so he instructeth him (and in him, all Bishops) how to gouerne both himselfe, and others, and touching himselfe, to be an example & spectacle to all sorts, in all vertue as touching other, to prohibite all such as go about to preach otherwise then the Catholike Church hath receiued, and to inculcate to the people the Catholike faith: to preach vnto yong and old, men and women: to seruants, to the rich, to every sort conueniently. With what circumspection to giue orders, and to what persons: for whom they pray, whom to admit to the vow of widowhood &c, CARTVV. It is here untruely said, that Timothie was a Bishop, for he had that ministery committed to him, the worke whereof he was bidden to execute. But it is expresly commanded him, that he should execute the worke of an Evangelist. Againe, he had that kinde of ministery which he accomplished and exercised, but that he exercised the office of an Evangelist (which is to water in diuers and sundry places where the Apostles planted) appeareth by divers and sundry places and countries wherein he exercised his ministery: whereas the ministery of a Bishop is tied as it were to the stake or glebe of one particular Church. Last of all, that he is called Evangelist of the Apostle, and never termed by the name of a Bishop, which reason is so much the stronger, as the name of Apostle and Prophet being sometime in the Scripture carried unto other offices, then to those whereof they are the particular names, this title of Evangelist is communicated in the Scripture to none but those which did execute the proper office of an Evangelist. The Scholast indeed in the subscription of the Epistles, and other ancient writers, call him Bishop, but it is as they call the Apostles Bishops, for that had the highest authority and degree of ministery in the places, where they exercised their extraordinary callings, even as the Bishops or Pastors in the ordinarie functions of their particular Churches are the highest officers of the Ecclesiticall Presbyterie. And that their meaning was not to make Timothy a Bishop in proper speech, it appeareth both by Ambrose and Ignatius, which call him Deacon, in such sort as a Deacon is opposed to a Bishop, by a generall name of Deacon or Minister, noting out (in deed) the proper office of an Evangelist which was to haue a more large and generall Ministery, and to be sent hether and thether for the ministerie of the Gospell at the appointment of the Apostles, whom the Fathers often terme Bishops. Heb. 13. 2. Tim, 4. 5.

Vide Ambros. Ignat. epist. ad Phil. & Tral.

The reason wherewith the Iesuites would proue him a Bishop, because the Apostle wrote unto him that he might know how to conuerse in the house of God which is the Church, is more then childish, seeing by that reason they may make him a Deacon, an Elder, a man, a woman, a yong wife, an old widow, and therefore also a monster, seeing that he teacheth how all these should behaue themselues in the Church of God, some as publique, and some as private persons. It is true, that in iustructing him he instructeth also Bishops, because that which was his office in many places, that is the Bishops in their severall and particular Churches. 1. Tim. 3. 16

CHAP. I.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 5 BVT ‖ the end of the precept is charity from a pure heart and a ‡ good conscience, and a faith not feined.

RHEM. 1. [5. A good conscience.] S. Augustine saith, Hee that list to haue the hope of heauen let him looke that hee haue a good conscience: to haue a good conscience, let him beleeue and work well, for that he beleeueth he hath of faith, that he worketh he hath of charitie. Praef. in Psal. 31.

Verse. 19 Having faith and a good conscience, ‡ which certaine repelling, haue made shipwrack about the faith.

RHEM. 2. [19. Which certaine repelling.] Euill life and no good conscience is often the cause that men fall to Heresie from the faith of the Catholicke Church. Againe, this plainely reproueth the Heretickes false doctrine, saying, that no man can fall from the faith that hee once truly had.

CARTVV. 2 [19 Which certaine repelling] By faith heere is understood the doctrine of the Gospell, as divers times in this Epistle; from the outward profession whereof and beleefe, that it is truth (which is that that Iames calleth a dead faith) one may fall, and such to haue been Alexanders and Hymineus, it appeareth out of the second Epistle, and is here at un-awares confessed of the Iesuites, who assigne this falling from the faith in the next Note to be teaching of false doctrine, likewise from a temporall faith: whereby a man having a taste or smacke of the sweetnesse of the promises, and of the power of the world to come, yet hath not by sound resolution and certaine perswasion of heart, as it were, swallowed down and digested them. All this we grant a man may haue, and in these kinds truely haue, and yet not haue that faith whereby a man is iustified, which whosoever hath once, he hath alwaies to his liues end: for that it is a water that welleth and springeth to everlasting life. 1. Tim. 3. 9. & 4. 1. 2. Tim. 2. 17. Mat. 13. 21 Heb. 6. Heb. 6. 5. Ioh. 4. 14. Mat. 16. 18 Luk. 22. 32.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3. As I desired thee to remaine at Ephesus when I went into Macedonia, that thou shouldest denounce to certaine ‖ not to teach otherwise.

RHEM 3. [3. Not to teach otherwise.] The proper marke of Heretickes and false preachers is, to teach otherwise or contrarie to that which they found taught and beleeued generally in the vnitie of the Catholike Church before their time: all doctrine that is odde, singular, new, differing from that which was first planted by the Apostles, and descended down from them to all nations and ages following without contradiction, being assuredly erroneous. The Greeke word which the Apostles Teaching otherwise then the doctrine received, is a speciall marke of heretickes

Apoſtle here vſeth, expreſſeth this point ſo effectually, that in none compound terme he giveth vs, to wit, that an Hereticke is nothing elſe but an after-teacher, or teacher other-wiſe; which euen it ſelfe alone is the eaſieſt rule for the ſimple to diſcerne a falſe Prophet or preacher by, ſpecially when as hereſie firſt beginneth. Luther found all Chriſtian nations at reſt and peace in one vniforme faith, and all preachers of one vocie and doctrine touching the B. Sacrament and other Articles: ſo that whatſoeuer he taught that which he found preached and beleeued muſt needs be another doctrine, a latter doctrine, an after-teaching or teaching otherwiſe, and therefore conſequently muſt needs be falſe. And by this admonition of S. Paul, all Biſhops are warned to take heed of ſuch, and ſpecially to prouide that no ſuch odde teachers riſe in their dioceſes.

* ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν. Luthers teaching otherwiſe.

CARTVV. 3. [3 Not to teach otherwiſe.] Let the Reader marke the Ieſuites ſlight, which in the beginning of their note make a vaunt, as if they would haue the doctrine of their Synagogue tryed by that which was preached in the Apoſtles times; but in the later end of their note, as repenting them of their former bargaine, they cravenly and cowardly flie for refuge to that doctrine which was taught when Luther began to Preach, which was more then a thouſand and fiue hundred yeares after the Apoſtles time. Whereof it is apparant (by their own confeſſion) that hee which preacheth another and after doctrine from theirs, may notwithſtanding preach the ſame doctrine that the Apoſtles did, from the triall whereof they ſo flie, as the Oule from the light, hauing this for their principall ſuccour to ſhroud them in, that the Apoſtles doctrine, is whatſoeuer the Pope ſhall decree to haue been theirs. And beſide that, it is irretragably proued, that the principall pillars of their Religion, had no place in the Church 600 yeares after the Apoſtles time, and further confirmed by vndoubted ſtories and records, and that partly out of their own men, that there haue been continually from age to age, that haue maintained the doctrine which wee profeſſe. What do they ſay againſt Luther that the Iewes might not haue obiected againſt our Saviour Chriſt, who taught (for a great part) another doctrine then did the Scribes and Phariſies ordinarily in the Synagogues. What? which the Gentiles might not haue caſt in the diſh of the Apoſtles, which taught them another doctrine then they or their fathers had heard of, more then two thouſand yeares before? As for that they had gotten the name of Chriſtians, to whom Luther, Wickliffe, Huſſe, and ſuch worthy Champions of Chriſt, had oppoſed themſelues, it helpeth you no more then the harlots, who treading all matronly and chaſt vſage vnder their feet, are often notwithſtanding more iealous of the bare title and name of a chaſte Matron, then many honeſt women are, which reſt themſelues in the conſcience of their chaſte behaviour, not ſo much regarding the leud tongues of others. And you know what the Holy Ghoſt ſaith of ſome, which called themſelues Iewes and were not, but lyed: of other ſome, that did not onely count themſelues, but were ſo eſteemed of other, to be aliue when they were dead. Laſt of all, if you ſet vpon Luther couered vnder the profeſſion and name of Chriſtianity, Luther and others of the ſame army and band of the Lord, made no warre againſt you but vnder the ſame enſigne and banner of Chriſtianity.

Verſ. 4. Not to attend to fables and genealogies having no end: which miniſter queſtions rather then the edifying of God which is in faith.

All hereticall doctrines fables.

RHEM. 4. [4. To fables.] He ſpeaketh ſpecially of the Iewes after-doctrines and humane conſtitutions, repugnant to the lawes of God, whereof Chriſt giueth warning Mat. 23. and in other places, which are conteined in their Cabala and Talmud: generally of all hereticall doctrines, which in deed, howſoeuer the ſimple people be beguiled by them, are nothing but fabulous inuentions, as we may ſee in the Valentinians, Manichees, and others of old: by the brethren of loue, Puritans Anabaptiſts, and Caluiniſts, of our time. For which cauſe Theodoret entitleth his booke againſt Heretikes, Hæreticarum fabularum, Of Hereticall fables.

CARTVV. 4. [4 To Fables.] Heere is nothing but more railing againſt Caluiniſts, as it pleaſeth them to call vs; whom they match impudently with Anabaptiſts, Puritans, familie of loue &c. which haue more agreement with them in their fantaſticall viſion, freewill, and power not to ſin, inherent iuſtice &c. then we haue, who abhorre their deteſtable phrenſies. And they are ſo much the more braſen faced herein, as that where we cleaue onely to the holy Scriptures, they haue abuſed the people moſt ſhamefully, with their fabulous feſtiuals, and lying legends, ſurpaſſing in vanitie and palpable falſhood, the forge and inuention of all Iewiſh tales, and now at laſt diſauowed by men of their own frock.

Curious queſtions in religion.

RHEM. 5 [4 Queſtions] Let our louing brethren conſider whether thoſe contentious and curious queſtionings and diſputes in religion, which theſe vnhappy hereſies haue ingendred haue brought forth any increaſe of good life any deuotion, or edification of faith and religion in our daies, and then ſhall they eaſily iudge of the truth of theſe new opinions, and the end that will follow of theſe innouations. In truth all the world now ſeeth they edifie to Atheiſme and no otherwiſe.

CARTVV. 5. [4 Queſtions.] Let our loving brethren, and your ſilly deceiued ones, yea let all that haue but a ſparkle of naturall light and common reaſon of men, conſider whether the Ieſuites are farre inferiour to their father the deuill in impudent lying or no, which dare charge vs with vnprofitable queſtions, whereas their ſchooles ſound almoſt nothing elſe, which diſpute not onely of idle and vnprofitable queſtions of God and godlineſſe, but alſo of moſt wicked and blaſphemous queſtions, as may be ſeen in their ſchoolemen: a taſte whereof is noted and gathered by Erasmus: For they are ſuch as Chriſtians eares would abhorre to be defiled with. As for their ſlander againſt our holy Religion, for that it bringeth not forth good fruit, it is but their bare word, whereof let the Reader ſee the anſwer before, in the anſwer to the 7. page and third Section of the Preface.

Charity the onely formall cauſe of our iuſtification.

RHEM. 6. [5. The end Charitie.] Here againe it appeareth, that Charitie is the chiefe of all vertues, and the end, conſummation, and perfection of all the law and precepts, and yet the aduerſaries are ſo fond as to preferre faith before it, yea to exclude it from our iuſtification. Such obſtinacy

there is in them that haue once in pride and stubburnesse forsaken the euident truth. Charitie doubtlesse which is here commended, is iustice it selfe, & the very formall cause of our iustification, as the works proceeding thereof be the works of iustice. Charitas inchoata (saith S. Augustine) inchoata iustitia: Charitas prouecta, prouecta iustitia: Charitas magna, magna iustitia: Charitas perfecta, perfecta iustitia est. Charitie now beginning, is iustice beginning: Charitie growen or increased, is iustice growen or increased: great Charitie is great iustice, perfect Charitie, is perfect iustice, lib. de nat. & grat. c. 70.

CARTVV. 6. [5. The end charitie.] That which is here called the precept is not as they say, all the Law, but onely the precept that S. Paul giveth to Timothy, that hee should haue care to see that there were no strange doctrine admitted, neither for forme nor matter, neither for things directly contrary to the wholesome doctrine, nor for idle questions, not tending to build up the people in the loue of God and of their neighbour, as appeareth evidently, both by the verbe before, whereof this word here is derived, and is as it were a bough, and by this same word used afterward in this Chapter, where the signification of it is restrained unto the present matter of exhortation, howbeit differing from them in the exposition of the word, and of this place, wee agree with them, that charitie is the perfection of all the Law, and maruell not onely at their fondnesse, but at their madnesse, that thereof they conclude, that Charitie is better then Faith, and that charitie iustifieth us. For it is true, that if a man loued God with all his heart, &c. and his neighbour as himselfe, that then he should accomplish the Law wholy; and so should his charity be better then faith: but then there should be no use at all of any iustifying faith. Ver. 3. παραγγελλης. Ver. 18. πιστεω της παραγγελιας.

But that the Apostle meaneth not that charitie, as that which was perfectly in Iesus Christ alone, and cannot be possibly in sinfull flesh, it hath been often shewed, and is so euident, that it must needs be a most horrible lethargie, which taketh away the sence hereof from any man. For proofe whereof, to let other things go, we will take onely this place, which noteth out such a charity as proceedeth and springeth from the fountaine of faith. For he affirmeth precisely, that this charity proceedeth from faith, and is a daughter and fruit of faith. Whereupon first it followeth, that faith beeing vnperfect, it must needs follow, that Charity is so likewise. Secondly, thereof is concluded, that by how much the cause is better then the effect, by so much the iustifying and liuely faith is better then the charity that is inherent in us. Furthermore it is here plainly affirmed, that charity also is engendred and proceedeth from a pure heart and a good conscience. Now seeing it is faith that purifieth the heart, and maketh a man to haue a good conscience, it followeth that being the cause or mother of a pure heart, which is the cause and mother of charity, it is much more the cause and begetter of charity. Hereof it is euident that it is (indeed) true that Augustine lib. de Nat. & Grat. c. 70. saith, that perfect charitie, is perfect iustice; but nothing to the purpose of that which the Iesuites alledge it for, because no man can attaine it, which is euident by Augustines wordes in that place, where he saith, that this charity is the greatest that it can be in this life, when for charities sake a man regardeth not his life, but is greater when it shall cease to grow, which is in the life to come. Whereby in saying, that it alwayes groweth whilest we are in this life, he declareth plainly that it is neuer perfect during this life, and consequently can neuer iustifie us, which is more euident otherwhere, saying that this most full or accomplished charity, which cannot be increased, is in no man during this life. And againe, as long as it may be encreased, whatsoeuer is lesse, is of vice, of the which vice it commeth to passe, that there is none iust vpon earth, which doth good and sinneth not. Whereof also it is, that none liuing shall be iustified, that all, how much soeuer we haue performed, must say, forgiue vs our debts: when notwithstanding already all our sayings, deeds and thoughts are forgiuen vs in baptisme. Act. 15. 9. Aug. Ep. 29 ad Hieron.

And in like manner doe they abuse their Reader with the other place of Augustine prefat. in 31 Psalm. in the margent: for in the same place he saith, that a man beginnes to bee in faith by mercie, which faith hauing taken hope and loue, beginneth to worke well. And a little after, if thou wilt be shut from grace boast of thy merits. And yet againe, that he so ascribeth worke to charitie, that the principall cause thereof is faith, it is manifest in that hee affirmeth, that Abrahams offering of his sonne came of faith. And further: Where there is no faith, there is no good worke, for the intent maketh a good worke, and faith directeth the intent.

RHEM. 7. [7. Desirous to be Doctors.] It is the proper vice both of Iudaicall and of Hereticall false teachers, to professe knowledge and great skill in the Law and Scriptures, being indeed in the sight of the learned most ignorant of the word of God, not knowing the very principles of Diuinitie, euen to the admiration truely of the learned that reade their bookes or heare them preach. Heretickes great boasters but vnlearned CARTVV. 7. [7. Desirous to be Doctors.] There haue been few Heretickes that could in time and selfe experience better speake of ignorance of the word of God, then you. Beside that, if you meane to note us, we can freely yeeld you, that we taking unto us a Christian skill of the holy Scriptures, which we study, are not ashamed to confesse, that we desire to bee ignorant as much as we may, of that which you chiefly account the word of God, to wit, unwritten veritie, the Popes decrees, &c. And therefore it seemeth you haue cunningly opposed to the profession of great skill in the Scriptures, not the ignorance of the Scriptures, but of the word of God, which with you is another thing then the holy Scripture. Beside that, if you cannot shew out the Heretickes that haue been any pillars thereof, so impudently as openly to professe themselues Magistri nostri as you haue: with what face can you seeke abroad for men that desire to be counted Doctors, when you haue them at home, and that in such measure of shamelesse boasting, as the Apostle may bee thought iustly, not alone to haue shut you up with the rest of Thrasonicall vaunters, but to haue marked you especially and aboue the rest.

Verse. 9. Knowing this, that the Law is not made to the iust man, but to the uniust, and disobedient, to the impious and sinners, to the wicked and contuminate, to killers of fathers, and killers of mothers.

Libertines alledge scripture.

RHEM. 8. [9. The law not made to the iust.] By this place and the like, the Libertines of our dayes would discharge themselues (whom they count iust) from the obedience of lawes. But the Apostles meaning is that the iust man doth well, not as compelled by law, or for feare of punishment due to the transgressors thereof, but of grace and meere loue toward God and all goodnesse most willingly, though there were no law to command him.

CARTVV. 8. [9. The Law not made to the iust.] The Libertines abuse this place, and the Iesuites in their ignorance use it not well. For first the meaning of the Apostle is, that the Iewes abusing the law to fooliſh and unprofitable questions, did thereby so handle it, as if the men with whom they dealt had been iust, needing not to be covicted or reproved for sinne: whereas the Law is given unto men that are iniust, to lay open sinne with the filth and punishment thereof, that men might by repentance seeke the remedy in the Gospell. The sence which they bring, that the iust man doth well not compelled for feare of punishment; is true, but nothing to the purpose of that which the Apostle speaketh of in this place

Secondly, it is to be obserued that the Iesuites which refuse this our doctrine, where it is soundly grounded, here acknowledge it, where it hath no good ground to stand upon, that a man may well know how pur-blinde they be, which can see better when they haue no light to see by, then when the light of the truth shineth brightly. For let them shew (if they can) where wee haue said more touching the free and unconstrained service of God, then hath broken from them; nay let them shew where we haue said so much as they haue done here. For we affirming that our obedience should be chiefly and most grou ndedly in loue, deny not but that we may giue our selues the spurre to this obedience, by setting before our eyes the plagues of God, and especially of hell. Where they say, that righteous men doe good of meere loue towards God and godlinesse, the word (meere) noteth that there ought to bee no manner of feare of punishment.

Thirdly, where they say, that the iust man will do well, though there were no law to command, they bewray a grosse ignorance, which know not that there is no obedience without a precedent commandement, even as there is no transgression but where there is a Law. And it is so farre from being well done, that it is done without warrant of Gods commandement, that it is a meere arrogancie and pride intollerable.

Verse 20. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander: whom I haue I delivered to Satan, that they may learne not to blaspheme.

Excommunication of Heretickes, and the effect thereof.

RHEM. 9. [20. Deliuered to Satan.] Hymeneus and Alexander are here excommunicated for falling from their faith and teaching heresie; an example vnto Bishops to vse their spirituall power vpon such. In the primitiue Church, corporall affliction through the ministerie of Satan was ioyned to excommunication. Where we see also the diuels readines to inuade them that are cast out by excommunication, from the fellowship of the faithfull, and the supereminent power of Bishops in that case; Whereof S. Hierome (ep 1. ad Heliod. c. 7.) hath these memorable words God forbid (saith he) I should speake finistrously of them, who succeeding the Apostles in degree, make Christs body with their holy mouth by whom wee are made Christians: who hauing the keyes of heauen, do after a sort iudge before the day of iudgement: who in sobrietie and Chastitie haue the keeping of the spouse of Christ. And a little after. They may deliuer me vp to Satan to the destruction of my flesh, that the spirit may be saued in the day of our Lord Iesus. And in the old Law whosoeuer was disobedient to the Priests, was either cast out of the campe and so stoned of the people, or laying down his necke to the sword, expiated his offense by his blood: but now the disobedient is cut off with the spirituall sword, or being cast out of the Church, is torne by the furious mouth of Diuels. So saith hee, Which words would God euery Christian man would weigh.

The Priests high authority of excommunication.

Vpon 1. Cor. 5.

CARTVV. 9. [20. Deliuered to Satan.] It being shewed before that the Apostle did not take vpon him of his own authoritie without the Churches consent, to excommunicate, hee being the same when he was present at Ephesus, which he was, when he was absent from Corinth; it must needs follow that when he affirmeth that hee excommunicated Alexander &c, hee noteth that he was the principall and leader in that action. And although it were accorded that an Apostle might in soueraigne authoritie excommunicate; yet the conclusion drawen from thence, that euerie Bishop in his Church, might do the same, would not shut so close; considering that the Apostle necessarily holding the raignes of the Church alwayes straite, the Bishops hand both in blindnesse of iudgement, and of affection may easily slip. And your own Pighius which gratifieth his God the Pope with this morsel of sole excommunication pulleth it with strong hand out of the Bishops teeth, whom he will not suffer to exercise excommunication without consent of the Church. As for Ierome ep. ad Helio. he is abused as one that hath not there any word which tieth excommunication to the Bishops girdle; who also expresly otherwhere communicating other censures of the Church with the Elders of the Church, cõmunicateth this great censure of excommunication with the Church also. As for the fansie of giuing the offender vnto a personall possession of the Deuill, which we might worthely call a phrensie if it had not some support of grauer men, then are those squirriling Iesuits) it hath been before confuted, vpon 1. Cor. 5.

Hier. ad Demet. ep. 7.

Math. 10.

Neither is it like that the Apostles which amongst other miracles confirmed the Gospell by casting out of Deuils, did send Diuels into men: But it is impossible that that power and gift of executing fearefull iudgements, being ceased or at the least most rarely giuen, should vpon euerie excommunication be inferred. Beside that it is absurd that the Apostle should note out the excommunication by that which may befall a very good man, which is, that he may be bodily haunted & tormented of a Deuill, It being therefore a separation of the excommunicate from the Church, which the Apostle will here note, which is not done, when the Deuill entereth personally in or vpon a man; it followeth that by these words of giuing to Satan, is not meant that inuasion of Satan which the Iesuits dreame of, but onely a casting out of the Church, out of the which as soone as euer a man is cast, he is forthwith in the power and kingdom of Satan, because he is not vnder the kingdom of Christ which is enclosed in the Church. Last of all, when as the end of excommunication is to bring the sinner to repentance, which requireth a presence of a sound vnderstanding, setled iudgement and calmnesse of affections, all which are set in vprore and hurlyburly by the Deuils personall entrie in or vpon a man it is euident that by the words of giuing the sinner to Satan there is no such thing meant as the Iesuits fondly imagine. Neither doth Ieromes words, that he is torn by the furious mouth of the Deuill make any thing for it, considering that the Diuell hauing no mouth, and men being in their bodies whole and not torne, when they are excommunicate; it must needs be otherwise taken then the words sound, for a fearefull wrath and punishment of God by the Deuill; which then (indeed) is more horrible when the Deuill doth blind the eyes of his vnderstanding and harden his hart, then when hee should teare and towze his body into a thousand peeces. And they might aswell say that Paul was personally set vpon by a Deuill, when he saith that he was buffeted by an angell or minister of Satan; 2. Cor. 12. 7.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. FOR Kings and all that are in preeminence: that we may lead a quiet and 2 a peaceable life, in all piety and chastity.

RHEM. 1. [2. For kings and,] Euen for heathen Kings and Emperours by whom the Church suffereth persecution: much more for all faithfull Princes and powers and people both spirituall and temporall, for whom as members of Christs body, and therefore ioyning in prayer and oblation with the ministers of the Church, the Priests more properly and particularly offer the holy Sacrifice, See S. Augustine de orig. anima li. 1. c. 9.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1. I desire therefore first of all things, that I obsecrations, prayers, postulations, thankesgivings be made for all men.

RHEM. 2. [1. Obsecrations.] This order of the Apostle S. Augustine (ep. 59.) findeth to bee fulfilled specially in the holy celebration of the Masse, which hath all these kindes, expressed here in foure diuers words pertaining to foure sorts of prayers, the difference whereof he exactly seeketh out of the proper signification and difference of the Greeke words. And he teacheth vs that the first kind of prayers which here be called, obsecrations, are those that the Priest saith before the consecration: that the second called Prayer be all those which are said in and after the Consecration, and about the Receiuing, including specially the Pater noster, wherewith the whole Church (saith he) in manner endeth that part. as S. Hierome also affirmeth, that Christ taught his Apostles to vse the Pater noster in the Masse, Sic docuit, &c. So taught he his Apostles, that daily in the sacrifice of his body the faithfull should be bold to say, Pater noster, &c. Lib. 3. cont. Pelag. c. 5. where hee alludeth to the very words now vsed in the preface to the said Pater noster in the said Sacrifice, audemus dicere, Pater noster. The third sort called here in the text, Postulations, be those which are vsed after the communion, as it were for dimissing of the people with benediction, that is with the Bishops or Priests blessing. Finally the last kinde, which is Thankesgiuing, concludeth all, *when the Priests and people giue thankes to God for so great a mysterie then offered and receiued. Thus the said holy father handleth this text ep. 59. to Paulinus.

The Prayers and petitions in the Masse deduced out of the Apostles words by S. Augustine and other fathers. Pater noster vsed in the Masse.

* Theoph. in hunc locum.

S. Epiphanius also insinuateth these words of the Apostle to pertaine to the Liturgie or Masse, when he thus writeth to Iohn Bishop of Hierusalem. When we accomplish our prayers after the rite of the holy Mysteries, we pray for all others, and for thee also ep. 60. c. 2. ad Io. Hieros. apud Hieronymum. And most of the other fathers expound the foresaid words, of publike prayers made by the Priest, which are said in all Liturgies or Masses both Greek & Latine, for the good estate of all that be in high dignitie, as kings and others. See S. Chrys. hom. 6. in 1. Tim. & S. Ambr. in hunc locum. Prosper de vocat. lib. 1. c. 4. So exactly doth the practise of the Church agree with the Precepts of the Apostle and the Scriptures and so profundly do the holy fathers seeke out the proper sense of the Scriptures, which our Protestants do so prophanely, popularely, and lightly skimme ouer, that they can neither see nor endure the truth.

Prayer in the Masse for Kings and other.

CARTVV. 2. [1. Obsecrations.] Touching the distinction of the kindes and sorts of prayer, it is needlesse, or at least smally to the purpose we haue in hand, to stand long vpon: it seemeth to vs that the simplest meaning of the Apostle is by a throng of words heaped up together, to note out a diligence and zeale in prayer, rather then to note out diuers sundry sorts of prayer, which will be hardly wonne out of the words, further then that some are request of that which we haue need of, and other some thankesgiving for that which we haue received. Also, not to examine here, whether the Masse hath these kinde of prayers, which is full of blasphemy against God, in prayers to those, and for those which the Apostle never gaue warrant of. Let the Reader obserue how helplesse the Popish Masse is, whose Physick being so painefully sought, is found so short and scant: for how followeth this, that because the Popish Masse hath the same prayers in it, that the Apostle commandeth to be made, therefore it is the true service of God, or therefore it is really the body and bloud of Christ. This cover is too narrow to hide so great uncleanenesse and nakednesse as is in your Masse; and it is no other then that wherewith the coniurers, which vse many holy words in their exorcismes and inchantments, may iustifie their inchantments with, as well as you iustifie your charme of Masse. And it this be the definition of your Masse, which Paul here setteth forth, where he teacheth the whole leiturgie and service of the Church as touching prayer: it followeth that your Mattins, Even-song, Complin, Procession, dirgie, is either no service of God, or no sufficient and regular service: seeing the Apostle willeth that in all the Church meetings, all sorts and kinds of prayer are to bee used, whether they be requests or thanke-giving, or whatsoever else And if you were well advised, you would never haue defined your Masse by this place of the Apostle, where there is not a letter of the sacrifice which you every where make not onely the Marrow-bones, but the very life and soule of the Masse. Here therefore you put us well in remembrance, what was in Augustines time, and after, some hundreths of yeares, the Masse whereof you brag so much, namely, that it was nothing lesse, then the abhominable Idol of sacrifice which you hold forth: But the whole course of the service which was then written and composed for the use of the Church, whereof your sacrifice was so farre from being the Masse, that it was no part of it. Thus therefore the Councell of Toledo speaketh of the sacrifice, that it is reputed that the Priests do not so often receiue the grace of the holy Communion, as they appeare to sacrifice in one day; but in one day offering many sacrifices in all the oblations, one onely excepted, and that the last, they abstaine from the communion; Where it appeareth that by the name of sacrifice, the Councell understandeth nothing else, but the service and Leitourgy of the Church. Another Councell saith thus, It is our pleasure that Prayers, or Orasons, or Masses, approued of the Councell be vsed of all, and that there be none said in the Church, but those that are compoſed of learned men, or of the Synods, lest happily something should be done contrary to the faith: Where let the Reader note first, that the Councell taketh prayers and masses to be the same: Secondly, there were divers Masses which were made by learned men, where the Iesuites would make us beleeue that the Masse was in the Apostles times, and both ordained and said by them: this Councell shewing that they came up for want of able Ministers, which because they were not able to discerne of truth and falshood: therefore certaine learned ones were picked out, which should write something, that the ignoranter sort of Ministers should read. And admitting that your Masse hath all sorts of prayers, yet what hath it that our holy Communion hath not; although you take the signification of divers sorts of prayer, as Augustines doth, which distinguisheth them not of the matter, that they pray for, but of the time and order, wherein they should be said, We haue also that which is more then all these (notwithstanding that they are excellent) the Preaching of the Word, which the Apostle expresly commending in the former chapter, before he giveth commandement of prayer, is either altogether, or for the most part dispised and neglected of you. Wherefore it is evident, that your Church obserueth not the order, which the Apostle appointeth in the publick service of God. And if you will haue Augustine words epist.59. ad Paulin. with others to be interpreters hereof, it is also evident that our Communion doth more agreeably answer it, then your Masse. For Augustine saith, that the Sacrament first sanctified by prayer, after is broken that it might be distributed, where you break not the bread to distribute it, nor can with any truth pray to the end that the reall Bodie of Christ should be broken: the same answer is of the rest heere alleaged, whereof never a one hath a word of their Masse. And how impudent they are in this point of fathering the order and Leitourgie of the Apostle Paul, it may appeare by the testimony of their own Pope, which affirmeth that the Sacrament of the Eucharist was consecrated of the Apostles by the Lords prayer onely. And another of their Popes affirmeth that there were three prayers at the first Masse, which Peter said, and that the other haue been added at divers times. As for the words of offering sacrifice out of Augustine de origin. anim. lib. 1. c. 91. it maketh nothing for the sacrifice of the Masse, as shall in the proper place to the Hebrewes be declared.

Verse.4. ¶ Who will all men to be saued, and to come to the knowledge of the truth.

RHEM. 3. [4. Who will all men] The perishing or damnation of men must not be imputed to God, who delighted not in any mans perdition, but hath prouided a generall medicine and redemption to saue all from perishing that will accept it, or that haue it applied vnto them by his Sacraments and other meanes by him ordeined, and so would haue all saued by his conditionall will and ordinance: that is, if men will themselues, by accepting, doing, or hauing done unto them all things requisite by Gods law, for God vseth not his absolute will or power towards all in this case. But hee that list see the manifold senses (all good and true) that these words may beare, let him see S. Augustine. Ad articul. sibi falso impos. resp. 2. to. 7. Ench. c. 103. Ep. 107. De cor. & grat. cap. 15. and S. Damascen. lib. 2. orthod. fine. c. 29.

God will no mans perdition, but the salvation of all.

CARTVV. 3. [4. Who will all men.] The Apostles meaning is, that the Lord will saue of all sorts and kindes of men some, as appeareth by the circumstance; for that it is added as a reason, that we should pray for Kings and those in authoritie, although enemies to the Gospell: In which regard it was also doubted whether such heathen Infidels, and especially persecuting Princes should bee obeyed. This appeareth manifestly by another place not vnlike to this: where the Apostle shewing that the condition of servants being of all callings the basest, as the Kings estate is the highest, is not shut out of the kingdome of heaven, but divideth the inheritance with the rest; giveth this reason, that the grace of God hath appeared bringing salvation unto all men: where this false glosse of the Iesuites which would haue the will of God depend of the will of man, is overthrown: for the Apostle affirmeth that the grace of God saveth, or is saving unto all men, not onely in offering, but also in exhibiting that which is offered; which when it cannot be understood of all men, whereof a great number are never once offered the grace of God in Iesus Christ, it followeth, that neither this nor that place can be understood as the Iesuites would haue, that God will haue all men saued if they will themselues: directly also against Iohn, who saith expresly, that it is not of the will of man, that one in beleeving is made the Sonne of God, but of God, who draweth every one that commeth unto Christ. Having thus forced the Apostles words by making the rule of our salvation the the will of man, which the Apostle assigneth to be the will of God: they play with his words, sending us to see the manifold senses (all good and true) that those words may beare, with as much profaneneſſe in thus dallying with them: as malicious neſſe in wreſting them before: for where of one place there is one onely true and naturall ſenſe, which alwaies may bee invincibly proved and deduced from the words and circumſtances of the place: they in pretence to honour the Scripture, but in truth to diſauthoriſe it, that having ſo many good ſenſes, it ſhould haue never a one certain, make as their fathers haue before, a ſhipmans hoſe of it: As if it were not a more ſingular cõmendation of one Scripture to be ſtrong and apt to one thing, then to haue a faint kind of abilitie unto many. Reaſon teacheth that the inſtrument that ſerveth but for one uſe, is the moſt able inſtrument, and moſt of all commendeth the wealth and honour of him whoſe it is: and therefore it ſhould argue a poverty and ſcarcitie of wiſedome in the Lord, if his words ſhould be drawn to ſo many ſenſes as the Ieſuites imagine. Wherefore in Gods Scriptures, neither Ariſtotles (as we may terme it for our better underſtanding) one ſhooe tor both feet, nor Platoes ſtaffe-ſword: or to come neerer to your underſtanding, the Friers coule as fit to carry his dinner in, as to cover his head, haue onely place. It is true, that by Analogie or Anagogie from the figure to the thing figured, or by argument of paires and like, or other conſequence, that which is ſaid of one thing may be carried unto another. But as the beſt trees beare but one kind of fruit, ſo doth one place of Scripture beare but one true naturall ſenſe. Now having ſhewed it falſe that all the expoſitions are the true ſenſes of the place; ſo we will conſider how Auguſtines expoſitions do utterly overthrow the falſe gloſes that you haue forged of it and him both.

To omit therefore the firſt place, ad Articul. Fidei. &c. as that which having no mention in his book of Retractations, is none of his. In the ſecond place, Enchir. cap. 103. the firſt ſenſe is, that no man is ſaued, but he whom he will haue ſaued: and that if he will haue him ſaued, it is neceſſary that hee ſo bee. The ſecond ſenſe is that which we follow: Not (ſaith hee) that there is none that hee would not haue ſaued, which would do no miracles amongſt thoſe that would haue done repentance if he had done: but that by all men he underſtandeth all kinde of men, Kings, and priuate men, noble and unnoble, high and low, learned and unlearned. &c.

The next place epiſt. 107. is as full againſt you, where by all men, hee underſtandeth all thoſe which are predeſtinate, becauſe in them there are of all ſorts of men, which hee proueth by conference of other Scriptures. In the laſt place, Lib. de corrip. & grat. cap. 15. there is nothing but that wee ought to deſire the good and ſaluation of all, which is nothing to this. And yet the reaſon there uſed, becauſe wee know not the will of God of them, maketh flat againſt you, noting that there are ſome which he will not haue ſaued, although we know not. If Auguſtines ſenſes be true, then the Ieſuits is falſe: for if God will not haue all men ſaued, as Auguſtin ſaith, then it is falſe that the Ieſuites ſay, that he will haue all ſaued. And if it be a good ſence of Auguſtine, that thoſe that God will haue ſaued, muſt needes be ſaued, it is naught that the Ieſuites ſay, that hee will haue them ſaued conditionally, if they themſelues will, meaning their owne naturall will, able either to chooſe or refuſe that which God willeth: for otherwiſe no man is ſaued againſt his will, foraſmuch as the Lord offering grace, giveth alſo will from aboue, whereby his offer is taken.

Laſt of all, if it be true, that by all men are underſtood not all, but the predeſtinate, and ſome of all ſorts of men: it followeth that the Ieſuites ſence is falſe, that will haue the meaning to be, that all men ſhal be ſaued. And withall the Reader may know what kinde of wares the Ieſuites utter, when they deliver them thus vpon truſt. Damaſcen. lib. 2. Orthod. Fid cap. 29. although hee is not of age to beare witneſſe in the controverſie between us, yet may he be ſoundly underſtood, if by ſaying, that God in a precedent will, will haue all ſaued, hee underſtand the will of God either revealed to men, in calling them by ſound of trumpet of the creation, wherein as in a book they may reade the favour and mercy of God, or elſe in his word, which is offered as well to the elect as to the reprobate. And if any man reply, that ſo there ſhould ſeeme to be two willes in God, the one contrary to the other, Damaſcen himſelfe anſwereth, that it is a counſell incomprehenſible, and ſecret that no man is able to ſearch: meaning, that no reach of reaſon is able to ſound, how that will of God which ſeemeth to us diverſe, is in him but one; much more ſoundly and ſoberly then your owne Schollers, which affirme that the Lord doth like an earthly King, which or ever he know the venome of treaſon in his ſubiect hearts, would haue them all ſaved: but after when they haue broched their treaſonable practiſes, alereth his minde, and will haue them executed: then which, what can be more iniurious and diſhonorable either to the timeleſſe foreknowledge, or to the changeleſſe decree and counſell of God? whereas not ſo much as an earthly King if he could haue foreknowne the obſtinate treaſon of his diſſeyall ſubiect, would ever haue had any other will, but that his rebell ſubiect ſhould haue the due of his rebellion.

Verſe 5. For there is one God, one alſo Mediatour of God and men, Man Chriſt Ieſus.

REMA. [5. One mediator] The proteſtants are too peeviſh and pittifully blind, that charge the Catholike Church and Catholikes, with making more Mediatours then one which is Chriſt our Sauiour, in that they deſire the Saincts to pray for them, or to be their patrones, and interceſſours before God. We tell them therefore that they do not vnderſtand what it is to be a Mediator, in this ſenſe that S. Paul taketh the word, and in which it is properly and onely attributed to Chriſt. For to be thus a mediator, is, by nature to be truly both God and man, to be that one eternall Prieſt and Redeemer, which by his ſacrifice and death vpon the Croſſe hath reconciled vs to God, and payed his blood as a full and ſufficient ranſome for all our ſinnes, himſelfe without need of any redemption, neuer ſubiect to poſſibilitie of ſinning: againe, to be the ſingular Aduocate and Patrone of mankind, that by himſelfe alone and by his own merits procureth all grace and mercy to mankind in the ſight of his Father, none making any interceſſion for him, nor giuing any grace or force to his praiers but he to all: none asking or obteining either grace in this life, or glory in the next, but by him. In this this sort then (as S. Augustine truly saith, Com. ep. Parm. lib. 2. c. 8.) neither Peter nor Paul, no nor our B. Lady, nor any creature whatsoeuer, can be our Mediatour. The aduersaries thinke to basely of Christs mediation, if they imagine this to be his onely prerogatiue, to pray for vs, or that we make the Saincts our Mediatours in that sort as Christ is, when we desire them to pray for vs, which is so far inferiour to the singular mediation of him, that no Catholike euer can or dare thinke or speake so basely vnto him, as to desire him to pray for vs: but we say, Lord haue mercy vpon vs, Christ haue mercie vpon vs: and not, Christ pray for vs, as we say to our Ladie and the rest, Therefore to inuocate Saincts in that sort as the Catholike Church doth, can not make them our Mediatours as Christ is, whom wee must not inuocate in that sort. And as well make we the faithfull yet liuing, our Mediatours (by the Aduersaries arguments) when wee desire their prayers, as the departed Saincts.

Kyrie eleison. Christe eleison. The different manner of praying to Christ, and to Saints.

But now touching the word Mediatour, though in that singular sense proper to our Sauiour, it agreeth to no more creature in heauen or earth, yet taken in more large and common sort by the vse of Scriptures, doctors, and vulgar speach, not onely the Saincts, but good men liuing, that pray for vs and helpe vs in the way of saluation, may and are rightly called Mediators. As S. Cyril. lib. 12. Thesaur. c. 10. prooueth, that Moyses according to the Scriptures, and Ieremie and the Apostles and others bee Mediators. Reade his own words, for they plainely refute all the Aduersaries cauillations in this case. And if the name of Sauiour and Redeemer be in the Scriptures giuen to men, without derogation to him that is in a more excellent and incomparable manner the onely Sauiour of the world what can they say why there be not many mediatours, in an inferiour degree to the onely and singular Mediatour? S. Bernard saith. Opus est Mediatore ad Mediatorem Christum, nec alter nobis vtilior quam Maria, that is, Wee haue need of a Mediator to Christ the Mediatour, and there is none more for our profit then our Lady. Bernard. Ser. qui incipit. Signum magnum apparuit, &c. post Ser. 5. de Assump. S. Basil also in the same sense, writing to Iulian the Apostata, desireth the mediation of our Lady, of the Apostles, Prophets, and Martyrs, for procuring of Gods mercie and remission of his sinnes. His words are cited in Conc. Nic. 2. act. 4. pag. 110. & 111. Thus did and thus beleeued all the holy fathers, most agreeable to the Scriptures, and thus must all the children of the Church do, be the Aduersaries neuer so importunate and wilfully blind in these matters.

How there be many Mediators, as there bee many Sauiours, and Redeemers, euen in the Scriptures. Iud. 3. 9. 2. Esd. 9. 27. Act. 7. 35.

CAP. TVV. 4. [5. One Mediatour] Here is a great smoake of idle and vnlearned speech, to hide if it were possible themselues in that their shamefully robbery of the sonne of God, whole mediation they communicate with the Saints departed; hereof it is, that they haue much babbling about the definition of a Mediator, which is nothing else but to be a meane to reconcile parties that are at variance. And whereas they are charged that of that prey and spoyle due vnto Christ for his glorious victory against all the enemies of mankinde, they giue part vnto the Saints departed: Their reply in effect is that they giue not all. And where they would sneake and slinke away vnder this cover, that they make them not such Mediatours; it is but in vaine, seeing they make them such intercessors, which in matter of prayer is the same that Mediator: for what is either the one or the other, but to be a middle one between two by the grace and favour he is in to get another favour that hath it not. Whereof commeth, that their Schoolemen to shift this place, affirme absurdly, that Christ is the onely Mediator of Redemption, but not of intercession, whereas the Apostle speaketh heere of the mediation which is in prayer by making intercession: also, that they giue vnto Saints that which is proper vnto Christ as he is God, and doth not agree vnto him as he is man: which is to know the hearts of those that pray vnto them, without the which no prayer vnto them were lawfull or iustifiable: seeing he must know the hearts, to vnderstand the vnspeakeable grones of his suters, that is meet for his honour. Further, to put a difference between the mediation of Christ and the Saints departed, they say that they may not say to Christ, pray for vs, as they say vnto the Saints, pray for vs, but to him they say, haue mercie on vs. But out of what well draw they this water? but out of the filthy puddle and sinke of their owne braine. For why may we not pray vnto Christ that hee would pray for vs; seeing it is his office to pray for vs, we being priuiledged to call vpon him to doe his office: it followeth, that our warrant is also good to pray to him to pray for vs. Againe, whereof he hath giuen vs promise, thereof wee may make request vnto him: it being then euident by expresse words, that he hath promised to pray for vs, it followeth that we may call for his promise. These fellowes make out cries against M. Calvin, as if he should ouerthrow the intercession of Christ, because he taketh away his praying vpon knees in heaven, as not fitting for the glorious estate whereto he is receiued. But the Iesuites by these words at once, haue made a cleane dispatch of the intercession of Christ, that he should neither kneeling, standing nor sitting, pray for vs: for seeing we may desire him to doe whatsoeuer by his office of mediation hee hath promised to doe: it being (by the Iesuites diuinitie) vnlawfull for vs to pray Christ to pray for vs: it followeth, that it is no part of his office to pray for vs. Secondly, in their owne distinction they are ouertaken: for they doe not onely pray the Saints to pray for them, that God would haue mercie vpon them; otherwise, why call they the virgin Mary the mother of grace and mercy? why do they pray her that she would protect them from their enemie, and receiue them in the houre of death: and this you doe, not onely to the blessed virgin, but vnto that Saintlesse Saint and sinfull Sould iour of the Pope, Thomas Becket: whereby it is euident that you make the intercession of Saints larger then that of our Sauiour Christ, seeing to him it is not (as you say) lawfull to say, pray for vs, but onely, haue mercy vpon vs: Whereunto the Saints are found, partly in your doctrine, and partly in your practise, to giue both.

And withall it appeareth how frivolous and leud your other reason is, that we may as well deny you to desire the faithfull vpon earth to pray for you, as to deny you to pray to Saints: for first of all, it is one thing to desire one to pray for me, and another thing to make prayer to him to pray for me; one thing to pray him in religious and deuoute worship, and another to pray him in brotherly and Christian loue and fellow feeling of our wants. Secondly, it is one thing to desire one that is present by me and heareth me, and another to pray to him that is by infinite space removed from me. And therefore you should haue compared our refusall to pray unto Saints departed unto the condemning of him, which being in Pauls Church at London, should cry to him that is in Peters Church at Rome, that he would pray to God for him. Thirdly, we haue warrant to desire our brethren here to pray for us, and they haue calling so to do: which because you haue not in your prayers to the Saints departed, the difference of the one and the other appeareth: for of him that shall set himselfe as middle man between God and his people, the Prophet Ieremy requireth that he haue a commandement from the Highest, which we are sure you cannot shew for the Saints departed. Last of all, although we desire our brethren upon earth to pray for us, yet we do not pray them to helpe us in the things for the attainement whereof we desire their prayers unto God: where you desire the Saints departed not onely to pray for you, but to giue you the things you haue need of. The place of Moses is answered before, August. contra Epist. Parmen. lib. 2. c. 8. is foolishly shifted, and remaineth still to their shame; for first, our praying one for another here upon earth standing well with the mediation of Christ Augustine opposeth unto another Mediator amongst men by whom our prayers should be accepted: where as they say, that both may well stand, yea proue the one by the other, that we may as well pray to the Saints departed, as desire those that are aliue to pray for us. Againe Augustine holdeth that the Apostles are not Mediators, because so there should be many Mediators, iudging it to be an absurd thing, that there should be many Mediators, by whom our prayers should be made acceptable: Where the Iesuites take it for no absurdity to haue many Mediators, so that our Saviour Christ be the chiefe.

Ier. 30. 21.

Vpon Act. 7 37.

Last of all, how childishly they auoide this place of Augustine, by saying, that they make not the Saints Mediators as Christ, in making them God and man redeemer of the Church with his bloud: Considering that he condemneth Parmenian, for making a Bishop Mediator. Vnlesse therefore the Iesuites will say that Parmenian esteemed the Bishop to be God and Man which by his own bloud did redeeme his Church: It is evident that the processe that Augustine used against the heretick Parmenian lieth still against them. He noteth also the humblenesse of Iohn, in that he doth not make himselfe a Mediator. But what humility is that in Iohn not to make himselfe such a Mediator as is both God and man Which hath redeemed the Church? Which should haue been extream arrogancie, not onely in a sinfull man, but in the purest Angell or Saint in heaven.

Contra epist. Parmen. l. 2 cap. 8. Ibid. & in Ioh. Tractat. 1.

In the place of Cyril, lib. 12. Thesaur. cap. 10. they play the Sophisters, deceiving their Reader with the equivocation of the word Mediator, which Cyril putteth for a Minister, not onely in that he prayeth for the people, but in that he also preacheth unto them. And in this sense of Mediation hee saith, that Paul used mediation, when he saith, Wee desire you for Christ that you would be reconciled to God: And otherwhere he affirmeth that the Church commendeth the Martyrs, but hath no custome to worship them. Bernard, and the second Councell of Nice are partiall witnesses.

RHEM. 5. [12. I permit not.] In times of licentiousnesse, libertie, and heresie, women are much given to reading, disputing, chatting, and iangling of the holy Scriptures yea and to teach also if they might be permitted, but S. Paul vtterly forbiddeth it, and the Greeke Doctors vpon this place note that the woman taught but once, that was when after her reasoning with Satan she perswaded her husband to transgression, and so shee vndid all mankind. And in the Ecclesiasticall writers wee finde, that women haue been great promoters of euery sort of heresie (whereof see a notable discourse in S. Hierome ep ad Ctesiph. cont. Pelag. c. 2.) which they would not haue done, if they had according to the Apostles rule, followed pietie and good works, and liued in silence and subiection to their husbands.

Verse. 1. A faithfull saying: If a man desire a Bishops office, he desireth I a good worke.

The great charge, and great merite of Ecclesiasticall function.

RHEM. 2. [1. A good worke.] Nothing (saith S. Augustine) in this life, and specially in this time, is easier, pleasanter, or more acceptable to men, then the office of a Bishop, Priest, or Deacon, if the thing be done onely for fashion sake and flatteringly: but nothing before God more miserable, more lamentable, more damnable. Againe, There is nothing in this life, and specially at this time, harder, more laborious, or more dangerous, then the office of a Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon: but before God nothing more bleſſed, if they warre in ſuch ſort as our Captaine commandeth Aug. ep. 184.

The Apoſtle vnder the name of Biſhop, inſtructeth Prieſts alſo.

RHEM. 3. [2. A Biſhop.] That which is here ſpoken of a Biſhop (becaule the words Biſhop and Prieſt in the new Teſtament be often taken indifferently for both or either of the twaine, as is noted in another place) the ſame is meant of euery Prieſt alſo: though the qualities here required, ought to be more ſingular in the Biſhop, then in the Prieſt, according to the difference of their degrees, dignities and callings.

[2. Of one wife.] Certaine Biſhops of Vigilantius ſect (whether vpon falſe conſtruction of this text, or through the filthineſſe of their fleſhly luſt) would take none to the Clergie, except they would be married firſt, not beleeuing (ſaith S. Hierome aduerſ. Vigilant. c. 1.) that any ſingle man liueth chaſtly, ſhewing how holy they liue themſelues, that ſuſpect ill of euery man, and will not giue the Sacrament (of Order) to the Clergie, vnleſſe they ſee their wiues haue great bellies, and children walling at their mothers breaſts. Our Proteſtants though they be of Vigilantius ſect, yet they are ſcarce come ſo farre, to command euery Prieſt to be married. Neuertheleſſe they miſlike them that will not marrie, ſo much the worſe, and they ſuſpect ill of euery ſingle perſon in the Church, thinking the gift of chaſtitie to bee very rare among them, and they do not onely make the ſtate of marriage equall to chaſte ſingle life, with the Heretike Ioninian, but they are bold to ſay ſometimes, that the Biſhop or Prieſt may doe his duetie and charge better married then ſingle: expreſly againſt S. Paul who affirmeth that the vnmaried

S. Paules place (of one wife) excluderh Bigamos from holy Orders.

RHEM. 5. The Apoſtle then, by this place we now treate of, neither commandeth, not counſeleth, nor would haue Biſhops or Prieſts to marry, or ſuch onely to be receiued as haue been married: but, that ſuch as haue been married (ſo it were but once, and that to a virgine,) may bee made Biſhop or Prieſt which is no more then an inhibition that none hauing been twiſe married or being Bigamus, ſhould be admitted to that holy Order. And this expoſition onely is agreeable to the practiſe of the whole Church, the definition of ancient Councels, the doctrine of all the fathers without exception, and the Apoſtles tradition. Which ſenſe S. Chryſoſtome wholy followeth vpon the Epiſtle to Titus (though here hee follow not wholy the ſame ſenſe, Hom. 2. in Ep. ad Tit.) S. Ambroſe alſo vpon this place, and moſt plainely and largely in his 82. Epiſt. poſt med, giuing the cauſe why Bigamus cannot be made a Biſhop or Prieſt in fine affirmeth, not onely the Apoſtle but the holy Councell of Nice to haue taken order that none ſhould be receiued into the Clergie, that were twiſe married, S. Hieronym ep. 83. ad Oceanum. c. 2. & ep. 2. c. 18. & ep. 11. c. 2. expreſly writeth that the Clergie is made of ſuch as haue had but one wife, at leaſt after Baptiſme: for he thought that if one were often married when he was yet no Chriſtian, he might notwithſtanding be ordered Biſhop or Prieſt. S. Leo ep. 87 addeth further, and proueth that the man is counted bigamus, and not the husband of one wife, in reſpect of holy Orders, not onely if hee hath had two wiues, but if his own wife were not a virgine. Which being obſerued in the high Prieſts of the old Law, muſt needs be much rather kept now. See alſo the Booke de Eccleſiaſticis dogmatibus c. 72. in S. Auguſtines works.

RHEM. 6. And by theſe few you may ſee how ſhamefully the ſtate of the new hereticall Clergie of our time is fallen from the Apoſtolike and all the fathers practiſe and doctrine herein. Who do not onely take men once or twiſe married before, but (which was neuer heard of before in any perſon or part of the Catholike Church) they marrie after they be Biſhops or Prieſts, once, twiſe, & as often as their luſts require. Whereas it was neuer lawfull in Gods Church to marrie after Holy Orders, Neither is there one authenticall example thereof in the world. For thoſe whom Nice Councell ſpeaketh, were married before, and were but tolerated onely to vſe their wiues, the fathers in the ſame Councell prouiding expreſly at the ſame time, that none from thence foorth ſhould marrie after they came to holy Orders, and that according to the ancient tradition of the Church, as Socrates and Sozomenus declare in moſt plaine words. See Suidas in the word Paphnutius. * And in what countrie ſoeuer they haue been permitted to haue carnall dealing euen with their wiues whom they had before, it was not according to the exact rule of the Apoſtles and Churches tradition, by which all that be in holy Orders, ſhould wholy abſtain, not onely from marying, but euen from their wife before married. Whereof thus writeth S. Epiphanius hareſ. 59. cont. Catharos. The holy preaching of God receiueth not, after Chriſt, them that marrie againe after their wiues departure, by reaſon of the great dignitie and honour of Prieſthood. And this the holy Church of God obſerueth with all ſincerity. Yea ſhe doth not receiue the once married perſon that yet vſeth his wife and begetteth children: but onely ſuch an one ſhe taketh to be Deacon, Prieſt, Biſhop, or Subdeacon, as abſtaineth from his own wife, or is a widowe, ſpecially where the holy canons be ſincerely kept. But thou wilt ſay vnto me, that in certain places Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons, do yet beget children (belike this holy father neuer heard of any Biſhop that did ſo, and therefore he leaueth out that order which he named with the other in the former part of the ſentence) but that is not done according to order and rule, but according to mans minde, which by time ſlacketh, and for the great multitude (of Chriſtian people) when they were not found ſuffi cient for the miniſterie, &c. the reſt of his wordes be goodly for that purpoſe.

* They that were made Prieſts of married men abſtained frō their wiues

Marriage of Prieſts is contrary to the ancient Canons.

Euſebius

Eusebius also Euang. demonst. lib. 1. c. 9. saith, that such as bee consecrated to the holy ministerie should abstaine wholy from their wiues which they had before. S. Hierome Apolog. ad Pammach. c. 8. proueth, that such of the Apostles as were married, did so, and that the Clergie ought to do the same by their example. Yea in his time hee testifieth (Cont. Vigil. c. 1. that they did liue single in manner through the world, euen in the East Church also. What, saith he, shall the Churches of the East do, what they Egypt, of the See Apostolike: which take to the Clergie, either virgins, or the continent and unmarried, or such as if they haue wiues, ceasse to be husbands? And againe he saith in Apolog. ad Pamag. c. 3. (See also c. 8.) If married men like not well of this, let them not be angry with me, but with the holy Scripture, with all Bishops Priests, Deacons, and the whole company of Priests and Leuits, that knew they cannot offer sacrifices if they vse the act of marriage. S. Augustine de Adult. Coniug. li. 2. c. 20. maketh it so plaine a matter that all Priests should liue chaste, that he writeth, that euen such as were forced (as many were in the primitiue Church) to be of the Clergie, were bound to liue chaste, yea & did it with ioy & felicity, never complaining of these necessities, & intolerable burdens, or impossibility of living chast, as our fleshly company of new Ministers & Superintendents do now that think it no life without women; much like to S. Augustl. before his conuersion, when he was yet a Manichee, who (as himselfe reporteth Conf. li 6. c. 3.) admiring in Ambrose all other his incomparable excellencies, yet counted all his felicities lesse, because he lacked a woman, without which hee thought (in time of his infidelitie) no man could liue. But after his conuersion thus he said to God of S. Ambrose: what hope he had, and against the tentation of his excellencie what sight he felt, or rather what a comfort and solace in tribulation, and his secret mouth which was within in his heart, what sauourie and sweete ioyes it tasted of thy bread, neither could I conceiue, neither had I tried.

CARTVV. 4. [4 Of one wife.] If there be no medicine to heale this false tongue, the Lord will pull it forth: for what impudency is this to say that we are scarce come so farre as to command every Priest to be married: as if we commanded some to be married, and were almost come to this, to command all. The untruth whereof is such, that although in ordaining of Ministers with us, the question be no twhether he be married or unmarried, but whether he be godly learned or no: yet it falleth so out, that of forty that are otdained unto the Ministery, scarce one is maried at the time of his entrance thereinto. The like impudency in saying that we mislike them that will not marry, and suspect them of incontinency, who both loue and reverence divers of our brethren, which unto other their gifts of singular godlinesse and learning, are blessed also with a speciall gift herein, and reverence them also euen for it. That some men may better exercise their Ministerie married then unmarried, we say indeed, and proue it, against which, beside vaine babblings and repetitions, the Iesuites can say nothing. Look the answer of Paul 1. Cor. 7. in the proper place.

The Iesuites having in their first section pulled up a thistle of Vigilantius, in their second set down a thorne of their own, that the Apostle by a Bishop husband of one wife, meaneth him that having had but one lawful wife, and that a maid, hath none at all at the time when he is made Bishop. And this thorne they haue pricked down without any (not onely proofe, but) colour or pretence of proofe, either out of the place it selfe, or circumstances thereof, propping it up by practise of the Church. definition of Councels, exposition of Fathers, and tradition, of the truth whereof we shall see afterward. In the meane season, let the Reader note what manner of doctrine this is like to be which hath no manner of assistance of the place whereout it is raised, what manner of fruit this tree is like to beare which draweth nothing of the foyson and fat of the soyle where it groweth: yea let him mark how the place refuseth to beare it, and as it were vomiteth and casteth it out. The truth therefore of the Apostles meaning is, that as hee neither requireth or commandeth a Bishop, whether Pastor or Doctor, to bee married: so hee will haue him to bee such as (if he be married) haue but one onely lawfull wife. The reason of which commandement is, that it was a common thing, both amongst the Iewes and Gentiles, to haue many wiues at once, which as it ought to be farre from every Christian, so especially from him that is to be a patterne to the Church of all chaste behauiour. For unlesse it be in the poynt of ability to teach, and of beeing a green plant, the Apostle here requireth nothing of a Bishop, but that which hee requireth of every faithfull man, and professour of the Gospell: onely his meaning is, that the common vertues of all Christian men, should be after a speciall sort in a Minister of the word, in whom a dimme light of godly conversation would be more hurtfull then darknesse in another which is but a private man. And therefore it appeareth, that to affirme that a Bishop may haue but one wife in his life, and that a maid, is (by consequence) to affirme the same of all Christian men. Looke Theodoret Chrisost. homil. 10. in 1. Timot. also Ieroms upon Titus beside the practise of Iewes and Gentils, noted in holy and profane writings.

Secondly, they offer open violence unto the Apostles words: for where hee saith that a Bishop must be the husband of one wife in the present time, using both here and to Titus, the verbe substantiue of the present time, they turne his speech as if hee should say, that the Bishop must bee such a one as hath been the husband of one wife in the time past. And by the same reason it must bee so turned in the rest of the Bishoply vertues which the Apostle requireth, as that such a one must be chosen as hath been a sober learned man, before he came to his Bishopricke, but not so when he entreth upon the charge of the Church: then which when nothing can be more absurd & rediculous, yet is it so tied to the Iesuites exposition of the words in hand, as either they must both enter together, or stand backe together. And this cavell is yet further confuted, in that the Apostle speaking of the Church Widow, because she ought to be chosen which had no husband, useth a word of the time past. Last of all, speaking of the inferiour Ministers, hee saith, Let them be the husbands of one wife. 1. Tim. 5. γεγονυῖα. ἑνὸς ἀνδρὸς.

Thirdly, let the Reader obserue how the Scripture, or the holy Ghost in Scripture, foreseeing this Popish debarre of Ministers from their wiues, hath like a cunning warriour which both manneth and otherwise fortifieth that place most at the which he knoweth the hotteſt and moſt forcible aſſault ſhall be given, by theſe words, it is a ſure or vndoubted ſaying or doctrine, as it were by a vawmure or trench, caſt about, and fenced amongſt other Biſhops qualifications, this alſo, that it is lawfull for him

1. Cor. 7. to haue a wife: it might ſeeme that it had been ſufficient for the iuſtifying of the marriage of Miniſters, to haue taught generally that every man is to haue his owne wife, and every woman her owne

Moreover, which it never doth (to our remembrance in any other eſtate of men) he doth particularly ſet forth the qualities of the Biſhops and other inferiour Church officers wiues. And who is ſo blinde as not to ſee that he doth it to the end that on the one ſide the godly converſation of their wiues, ſhould garniſh and ſet forth their miniſterie; on the other ſide, that their light and un-matronly behaviour ſhould not cauſe the Miniſtery of the Goſpell to be evill ſpoken of.

Now to your reaſons: And firſt touching the tradition of the Apoſtles it hath been ſhewed to haue been written down ſo farre as it is neceſſary to be followed. And therefore they can haue no benefit of that; and beſide that, if there were any ſuch tradition, it could onely induce and not inforce: it is alſo euident that it is falſe, forſomuch as ſo it ſhould follow, that their vnwritten tradition ſhould bee contrary to that which is written. Concerning the practiſe of the whole Church, definition of Councels, expoſition of all the Fathers without exception, if they had not acquainted us with theſe foreheads and impudent ſpeeches, it would aſtoniſh us to heare that there could be found men, which without ſome viſard of truth, could ſpeake ſuch lewd and lowd untruths. They iuſtifie Zedechiah,
1. King. 22. with the reſt of his foure hundred Prophets in whom Sathan was a lying ſpirit to deceiue Achab:
24. for they were impudently confident by lying in that which was to come, whereof the event in common reaſon might haue fallen out as well for them as againſt them. But Sathan much more impudently lieth by thoſe men which dare avow the contrary of that which is already done and witneſſed by ſo many ancient and written teſtimonies, which ſpeake from their hearts in this matter, without partialitie either to them or us, whom they never knew. This hath partly been ſeen before, upon Math. 8.14. and partly will further apeeare in the examination of their witneſſes. And firſt of all concerning Chryſoſtom. hom. 2. in epiſt. ad Titum: where let the Reader in the entry marke how the Ieſuites are diſtreſſed for want of teſtimonies of the Fathers in this place, which take his whom Chriſoſt. they are conſtrained to confeſſe to ſtand againſt them in this very place for the which they would borrow credit from, wee with as good right alledge Chryſoſtom againſt you, as you againſt us. And is not Chryſoſtom of as great authoritie when he is alledged by us againſt you, as when he is cited of you againſt us? howbeit you abuſe your Reader ſhamefuly, even in the place which you cite: for if he vary from himſelfe in the former place upon Timothy, in that hee would haue a Biſhop never haue but
hom. 2. in may haue the uſe of his wife, ſaying his meaning is to ſtop the mouth of all heretickes which condemne marTit. riage, ſhewing that there is no vice in that thing, yea that it is ſo pretious, that together with it, one may euen be preferred vnto a Biſhops chaire. And the Scholiaſt following him, who underſtood Chryſoſtom as well as the Ieſuits, affirmeth likewiſe that it is ſpoken againſt the heretickes, condemning marriage, and that men Oecommenius together with marriage may haue the ouerſight of a Biſhoprike, where beſide the evident words, who in cap. 1. Tit. ſeeth not that it is ſmall praiſe unto marriage, if either the Biſhop being married, were commanded to abſtaine from the uſe of it, or were forbidden to enter into it, if he were before unmarried. This would not cloſe up the mouth of Heretikes, but open them: this were not to diſarme them, but to put a weapon into their hands to ſtrike at marriage withall. Adde hereunto the iudgement of Theophilact, another of Chryſoſtomes Schollers, who ſaith. If a Biſhop marry a wife, let him be the husband of one wife, and not many; yea you ſlander Chryſoſtom ſhamefully, in iurmiſing him to differ from himſelfe in this μὴ ἀπὸ λύων poynt: for it appeareth in the ſame place which you alledge, that by forbidding a Biſhop to haue two wiues, hee meaneth he ſhould not haue two at once, the one put away, or ſtepping aſide from him: for thus he ſaith, That he which is found not to haue borne good will to his wife that hath departed, or ſtepped aſide from him, how can he be a meet ruler of the Church of God: where beſide that the words note a woman not dead, but through unkinde uſage departed from her husband, the reaſon is to bee obſerued: for you know (ſaith he) that although the lawes ſhould permit (in ſuch a caſe) a ſecond marriage, yet that matter is ſubiect to many offences: whereby it is manifeſt, that Chryſoſtom in beeing unwilling that a miniſter ſhould marry againe, his wife departing from him: doth euidently declare that he was willing that both he ſhould enioy his wife, if ſhe went not from him, and marry another if ſhe died. Laſt of all, where he giveth to vnderſtand, that Lawes doe not permit ſuch a ſecond marriage, contrary to the Latine tranſlation, that affirmeth that they did permit it: the ſame circumſtance doth evidently declare what manner of ſecond marriage Chryſoſtom doth affirme to be unlawfull for a Biſhop. For Theodoret expreſly ſetteth down, that the Emperours did forbid, that men might not haue two wiues at once:

once: whereof it necessarily followeth, that the second marriage that Chrysostom thought unlawfull for a Bishop was to take a second wife his first wife being still aliue.

Touching Ambrose in the Margent alledged of hauing and not getting children, he is flat against them: for he saith not that he would shut him out from having part in marriage, for that were about the law of the commandement, but that he should keepe the grace of his waiting by a matrimoniall chastitie. Whereby it appeareth that he permitteth a holy vse of their vessels, between themselues onely. Neither again doth he prouoke them to beget children in their Priesthood by his Apostolicall authority. And therefore as he is directly against them, so here he hath nothing against us, which did never say that a Minister must needs by the authoritie of the Apostle, beget children. Ambr. Ep. 62.

In the other place, Epist 82. (if they allow his iudgement) that it is not meete for a Bishop to marry, let them withall remember, that they take also that he saith of condemning simply and without exception second marriage. His reasons are therfore to bee considered, whereof one is, that the Priests were forbidden the vse of wiues in the service of the Temple. And therefore the ministers which ought alwayes to be attendant upon the Church, should never haue the vse of a wife. As if our places wherein we meet for Gods service, were to be compared with the Temple, which are rather to bee likened unto their Synagogues, in which the Levits that taught were never barred from company with their wiues.

Secondly, by the same strength of reason that they may driue ministers from their wiues, they may also depriue them of all vse of wine, which was aswell forbidden as the other, they may also shut them vp in the Church neuer to depart from thence to their houses: for the Priests that serued in the Temple were by Law fastned vnto it, not to depart from it, vntill they had ended their turne: whereof the reason was, that they had both morning and euening sacrifices to bee offered, a fire continually to be nourished, lights in the night to be lightned, and kept light, vessels in great number, and of greater price to be kept in the temple, and diuers gates to be shut and opened. The other reason is, that Paul commandeth the common people to abstain from their wiues that they may pray. And therefore the ministers duety being to pray alwayes, it followeth that he must alwayes want his wife. But it should be vnderstood that Paul commandeth aswell abstinence from meate as from wife: Wherefore in one and the same right they may aswell command the ministers alway to fast, as to barre them alwayes of their wiues. Beside that the Apostle enioyneth that abstinence not so much to lengthen the prayers, as to strengthn the hands of Christians and to make them feruent in prayer. Last of all it is aswell commanded to the people to pray alwayes as to the ministers, which commandement when it hindereth not the people from the lawfull vse of marriage, neither can it haue any such effect in the minister. Albeit Ambrose in saying of this that a Priest must contemne that which is lawfull, confesseth that it is lawfull for a minister to marrie, where you hold it for a thing vnlawfull. Luk. 1. 8. 9 23. 1. Cor. 7. 5. 1. Thes. 5. 17.

Iroome hath been answered who although hee hath been somewhere too iniurious and outragious against the marriage of ministers, yet somewhere (as hath been shewed) he is more equall, who also vpon these words, a Bishop must be the husband of one wife, affirmeth that there were certen that expounded these words, let the Bishop be the husband of one wife, that a Bishop might not haue two wiues, at once. And in this very Epistle ad Oceanū. which they alledge, doth strengthen the same interpretation, not only alledging the example of a Bishop that was twise married and that without contrariuing the truth of this place; but further affirmeth that the whole world wes full of such ordinations, not onely of Elders and inferiour orders, but also of Bishops. Theodoretus also reciting the iudgment of diuers, who interpreted these words of Paul not to forbid a Bishop from marrying two wiues one after the death of another, but of hauing more wiues at once after the manner of the Iewes and Grecians, affirmeth that all things considered they did well interpret it Aug. de bono coniugii c. 18. doth not so much vphold them in his mislike of the second marriage of the Bishop, as he doth pull them down, in saying that a Bishop by being the husband of one wife, is a Sacrament or a signe of Christ and his Church: for unlesse it be lawfull for a Bishop to marry, how may he be counted a figure of Christ and of his Church in the point of the spirituall marriage: as for the reasons he useth to proue that a Bishop may not marry twice, they are such, as you (by your concealing them) do bewray the weaknesse and feebleneese of. The other Authors alledged in this Section, are partly counterfeite, as all know, and some of their own sect confesse frankly; and partly partiall: whereby it may easily appeare how shameleese the Iesuites are, which alledging that all the Fathers without exception do confirme their interpretation, finde not so much as one of those which are worthy of credite to confirme the chiefe part of their interpretation, which is touching the unlawfulnes of a Ministers wife. Hier. ep. ad Tit. Hier. ep ad Ocean.

And touching the next point of their interpretation, that he may not haue two wiues one after the death of another, they bring but two Ambrose and Augustine, which do constantly affirme it, where we haue Chrysostome and Theodoret, with divers others, which lived in, and before theirs and Ieromes times, which plainely and cleerely teach it to be understood as we do, that a Bishop should not haue two wiues at once. And not to speake of Ierome in this point (because heerein he is not alwaies dwelling in one and the same iudgement) he is a plaine witnesse that the practise of the whole Church could not lead them unto the interpretation they haue followed, seeing the world was full of examples, not onely of Elders and Deacons, but of Bishops that were twise married. And therefore their guesse that they esteeme Epiphanius never to haue heard of any Bishop which kept his wife with his Bishoprick, is apparantly false; seeing there being in his time so many Bishops in the world which did so, he could not be ignorant of them, whereunto agreeth the testimonie of Tertullian, who after his fall, obiecteth as a reproach unto the Catholique and true Churches that their Bishops were twice married: yet are the Iesuites not ashamed to affirme that there is thereof not one onely authenticall example in the world.

Touching the Councell of Nice, it hath been shewed before upon Math. 8. that it standeth for us against them in part, Socrates and Sozomene report of it that way; yet their reasons do proue that the second marriage is not forbidden as unlawfull, seeing they pronounce the act of marriage Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 11. Sozom. 1. 6. 23.

to be chastity, and further call it a new law that did forbid the Bishops to keepe company with their wiues. And last of all bring the place to the Hebrewes that marriage is honourable amongst all men to proue that the Bishops which were married, might enioy their wiues, which the Papists will in no sort allow. And if that place do proue that a Bishop may haue one wife as well as other men, it followeth also by the same reason, that it being vpon the ground of that place, lawfull for a Lay widow to marry againe, that it is as lawfull for an Ecclesiasticall widow to do the same. And therefore howsoeuer Epiphanius heres.59.contr.Cathar. speaketh of this matter, he can neither countervaile the authority of the manifest testimonie of the Scripture, Fathers and Councell of Nice, which were before: neither hath he any such counterpoyse of authority, that is able to weigh with the authority that followed him. As first of the generall Councell holden at Constantinople, of 227 graue Fathers, which Balsamon the Greek Scholiast vpon this Councell, sheweth to haue beene confirmed by presence of the Bishop of Romes Legates. This Councell ordained, that where the Romane Church had decreed against the Marriage of Ministers; they following the old Canon of the Apostolicall, exquisite, or exact order, ordained that from that time forward, the matrimoniall dwelling together of sacred persons lawfully married should be of force. So that when Epiphanius saith, that it is not according to the exact or sincere rule of the Canon of the Scripture, the Councell affirmeth that it is according to the exquisite or precise rule of the Apostolicall order. Where we see also that as Socrates had before called it a new law, which did shut out Bishops, and other sacred persons from the company of their wiues: So this Councell agreeably saith, that it followed the old Canon in permitting to the Ministers the vse of a lawfull wife: And that not onely to Ministers already entred, but vnto those that were to enter. And hauing before spoken of Elders, and Deacons, and Sub-deacons, after in the end hee mentioneth none but Deacons and Priests: Whereby it is euident how groundlesse a suspition it is of the Iesuites, which vpon that that Epiphanius mentioneth not Bishops in the second place as he had done in the former, affirme that it is like that hee neuer heard of any Bishop, which kept his wife with his Bishoprick, it being an ordinarie thing with Writers after they haue once named all the particulars they speake of, to content themselues with naming of some. And thus the Councell spake, when they spake from their heart, and as the holy Scripture put in their mouthes. Howbeit in the same Councell, the better to content the Church of Rome they professe that they would walk a middle way between their iudgement, and the Romish Church opinion; And therefore decreed that all the holy orders vnder a Bishop, as Priests, Deacons and Sub-deacons, should not be separated from their wiues; yet are the reasons which are vsed, as fauourable for the Bishops continuance with his wife, as for the rest of the Church Ministers: As first, that it is meet that the old Canon of the Apostolicall perfection should be kept: Secondly, least iniurie should be offered to the marriage which God ordained and consecrated with his own presence: Thirdly, for that it was prouided by expresse word of God, that that which God had ioyned no man should seperate: Last of all, that marriage (as the Apostle teacheth) is honourable amongst all, and the bed vndefiled. Againe, the Canon which they call the Apostles, ordaining that none that is at once entangled with two marriages, or hath a harlot shall haue any degree of Priesthood; doth grant, that hauing but one wife at once, hee may be admitted to the Church Ministerie, for both the words note him that hath two wiues at once, and the composition of them with a harlot doth euidently declare it: for it is not to be deemed that the Canon, whosoeuer was authour of it, would haue compared a man that had had two lawfull wiues, with one which had a harlot.

δυο γαμους κεφαλαιωσις.

Moreouer, it is manifest that the reason of that Canon which Epiphanius speaketh of, that Ministers should not bee married, was not (as long as there was some reasonable pureneſſe) in regard of Marriage it selfe, but in respect of increasing the wealth and pompe of the Church, as may appeare manifestly by Pelagius, Gregorie the great his predecessor, who tooke a caution of a Bishop that he should leaue nothing to his wife, children, &c. (except that which he had at the time of his entry into the Bishoprick) but that whatsoeuer he should purchase in the Bishoprick, he should leaue it to the Church. This is yet more manifest by the Emperours decree, wherein hee repealed this Ecclesiasticall Canon, as contrary to the word of God and good reason: For the Decree marueileth how some were not affraid to abrogate the holy and diuine Lawes, which did prescribe that a Bishop hauing children, might be admitted to a Bishoprick, whereas they ordained the contrary, belike for that his affection towards his children would be a hinderance to the Churches goods.

Gratian dist.28.c. de Syracus.

Leo philosophus novell. 2.

Last of all, that this Canon crept in long after the Apostles times it is euident: for Athanasius saith, that there were many of the Bishops that were not married, and that the Monkes had children, as on the other side, Bishops were fathers, and Monkes sought not after children: For (saith hee) it is lawfull, and not forbidden so to do, but that every one may as he list enter this strict.

Athan.ad. Dracontium.

Euseb. prepar. Euang. lib.1 c.9. hath no such thing following the Greek Section of Chapters: And if he haue, yet it is like that his meaning is as the Councell of Constantinople, which ordained that they should abstaine from the vse of marriage at that time onely when they came to their Ministerie: For otherwise that Eusebius was of that iudgement that a Bishop might not marry, there is no likely-hood, who rehearseth out of Clement with liking, the Apostles married, and begetting children, and also maketh mention of a Bishop that fled with his wife from the persecutor, and marketh Montanus with a black coale for dissolving Marriages.

Euseb.eccles. hist.li.3.cap. 30. & lib.6 c.4. & li.5. cap. 27.

Of Ierome it hath been shewed, how notwithstanding his inordinate affection to a sole life, yet through the euidence and light of truth flashing, as it were, in his eyes, whether he would or no, carrieth as well bread in the one hand to feed the truth, as a stone in the other to throw against it.

Augustin. de adulter.coniug.lib.2.cap.20. maketh flat against them, where they haue shamefully falsified him, in steed that hee saith, That the Ministers were taken against their wils to beare the burthen of a solitarie life, make him to say that they were taken against their wils to serue in the Ministerie, which can haue no sense in that place of Augustine: for speaking of certaine Lay-men, that in the separation of their wiues, thought that they might haue more liberty or licence then their wiues might haue in their separation from their husbands; he propoundeth the Ministers, which had the same burden laid upon them of a voluntary life, but the burden of the Ministery being never laid upon Lay men, it followeth that the Iesuites haue falsified Augustine. It is also false, that men were taken into the ministery against their will, especially for the most part. There were some most excellent personages, which partly in too much loue of learning and applying their studies, and partly in too great hatred of striving with the untowardnesse and frowardnesse of the world, could not bee without great and importunate perswasions, drawen to the Church ministery; but this is nothing to maintaine this corruption. So that it appeareth evidently, that Augustine counted it a burden, and put upon them against their willes, when they entred the ministerie with condition of not marrying: neither maketh it any thing for the healing of this falsification, that he saith, that Ambroses sole life was sweet and comfortable to him: for it might well be sweet unto Ambrose, that hauing the gift of continencie, chose so to remaine; which must needs be a burden (as Augustine termeth it) to those upon whose backes it was tied against their willes. And how sweet it was to some, that seeking and labouring after it, could not finde it, the wofull example of Origen doth declare. Besides all this, it is said that this burden was for the most part, laid upon the ministers backes. Also, that many went under this burden, whereof it is evident that this burden of sole life was not laid alwayes, nor vpon all Ministers.

Tertullian lib. 1. ad uxorem, they may be ashamed to alledge, who doth there condemne all second marriages, as that which is against holinesse, and therefore no maruell if he would not haue ministers to marry twice. Whereupon also in another place to proue that Priests cannot marry but one wife, he citeth a place out of the Numbers (as your Pope Innocent doth out of Leviticus) which is yet to finde, and so will be to the worlds end, Let my Priest marry no more; and thereby would proue, that forsomuch as the Priests may marry but once, therefore Lay men may marry no oftner: so that as Tertullian is against the truth herein, so is he directly against you, whileſt hee maketh one and the same rule of marriage as well in the Ministery as in the Laitie. Tom. 3. concil. Epis.

Cyprian de singul. cleric. is not Cyprian, but a counterfeit, as your owne Pamelius proueth by the witnesse of Morelius, Zundulphus, Lezandus, Antonius, &c. which also is manifest by his whole discourse, wherein his allegations are drawne for the most part from Salancones sentences against adultresses, (as are Ieromes against Iouinian) or from such places as exhort to holinesse of life in mortification of carnall concupiscence, and yet most manifestly in that he alloweth (as your own man confesseth) the cutting of the instrument of generation, flouting the Ministers with the Iewes circumcision, and the Idolaters cutting of themselues. And therefore thinketh with Erasmus, that it is Origens. The Conncell of Nice canon 3. is also falsified: for the Councel doth not forbid the Church Ministers to haue their wiues in their houses, which wee haue shewed to haue condiscended to Paphnutius, that would not haue them separted from their wiues that they had at the time of their entry into their Ministery but onely forbiddeth that they haue no suspicious women beside their wiues. The second Councell of Toledo being about 533. yeares after Christ, and the other following later then it, be not fit to beare witnesse of this matter. Sibi introduxisse extraneam mulierem.

The second Councell of Carthage, cap. 2. is also too late a Councell, but yet as it was ancienter then that of Toledo, so was it lesse corrupt then that of Toledo: for it declareth not Subdeacons, as the other doth: and further also, if the words bee marked, which will that the Bishops, Elders, and Deacons should abstaine even from their wiues; it is manifest that they had wiues, and seemeth that the Councels meaning is, that they should abstaine onely during the time that they administred. The Councell of Neocesarea, condemning the marriage of Elders, condemneth also second marriage of Lay men, and thereby bewray how farre it was from giving the honour unto marriage that it deserveth: beside, that it was but the iudgement of the Bishops of one small and narrow resort. We marvell why they cite the 101. of the Ancyran Councell, which is flat against them: for it affirmeth, that if a Deacon shall at his ordination professe that he will be married, because that they cannot continue sole, that they shall remaine still in the ministery, if they remarry afterward: upon all this the Iesuites impudencie is manifest, that affirme that this single life was generally in all Churches from the Apostles times. And their folly also is evident, which to proue that the single life of Ministers was commended before Siricius times, bring the Councell of Toledo that was after his time, and the second Councell of Carthage that was holden in his time, although it is not the Heretickes saying (as it pleaseth you to call us) onely, but your owne men; which report, that ministers were married before Siricius time. But what should wee speake of the Glosse, when Gratian himselfe in his title of Concording the discordance of the Canons, overcome with ancient testimonies, especially with the manifest light of the sixt Generall Councell, is faine to confesse that the marriage of Ministers which was lawfull in the East Churches, was unlawfull in the West. Is it not (thinke you) well accorded? Cleaue not these things well together? that there should be one faith in the East, and another in the West: that should be holy in the East, that is ungodly in the West: that God should loue that in the East, which he hateth and detesteth in the West: that is, that he should be vnlike himselfe, and more variable then a mutable man, which although he change Countries, yet retaineth the same minde wheresoever he goeth. But not to presse you with the authoritie of the East Churches, (which break all bands of authoritie, both divine and humane) are you such strangers at home, that you know it not to be a question between your Canonists and Schoolemen, whether the single life of Church Ministers be by the law of God, or constitution of the Church, yea not your Schoolmen onely, but which is more, your own Popes Canon confesseth it found to be of the constitution of the Church, and not of the law of God, that those which take holy Orders should be most straightly bound to performe the dutie of Continencie. Wherefore let the indifferent Reader iudge when this Iesuiticall forehead will blush, which in such extreme feebleneſse and impotency of this cause of theirs, doth notwithstanding so confidently make boast of great strength.

RHEM. 7. [6. Not a Neophyte.] That which is ſpoken here properly and principally of the newly baptized (for ſo the word Neophyte doth ſignifie) the fathers extend alſo to all ſuch as be but newly retired from prophane occupations, ciuill gouernement, warfarre, or ſecular ſtudies, of whom good trial muſt be taken before they ought to be preferred to the high dignitie of Biſhops or Prieſts though for ſome ſpeciall prerogatiue and excellencie, it hath in certaine perſons been otherwiſe, as in S. Ambroſe and ſome other notable men. Tertullian (li. de præſcript.) noteth heretickes for their lightnes in admitting euery one without diſcretion to the Clergie. Their Orders (ſaith he) are raſh, light, inconſtant now they place Neophytes, then ſecular men, then our apoſtates, that they may tie them by glory and preferment. Whom with the truth they cannot. No where may a man ſooner proſper and come forewarde, then in the campe of rebels. where to be only, is to deſerue much, therefore one to day a Biſhop, to morrow ſomewhat elſe: to day a Deacon, to morrow lector, that is a Reader: to day a Prieſt, to morrow a lay man, for to lay men alſo they enioyne the function of Prieſts. And S. Heretickes admit all ſorts without exception.

CARTVV. 6. [6. Not a Neophyte] The word ſignifieth, one new planted or graſted into the body of the Church, which (in thoſe of the age of diſcretion, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh heere) was by outward profeſſion of the Goſpel, whereunto from Paganiſme and infidelitie they came. And therefore it is falſe, that they are ſuch onely as were new Baptized, when as thoſe that were yet in catechiſing, before they were receiued to baptiſme, were alſo in this account of greene plants.

Leo ep. 41. cap. 3. Greg. lib. 1. ep. 42.

RHEM. 8. [8. Deacons.] Vnder the name of Deacons are here conteined Subdeacons, as before vnder the name of Biſhop, Prieſts alſo were comprehended, for to thoſe foure pertaineth the Apoſtles precept and order touching one wife, and touching continency and chaſtitie, as by the alleaged Councels and fathers (namely by the words of S. Epiphanius) doth appeare: for they onely be in holy Orders, as ſeruing, by their proper function about the altar and the B. Sacrament in reſpect whereof, the law of chaſtitie pertaineth to them, and not to the foure inferior of Acolyti, Exorciſtæ, Lectores, and Oſtiarii. Who neither by precept nor vow be bound to perpetuall chaſtitie, as the others of the holy and high Orders be bound, both by precept and promiſe or ſolemne aſſent made when they tooke Subdeaconſhip.

The three holy orders onely bound to chaſtity.

The foure inferiour orders not bound to chaſtity.

All theſe degrees and orders to haue been euer ſince Chriſts time in the Church of God, it might be proued by all antiquitie, but for as much as the Apoſtles purpoſe is not here to recken vp all the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchie, it need not to be treated of in this place. But we wiſh the learned to reade the 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. chapters of the 4. Councell of Carthage, whereas S. Auguſtine was preſent: where they ſhall ſee the expreſſe callings, offices, and manner of ordering or creating all the ſaid ſorts, and ſhall well perceiue theſe things to be moſt ancient and venerable. Let them reade alſo Euſebius hiſtorie, the 35. Chapter of the 6. book, where for all theſe orders he reciteth Cornelius epiſtle to Fabius, concerning Nouatus. Likewiſe S. Cyprian, in many places, namely ep. 55. nu. 1. where ſee the notes vpon the ſame, S. Hier. ep. 2. c. 6. Of Subdeacon there is mention in S. Auguſtine ep. 74. & ep. 20. de epiſtolis 22 in edit. Epiph. apud Hier. 60. cap. 1.

All the ſeuen Orders ancient, euen from Chriſt and the Apoſtles time.

CARTVV. 7. [8. Deacons.] By Deacons hee underſtandeth all thoſe officers of the Church which were not occupied in teaching, as it appeareth manifeſtly in that hee requireth no gift of teaching in them. Wherefore as by the Biſhop is underſtood Paſtors and Doctors: ſo by Deacons are comprehended the Elders that governe onely, and teach not, and thoſe that haue care of the poore and ſicke of the Church, which are called by the common name of Deacons. This is euident partly by Peter, who oppoſeth this office and Church Miniſtery unto the ſpeaking or teaching office; but moſt euidently by Paul in another place, where he diuideth this Deaconſhip expreſly into thoſe that governe, and others that haue care of the poore and ſicke. Other Church officers the Scripture and Apoſtolique Church doth not ſo much as giue the leaſt countenance unto, but as meere ſtrangers paſſeth by them without once naming them. And therefore Subdeacons, Acoluthes, Exorciſts, Lectors and Porters are an after-birth, and an untimely fruit of the Churches following the Apoſtles times, and by little and little departing from the ſincerity which they had received from them, untill the myſterie of Anti-chriſt was fulfilled, although it ſeemeth that in the time that Denys, whom they call the Areopagite wrote, there were other orders then Biſhops, Elders, and Deacons, which alſo ſeemeth to haue been ſo in Tertullians time in Africk, albeit in Cyprians time there had crept in ſuch as they heere mention, howbeit of farre other uſe then they are in Poperie: For where in times paſt the Subdeacons helped the Deacons in their Miniſterie to the poore, Acoluthits waited upon the Biſhop whether he went; the Exorciſts happily for ſome time after the Apoſtles caſt out deuils, the Lectors read the Scriptures, the Porters kept out the excommunicate. In Popery, all theſe are either idle names without office, or elſe are turned to play parts in the Comicall meriment of the Romiſh Maſſe. And if a man will conſider the fond and fooliſh ſeruices that theſe officers are uſed unto, it will eaſily be ſeene that they were deuiſed upon ſome rainie day, when men could not go about earnest labour, and that they were rather framed in some forge of an idle and trifling braine, then to haue proceeded out of the bottomelesse breast of Gods most holy and wise Spirit: For is it not (thinke you) worthy to be accounted a holy Ministerie of the Church, whose proper worke is to powre a little water upon the Priests hands when he is at Masse? And do you thinke it a Princely and Divine gift, worthy to be given by Christ, as it were upon the day of his Coronation, unto the sonnes of men, to be able to hold a cruet in his hand, and discretly to powre water upon the Priests fingers, when hee holdeth them out for that purpose? Was it not expedient (thinke you) that our Saviour Christ should leaue the earth and go up to heaven, that thereby we might haue able men to carry Tapers, beare the holy Water-stock, and driue out dogs out of the Church? If therefore the claw onely do often bewray the whole beast; how much more is it easie of the vanity of some principall members of the Popish Church to giue sentence of the trifling and ridiculous estate of the whole. I leaue heere to speake of the variance amongst themselues, whether the Chantor and Psalmist be within the number of their holy Orders or no: And how pittifully they shift of the one side to make no fewer, and of the other side to make no more then iust seven Orders.

Clemens constit. Apost. lib. 8. ca. 15. Aureum speculum Papa vid.

Verse. 15. But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to conuerse | in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, | the pillar and ground of truth.

RHEM. 9. [15, In the house of God.] All the world being Gods, yet the Church onely is his house, the Rector or Ruler whereof at this day, (saith S. Ambrose vpon this place) is Damasus. Where let our louing brethren note well, how clere a case it was then, that the Pope of Rome was not the Gouernour onely of one particular See, but of Christs whole house, Which is the Vniuersall Church, whose Rector this day is Gregory the thirteenth.

S. Ambrose calleth the B. of Rome Rector of the whole Church.

CARTVV. 9. [15 In the house of God,] Here is Ambroses authority brought in to proue that Damasus Bishop of Rome was ruler of the whole Church, and withall a strong affirmation, that it is cleere that he so was taken at that time: Howbeit those that can see cleere can see no such thing, but onely those whose eyes a Popish miste hath dazeled: For first of all it is confessed by your own Louanists, that these Commentaries are none of Ambroses: Secondly, if it be as lawfull for us to translate for our aduantage, as for you, it maketh no more for you then for us: For the words do as well signifie that Damasus was a Ruler of the Church as the Ruler, and so it giues no more to the Bishop of Rome, then to the Bishop of Eugubium, which is a Ruler of the Catholique Church as well as he. And that it ought so to be understood, it is manifest of the circumstance: First, for that Paul (whom this Author expoundeth) useth a like speech unto Timothy saying, that he was to behaue himselfe in the Church, when he meant onely a part of it, namely that of Ephesus, &c. Secondly, in that he saith, at this day, he maketh opposition of that time wherein hee wrote, unto Timothies time wherein Paul wrote, that as he in his time, so Damasus in his, was a ruler of the Church. Thirdly, his reason to proue it, manifestly fauoureth this construction, which is because the Church is where God is truely feared: and therefore it being so then in Damasus Church, it followed, that hee was a ruler of Gods house; yet was there not there at that time, so great feare of God, as was either meete, or was commonly to be found in all other Churches: For albeit in Damasus time the pride of that Church of Rome was not broken forth into any challenge of supremacy over the Church vniuersally, yet how it began then to bud, it may appeare in the fiery contention for that place between Damasus and Vrsacius, or as some call him Vrsinus, which could not be quenched, but by such aboundance of blond of the fauourers of either side, as their bloudlesse and and pale carcases, filled the temples of the Citie.

RHEM. 10. [15. The piller of truth.] This place pincheth all hereticks wonderfully, and so it euer did, and therefore they oppose themselues directly against the very letter and confessed sense of the same, that is cleane contrary to the Apostle, some saying the Church to bee lost or hidden; some to be fallen away from Christ these many ages: some, to bee driuen to a corner onely of the world; some, that it is become a stewes and the seate of Antichrist: lastly the Protestants most plainely and directly, that it may and doth erre, and hath shamefully erred for many hundred yeeres together. And they say, herein like themselues, and for the credite of their own doctrine, which cannot be true in very deed, except the Church erre, euen the Church of Christ, which is here called the house of the liuing God,

The hereticks say directly contrary to the Apostle, that the Church is not the pillar of truth.

But the Church which is the house of God, whose Rector (saith S. Ambrose) in his time was Damasus, and now Gregorie the thirteenth, and in the Apostles time S. Peter, is the piller of truth, the establishment of all veritie: therefore it cannot erre. It hath the spirit of God to leade it into all truth till the worlds end: therefore it cannot erre. It is builded vpon a rocke, hell gates shall not preuaile against it: therefore it cannot erre. Christ is in it till the end of the world, he hath placed in it Apostles, Doctors, Pastors, and Rulers, to the consummation and full perfection of the whole body that in the meane time we be not carried about with euery blast of doctrine: therefore it cannot erre. He hath prayed for it, that it be sanctified in veritie, that the faith of the cheefe Gouernour thereof faile not: it is his house, his spouse, his body, his lot, kingdom & inheritance, giuen him in this world: he loueth it as his own flesh, & it cannot be diuorced or separated from him: therfore it cannot erre. The new Testament, Scriptures, Sacraments, & sacrifice cannot be changed, being the euerlasting dowrie of the Church, continued & neuer rightly occupied in any other Church but in this our Catholick Church, therefore it cannot erre. And therefore all those points of doctrine, faith, and worship, which the Arrians, Manichees, Protestants, Anabaptists, other old or new Heretikes, vntruely thinke to be errors in the Church, be no errours indeed, but themselues most shamefully are deceiued, and so shall be still, till they enter againe into this house of God, which is the piller and ground of all truth: that is to say, not onely it selfe free from all error in faith and religion, but the piller and stay to leane vnto in all doubtes of doctrine, and to stand vpon against all heresies and errors that ill times yeeld, without which there can bee no certaintie nor securitie. And therefore the holy Apostles, and Councels of Nice and Constantinople, made it an article of our Creede, to beleeue the Catholike and Apostolicke Church. Which is, not onely to acknowledge that there is such a Church, as heretickes falsely say: but that which is called the Catholick Church, and known so to be, and communicateth with the See Apostolike, is the Church: and that we must beleeue, heare, and obey the same, as the touchstone, piller, and firmament of truth. For, all this is compriſed in that principle, I beleeue the Catholick Church. And therfore the Conncell of Nice said, I beleeue in the Church that is, I beleeue and trust the same in all things.

The meaning of this article I beleeue the cath. Church πίστιν εἰς τὴν ἁγίαν.

It is the visible Church that is the piller of truth and cannot erre.

RHEM 11. Neither can the Heretickes escape the fleeing from the known visible Church, to the hid congregation or companie of the Predestinate. For that is that false phantasticall apprehension of Wickleffe and his followers. The companie of the Predestinate maketh not any one Society among themselues, many of them being yet vnborn, and many yet Infidels and hereticks, and therfore be not of the one house of God, which is here called, the piller of truth. And those of the Predestinate that be already of the Church, make not a seuerall company from the known Catholick Church, but are baptized, houseled, taught, they liue ad die in the common Catholike visible Church, or else they can neither receiue sacraments, nor saluation. S. Paul instructeth not Timothy how to teach, preach, correct, & conuerse in the invisible societie of the Predestinate, but in the visible house of God. So that it must needs be the visible Church which cannot erre.

Whence the Church hath this priuiledge neuer to erre.

S. Irenæus.

RHEM. 12. If any make further question, how it can be that any company or societie of them (as the Church is) can be voide of error in faith, seeing all men may erre: hee must know that it is not by nature, but by priuiledge of Christs presence, of the Holy Ghosts assistance, of our Lords promise and prayer. See S. Augustine vpon these words of the 118, Psalme Conc. 13. Ne auferas de ore meo verbum veritatis vsquequaque. Where he hath goodly speaches of this matter. For the same purpose also the words of Lactantius are very notable. It is the Catholike Church only, that keepeth the true worship of God, this is the fountaine of truth, this the house of faith, this the Temple of God: whether if any man enter not, or from which if any go out, he is an aliene and stranger from the hope of everlasting life and saluation. No man must by obstinate contention flatter himselfe, for it standeth vpon life and saluation &c. S. Cyprian saith, The Church neuer departeth from that which she once hath known. Ep. 55. ad Cornel. nu. 3. S. Irenæus saith, That the Apostles haue laid vp in the Church as in a rich treasurie, all truth. And, that she keepeth with most sincere diligence, the Apostles faith and preaching, li. 3. c. 4. & 40. & li. 1. c. 3. It were an infinite thing to recite all that they say of this matter all counting it a most pernitious absurditie to affirme, that the Church of Christ may erre in religion.

CARTVV. 10. [15. The pillar of truth.] The roving and vagrant profession of Iesuites is as well followed of them in their writings, as in their stalking and roving from place to place, and from one Province to another: For heere they run apace, but it is from the cause, and with their backes towards their enemies. They make a rentall of many opinions, which they partly ascribe falsely to us, and partly would deceitfully surmise to be ours, as that the Church is lost, fallen away, driuen into a corner of the world, that the Church hath shamefully erred many hundred yeares, that by the Church heere spoken of, we understand the number of those which are predestinate, although not yet called: All which both affirmations and surmises are meerely false, and argue an evill conscience and a worse cause, that giveth no hold to her Champions wherewith they may uphold it. But that which is in controversie touching proofe they passe over with silence. And first, where they should haue proved that Rome somet mes the Church of God cannot fall away, they alledge not one word of proofe, neither could they out of this place, which not onely yeeldeth them no help that way, but vtterly ouer-throweth them: for Paul bringeth this sentence to moue Timothie to walke craefully in the Church of Ephesus, whereof he was then the principall Minister; it followeth necessarily that that Church was then the pillar of truth, because then the truth was by him and others there vpholden and borne up against all inchanters, both in doctrine and manners wherewith it was assailed: If therefore this title of The pillar of Truth applyed expresly by the Apostle vnto the Church of Ephesus, could not stay that particular Church from falling away from Christ; much lesse can it beare up the particular Church and Assembly of Rome (to whom the Apostle did never precisely and namely apply this title) from becomming of a faithfull Citie a harlotrie, and stew of all spirituall Sodomitrie. And where you go about to make this the proper profession and prerogatiue of the Church of Rome, you do it absurdly: For how ridiculous a reason were it of the Apostle to exhort Timothie to walke circumspectly in the Church of Ephesus, because the Church of Rome is the pillar and stablement of truth? If Timothie had exercised this charge at Rome, when Paul wrote this unto him, you might haue had some colour and shew of truth, although not the truth it selfe: But now writing it unto him ministring in the Church of Ephesus; whatsoever prerogatiue the Church of God getteth by these words, the same as in truth it groweth, and riseth, to every faithfull Church of God through the world alike: so in shew of truth it resteth rather in the bosome of the Church of Ephesus, then of the Church of Rome: So that the Turke in the East may with more likely-hood of truth alledge this place to proue his Mahumetisme, then the Pope to iustifie his Papisme. Secondly, where it is controversed between us whether the Church of Christ may be hidden from the world, and some part of it from it selfe in one part of the world. The Iesuites for maintenance of their part herein, can alledge nothing, as this place (in truth) can yeeld nothing. Last of all, where the controversie between us is, whether the Church can erre in the fundamentall points, and in that degree of necessity that without them a man cannot be saued: They heap up testimonies out of Scriptures and Doctors, whereby is proved that the Church cannot erre perniciously and to destruction, which we yeeld most willingly; but denie that she hath any such prerogatiue as not once to be touched with any blemish of errour. Wherein if they thinke that this place helpeth them, which affirmeth the Church to be the pillar of Truth, they are pittifully deceived: For to maintaine the words of the Apoſtle, that the Church of God maintaines ſo much truth as her children may be ſaued by; as the ſame is partly declared by the points of truth which the Apoſtle more largely reciting, then cuſtomably, yet remembreth none but thoſe that are fundamentall. The other reaſon that carrieth colour hereof is, that we are taught (as they ſay) to beleeue in the Church, is before anſwered upon *Rom.*10.14. Only heere wee will note Auguſtines argument which he draweth from this place, that the Reader may ſee, that from the ſame place from whence the Ieſuites would conclude, that wee may beleeue in the Church, Auguſtine concludeth the cleane contraty; ſaying, that we ought to beleeue a Church, but not in the Church, becauſe the Church is not God, but the houſe of God. Aug. ſerm. de temp. 131.

CHAP. IIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 4 FOR ‡ every creature of God is good, and nothing to be reiected that is receiued | with thankeſgiving.

RHEM. 1. [4. Every creature.] We ſe plainely by theſe words ſuch abſtinence onely to be diſſalowed as condemneth the creatures of God to be naught by nature and creation.

CARTVV. This is anſwered in the Annotation upon this verſe.

Verſe. 8. For ‡ corporall exerciſe is profitable to little: but piety is profitable to all things, having promiſe of the life that now is, and of that to come.

RHEM. 2. [8. Corporall exerciſe.] Some (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) expound this of faſting, but they are deceiued, for faſting is a ſpirituall exerciſe. See a goodly Commmentary of theſe words in S. Auguſtine, li. de mor. Ec. Cath. c. 33.

CARTVV. 1. [8. Corporall exerciſe.] It is true that Chryſoſtome denieth that by corporall exerciſe little profitable, is not underſtoood faſting; but what is that, but to deny that the part is contained in the whole? Alſo to affirme that this ſentence of the Apoſtle is a weaſe or ſtraggler from his fellowes, having no coherence with that which goeth before or commeth after? And let all men note how abſurd his reaſon is, which to proue that it is no bodily exerciſe, alledgeth that if were ſo, it ſhould fill the fleſh: as if the exerciſe of the body both in truth and common language, ſtood not rather in the evacuation of the body, then in the filling of it. The place of Auguſtine de mor. Eccleſ. Catbol. c. 33. doth cleane overthrow Chryſoſtom: for ſpeaking of certaine which lived ſomewhat ſtraightly in abſtaining from wine, ſo as yet they did not condemne others that did not as they did, having any good cauſe of uſe thereof, he quoteth this place of the Apoſtle, to ſhew that there is not much placed in theſe corporall exerciſes.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1 And the Spirit manifeſtly ſaith, that in the laſt times certain | ſhall depart fom the faith, attending to ſpirits of errour, and doctrines of divels.

RHEM. 3. [1. Shall depart.] It is the proper deſcription of Heretikes, to forſake their former faith, and ſo be Apoſtataes, as the Greeke word importeth: to giue eare to particular ſpirits of errour and deception, rather then to the ſpirit of Chriſt in his Church, to follow in hypocriſie and ſhew of vertue the pernicious doctrine of Deuils, whō are the ſuggeſters and prompters of all Sects, and are lying ſpirits in the mouthes of all Heretikes and falſe preachers: men that haue put their conſcience to ſilence and made it ſenſles to the holy Churches admonition: the Apoſtle noting * once before alſo in this ſame Epiſtle, that Heretikes haue no conſcience, which is the cauſe both of their fall and of their obduration in hereſie All heretikes are apoſtataes frō the faith. Cap. 1.19.

Verſe 3. | Forbidding to marry, to abſtaine meates which God created to receiue with thankeſgiving for the faithfull, and them that haue knowen the truth.

RHEM. 4. [1. Forbidding to marrie.] He ſpeaketh (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) of the Manichees, Encratites, and Marcioniſts ho. 12. in 1. Tim. S. Ambroſe vpon this place, addeth to theſe the Patritians alſo S. Irenæus li. 1. c. 30. S. Epiphan. hær. 45. 26. 61. 30. S. Hierom 1. cont. Iouin. c. 1. ep. 50. c. 1. & 3. S. Auguſtine hær. 25, 40. and generally all antiquitie affirme the ſame both of them, and alſo of the Hetickes called Apoſtolici, Ebionitæ, and the like. Their hereſie about marriage was, that to marry or to vſe the act of matrimonie, is of Satan, as S. Irenæus witneſſeth, li. 1. c. 22. and that the diſtinction of male and female, and the creation of man and woman for generation, came of an ill God. They taught their hearers, * ſaith S. Auguſt. that if they did vſe women, they ſhould in any wiſe provide that they might not conceiue or beare children. Clemens Alexandrinus (li. 3. Strom. in principio) writeth that ſuch admit no marriage nor procreation of children, leaſt they ſhould bring into the world creatures to ſuffer miſerie and mortalitie. And this is the damnable opinion concerning marriage, noted here by the Apoſtle. The old hereſies againſt Matrimony. * Aug. hær. 46.

RHEM. 5. For the ſecond point conſiſting in the prohibition of certaine creatures made to be eaten, the ſaid Heretickes or diuers of them (for they were not all of one ſect touching theſe points) taught that men might not eate certaine ſorts of meates, ſpecially of beaſts and liuing creatures, for that they were not made (ſay they) of the good God, but of the euill. And wine they called the gall of the Prince of darkneſſe, and not to be drunke at all, and the Vine whereof it came, to bee The old hereſie about abſtinence from meates.

of the Deuils creation. And diuers other creatures they condemned as things by nature and creation polluted and abominable. August. hæres. Manich. 46. & hær. 25. Tatian. & toto libro de mor. Manich. to 1. Loe theſe were the Heretickes and their hereſies which S. Paul here prophecieth of, that forbid marriage and meates as you haue heard, for which they, and their followers were condemned in diuers Councels.

The Catholikes impudently charged with the ſaid old hereſies.

RHEM. 6. Is it not now an intollerable impudency of the Proteſtants, who for a ſmall ſimilitude of words in the eares of the ſimple, apply this text to the faſts of the Church, and the chaſtitie of Prieſts and Religious? As though either by appointing or vſing ſome dayes of abſtinence from certaine meates, the Church or any Catholike man condemned the ſaid meates, vnleſſe the Rechabites Ieremie 35. or the Nazarites, Num. 6. or the Niniuites, Ion. 3. or Moyſes, Exod. 34. or Elias, 3. Reg. 19. or holy Anna the widow, Luk. 2. or Iohn Baptiſt, Mat. 3. & 9. or Chriſt himſelf, Mat. 4. cõmending, vſing, and following a preſcript number of faſting dayes, or God himſelf that in the very beginning in Paradiſe, preſcribed abſtinence from the fruit of one certaine tree, and after appointed ſo many faſtes in the Law, vnleſſe he therefore condemned his own creatures, and the reſt, thoſe creatures from which they abſtained. No, there be many good and lawfull cauſes to forbid ſome, or to abſtaine from ſome meates: as, for obedience, as in Paradiſe: for ſignification, as the Iewes: for that they haue been offered to Idols, as in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians; for chaſtening the body and penance, for health alſo: and onely thoſe cauſes are vnlawfull for which the Manichees and other Heretikes abſtained.

Abſtinence from certaine meates, is no condemnation of the meats.

Forbidding certaine perſons to marry, is no condemnation of matrimony.

RHEM. 7. Concerning marriage likewiſe, they may aſwell charge God or the Church for forbidding the father to marry the daughter, or the brother the ſiſter, or other prohibited perſons in the Law: as well might they charge Chriſt and the Apoſtle for prohibiting the man to marry, during his wiues life: and appointing widowes that ſerue the Church, to liue vnmarried, and not admitting a married woman as well as a widow, nor her that hath had more husbands, as well as her that hath been married but once: as they charge the Church for not admitting married perſons to the altar, and for forcing them and Religious perſons to keepe their promiſe of chaſtitie. No, the holy Church is ſo far from condemning wedlocke, that ſhe honoureth it much more then the Proteſtants, accounting it an holy Sacrament, which they do not, who onely vſe it to luſt as the heathen do, and not to religion.

Catholickes eſteeme matrimony more then the Proteſtants doe.

The Proteſtants obiection anſwered long agoe by S. Ierom and S. Auguſtine Aug. lib. 2. c. 5. de nupt. & concupiſ.

RHEM 8. But it is an old deceitfull practiſe of Heretikes to charge Catholike men with old condemned hereſies. The Eutychians ſlandered the Councell of Chalcedon, and S. Leo to be Neſtorians, and to make two perſons in Chriſt, becauſe they ſaid there were two natures. Vigilius lib. 5. cont. Eutychen. Arius charged Alexander his Biſhop of Sabellianiſme, for auouching the vnitie of ſubſtance in Trinitie. Socrat. li. 1. c. 3. Iulianus accuſed S. Auguſtine of the hereſie of Apollinaris. li. 5. cont. Iulian. c. 15. Other Pelagians challenged him for condemning marriage. Retract. li. 2. c. 53. And that, our Proteſtants bragge not too much of their goodly inuention. Iouinian the old Heretike, their Maiſter in this point, accuſed *the holy doctors and Catholikes, vpon this ſame place, to be Manichees, and to condemne meats and marriage, as both S. Hierom and S. Auguſtine do teſtifie. And they both anſwer to the Heretike, that the Church indeed and Catholikes do abſteine from ſome for euer, and ſome for certain dayes, and euery Chriſtian man lightly all the 40. dayes of Lent faſt: not for that they think the meats vncleane, abominable, or of an ill creation, as the Manichees do: but for puniſhment of their bodies and taming their concupiſcences. Hierome li. 2. cont. Iouin. c. 11. Aug. cont Adimantum c. 14. Li. de mor. Cath. Ec. Hiero. in c. 4. ad Galat. And as for marriage, the ſaid doctors anſwer that no Catholike man condemneth it for vnlawfull, as the old Heretikes did, but onely preferreth virginitie and continencie before it, as a ſtate in it ſelfe more agreeable to God and more meete for the Clergie, See S. Auguſtine againſt Fauſtus the Manichee lib. 30. cap 5. 6. and hær. 25. in the name, Apoſtolici, S. Hierome epiſt. 50. cap. 1. & 3. All this the Catholikes continually tell the Aduerſaries, and they can not but ſee it. Yet by accuſtomed audacitie and impudency they beare is out ſtill.

CARTVV. 4. [2. Forbidding to marry.] There were certaine Ruffianly blouds which when they had privily murdered, to the end they might avoyd the ſuſpition of the murders they committed, made ſhew of diligent ſearch and enquiry after the fellowes that had committed them: Even ſo theſe ſoule-ſlayers to decline ſuſpition of their ſpirituall murders, pretend a diligent inqueſt of theſe Apoſtates mentioned by the Apoſtle. But as long as this Epiſtle ſitteth in iudgement, they can never eſcape with ſuch a ſlim-ſlam as this is. And therefore let the Reader marke the adverſatiue particle

[BVT] whereby he oppoſeth theſe Apoſtates or rebels againſt the faithfull word and doctrine, which he had taught in the chapter going before. As if he ſhould ſay, where I haue taught that the Church Miniſters may haue their lawfull wiues, there ſhall bee an Apoſtaſie from the Church, which will teach the cleane contrary, that it is not lawfull for them to marry. Againe, I haue laid forth the great myſteries of the Church, which ought worthily to keepe us in a carefull and continuall meditation of them: but there will riſe ſuch as will teach men to place the chiefeſt pietie in certaine bodily exerciſes, which when they are beſt vſed, haue ſome fruit, but yet little in compariſon of the perpetuall and conſtant offices of piety and godlineſſe. Laſt of all, where I ſaid that the Church is the pillar and ſtabliſher of the truth, it is not ſo to be underſtood, that all thoſe that are within the Church, ſhall alwayes maintaine it: for there ſhall be an Apoſtaſie from the truth. Hither alſo commeth, that the word of Apoſtaſie being before (upon 2. Theſſ. 2.) proued to belong to the Popiſh Church, it followeth that the Apoſtle directeth his ſtile here againſt it. So that albeit other Heretickes be confuted by this place, in as much as the reaſons are generall which beate downe the ſpeciall and particular errour of the Popiſh Church; yet the Apoſtle bent himſelfe ſpecially againſt this vermin of Popery: Wherefore the reaſon which moued the ancient fathers to apply this place to the hereticks of their times, was, for that the kingdom of Antichriſt in the Apoſtaſie here ſpoken of, was not yet builded. But if they had lived to haue ſeene the doctrine and practiſe of the Church of Rome, they could not but haue looked vpon it. But let us conſider their reaſons wherewith they would ſhift it from them.

2. Tim. 4. 3

They

They ſay that the Apoſtle meaneth Heretickes, which forbid marriage in generall, and meates as uncleane by their creation, which is falſe: for the Manichees (as hath been ſhewed) forbid marriage not unto all, but onely unto their Miniſters, whom they called elect, as doe the Papiſts. And it being falſe that the fathers applied this ſentence alwayes to heretickes that condemned all kindes of meates (for that they could not againſt the Gnoſtickes and divers other) it muſt neceſſarily follow, that their meaning was not to reſtraine this ſentence unto thoſe heretickes which condemned marriage wholy: ſeeing as the one is underſtood of the forbidding of certain meats and not all: ſo the other alſo muſt be expounded of forbidding certaine marriages, and not all. And where they would bleare the eyes of the reader, in making him beleeue that the Apoſtle meaneth onely thoſe which condemne the creatures as evill by creation, we will briefly lay forth the arguments of the Apoſtle. Aug. epiſt. 74.

Firſt therefore as Chriſt before confuted the Iewes for relinquiſhing their wiues for every light cauſe, by calling them unto that eſtate wherein marriage was at the beginning of the creation: So the Apoſtle following his maſters ſteps, reformeth and refuteth theſe hereſies by the firſt inſtitution. Math. 19.

The reaſon therefore of the Apoſtle is, that forſomuch as God (which in the right of his creation may appoint his creatures to the uſes that ſeeme good unto him) hath made the uſe of theſe things lawfull, therefore no man may without light of his word going before, make the uſe of them unlawfull: for, when the Church in regard of ſome great calamity preſent or to come, or in regard of ſome affaires of ſpeciall weight and importance, ſhall forbid the uſe of all meate and drinke for a ſhort time, that commandement being grounded vpon cleare teſtimonies of the Scripture, is the commandement of God, and not of man, and ought of conſcience to be obeyed. Likewiſe when the common wealth for her good, ſhall forbid certaine meates and drinkes, the ſame being not againſt the law of God, ſuch commandements ought not to be contemned. Euſeb. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 5. 17. Socrat. lib. 5 c. 22. Ionas 3. Ioel. 2. Nehem. 1. Act. 14.

The ſecond reaſon is drawne from the Subiect to whoſe uſe theſe creatures are to bee uſed. And therefore where the Popiſh heretikes and other good men that were their fore-runners, and made way for this apoſtaſie, eſteemed that the faithfull and true Chriſtians ſhould eſpecially be barred from the uſe of theſe creatures, as if theſe things were too fleſhly and groſſe for men which are ſpirituall, and ſavour heavenly things: the Apoſtle declareth that the free and liberall uſe of theſe creatures in honeſty and ſobriety, do not onely belong unto them, but to them onely. Tertul. lib. de jejunio. Cypr. ſerm. de jejunio.

The laſt reaſon is drawn from the praiſe of God annexed unto the free and arbitrary uſe of theſe creatures in the feare of God, whereby he declareth that this Popiſh hereſie is not onely iniurious to men, but draweth out of the fountaine of the praiſes of God, which ſhould bee uſed in the honeſt and ſober uſe of theſe creatures. As for their reaſons drawen from the example of the Rechabites, or Nazarites, Ninivites, Moſes, Elias, Iohn Baptiſt, Chriſt, they are but loathſome and unlearned repetitions. And where they ſay, that theſe Heretickes condemne the creatures as uncleane, it is not true for any thing which we remember in their fathers the Montaniſts, whoſe fault in this poynt is noted of the Eccleſiaſticall Stories, that where before abſtinence was arbitrary and undertaken upon occaſion, he made lawes to binde men unto it: yet notwithſtanding what elſe doe you but play the Manichees, and Eucoritites, Egratotes, and other ſuch heretickes, when you place more holineſſe in them which abſtaine, then in them which eate, whereas the Apoſtle affirmeth, that the kingdom of heaven conſiſteth not in meat and drinke. And that meat commendeth us not to God, whether we eate it, or whether we eate it not. And is it not an evident making of one meate cleaner then another, when you place greater merit in eating of fiſh then fleſh. Or haue you forgotten the voice of your own Doctors, which bring this reaſon to proue that we muſt abſtaine from fleſh, becauſe God curſed the earth, out of which the fleſh riſeth, and that the uſe of fiſh is more wholſome, becauſe it is not read that God curſed the ſea. And if you either know not, or remember not that, yet you cannot forget that which you in the next verſe affirme, where you teach men to coniure all power of the adverſary the Divell out of the water, &c. this is to come as neere Manichiſme as can be, and to miſſe it. And it is plainly to place uncleanneſſe in the very creatures themſelues. Laſt of all, leſt the Divels ſhould ſeeme to ſpeake by them in their lawes of faſting, they would diſguiſe his Dragons voyce by certaine colourable ends of their faſt. As that abſtinence may be commanded for obedience, as to Adam in paradice. But how could the Divell haue appeared more like himſelfe to a man of any tollerable underſtanding then thus. For what an intollerable arrogancie is it for the Church to uſurpe the authority not onely of Chriſt, as he is mediator and inferiour unto God, but of the moſt higheſt maieſty of God, by giving commandement onely to take experience of obedience, and what not onely a proud and malapert huſſie, but fooliſh mother is their Church, that will try her childrens obedience in ſo many things, being ſo weake and ſubiect to fall: when the Lord himſelfe tried his ſonne Adam with one onely in that time, when he had greater abilitie to obey a thouſand, then her children haue to obſerue one. Rom. 14. 1. Cor. 3.

Secondly, where they ſay, that it may be done for ſignification as the Iewes, if they meane that the Iewes annexed any ſignification unto any creature, it is falſe, unleſſe it bee of the wicked Iewes, which waſhed their hands in token of cleanneſſe, to whom wee are well content that they ſhould bee like, as children unto their fathers: for otherwiſe the Church of God hath no authority to ordaine ſignes: conſidering that it may not ſet up any repreſentation or likeneſſe in the Church, thereby to ſerue God the better: if they meane that they were ordained to the Iewes as they were Chriſtian, unto the Iewes that receiued them by commandement from God: ſo they are Iewiſh in them that haue them, as the Iewes now haue, without warrant of the word of God; and be ſo much worſe then Iewiſh, as they both having other, and more in number then ever the Iewes firſt had by the ordinance of God. Math. 15. Exod. 20.

Thirdly, where they ſay that meates may be forbidden, becauſe they haue been offered to Idols, they are deceiued: for vnleſſe it were in regard of offending the weake brother, it is lawfull to eate euen that which was offered vnto Idols. Touching the religious faſt for chaſtening of the fleſh and for penance, it maketh nothing for defence of your ſet faſts: for the faſt for chaſtening of the 1. Cor. 8.

flesh is then to be vsed when the flesh is proud and readiest to shake off the yoke of Gods obedience, which is oftentimes as well vpon Tuesday and Thursday, as vpon Friday or Saturday, as well out of Lent as in Lent.

The last allegation of fasting for health, is altogether from the purpose.

Now let the Reader obserue that all these reasons, which the Iesuites haue alledged, are so farre from proving them not to be the deuilish spirits which the Apostle propheeied of, that they serue for a strong confirmation thereof: For the Apostle saith that they should do all this by hypocrisie, and vnder a certaine cloak of greater holinesse, which cannot be so well verified of the Manichees, &c. who esteemed that they should haue been vtterly vngodly, and limbes of the deuill, if they had not abstained from these things which they did forbeare: where the Papists knowing that the vse of these things is lawfull, do for a higher degree of holinesse vse abstinence. And because you are so greatly delighted with Ieromes opinion in matter of Marriage (whereof notwithstanding as hath been shewed, you must be ashamed whether you will or not) you are to be put in remembrance that Ierome saith, that Antichrist shall make a shew of chastity, that this also may be a note that the Pope is Antichrist, which shall make the Apostasie, whereof the Apostle propheeieth. Of your impudencie, that you honour Marriage more then we, let the world iudge. Your reason that you make it a Sacrament, is nothing worth, vnlesse you thinke that Paul and Barnabas, esteemed themselues honoured when they of Lycaonia would haue offered vnto them: For you cannot thereby honour marriage whereby you dishonour God the Authour thereof. And therefore although you giue it the honour of a Sacrament, yet the honour thereof cannot come to marriage, for that you giue that which is none of yours. The testimonies of the ancient Fathers in the second and third section are meerely idle, considering that this place of Paul vsed against divers heretickes of their times doth not hinder, but that it may bee as well and better alledged against the heretickes that followed as those before them.

Hier. in Daniel c. 11.

Act. 19.

In the fist Section, where many testimonies are brought to proue that the Heretickes are wont to vpbraid the Catholiques with the note of heresie; the Iesuites resemble the Arcadians, which when they fought for themselues, never did it with any successe, but with great felicitie for others. And therefore were it not that we set them not a worke as having no need of them, wee should bee in their debt for affoording so many examples whereby we may cleerely see that they degenerate not from the old heretickes, which thought it some advantage for the deceiuing of their simple schollers to cry both soone and often Heretickes, Heretickes.

Proverb. dicitur Ἀρκάδας μιμεῖσθαι.

RHEM. 9. [4. With thankes giuing.] By the most ancient custome of the faithfull both before Christ and sithence, men vse to blesse their tables and meates, by the hand and word of a Priest, if any be present otherwise by such as can conueniently do it. And in husbandmens houses where they haue no other means, they should at least blesse Gods gifts and themselues with a Pater noster or the signe of the Crosse: not onely to acknowledge from whom they haue their continuall sustenance, but also to blesse their meale and sanctifie it. For the Greeke word vsed of S. Paul, by Ecclesiasticall vse, when it concerneth meates, signifieth not onely thankes giuing, but blessing or sanctifying the creatures to be receiued, as being all one with εὐλογία, and in English we call it grace not onely that after meate, which is onely thankes to God, but that before meate, which is alwayes a benediction of the creatures, as it is plain in the prescript & vsuall formes of grace. For which cause a Priest should euer do it rather then a lay man or any of inferiour order in the Clergie. In so much that S. Hierome (ep. 85.) reprehendeth certaine Deacons whom hee saw say grace or blesse the meate and the company, in presence of a Priest. Who also recordeth (in the life of S. Paul the holy Eremite) the great curtesie and humilitie of him and S Antonie, yeelding one to the other the preeminence of blessing their poore dinner. For to blesse is a great thing, and a Priestly prerogatiue, as the Apostle witnesseth, declaring the preeminence of Melchisedec in that he blessed Abraham. Read the note following.

Blessing of the table of meats especially by a Priest.

To blesse is a prehemmince of the better person. Heb. 7.

CARTVV. 9. [4 With Thankes-giving.] Whether the Priest should say grace, or the father of the housholde, who is bound by the Law of God to see the Priest sanctifie the Lord, during the time that he is in his house; shall not be the question between you and us, because as men which haue an euill cause, you are readie at every occasion to start aside. That also of your blessing of bread which is common more then to pray vnto God that it may be moderately received of us through his gift of sobriety in our soules, and wholesomely enioyed through his working by it in our bodies: is a meere kinde of sorcerie, and being before confuted (vpon Mark. 8. 7. & 1. Cor. 10, 16.) is heere repeated not onely without any supply of reason, but contrary to the expresse words of the Apostle. For although to blesse the bread, be all one with these to giue thankes vnto God, and call vpon him for it, and no manner of difference, but that the former is an Hebraisme, and the other common as well to the Greekes as to the Hebrewes: yet in the phrase of blessing the bread they might haue some colour to speake of their Popish charmes, which is vtterly taken from them in both the words the Apostle vseth in this place: vnlesse they will be so impudent as to say, that before we eate we may be instant with the bread to help us; or when we haue received nourishment thereby, giue thankes vnto it for feeding us.

And let the Reader also note how vnmannerly the Crosse is here brought in by the Iesuites without all leaue of the place, by which they will haue it to enter: or rather how like burglary theeues they break open all dores & barres to make way for their filthy beggarly trash. For the Apostle declaring that the meate is throughly sanctified vnto vs, that is to say the vse thereof made holy and lawfull by the Word and Prayer, they notwithstanding make a supply of the Crosse, as if the vse thereof were not sufficiently lawfull vnlesse one first make a Crosse. Nay marke their further impudencie and shameleesse fore-head which in their note vpon the next verse, where ascribing the sanctifying of the meates vnto the Crosse and Prayer, affirme that it is specially done by the signe of the Crosse, that the Reader may easily know that this is the very spirit of Satan that speaketh by them which which ascribeth more vertue to the crosse (the device of man, without ground or warrant of the Scripture) then unto the holy worship of prayer, which is Gods own ordinance commanded in his Word.

Verse. 5. For it is | sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

RHEM. 10. [5. Sanctified.] All creatures be of Gods creation, none of the Deuill, or of any other cause and beginning, as Manichees, blasphemed: and therefore none are ill, abominable or vncleane by creation, nature, and condition, but all good and made for mans vse, though all bee not alike holy nor equally sanctified. God made seuen dayes, but he sanctified onely one of them, hee made all places but hee sanctified none but the Temple and such like deputed to his seruice, as the Arke, the Altar, and the rest which were by sacred vse both holy themselues and gaue holines and sanctification to things that touched them or were applied vnto them. So our Sauiour saith, that the temple sanctified the gold, and the altar the gift, and generally all creatures seuered from common and prophane vse, to religion and worship of God, are made sacred thereby. So the places and daies of Gods apparition or working some speciall wonders or benefits toward the people, were holy, as Bethell, Sinai, and others. And much more those times and places of Christs Natiuitie, Passion, buriall, Resurrection, Ascension: which is so plaine a case, that the hill where he was transfigured onely, is called therefore by S. Peter, the holy mount.

No creature ill by nature, yet one more sanctified the another. Matth. 23. Holy times and places, and every thing deputed to the seruice of God, holy. 2. Pet. 1.

RHEM. 11. These therefore be holy memories and monuments of all sorts sanctified, besides that creatures (as we see here) be sanctified by the word of God and prayer, that is to say, by benediction & inuocation of our Lords holy name upon them, specially by the signe of the Crosse, as S. Chrysostome noteth on this place, hom. 12. in 1. ad Tim. by the which the aduersarie power of Satan vsurping vniustly vpon Gods creatures through mans sinne, and seeking deceitfully in or by the same to annoy mans body or soule, is expelled and the meates purged from him and made holesome. S. Gregory (li. 1. Dialog. c. 4.) recordeth that the Deuill entred into a certaine religious woman by eating the herbe lettice vnblessed. And S. Augustine li. 18. de ciu. Dei c. 18. sheweth at large, what wayes hee hath by meates and drinkes and other vsuall creatures of God, to annoy men: though his power be much lesse then it was before Christ, but still much desire he hath on all sides to molest the faithfull by abusing the things most neere and necessarie vnto them, to their hurt both bodily and Ghostly, for remedie whereof, this sanctification which the Apostle speaketh of, is very soueraine, pertaining not onely to this common and more vulgar benediction of our meates & drinks, but much more (as the proprietie of the greek word vsed by the Apostle for sanctification, doth import) to other more exact sanctifying and higher applying of some creatures, and blessing them to Christs honor in the Church of God, and to mans spirituall and corporall benefits.

Creatures hallowed by the signe of the crosse.

RHEM. 12. For as S. Augustine writeth li. 2. de pec. merit. c. 26. besides his vsuall blessing of our daily foode, the Cathecumenes (that is, such as were taught toward Baptisme) are sanctified by the signe of the Crosse, and the bread (saith he) which they receiue, though it be not the body of Christ, yet is holy, and more holy then the vsuall bread of the table. Hee meaneth a kind of bread then hallowed, specially for such as were not yet admitted to the B. Sacrament: either the same, or the like to our holy bread, vsed in the Church of England and France on Sundayes. And it was a common vse in the primitiue Church to blesse loaues, and send them for sacred tokens from one Christian man to an other, and that not among the simple and superstitious (as the Aduersaries may imagine) but among the holiest, learnedst, and wisest. Such hallowed bread did S. Paulinus send to S. Augustine & Alipius, and they to him again, calling them blessings. Read S. Hierom in the life of Hilarion (post medium) how Princes & learned Bishops and other of all sorts came to that holy man for holy bread panem benedictum. In the primitiue Church the people commonly brought bread to the Priests to be hallowed. Author. op. imp. hom. 14. in Mat. The 3. Councell of Carthage c. 24. maketh mention of the blessing of milke, hony, grapes, and cornes. See the 4. Canon of the Apostles. And not onely diuers other creatures vsed at certaine times in holy Churches-seruice, as ware, fire, palmes, ashes, but also the holy oyle, Chrisme, and the water of Baptisme, that also which is the cheefe of all Priestly blessing of creatures, the bread and wine in the high Sacrifice be sanctified, for without sanctification (yea as S. Augustine affirmeth tract. 118. in Ioan.) without the signe of the Crosse, none of these things can rightly be done.

RHEM. 13. Can any man now maruell that the Church of God by this warrant of S. Paules word expounded by so long practise and tradition of the first fathers of our religion, doth vse diuers elements and blesse them for mans vse and the seruice of God, expelling by the inuocation of Christs name, the aduersarie power from them, according to the authoritie giuen by Christ, Super omnia dæmonia, ouer all Deuils: and by prayer, which importeth as the Apostle heere speaketh, desire to helpe, as it were by the vertue of Christ to combat with the Deuill, and so to expell him out of Gods creatures, which is done by holy exorcisme, and euer beginneth. Adiutorium nostrum in nomine Domini, as we see in the blessing of holy water and the like sanctification of elements. RHEM. 14. Furniſh your ſelues with ſuch examples and grounds of Scriptures and antiquitie, and you ſhall contemne the aduerſaries cauillations and blaſphemies againſt the Churches practiſe in ſuch things, and further alſo finde, theſe ſacred actions and creatures, not onely by increaſe of faith, feruor, and deuotion, to purge the impuritie of our ſoules, and procure remiſſion of our daily infirmities, but that the cheefe miniſters of Chriſts Church, by their ſoueraine authoritie graunted of our Lord, may ioyne vnto the ſame, their bleſſing and remiſſion of our veniall ſinnes or ſpirituall debts: as we ſee in S. Iames, remiſſion of all ſinnes to be annexed to the vnction with holy oyle, which to the Catholikes is a Sacrament, but to the Proteſtants was but a temporall ceremony, and to ſome of them not of Chriſts inſtitution, but of the Apoſtles onely. In their own ſenſe therefore they ſhould not maruell that ſuch ſpirituall effects ſhould proceede of the vſe of ſanctified creatures, whereas veniall treſpaſſes bee remitted many wayes, though mortall ordinarily by the Sacraments onely S. Gregorie did commonly ſend his benediction and remiſſion of ſinnes in and with ſuch holy tokens as were ſanctified by his bleſſing and touching of the Apoſtles bodies and Martyrs Relikes: as now his ſucceſſours do in the like hallowed remembrances of religion. See his 7. book, Epiſtle 126. and 9. book, Epiſtle 60. Thus therefore and to the effects aforeſaid the creatures of God be ſanctified.

The difference betweene the Churches exorciſmes, & other commutations.

RHEM. If any man obiect that this vſe of creatures is like coniuration in Necromancie, hee muſt know the difference is, that in the Churches ſanctifications and exorciſmes, the Deuils be commanded, forced, and tormented by Chriſts word and by prayers: but in the other wicked practiſes, they be pleaſed, honored, and couenanted withall and therefore the firſt is godly and according to the Scriptures, but Necromancie abominable and againſt the Scriptures, CARTVV. 10. [5 Sanctified.] Here firſt they would faine ſhew themſelues honeſter men then the Manichees, becauſe where they make meates ill and abhominable by creation, the Papiſts make them not by creation, but by an after-clap of the deuill through ſinne: ſo that the Ieſuites doctrine ſeemeth euidently to be, that through ſinne the vnreaſonable creatures are all ill, vncleane, and abhominable; which hereſie, if it be not ſo euill as the Manichees, yet it is worſe then many other heretiques, which placed not the vnlawfulneſſe of the vſe of the creatures, in the creatures themſelues, but in that they were abuſed of men. And if it be well conſidered, they ſhall be found herein not inferiour to the Manichees, yea, after a ſort worſe then they; for the Manichies abating the kingdom of God, leaue him notwithſtanding ſome rule and dominion in the world, where the Ieſuites making all the creatures through ſinne ill and abhominable, make the deuill a greater Lord in the world then euer the Manichees did, a token that they loue him well, which do ſo honour and aduance him. True it is, that the power of the deuill, through the iuſt iudgement of God for ſinne, hath thus farre obtained ouer the creatures vnder heauen, that they are all ſubiect vnto vanity, which is declared by death in all liuing things, by wearing and waſting in all other that haue no life. But that they are thereby made ill and abhominable (man onely excepted, which commited ſinne) is a Popiſh frenſie, and frantick Poperie: directly contrary to the words of the Apoſtle heere, that affirmeth that euery creature, not onely was in the beginning, but euen now is good: Which is yet more manifeſt by the Viſion in the Acts, where certaine meates having a ceremoniall vncleanneſſe vnder the Law, but no vncleaneneſſe indeed, are, with all the reſt of their fellowes declared, by voice from heauen, to be cleane to any good vſe whereunto they were firſt created. Hither alſo belongeth the teſtimonie of our Saviour Chriſt, who declareth, that nothing that goeth into the mouth defileth a man: ſo that the wicked and infidels themſelues are not made vncleane by any vncleaneneſſe inherent or adherent vnto the meat, but onely by the vncleaneneſſe of infidelity that cleaueth and remaineth in themſelues. And as if this madneſſe were not ſufficient to make Poperie hatefull to all that haue but a graine of wit and iudgement, they proceed further, teaching that not onely the deuill hath power ouer the creatures, but that he is in them as in a place, In that they ſay, that they expell the deuill out of Gods creatures: So that by their iudgement, he that eateth of the creatures without bleſſing of them, eateth vp the deuill at a morſell that is hard of diſgeſtion. It is true, that by eating of meates without grace, men are made more and more the habitation of Deuils in their wickednes, and ſinne, whereof they are authors; and that is more fearefull and more dangerous then if the deuill ſhould perſonally poſſeſſe a man: But that the deuill is ſubſtantially in the meates that men eate before they haue bleſſed it, better deſerueth the whip to be laid vpon the fooles back then any confutation. But this is not all: for where other fooles commonly falling into the fire, yet auoide the falling into the water: theſe to be aſſured, both to periſh themſelues, and to periſh all thoſe that hearken vnto them, will needs fall into both: For as they groſly erre in aſcribing vnholineſſe and abhomination vnto the creatures; ſo they are as filthily deceiued in aſcribing more holineſſe vnto them, then can fall into any the moſt holy creature either of man or Angels, viz. that by touch of them they ſhould make holy the things which haue touched them. It is very true, that there are creatures which are holy, as, vnder the Law, things conſecrated vnto the ſeruice of God, vnder the Goſpell the water in holy Baptiſme, the bread and wine in the holy Communion. True alſo, that the ſame holy things do ſanctifie men; but the difference betweene the truth in theſe cauſes and the Ieſuites, are manifold and manifeſt.

Rom. 8. Act. 10. Mat. 15. Tit. 1. 15.

For firſt of all, thoſe things onely are holy which the Lord in Scripture hath hallowed, and therefore the Popiſh Palmes, fire, aſhes, and ſuch like, are prophane.

Secondly, the things ſanctified of God, are holy onely to the vſes whereunto they are limited of him; and therefore the vſe of water and bread, in their holy bread and holy water, being out of Baptiſm and the Supper of the Lord, is leprous.

Thirdly, the things that are holy are no otherwiſe ſo, then as they be ſanctified and conſecrated according that Law of God, partly by expounding and laying open the Lords institution touching them, and partly by praying that they may be fruitfull and effectuall to the ends for which they are ordained. And therefore the consecration that is made by buzzing, mumming, crossing, and such like, is an execrable and cursed abuse of the creatures of God.

Fourthly, we acknowledge that these holy things may truely be said to sanctifie men, not by touching, or kissing, but by use of them as the Scripture ordaineth: neither yet by any holinesse included and shut up in them, or cleaving unto them, but by his holy spirit which useth them as fit instruments and tooles to worke our sanctification: we might say also, as pipes and conduits to convey the pretious liquor of his holy Spirit into our hearts; were it not that these Capernaites haue their understanding so grosse and fleshly, that thereof they are ready to snatch a passage of the holy Spirit through the midst of the elements, as doth the water through the hollow of the vessels whereby it is drained and derived.

Now that the Reader may see the difference of our holy things from theirs in causes, in effects, in number, we will examine briefly these rakings and sweepings they would abuse the Reader with. To proue that things haue holinesse in themselues, which they communicate with others by attouchment, they abuse Math. 23. of the Temple sanctifying the gold, the Altar sanctifying the gift: for the holinesse there spoken of, is nothing else but to giue the gold and gift such a propertie, that where they were before of common use, and might haue been applied to common uses and necessities of this life, after they be set apart either to the Altar or Temple, they can no more without either sacriledge, or extreme necessity (as in the case of the Shew-bread and sword given to David and his company) be turned from that holy use whereunto they were consecrated and set apart. Neither yet could these things haue been holy after this sort, if both the gold and gift had not been commanded of God. For if either Salomon beside the patterne and prescript that he had received of God, had seeled the Temple with silver or lead, where he ought to doe it with gold, or the Priests had brought a Dogge or Deere in stead of a Bullocke or a Sheepe, neither should the Temple haue sanctified the silver or lead, nor the Altar the Dogge or Deere; yea so farre is it that they sanctifie them, that of the other side the Temple and Altar are prophaned and made uncleane by them. And although being applied acccording to the prescript of God, they be meanes whereby God did sanctifie men, yet did not those things by any holinesse inherent, or adherent unto them, make them holy. This is manifestly set forth by the prophet, where it being asked, whether if the holy meate being carried by one that is cleane in the lap of his garment, it doth sanctifie him that carrieth it: it is answered no. Being demanded also, whether if a man uncleane by a carkasse, do carry it, the holy meat be made uncleane, yea or no; it is answered yea, and not onely by touching of them, but by no other lawfull and commanded use, had they any holinesse in them to communicate with those which were partakers of them. Therefore the Apostle declareth that all those holy things under the Law did onely cleanse and purge the outward flesh whereunto they were applied in washing away the filth thereof, which rule also serueth for our holy things under the Gospell, as those which haue for causes, and effects, the same sacraments which they had, howsoever they differ in number, and in manner of working more or lesse, according to the dispensation of times, which thing the Writer to the Hebrewes doth manifestly declare, where shewing how the Sacraments doe but cleanse the flesh, hee appropriateth this unto the bloud of Christ, that it alone is able to enter into the conscience to purge it from dead workes to serue the liuing God. This is also evidently confirmed by Iohn Baptist, who in his owne person declareth what the Minister doth, namely that he onely applieth the outward element of water, and that it is our Saviour Christ alone which washeth away our sinnes. So likewise Peter affirming that baptisme saueth us, doth expresly say that it is not the water which washeth away the filth of the body; but in that the inward baptisme of Christ purging our conscience from dead workes, maketh us bold, that being asked of our faith in Iesus Christ, we can truely and with testimony of our conscience answer that we do beleeue. It is true that sometime, because of the Sacramentall union between the outward signes and seales of both the Sacraments, and for that with the lawfull receiuing of them, alwayes the things represented by them are exhibited; It is oftentimes given to the signe that is proper to the thing signed, and on the contrary part, that to the thing signed which is proper unto the signe. Howbeit the Scripture carefully prouideth that neither the elements bee lifted up aboue their place to rob our Saviour Christ of the honour due unto him, which is to sanctifie us, nor on the other side be cast down under their dignity, which is, to be holy and effectuall instruments whereby our Sauiour Christ worketh the assurance of our saluation.

This doctrin, in it selfe is so evident that it is marvell that any can be so senceleſse as not to grope it, is yet made more cleare in the preaching of the word: for it being holy in it selfe, and by the first beginning, and as it were birth of it, divine, and not of an earthly substance, as are the Sacraments, yet notwithstanding maketh no man of it selfe holy untill the Spirit of God come to open the heart, and make way that by a liuely faith it may be receiued. If therefore the word of God, wherewith God sanctifieth his, & from whence the Sacraments haue their holines, be not able to giue any holines unto men by the use of it, unlesse the Lord giue the holinesse which is in himselfe and not in the word; how much lesse can the Sacraments performe this? And if the holy things haue no holinesse in themselues which they can communicate with men for whose use they were ordained, how much lesse can they communicate holinesse unto other things for the which they were either not appointed, or not so properly and immediatly appoynted. These things being cleare, this trash (as smoke before the wind) doth easily vanish away. And how sottishly haue they alledged to the poynt in hand the seventh day sanctified of the Lord, which is not therefore called holy, for that it is so much as an instrument to sanctifie men by, but onely that it is the speciall time wherein God hath ordained to sanctifie men by such meanes of hearing and seeing as he hath appoynted to be used in that day: how much lesse can the daies of Nativity, Passion, &c. of our Saviour Christ which haue no commandement of God, but onely be an Ecclesiasticall Ordinance, make men holy.

Ioh. 17. 17.

The holy Mount out of 2. Pet. 1. is not onely fooliſhly but irkſomely and bablingly repeated, and is before anſwered, vpon Mat. 17. Chryſoſtome vpon this place, cited to proue that the meates are ſanctified ſpecially by the Croſſe, is falſified: for he giueth no ſpeciall vertue to it in the ſanctification or lawfull vſe of the meates, but onely ioyneth it with the vſe of the creature the Croſſe. The reaſon of the vſe of the croſſe in the elder Churches hath bin declared already vpon Mat. 24. where alſo it hath been ſhewed that there was more zeale in the vſe of it then knowledge, and that if it were then ſeaſonable, yet that it was now out of ſeaſon. The fable of Gregorie dial. lib. 2. c. 4. ſheweth evidently that they care not what filth they mingle with the Word: For it is ſaid in the ſame place, that one comming to coniure the deuill out of the woman that had eaten the Letice without ſaying grace, the deuill cryed: What haue I done, I ſate there vpon the letice, and ſhe came and bit me. And do you not thinke that the deuill had good reaſon to poſſeſſe her, ſeeing ſhee (forſooth) had begun with him by biting of him? Or think you not that it is a pretie skar-crow and bug-beare to terrifie men withall, in telling them, that if they do not ſay grace before meat, or after, the deuill is in the meat, into whom if they ſet their teeth, he will be euen with them in entring into them? Or rather to ſhew them as the truth is, that God will for the prophane vſe of his creatures giue them into the power of the deuill to be rammiſed by him, and hardned of him, which is thouſand fold more fearefull indeed then when hee entreth perſonally into a man, which he doth, and hath done vpon good men, not for their ſinne, but for their tryall. Not to ſpeake of this Sophiſme which concludeth, of that the deuill entered after the eating of an hearb vnſanctified by prayer: therefore hee entered for ſo eating it, or therefore he was in the hearb, or ſate vpon it. Auguſt. lib. 18. de ciuit. cap. 18. reporteth ſtrange ſtories of poyſons and tranſformations of bodies, but of this remedy of yours not a word. Auguſt. lib. 2. de peccat. merit. c. 26. of holy bread hath been anſwered before vpon 1. And therefore hauing taken away the Lords Supper from them, you haue as your own Doctor confeſſeth ſet your holy bread in place of it.

But where they ſay, that they ſent it each to other bleſſed, they ſay vntruly, for they ſent it not bleſſed, but to be bleſſed: for thus writeth Paulinus to Auguſtine, We haue ſent vnto you for a token of our vnitie, which wee pray you to receiue and bleſſe. And againe, This loafe you ſhall make a bleſſing in vouchſafing to receiue it. *Ierome in vit. The authority Chriſt gaue againſt euill ſpirits, Luk. 9. haue you no right vnto, not onely for that the deuill knoweth not your voyce, nor will be commanded of his ſeruants, as all the world may ſee, but becauſe you haue no power to heale diſeaſes, which is a leſſe thing then to driue out the deuill. Howbeit you ſubtily conceale the age of your Holy water; for it is ancienter then you will be acknown of; it came from the heathen Idolaters as Iuſtin Martyr witneſſeth, which ſheweth how when they entred their Churches to worſhip their Gods, they ſprinkled themſelues: And it is falſe that you ſay, it was ſo long in all Chriſtian Countries: ſeeing in other Churches of the ſame time with Alexander it is not mentioned to haue beene: which is alſo an euident argument that the Biſhop of Romes word was not currant, but onely in his own Territorie.
